"[The book's] success can be tested in terms of three fundamental questions: Is it complete? Is it accurate? Is it up to date? . . . It is hard to detect any significant omissions, though there are a few consequential inconveniences. Some persons, incidents or topics have to be found not under separate entries but buried in larger contexts; in other words, the reader has to know something about what he is looking for before he starts. . . . It is not possible to eliminate qualitative judgments altogether even from a scientifically based work, but in the rare cases where Professor Laqueur permits a hint of such judgments . . . he will not be found generally to be in error, only occasionally behind the times. . . . [His] preface claims that 'all entries have been updated to October, 1968 and in some cases, to summer 1970'; but the statement is not wholly correct, and the process has been capricious at best."

TLS p477 Ap 23 '71 850w

LAQUEUR, WALTER. A history of Zionism. 640p il maps $10 Holt

956.94 Zionism—History

ISBN 0-03-091614-3 LC 72-78096

This "book starts with a discussion of the European background of Zionism since the French Revolution, covers the prehistory of the movement and five decades of Zionist activities, and ends with the establishment of the State of Israel." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by Jack Riemer

Christian Century 89:1104 N 22 '72 900w

"[The author has not] written an essay in the philosophy of history and his critique of Zionism is provided piecemeal, unobtrusively and in particular contexts. On the Zionists themselves he writes critically and with candor. . . . On non-Jewish help and opposition, Professor Laqueur is . . . just; though a slight unfamiliarity with the names of British politicians mars his account of the Balfour declaration. He can even discuss the events of 1948 with coolness; his detachment only cracks under the weight of Nazi atrocities, when Zionism became for the Jews a straw on the murderous seas of Europe. This backfires somewhat into his account of Palestine in the 1930s, but only at the very end of this long, profound and altogether admirable piece of work does he allow himself an apologia for Zionism."

Economist 243:59 Je 3 '72 650w

"[This is] a critical narrative survey and analysis of the emergence of Zionism. . . . It includes a good chapter on Zionist attitudes toward and relations with the Arabs which helps explain and put into a more balanced perspective than usual the Middle East conflict as it developed prior to 1929. . . . Throughout, Laqueur sketches and evaluates the personalities and roles of Zionism's key figures, including lesser known (but important) individuals. . . . This book is more synthesis than original research, is sometimes superficial (but sufficiently well researched and organized), is extremely well written (though sometimes glib) and is indispensable. Sympathetic but fairly well balanced in its viewpoint, Laqueur's book is perhaps the best single volume for the general reader with some background on the subject. Highly recommended for general collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:2590 Ag '72 160w

"Laqueur succinctly describes the growth of labor Zionism, and gives proper attention equally to the various non-Jewish thinkers—from Tolstoy to Plekhanov—whose impact was exerted on the proliferation of trends within this movement. Nor does he neglect Labor Zionism's most impressive accomplishments: Palestine's network of kibbutzim, its huge labor federation, the social-welfare programs that functioned as protective canopy for generations of immigrants to come. . . . In a book of this scope it is inevitable that occasional judgments will be met with reserve. Essentially a historian of ideas, Laqueur often strains in his quest for ideological precedents. . . . Yet these and other, minor, exceptions serve only to accentuate how much here is good and valid. . . . The author's rigorous objectivity elevates [his book] light years above its predecessors in this field." H. M. Sachar

N Y Times Bk R p39 N 12 '72 1600w

"Laqueur's book, solid rather than vivacious, is far from easy reading. But the magisterial clarity with which complicated issues are illuminated—and controversial questions faced—holds the attention. This is historical writing of the most thoughtful and serious kind." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 80:114 O 16 '72 800w

Reviewed by Herbert Gold

Sat R 55:80 O 28 '72 1500w

LARKIN, BRUCE D. China and Africa, 1949-1970; the foreign policy of the People's Republic of China. 268p $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

327.51 Africa—Foreign relations—China (People's Republic of China). China (People's Republic of China)—Foreign relations—Africa

ISBN 0-520-01761-7 LC 78-123624

In this "study of the African policies of the People's Republic of China, Larkin examines how the P.R.C. has gone about establishing diplomatic relations with the newly independent states of Africa, as well as the objectives of the Chinese Communists in maintaining those relations especially where ideological differences exist. Larkin also reviews the successes and failures of the P.R.C. over the past 21 years in developing and promoting revolutionary ferment in Africa, as well as respect for China as the foremost spokesman for the Third World." (Choice)

"[This book is] as timely as [it is] useful. . . . [The author is] modest and sensible in [his analysis], careful to warn readers of the paucity of evidence and of the necessary tentativeness of [his] conclusions. . . . [The study goes] a long way toward making Chinese policy comprehensible." W. I. Cohen

Ann Am Acad 401:173 My '72 400w

"[This is] an expanded version of Larkin's doctoral dissertation. . . . [Useful] appendix indicates the scope of Chinese government involvement and the names of those officials responsible for China's African policies. Bibliographic note. An important monograph for all China-watchers."

Choice 8:1499 Ja '72 120w

"In the first scholarly book on the topic, Larkin . . . brings together all the available information on Peking's relations with Africa . . . and he shows how China's African policies make sense in terms of a combination of short-term and long-term goals. . . . Larkin persuasively rebuts previous interpretations that depicted China's African policy as a failure." A. J. Nathan

Library J 96:3142 O 1 '71 130w

"The author's effort to apply a theoretical framework to Chinese foreign policy lends itself to a more profound understanding of China's policy aims. Larkin is particularly able to relate theory and practice by examining Chinese foreign policy from the point of view of revolutionary ideology, then applying it to the African scene where revolutionary goals are most apparent. . . . The final section of the book is a well-written summing up of China's foreign policy goals in Africa juxtaposed beside China's diplomatic accomplishments. In addition, the author provides an informative analysis of the organizational structure of China's foreign-policy-making machine, especially as it relates to Africa. The book is extremely well-documented with up-to-date African, Chinese and Western sources." J. F. Copper

Pacific Affairs 45:280 summer '72 450w

LARRABEE, ERIC. The benevolent and necessary institution; the New York Hospital, 1771-1971. 346p il $8.95 Doubleday 362.1 New York Hospital
LC 71-139039

Larrabee traces the growth of "the second oldest teaching hospital in America and the first in New York City. [He] describes the Hospital's origins in colonial New York . . . [and] the turmoil and division of the Revolutionary War [which] delayed its opening for twenty years. With . . . anecdotes and biographical sketches—many drawn from contemporary records—he shows the strides medicine has taken during the Hospital's two centuries." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Larrabee has produced a history of a hospital which is as engrossing as a novel. . . . Good bibliography. . . . The index is complete. Belongs on the shelves of medical libraries, but even more it deserves a wide readership on the basis of its value as a description of several eras."

Choice 8:1353 D '71 180w

"An institutional history is seldom the most entertaining of books. This one . . . is an exception. Larrabee has re-created the New York City of the 18th and 19th centuries in a masterly way and has peopled it with real characters without sacrificing scholarship. For the 20th Century, he concentrates more on the history of the hospital itself. The book is readable, entertaining, and informative and should be required reading for would-be institutional historians. Recommended for all medical libraries and history collections." T. E. Smith
Library J 96:1709 My 15 '71 90w

LARRICK, NANCY, ed. Somebody turned on a tap in these kids; poetry and young people today. 178p $5.95 Delacorte press

811 Poetry
LC 76-135380

These essays are intended to remedy "classroom approaches that slay interest. Larrick presents 11 short 'advices' by teachers, poets, students, poet-teacher-students." (Library J)

"To those of us who were reared on 'To a Waterfowl,' 'L'Allegro,' 'Ode to Duty,' and other such works and who have survived to become adult fans of poetry, this collection of essays may seem unnecessary. But judging from poetry's minute sales to older readers, many a prospective poetry lover sank with the 'Lady of the Lake,' [and] bogged down in those three-month 'units' on 'Snowhound.' . . . [There is good advice on the subject in this volume]. 'Straight Talk from Teenagers' is exactly that and, though painful, is not to be ignored. Methods described in 'Experiment in the Inner City,' would apply to even the remotest one-room school. And students' poetry enlivens the advice." Rozanne Knudson
Library J 96:2309 Jl '71 160w

"[This book] contains articles by teachers and poets, an interesting exchange with teen-aged writers and some excellent poems by them and younger children." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:26 Ag 21 '71 30w

LARSEN, CHARLES. The good fight; the life and times of Ben B. Lindsey. 307p $10 Quadrangle bks.

B or 92 Lindsey, Benjamin Barr
ISBN 0-8129-0237-8 LC 78-152095

Lindsey rose to prominence in Denver, Colorado "where he became the best-known juvenile court judge in America. As a boy in a poor family he had dropped out of high school, delivered newspapers, worked as a janitor, and attempted suicide because he thought he was a failure. Eventually he became a lawyer. Ten years later he was invited to the White House by President Theodore Roosevelt on the recommendation of Jacob Riis. By 1914 a national poll rated Lindsey one of the ten greatest living Americans. . . . [Larsen's biography seeks to show Lindsey's] influence on the social and intellectual currents of American life in the early years of the twentieth century." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by P. G. Slater
Am Hist R 77:1519 D '72 400w

"Who was Judge Ben Lindsey, the subject of this fine biography? There was a time when every school boy would have placed his name among the Great Americans. . . . His highest accomplishment was in pioneering in the Juvenile Court system. . . . Always interested in progressive ideas, he quickly aided the woman's suffragettes. This led him into becoming a real leader in the sexual revolution. His ideas on matrimony and the status of women were summed up in his best seller, 'Companionate Marriage' [BRD 1927]. During the 1920's he became the whipping boy of all established religions and his name was synonymous with sexual permissiveness. . . . [This book] is fascinating as history but even more enjoyable as literature. . . . History collections will certainly want a copy of [it]." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 31:555 Mr 15 '72 350w

"The best part of [this] book is the judge's challenge to traditional definitions of sexual morality. . . . Larsen perceptively analyzes Lindsey's ideas in relation to the climate of opinion and demonstrates that far from being an advocate of promiscuity, he wanted sexuality acknowledged as a normal part of responsible human relations. Larsen is also good in analyzing the forces outraged by Lindsey's ideas. But as Larsen implicitly acknowledges throughout the book, Lindsey's national prominence came from his position as founder and presiding judge of the juvenile court. Here Larsen is less perceptive almost peremptory. We never really learn what the juvenile movement in the United States was all about, how juvenile courts differed from other courts in theory and practice, how these courts fitted into changing ideas of criminality on the one hand and child development on the other. . . . Even Lindsey's own writings are treated superficially. As a result, the core of Lindsey's life is lost, and a major aspect of the progressive movement is neglected." Daniel Levine

J Am Hist 59:754 D '72 450w

"Larsen has done an excellent job of portraying the life of an individual whose enlightened work has helped to bring about a fuller sense of justice and democracy for all Americans. The book makes for good reading." R. M. Mersky

Library J 97:491 F 1 '72 90w

N Y Times Bk R p14 Jl 16 '72 180w

LARSEN, LAWRENCE HAROLD, jt. comp. The Eisenhower administration, 1953-1961. See Branyan, R. L.

LARSEN, PETER. The United Nations at work throughout the world; devised and photographed by Peter Larsen; ed. by Egon Larsen. 127p $4.95; lib bdg $4.95 Lothrop

341.13 United Nations—Juvenile literature
LC 76-142813

"This is a book about the children of the world and how the United Nations is improving their lives. . . . Each chapter introduces the reader to a child and explains how the child's life has been affected by the [U.N.] agency working in his village." (Publisher's note) "Grades three to five." (Library J)

"A good photo-essay. . . . The book's chief value lies in its many informatively captioned, black-and-white photographs of the World Health Organization, UNESCO, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the International Labor Organization and other agencies of the U.N. at work." Jean Coleman

Library J 97:282 Ja 15 '72 80w

"There is a 'Family of Man' quality about . . . [this book] and none the worse for that." Gillian Tindall

New Statesman 81:315 Mr 5 '71 30w

LARSEN, RICHARD W., jt. auth. Certain democrat: Senator Henry M. Jackson. See Prochnau, W. W.

LARSON, CHARLES R. The emergence of African fiction. 305p $10; pa $3.50 Indiana univ. press

896 African fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 0-253-31945-5; 0-253-20149-7 (pa)
LC 71-180489

This "study of the African novel illustrates what is specifically 'different' about African fiction . . . [and] surveys the patterns of fiction that reflect changes in African life, especially as it commingles with Western culture." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

LARSON, C. R.—Continued

"[A] more accurate title might have been 'A spate of African-lit-class professorial talk about a few novels by Achebe, Tutuola, Nguigi, Laye, Peters, Soyinka, and Armah.' Then persons who had read these authors would know that herein they might enjoy comparing their own view with someone else's. Persons ignorant of the novels will probably not stay long with the book. Larson's method is to interlard lengthy synopses of the novels and generalizations that classify them and explore their development as a genre. Libraries serving students of African literature may want to acquire the book, though where there is conflict for what is left in the grant, they would do better to acquire more African novels. . . . Excellent bibliography." Choice 9:654 JI/Ag '72 200w

"Larson guides us through selected areas in the African fiction of the past quarter-century with admirable thoroughness. . . . He is certainly better informed than we are about a whole slew of novels that sound more vigorous than most of what has been produced in the Anglophone mid-Atlantic in recent years. We can only hope that Western readers will take note of his comments, and that African writers will studiously ignore them." Peter Dreyer Nation 215:119 Ag 21 '72 800w

LARSON, JAMES L. Reason and experience: the representation of natural order in the work of Carl von Linné. 171p il $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

581 Linné, Carl von. Botany—Terminology ISBN 0-520-01834-6 LC 70-632164

"Linné believed that reason and experience were the sole and sufficient sources of scientific knowledge; but Mr. Larson finds that other factors, such as professional needs, scientific traditions, and religious beliefs, were also significant in determining the intellectual structure of Linné's own work. Reason and Experience thus attempts to solve one of the problems in Linnaean scholarship: the nature and extent of the connection between logical and natural forms implicit in Linné's system of nature." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of principal works by Linné. Index of proper names.

"Larson corrects the misconception that even von Linne's well known artificial system was devised solely as a convenience for identifying and naming, and compares it with other attempts in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries to discern the system of nature. . . . Two of the five chapters were first published in Isis." Choice 8:1599 F '72 130w

"Larson's book [concentrates] . . . upon the historical origins as well as the philosophical and logical bases of Linnaeus's methodus. . . . By claiming that Linnaeus's methodus was a complex matter involving visual acuity, memory, intuition, and Aristotelean class logic, Larson has restated the notoriously difficult 'species problem' in such a manner that perhaps some progress will be achieved." Jerry Stannard Science 176:670 My 12 '72 500w

"[The author presents] new and important material for the delectation, not only of dedicated Linnaeologists, but of all those involved with the history of significant ideas. . . . [This book has] done an excellent service to Linnaean studies by drawing together [its] own and other scholars' musings on the master's outlook and method." TLS p371 Mr 31 '72 340w

LARSON, MARTIN A. When parochial schools close; a study in educational financing. 313p $7.50 Luce, R.B.

379 Education—Finance. Church schools—Finance. Church and education LC 72-79798

This "book contains an analysis of 16 public school districts in which parochial schools either closed or curtailed their activities and an analysis of eight private schools; a series of conclusions as to the nature of aid to parochial schools, the cost of absorbing parochial school students into public schools, and enrollment projections; and a narrative of the first two centuries of conflict over state aid for private schools. Larson . . . envisions parochial schools as offering no tax benefits for the common taxpayer; and in support of his case, he uses areas where public schools have easily absorbed parochial school students, with little financial hardships." (Library J) Index.

"This book should bring light not heat to many on-going arguments. As one might expect, it is a source book; not one to curl up with on a cold evening for entertainment. It seems balanced, profound. Interviews are held with leading Roman Catholic men and women, most concerned about these difficulties. They are allowed to speak for themselves and then the graphs, charts, details are marshalled for our own fair inspection. . . . This tidy study allows us to look into some past, recent history as parochial schools do indeed close. . . . It would be wise for the finance ridden PTA of parochial schools to look deeply into this book and to dig into its many financial groupings." E. J. Linehan Best Sell 32:353 N 1 '72 350w

"[Larson] takes delight in the plight of Catholic schools and thinks they can disappear creatively without a trace. Many opponents of governmental support of parochial education argue that they do not oppose Catholic education as such, or at least are neutral on the subject. Larson does not make such a claim, nor could he. Which is his business." Christian Century 89:962 S 27 '72 100w

"The subtitle is somewhat misleading, for half of this volume is not a 'study,' but a polemic against aid to parochial schools and the strategies of Catholic advocates. . . . The Achilles heel of the study is the arbitrary character of Larson's case studies, a point he unsuccessfully begs. However, the book is recommended as a succinct account of the 'nay' position." B. C. Bach Library J 97:3148 O 1 '72 180w

LASBY, CLARENCE G. Project paperclip: German scientists and the Cold War. 338p $8.95 Atheneum pubs.

331.7 Scientists—Recruiting. Germans in the U.S. LC 75-108824

This book describes the "postwar movement of German and Austrian scientists and engineers to the military installations, industrial laboratories, and universities of the United States. . . . Between May 1945 and December 1952 the United States government imported 642 alien specialists under several programs known collectively by the code-name 'Paperclip.' (Prologue) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Paul Kinlery

Best Sell 31:446 Ja 1 '72 550w

"To a reader like myself, who had firsthand knowledge of Paperclip's background and some of its aspects. . . . the book is interesting, provocative and brings back many memories. Its greatest impact on such a reader, perhaps, is that it reminds him how many people had their fingers in the Project, for some many different reasons, and either supported or opposed it for divergent, selfless or selfish, goals. . . . What impact, if any, the story may have on younger readers is harder to predict. . . . In one of his closing chapters, Lasby attempts a kind of evaluation of Paperclip's final accomplishments, but this chapter seems weak because it relies heavily, and naively, on sweeping estimates. . . . from the military establishment." W. R. Sears Bul Atomic Sci 28:55 Je '72 1850w

Choice 9:416 My '72 160w

Reviewed by Graham Wootton Christian Science Monitor p16 Mr 16 '72 440w

"The author explores the mixed attitudes toward the 'exploitation' of the scientists, attitudes that ranged from the U.S. armed forces' enthusiastic support to outright condemnation in other quarters. . . . [The scientists were] put to work on the numerous research projects that are described in detail in this work, which is recommended chiefly for the extent of its original material." Michael Gabriel Library J 97:195 Ja 15 '72 90w

"Professor Lasby credits Paperclip with having achieved considerable success in terms both of financial savings and technological advance. . . . American industry—according to one expert cited by Lasby—saved billions of dollars and advanced its research by years. . . . How did these immigrants take to America? [One may] . . . judge by the replies to a questionnaire Professor Lasby sent out to Germans who had since become American citizens." Sigrid Schultz

Sat R 54:39 D 11 '71 1350w

"This is a superb account of the project that brought . . . German scientists and technicians to the United States after World War II, in order to deny these skills to others, mainly the Russians. . . . Lasby writes definitively about the bureaucratic processes that generated the program, induced a confused government to adopt it, and persisted in its implementation. His judicious handling of background materials makes this a valuable study of the U.S. government in transition between waging war against Germany and Japan and undertaking to compete with the Soviet Union, a newly identified Cold War rival. . . . [Lasby] does not assess the output of Paperclip . . . [but his] fine account of the adaptation, innovation, and conflict manifested in Paperclip [will be of value] . . . for the reader interested in the governing of science, and in scientists in government." P. Y. Hammond
Science 176:643 My 12 '72 1550w

LAS CASAS, BARTOLOMÉ DE. See Casas, B. de las

LASH, JOSEPH P. Eleanor and Franklin: the story of their relationship, based on Eleanor Roosevelt's private papers; foreword by Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr; introd. by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. 765p il $15 Norton

B or 92 Roosevelt, Eleanor (Roosevelt). Roosevelt, Franklin Delano, President U.S. SBN 393-07459-5 LC 72-152667

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Frank Annunziata
America 126:71 Ja 22 '72 350w

Reviewed by Dorothy Rabinowitz
Commentary 53:86 F '72 2550w
Economist 243:63 Je 10 '72 550w

Reviewed by T. K. Hareven
J Am Hist 59:213 Je '72 1850w

Reviewed by Anthony Howard
New Statesman 83:793 Je 9 '72 1350w
TLS p995 Ag 25 '72 1100w

Reviewed by J. M. Blum
Yale R 61:422 Mr '72 2600w

LASH, JOSEPH P. Eleanor: the years alone; foreword by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. 368p pl $9.95 Norton

B or 92 Roosevelt, Eleanor (Roosevelt) ISBN 0-393-07361-0 LC 72-2674

Companion volume to: Eleanor and Franklin (BRD 1971). The author describes Mrs. Roosevelt's private and public life in the years following President Roosevelt's death, during which she served as a delegate to the United Nations. Index.

"[In this volume Lash has] adopted an impressionistic and, at critical points, defensively adulatory approach. . . . [The book] contains inordinate direct quotation and [provides] little beyond a triumphant citation of Mrs. Roosevelt's various activities. Since her 'years alone' were ones of impressive achievement and massive political influence, it is anomalous to find her biographer stoutly resisting any vigorous analysis of the forces that animated her activities. . . . Lash invariably introduces sympathetic explanations of Mrs. Roosevelt's positions. It is clear for example, from his own evidence that John Kennedy's Catholicism, even more than his father's wartime diplomacy, made her antagonistic toward his nomination. Yet, he resorts to a crude environmentalist defense: 'Somewhere deep in her subconscious was an anti-Catholicism which was part of her Protestant heritage.'" Frank Annunziata
America 127:99 Ag 19 '72 430w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 230:104 S '72 800w

Reviewed by B. D. Williams
Best Sell 32:258 S 1 '72 500w

Reviewed by Haydn Gilmore
Christian Century 89:1020 O 11 '72 700w

Reviewed by E. D. Canham
Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 9 '72 850w

Reviewed by H. M. Burns
Library J 97:2832 S 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
Nat R 24:1015 S 15 '72 900w

"The story of Mrs. Roosevelt's solitary journey—which was to last another 17 years—has great inherent interest, and Lash has chronicled it in moving terms. This sequel could easily have become an annotated social calendar, but Lash has used it as a vehicle for exploring a number of fascinating aspects of American politics in the post-World War II era. . . . [Eleanor Roosevelt] may have been a sweet loving, considerate woman. 'The First Lady of the World' and all that. But, as Francis Cardinal Spellman, John F. Kennedy, and others learned the hard way, she was a tough adversary to tangle with. . . . Lash's description of her encounter with Spellman is, in its own right, almost worth the price of admission. . . . [This] book covers an immense spectrum of activity, but above all [the author] has conveyed with critical affection the essence of Eleanor Roosevelt." J. P. Roche
N Y Times Bk R p3 Jl 30 '72 1300w

"[This sequel to Eleanor and Franklin] makes a no less remarkable achievement in lucid narration and sensitive characterization, and it is, for obvious reasons, a good deal more detailed and analytical in its treatment of public affairs. . . . The author's understanding of the movements [Mrs. Roosevelt] supported is as rich as his understanding of the remarkable human being he celebrates."

New Yorker 48:80 Ag 19 '72 350w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 80:66 Jl 31 '72 250w

"Will [the] audience [for Eleanor and Franklin] lose anything if it fails to go on to [the sequel]? It will indeed. Mr. Lash's concluding volume is remarkable for its accounting—in the biographer's words, as well as in those of the subject herself—of what it takes to translate sympathy, vitality, and natural intellect into major influences on the quality of the national life. . . . [The book] is, in its marrow, a victory book. During the years here chronicled Mrs. Roosevelt . . . [arrived] at comprehensive understanding, worked out to the borders of a breath-taking selflessness wherein 'merely personal' humiliation actually forgets how to preen itself, and the whole energy of the being is squandered recklessly, joyously, in the service of others." Benjamin DeMott

Sat R 55:56 Ag 19 '72 1000w

Time 100:74 Ag 7 '72 600w

LASSON, KENNETH. The workers: portraits of nine American jobholders; prepared for Ralph Nader's Center for study of responsible law; afterword by Ralph Nader. 269p il $5.95 Grossman pubs.

331.1 Labor and laboring classes—U.S. SBN 0-670-78282-3 LC 76-159819

"In this volume the reader learns of the day-to-day routine and the hopes and frustrations of nine American workers—a cop, waitress, coal miner, garbage man, cabbie, brick layer, baker, maid, and telephone operator [whose] main concern is mere survival." (Best Sell)

"Students interested in the mood of middle America will almost have to read and study this volume. As other similar works have done, it reveals that the middle American is not an unthinking hard hat of little intellectual ability, but rather, a man or woman who is fighting simply to make do in this world. His attitudes, his prejudices, have done much in the past to hinder real progress; but as this book implicitly reveals, the way to combat those attitudes and prejudices is by understanding their sources." Fred Rotondaro
Best Sell 31:461 Ja 15 '72 700w

"The reports are junior Oscar Lewis, or Studs Terkel, or Jim Bishop, well written, interesting, but repetitious. The foreword and afterword are independent of basic materials. The book is not analytical from any of the social science frames of reference. It is informative description which may be used by bright students as raw data, but would most likely be read by the middle-class student as 'interesting.'"

Choice 9:725 Jl/Ag '72 180w

"Nader, in his afterword, suggests that the worker has delegated his citizenship duties to elected and appointed officials who are failing him badly, in corporations, governments, and unions. He calls for full-time, professional citizen advocates to work in the interest of the jobholder. An important, timely book." H. J. DuBois

LASSON, KENNETH—Continued

Library J 97:1302 Ap 1 '72 150w

"This is both a good book and a good kind of book. It stands on its own as a well-written piece of documentation about lives that are never adequately reported on in the press unless there's scandal or tragedy. . . . The Workers succeeds despite its many faults, which include a disrespect for scholarly procedures (the reader can't tell how much editing of the taped dialogue has taken place; nor are the severe limits of the validity of data that is received by interview recognized), and a determination on the part of both the author . . . and Nader (who writes an afterword) to draw conclusions not readily discoverable in the data. . . . The book seems extraordinarily wholesome beside much that is now being published."

New Repub 166:20 Mr 11 '72 600w

LASSWITZ, ERICH. Two planets. See Lasswitz, K.

LASSWITZ, KURD. Two planets. Auf zwei Planeten; a novel abridged by Erich Lasswitz; tr. by Hans H. Rudnick; afterword by Mark R. Hillegas. 405p $10 Southern Ill. univ. press

ISBN 0-8093-0508-9 LC 78-156776

"This is the first English translation of an 1897 German novel in which the socially advanced human Martians come to earth and consider it their duty to give the benefits of their culture to earthlings. But paternal wisdom turns to intolerable arrogance and the people of earth must unite and turn the knowledge forced on them to war to win freedom once more." (Library J)

"[This book] contains a wealth of scientific concepts and speculations and would attract a very large young audience if the translation had fewer clichés, unsupported descriptive assertions, and sentences with a monotonous word order. . . . The plot is compelling and the technology ingenious for that period. . . . The story flows along with a happy confidence that science is morally uplifting. Although this philosophy is false, it does counter today's false pessimism that science is morally degrading."

Choice 9:388 My '72 110w

"Lasswitz's point is that both technological advance and respect for personal freedom are necessary for social progress. Despite a slow start, the book holds up well." Frederick Patten

Library J 97:1350 Ap 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by Theodore Sturgeon
Nat R 24:106 F 4 '72 850w

"Two Planets became very popular in Germany and was subsequently translated into nine languages but not into English. The abridgments were done by the author's son in 1948 and 1963. In translating, Mr. Rudnick has worked from the original and the abridgments, restoring a certain amount of currently pertinent material. Kurd Lasswitz was . . . deeply committed to the concept that self-knowledge and a high moral awareness would raise humanity to new heights of peace and achievement. . . . The book is remarkably free of nationalism and national prejudices (except for a testy dislike of the English, whose navy takes on the Martians and gets clobbered. . . . [It] was banned by the Nazis as 'democratic.' It is full of quaint dialogue, heroism, decorous lovmaking and gorgeous gadgetry." Theodore Sturgeon

N Y Times Bk R p33 My 14 '72 370w

The LAST whole earth catalog; access to tools (ed. by Stewart Brand). 447p il maps pa $5 '71 Random house

380.1 Mail-order business—Catalogs
ISBN 0-394-70459-2 (pa) LC 72-175457

The purpose of this catalog is to further the "power of the individual to conduct his own education, find his own inspiration, shape his own environment, and share his adventure with whoever is interested. An item is listed in the catalog if it is deemed: useful as a tool, relevant to independent education, high quality or low cost, easily available by mail." (Title page) This book lists tested tools, books and manuals, with a description of each item, including price and address where it can be obtained. Subject index. Title index.

"Do-it-yourself, even when you really don't have to, has long been in vogue. But 'Whole Earth' is more than a plug for the work ethic: it is a philosophical tract that endeavours to make shopping via catalogue a spiritual experience. . . . The ever-growing popularity of this book since [the first edition] appeared in [1968] shows just how many people are interested. It has become the bible of the commune and the creator of cults. Earth is the theme throughout. . . . [There is] a subject index which runs from 'adobe' to 'yoga' and includes such strange bedfellows as 'dulcimers,' 'excursions,' 'school things' and 'pests.'"
Economist 245:72 D 30 '72 450w

"The catalog is [a] kingsized . . . [listing of] the hardware and software of a new world. . . . As a practical tool listing the cheapest and best-quality goods for both rural and urban living it is one-stop shopping. However, it is for libraries that the book has the greatest impact, since it lists books—hundreds of books. . . . It is an invaluable combination of index, directory, ready reference manual, and selection aid that will assist in overcoming your library's so-called relevancy gap. . . . Cheap at $5, in spite of the fact that it is not particularly well bound, and much of the information will rapidly be dated." Andy Armitage
Library J 96:3744 N 15 '71 280w

"A monumental achievement, an ultimate shopping trip, and about the farthest out, farthest in, most together 'access to tools' now available. Following the format established in prior catalogs, this contains annotations for books, tools, interesting items, and some philosophy. It combines entries from the earlier catalogs plus some pithy comments from the editors and famous contributors like Ken Kesey. No responsible library should be without it and no self-respecting YA collection can ignore it." Regina Minudri

Library J 96:4209 D 15 '71 80w [YA]

Reviewed by Edward Abbey

Natur Hist 80:[84] N '71 400w

"Do you want a Dempster Windmill, an Eagle kerosene lamp, a Butank rainwater tank, a ceramic tool kit, a dymaxion sky-ocean world kit? Do you want to know about gold placers, mushrooms, yurts, the engineers' thesaurus, the Japan Kibbutz association, the mind of a dolphin? If so, 'The Last Whole Earth Catalogue' is the thing for you. A combination of many unlikely and often hard-to-find items laced with pithy comments and lively asides, it out-Sears Sears and should be equally collectible in the near future."

Va Q R 48:[lxxvii] spring '72 90w

LASZLO, ERVIN. The systems view of the world; the natural philosophy of the new developments in the sciences. 131p $5.95; pa $2.45 Braziller

501 Science—Philosophy. Systems analysis
ISBN 0-8076-0637-5; 0-8076-0636-7 (pa)
LC 71-188357

This volume "contrasts the systems approach with the outmoded atomistic conception of the world, surveys and spells out the contemporary systems philosophy of nature, and focuses the searchlight of systems concepts on our understanding of man and his current crises." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Laszlo brings readers up to date in relatively nontechnical terms on the 'systems' (integrative, interdisciplinary) way of looking at man and his world."

Christian Century 89:610 My 24 '72 30w

"[The author] attempts to find characteristics that are common to all 'natural systems.' Unfortunately, he distracts us with contradiction. . . . The second chapter seeks to identify those unchangeable values that man, as a natural system, is obliged to respect. It is hardly revealing to learn that these values are survival, procreation, and adaptability. With all considered, Laszlo's systems approach adds little to our understanding of man, nature, or the world." Daniel La Rossa

Library J 97:1813 My 15 '72 140w

The LATE Cenozoic glacial ages; ed. by Karl K. Turekian. (Yale Univ. Mrs. Hepsa Ely Silliman memorial lectures) 606p il maps $20 Yale Univ. press

551.7 Geology, Stratigraphic. Flint, Richard Foster
ISBN 0-300-01420-1 LC 70-140540

This volume deals with the "causes, nature, and chronology of the late Cenozoic ice ages. . . . [The range] takes in such facets as climatic change as interpreted from the Greenland ice cap to . . . statistical analysis of ocean core data, to the glacial history of Antarctica, the flora record of Europe to aspects of mammalian evolution during the late Cenozoic." (Choice)

"[The book's] 21 chapters [are] written by authorities in their respective fields. All chapters contain new information or new syntheses of existing data and are not simply repeats of published work. Will be of prime use to faculty and graduate students engaged in detailed work on climatic changes and related problems of the late Cenozoic. It will provide a major reference source for senior undergraduates. Each chapter has its own references, and there is a comprehensive author and subject index at the back."

Choice 8:1349 D '71 180w

"Any scientist wishing to learn the 'new look' at Quaternary geology must spend several hours with this [book]. . . . These are up-to-date distillations of what one might glean from over 1000 journal references given at chapter endings. . . . The focus is on the great scientific advances of the last decade; 82 percent of the references are dated 1960 or later. . . . The dominant theme is the role of the oceans in the cyclic pattern of climate. . . . Of course one can point to a few weaknesses. I deplore the paucity of cross references among articles. . . . [and] the long, detailed tables of data could hardly be read by anyone." R. P. Goldthwait
Science 174:1016 D 3 '71 1000w

LATHAM, AARON. Crazy Sundays: F. Scott Fitzgerald in Hollywood. 308p $7.95 Viking
B or 92 Fitzgerald, Francis Scott Key
SBN 670-24550-X LC 70-132860

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by J. R. Bryer

Am Lit 43:667 Ja '72 900w

Reviewed by R. M. Adams

N Y Rev of Books 18:26 Ja 27 '72 600w

TLS p1193 O 6 '72 850w

LATHAM, FRANK B. The panic of 1893; a time of strikes, riots, hobo camps, Coxey's "army," starvation, withering droughts, and fears of "revolution". 84p il lib bdg $3.95 Watts. F.

330.973 U.S.—Economic conditions—1865-1898—Juvenile literature. Depressions—Juvenile literature
SBN 531-01022-8 LC 70-132067

"Overexpansion in business and agricultural overproduction combined with an abundant supply of paper money to create major problems in America at the close of the 19th Century. Among the developments and personalities mentioned [in this account] are the Grangers, business trusts, emerging labor unions, Eugene V. Debs, the Populists, the dispute over bimetallism, William Jennings Bryan, Mark Hanna, [and] the gold drain. [Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"[In this account] it is possible to feel the unease growing into a smothering fear that gripped this country in one of its worst depressions. . . . Good history—and fascinating reading." Mrs. John Gray

Best Sell 32:98 My 15 '72 100w

"Reproductions of contemporary political cartoons add interest. The attempt to cover such a complex subject in a book of this size is only moderately successful and somewhat hard to read unless one has been previously briefed on the economic and political repercussions of the period." S. K. Ryan

Library J 96:3477 O 15 '71 130w [YA]

"[This book] elaborates on events in American history which, for lack of space, receive little attention in the average text. As supplementary reading [it] will enrich courses in United States history."

Social Studies 63:142 Mr '72 30w [YA]

LATHAM, JEAN. Victoriana. 159p il $7.95 Stein & Day

745.1 Art objects
ISBN 08128-1372-3 LC 76-148833

This book describes objects made of pottery and glass, toys, handwork, and miscellaneous items that decorated the homes of middle-class families of the nineteenth century. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 8:1445 Ja '72 80w

"A very little about many kinds of bric-à-brac, from dolls' houses to fashion plates, pin boxes to paperweights, and a mention of more notable oddities like stevengraphs. Not for the serious collector, but may be useful to a magpie mind seeking new collecting ideas."

Economist 242:49 Ja 1 '72 50w

"This British guide for collectors of Victorian oddments, amusing but always informative, is meant by its author not as 'a standard work, but merely an appetizer.' Latham . . . repeatedly and wisely urges the collector to learn his subject by reading the best books (she specifies which ones), going to museums (she names them), and handling pottery, toys, and snuffboxes in shops. . . . Except for certain strange gaps [the book] offers reliable guidance to a popular subject." S. C. Gross

Library J 96:2760 S 15 '71 100w

LATHAM, ROBERT, ed. The diary of Samuel Pepys, v4, 5. See Pepys, S.

LATTIMORE, RICHMOND. Poems from three decades. 274p $7.95 Scribner

811
SBN 684-12905-1 LC 72-941

"Brought together here is all the poetry from Poems [BRD 1958], Sestina for a Far-Off Summer [BRD 1963], and The Stride of Time [BRD 1967], plus 34 new poems and translations." (Library J) Some of these poems were first published in various magazines and books.

"Lattimore is at best a middling minor poet with no special distinction either in his style or in his choice of subject matter. How do you explain it? The reason I think may be found in the poet's deliberate avoidance of any suggestion of greatness. He writes deflated poems in plain speech; he is content to cast a cold eye on major truisms and epic stances and to shape his own statements on 'images that come down to live as fact.' . . . Poetry and art are Lattimore's subject matter; he renders both with courage and color." J. F. Cotter
America 127:323 O 21 '72 750w

"Solemn and satirical by turn, slipping now and again into the shallows of pessimism, Lattimore deftly holds the mirror to man—lover, warrior, creator, destroyer. Although several pieces among the new poems have particular merit—'Notes from the Odyssey' and 'The Fort'—the overall strength and versatility of Sestina are lacking. Nevertheless, no serious poetry collection can afford to do without this volume." C. R. Andrews

Library J 97:2610 Ag '72 160w

"When he translates, Lattimore jettisons much of the baggage of classical rhetoric. His renderings of the archaic show the bite and speed appropriate to the age of Pound. When he writes 'for himself,' whole cartloads of that same baggage turn up on his doorstep. In the —one is tempted to say 'classical'—irony of the circumstance, many of his poems sound like versified treatises 'worked' into 'good' English. Padded, poetically portentous and rational in ways that point to, or disguise, the absence of the magical, they do little more than identify interests and gloss a disposition. Except when Lattimore makes a sort of Romance-of-the-Self out of inauspicious events and discriminations, nearly all of his sentiments are commendable, his language fluid, his techniques informed." J. M. Brinnin

N Y Times Bk R p6 N 19 '72 420w

LAUDE, JEAN. The arts of Black Africa; tr. by Jean Decock. 289p il $12 Univ. of Calif. press

732 Art. Primitive. Negro art
ISBN 0-520-01797-8 LC 71-125165

"Laude sketches the background, both European and indigenous, of African arts and discusses their cultural, religious, political, and mythic ramifications. [He] emphasizes the important role of free individual creativity in African arts and the great stylistic variety to be found in them." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

LAUDE, JEAN—Continued

"In spite of a careless translation, this historical study . . . is a considerable improvement on the usual photographic anthology. Relying heavily on French sources and prejudices, Laude gives too much space to Griaule's questionable Dogon material and the aesthetically insignificant later Benin bronzes. The 196 photographs are regrettably small and dark, and some of the objects most crucial to the discussion are omitted from the plates. The bibliography is useful only for those who read French and/or German, and the index is both incorrect and incomplete, but the tabular 'Comparative survey of world history and art,' is a provocative way of viewing historical process. . . . High school and college students will find these essays fresh [and] thought provoking."

Choice 9:205 Ap '72 150w

"Here is a timely synthesis of the arts of black Africa in a translation that adds to Laude's exposition by a direct, clear style, and faithfully preserves his insights, scholarship, and clarity of thought. More than any other available survey of African art, this book is recommended as a text and reference for specialized and non-specialized studies alike.

. . . The book is an unusually satisfying synthesis of the arts of black Africa because it preserves their unity while demonstrating their divergences; the whole is always preserved in the discussion of the parts and vice versa." Sr. J. L. Leahy

J Aesthetics 31:136 fall '72 250w

LAURENTIN, RENÉ. Liberation, development, and salvation; tr. by Charles Underhill Quinn. 238p $5.95 Orbis bks.

261.8 Sociology, Christian. Underdeveloped areas
LC 72-156970

"The author sets out to answer the central question posed by the Mexican Theological Society in 1968: 'Does development have any significance in relation to salvation as proclaimed by Christ?' . . . [There is a] study of the evolving meaning of the word 'development,' especially in the context of the church, and of the relation of development to the church, to violence and to theology. The contribution of Louis J. Lebreton is considered, as well as Teilhard de Chardin and . . . the Marxist use of the word and concept. There is a . . . chapter . . . on 'The Magisterium and Development' (including a . . . survey of the relevant encyclicals) . . . [and one on] the rights of the poor." (Christian Century)

"Laurentin begins his book with a hard-hitting and comprehensive exposition of the condition of underdeveloped nations. He clarifies the overused and frequently misunderstood concepts of 'development' and 'liberation.' Throughout the book, we find an author who stands on solid ground, documents himself well and offers us a positive direction for involvement in the most authentic tradition of our faith. . . . One cannot underestimate this book inasmuch as it challenges us with our own tradition as Christians. If we choose to take it seriously (and the evidence presented leaves us little choice), we may find ourselves committed to social action and criticism in ways we have never been committed before. In the last analysis, you don't think about this book, you do it." J. M. Sullivan

America 126:519 My 13 '72 400w

"Though Laurentin makes some acute theological and social criticism in this work, his 'integral humanism' will appear too anthropocentric, pro-Leftist, and secularizing to be considered authentically representative of the best in Catholic social thought."

Choice 9:1301 D '72 200w

"This book—especially the preface, which was evidently written for the English edition—shows how the new theological reflections from Latin America have been appropriated by European theologians. From the original French publication of this book (May 1969) to the meeting of the National Theological Congress in Mexico at which the chapters were first given as addresses (November 1969) to the preparation of the English version, the author's perception of the meaning of development changed and expanded considerably. . . . [His] book has perhaps two main emphases: first, that development is a cultural as well as a technical and economic problem. Here Laurentin echoes the emerging concept of conscientização as best and most thoroughly articulated by Paulo Freire, and as elaborated and applied to fields other than pedagogy by Denis Goulet. The second emphasis is that the development movement is in some senses identical to the mission of the church, and that the mission of the church is to work for the promotion of 'the whole man and every man.'" Brady Tyson

Christian Century 89:806 Ag 2 '72 700w

LAUTER, PAUL, jt. ed. Politics of literature. See Kampf, L.

LAVALLEE, DAVID. Event 1000; ■ novel. 279p $5.95 Holt

SBN 03-085969-7 LC 73-138881

This is about "the U.S. nuclear-powered submarine Lancerfish [which] is accidentally rammed by a merchant ship and sinks in 1235 feet of water off the east coast of the United States. This is the beginning of a . . . tale of the operations carried out to rescue the crew of the ill-fated submarine. The story skips back and forth from the rescue team led by veteran submariner Barney Holmes to the desperate crew of the Lancerfish waiting on the bottom of the ocean." (Library J)

"The reactions of the trapped men are vividly presented. . . . Though a bit technical at times . . . [this] book has portrayed skillfully all the emotions and problems which surround a disaster." D. F. Lawler

Best Sell 31:357 N 1 '71 470w

"Lavallee brings a tremendous amount of information into his narrative, and it is a convincing rescue story. . . . This novel is meant partly as a warning to the U.S. Navy for its unpreparedness in such unique disasters." Paul Theroux

Book World p2 N 21 '71 420w

"The author was a submarine officer and is now a professional diver and underwater technician. Although this is his first novel, he builds suspense like a pro, keeping the reader completely engrossed in this timely tale. Recommended for public libraries and YA collections." Mark Neyman

Library J 96:2341 J1 '71 140w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p47 S 26 '71 90w

New Yorker 47:68 D 25 '71 110w

LAVER, JAMES. The age of illusion: manners and morals, 1750-1848. 197p pl $10.95 McKay

914.03 Eighteenth century. Europe—Civilization
LC 70-173893

This book contrasts European splendors and poverty in the years between the death of Louis XIV and the Revolution of 1848. The author describes the aristocracy, the prisons, sports, coffee houses and clubs, baths, theaters, erotic attitudes, and social and political life of the era. Bibliography. Index.

"Laver's subtitle . . . describes his book accurately. This is popular social history with an emphasis upon the chroniques scandaleuses of Britain and France, and it is a pleasant history at that. The curious will learn something of Medmenham Abbey, the Parc aux Cerfs, the Diamond Necklace, Harriet Wilson, etc., though not much about the American or French Revolution. At a paperback price one might recommend this to students bored with pedagogical sobriety and professorial density, but the cost as it stands is apt to outweigh any demand felt by librarians." R. R. Rea

Library J 97:1322 Ap 1 '72 120w

"Mr. Laver, the English authority on costume and customs, has never written a dull work, and this one, as expected, is wonderfully diverting. It does go faster than it goes deep, because Western Europe and the United States during the Industrial, American, and French Revolutions is a whopping topic. Still, the author has some plummy observations, and the book has plenty of fine illustrations."

New Yorker 48:144 Ap 22 '72 60w

TLS p652 Je 9 '72 400w

LAVER, ROD. The education of a tennis player, by Rod Laver; with Bud Collins. 318p il $7.95 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Tennis
SBN 671-20902-7 LC 70-139639

Interspersed throughout the story of Laver's 1969 "Grand Slam" year "are instruction tips, portraits of leading players, and flashbacks to Laver's own tennis development." (Library J) Index.

"Rod Laver's second book on tennis, this time with sports writer Bud Collins, is far superior to his first effort [How to Play Championship Tennis, BRD 1965]. He has changed the emphasis from a purely fundamental book to an interesting array of human interest . . . and has described the mental and physical aspects of match play in addition to giving sound helpful advice pertaining to tactics. [The authors] have captured the human drama as well as the mental chess game that goes on during championship tennis."

Choice 8:1211 N '71 90w

"This is an often fascinating, sometimes irritating account. . . . Tennis players will love it and may not be as annoyed as I was at the repetition . . . (e.g., three times we learn what squeezing a ball will do for the wrist). Also, . . . if Captain Queeg had fiddled with a tennis ball instead of those ball bearings he might have rattened up his forehand instead of his neuroses.' Did Laver write that? Did Collins suggest it would add literary quality to the book? It does not, and there are other examples of the same." David Peele
Library J 96:2535 Ag '71 120w

Reviewed by J. B. Segal

N Y Times Bk R p46 D 5 '71 10w

LAVITT, EDWARD, Jr. ed. Third World voices for children. See McDowell, R. E.

LAVRIN, JANKO. Nietzsche; a biographical introduction. 144p $6.95; pa $2.45 Scribner

193 Nietzsche, Friedrich Wilhelm
SBN 684-12671-0; 684-12672-9 (pa)
LC 79-174651

"Lavrinn attempts to clarify the complexity of Nietzsche's thought, relating it both to the man and to the society from which he sprang. . . . [He] also examines [Nietzsche's] relationships with his circle of friends . . . and Lou Salomé, the . . . friend of many of the greatest thinkers of her day." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

"The author consistently quotes Nietzsche in a bad 60-year-old translation. . . . He at times accepts Nietzsche's psychopathic sister's views of things. Finally, Lavrin reduces Nietzsche's poetic philosophy to a Darwinian psychotherapy, constantly referring to Nietzsche's 'biological outlook,' explaining all by reference to his physical illnesses. An appallingly ad hominem book and certainly no credit to a fine publishing company."

Choice 9:980 O '72 130w

"[This book is] useful for generalists."

Christian Century 89:314 Mr 15 '72 50w

LAWICK-GOODALL, JANE VAN. In the shadow of man; phot. by Hugo van Lawick. 297p $10 Houghton

599 Chimpanzees. Animals—Habits and behavior
ISBN 0-395-12726-2 LC 71-162007

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1471 Ja '72 190w

Economist 241:61 O 30 '71 600w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Fisher
Nation 214:90 Ja 17 '72 500w

Reviewed by Brad Darrach
Time 98:104 N 8 '71 1350w

LAWRENCE, BILL. Six presidents, too many wars. 307p $8.95 Saturday review press

070 Journalists. U.S.—Politics and government—1933-1945. U.S.—Politics and government—1945-
ISBN 0-8415-0143-2 LC 71-182475

This book deals with "the Presidential administrations of Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, . . . Kennedy, . . . Johnson and Nixon. . . . [It also] chronicles World War II, the mission to Moscow, the Korean war, and other events of international and national importance." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Lawrence was] the White House correspondent for The New York Times [from 1931 until 1961 when he] resigned . . . to join the American Broadcasting Company. . . . [His] memoirs indeed provide many human interest stories about the different Presidents and the great influence of the press on the making of American domestic and foreign policy."

B. D. Williams

Best Sell 32:65 My 1 '72 320w

"The reader is never in doubt as to Lawrence's feelings about an individual—be he a President or a copy-boy. It is interesting reading, a good journalistic job about the practice of journalism. Recommended for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 9:874 S '72 150w

"[Lawrence] proceeds chronologically, concentrating on the earlier years, Roosevelt-Truman-Eisenhower; and he does betray a common press bias of warmth to Kennedy and coldness to Nixon. . . . [He also] goes into his career as a journalist at some length."

Collin Clark

Library J 97:1330 Ap 1 '72 80w

"Popular idols were not [Lawrence's] dish. He thought that de Gaulle was not a great man, that MacArthur was not a great general, that the German people were not totally ignorant of the Nazi atrocities in the death camps, and Polish Cardinal Hlond, he remarks, 'may have been a Prince of his Church, but he was not a true Christian.' . . . If [the author's] comments were peppery, they were seldom poisonous. If de Gaulle was disruptive, he was unquestionably a power; and if MacArthur goofed at the Yalu, he did a first-rate job at Inchon. Lawrence was always sympathetic with a man whose misfortunes were attributable to malignant fate as much as to his own folly, as, for instance, Lyndon B. Johnson." G. W. Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p36 O 1 '72 340w

LAWRENCE, D. H. John Thomas and Lady Jane; (the second version of Lady Chatterley's lover). 372p $8.95 Viking

SBN 670-40812-3 LC 70-185281

"'Lady Chatterley's Lover' [BRD 1959], was actually the third of three complete versions of the same story written by D. H. Lawrence between 1925 and 1928. The earliest and shortest of these made its appearance here in 1944 as The First Lady Chatterley. . . . The second draft, written in 1927 . . . has never before been published in English. . . . [It contains] twenty thousand words that were deleted from the ultimate text. . . . There is much more conflict of classes here—direct or implied—than in the final version . . . and there is a very different ending." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Keith Cushman

Library J 97:3616 N 1 '72 300w

"The pseudonymous figures of the title, and references to parts of the anatomy of Lady C. and her gamekeeper-lover which caused a literary furor when the final version was first privately published and rapidly censored in 1928, appear under their correct names in the present text. They appear less frequently, too, in this second version . . . [which] is less feverish and hysterical, and far less explicit and redundant about country matters, although not as sanitized as the expurgated edition published in 1944 as The First Lady Chatterley. . . . The second version [is] a better book, for while freer from polemics about the perils of industrialization, it is dramatic and sensitively realistic about the emotional and economic wasteland in which the lives of colliers and foundrymen and their families are lived."

New Repub 167:32 S 16 '72 350w

"[This second version] has previously appeared only in Italian translation. . . . Those of us who have liked 'Lady Chatterley's Lover' with reservations may find ourselves preferring 'John Thomas and Lady Jane' and may wonder why Lawrence went beyond it, making various additions and subtractions. But not every reader will favor the second version, though it seems to me that in most ways it presents the story more intensely, in general more satisfactorily, and that the characters in it are at once more believable and more vital. . . . [This version] contains many, but not too many, of Lawrence's seasoned observations. And . . .

LAWRENCE, D. H.—Continued

the erotic episodes—not so much the heart of the story as in the third version—are presented with remarkable skill." H. T. Moore

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ag 27 '72 800w

Reviewed by L. E. Sissman

New Yorker 48:73 Ja 6 '73 1800w

"Because Lady Chatterley's shortcomings are so well known, it is possible to enjoy the unexpected virtues of this version. The most substantial improvement is in the gamekeeper Mellors, who is called Parkin here. . . . Lawrence lacked Thomas Hardy's gift for making the inner lives of simple people eloquent, but at least this Parkin makes the reader aware of the social chasm that Connie Chatterley proposed to cross. . . . [However] the florid, much laughed at language is still there. . . . If this book does not convince anyone that it should become the accepted version of Lady Chatterley's story, it is at least nothing for Lawrence lovers to be ashamed of." Martha Duffy

Time 100:98 S 18 '72 230w

LAWRENCE, D. H. Movements in European history. 336p maps $12 Oxford

940 Europe—History

ISBN 0-19-821492-8

LC 72-178661

Lawrence, surveying the period "from the establishment of the Roman Republic to the unification of Germany in 1871, focuses on . . . trends and significant turning points in history. . . . He argues that two essential conditions are necessary for national greatness. First, there must be absolute power. Second, absolute power must be accompanied by the conviction on the part of the governed that the leader rules by their wish and with their consent. As he viewed history, he detected the working of two great passions. They are the passion of pride, power, and conquest and the passion of peace and production. Nations really emerge when societies succumb to the latter passion." (Choice)

"Lawrence was a major novelist. This book provides adequate evidence that he was not a great historian. . . . One may question [his] interpretations and use of facts but pay tribute to his excellent descriptive power. The book should stimulate an interest in history among school boy readers. One is, however, provided with several insights into Lawrence's political and social views. . . . The interpretations are interesting and the book, while not suitable for history collections, might be of interest to the English department."

Choice 9:632 JI/Ag '72 120w

"[This book] is a little-known sport among Lawrence's writings. Published in 1921 as a textbook for junior pupils under the pseudonym of Lawrence H. Davison, it failed to gain educational acceptance. Its reissue is welcome. J. T. Boulton [who has written the 18-page introduction for this reprinting] goes rather far in saying that while 'it may not be convincing history; it is often a vivid literary experience'. But Lawrence the craftsman kept his audience clearly in mind. His narrative is swift, simple, and readable. Some of his judgments now sound odd, though his brand of hero worship has more persuasiveness today than it could have had fifty years ago."

TLS p280 Mr 10 '72 90w

LAWSON, R. ALAN. The failure of independent liberalism, 1930-1941. 322p $7.95 Putnam

973 U.S.—Politics and government. Liberalism

LC 69-18186

"Lawson makes an analysis of 'independent liberals'—those who in the 1930's advocated a variety of plans between the New Deal on the right and Communism on the left. Generally, they wanted to replace the old capitalist order with some type of non-Marxist, cooperatively organized society. . . . [Lawson] divides the independent liberals into pragmatic rationalists (influenced by Dewey and Veblen), and traditionalists who emphasize cultural pluralism and regionalism. He places Stuart Chase, George Soule, Paul Douglas, and Alfred Bingham in the first group and Lewis Mumford, Howard Odum, and the Southern agrarians in the other." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Despite [some] flaws, the book is valuable. The intellectuals who remained critics of the dominant liberalism of the 1930s have long needed analysis, and Lawson is perceptive, thoughtful critic . . . [who has given us] new insights into some familiar and a few unappreciated intellectuals. The Allan Nevins Prize was granted the book not for its organizational mastery, one assumes, or because it is entirely free of opaque phrase, but for the general gracefulness of its style and the balance of its judgments." O. L. Graham

Am Hist R 77:842 Je '72 750w

Reviewed by Brother Benedict Wengler

Best Sell 31:415 D 15 '71 330w

"This sharply etched thesis notes our current 'malaise,' but does not spell out the applicability of 'pragmatic rationalism' to it. An essay in 'intellectual history,' the book should prove stimulating to students of 20th-century history. For general and graduate libraries."

Choice 9:128 Mr '72 170w

"Since none of the independent liberal factions achieved political power they are deemed a failure, but so is the consensus of politics of the New Deal (particularly as viewed through the pessimism of 1971). Lawson's capsule analysis of each ideology is based largely on standard published works plus interviews with some of the principals of the period. . . . Although this provocative book would have been strengthened by a more concisely integrated summary of events up to World War II, it is, nevertheless, a worthy contribution to the intellectual history of the 1930's." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 96:4008 D 1 '71 200w

TLS p995 Ag 25 '72 1100w

LAY, BEIRNE. Earthbound astronauts: the builders of Apollo-Saturn. 198p il $6.95 Prentice-Hall

629.4 Saturn project. Apollo project. Astronautics—U.S.

ISBN 0-13-222307-4

LC 78-145628

This is the "story of the men who were . . . instrumental in developing the Apollo-Saturn system and the problems they faced." (Choice)

"Unfortunately, the book is not a success. It is marred by Lay's penchant for colorful (mis)writing and for misusing words. . . . But the main fault is that he tried to cram too much into two few pages—there are just too many names and projects and too little space is devoted to many of them. In addition, there is no index or bibliography and Lay's research, apart from interviews, seems to have been rather superficial. Considering that one can find information elsewhere on the more important people and problems, this book is recommended only for specialized collections and larger libraries."

Choice 8:1602 F '72 180w

"From personal interviews with project engineers and managers, Lay has put together the story of the men who built the 'stack.' He has managed to convey the feelings of frustration, fear and satisfaction which accompanied every phase of the development, and has organized facts about over two decades of work into an easily read summary which will give the reader a higher regard for that silver rocket sitting on the launch pad. Recommended for all subject collections." R. E. Swinburne

Library J 96:1621 My 1 '71 140w

LAYMON, CHARLES M., ed. The interpreter's one-volume commentary on the Bible; introduction and commentary for each book of the Bible including the Apocrypha, with general articles. 1386p il maps col maps $17.50; thumb-indexed ed. $19.50 Abingdon

220.7 Bible—Commentaries

ISBN 0-687-19299-4; 0-687-19300-1 (thumb-indexed ed) LC 71-144392

This commentary on the Bible "is based on the Revised Standard Version. . . . About one-fourth of the volume is devoted to 43 general articles . . . dealing with such topics as biblical interpretation, geography and history, ancient literary methods, the religion of the Bible, text, canon, translation, and chronology." (Library J) Bibliographies. Chronology. Index of subjects. Index of scripture references.

"Older students of the Bible will recall the many-volumed Interpreter's Bible of the early 1950's and the four-volume Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible [IRD] 1963 of the early 1960's. We have now in the same series . . . [a commentary] on a more popular level. . . . One will inevitably compare this . . . commentary with the other major shorter commentary on the whole Bible, The Jerome Biblical Commentary [ed. by E. Brown, BRD 1969]. . . . [Interpreter's is] less equipped with scholarly apparatus. . . . Well chosen pictures and maps brighten its pages. Less space is allotted to the commentaries. . . . while the general articles are shorter and aimed more at the layman. . . . [This] commentary is recommended highly, nonetheless." R. J. Clifford

America 125:460 N 27 '71 340w

"In quality, the commentaries and general articles differ. Some are outstanding. . . . Others disappoint because in places they are of questionable helpfulness to the intended audience. . . . Despite occasional lapses, this. . . is a superior product that will contribute greatly to increased understanding and appreciation of the Bible on the part of those to whom it is directed. I heartily recommend it to that audience." Edward Glynn

Christian Century 88:1477 D 15 '71 550w

"Despite the title similarity, this new volume has no relationship to Abingdon's 12-volume Interpreter's Bible [BRD 1951 through 1957]. Although designed particularly for the nonprofessional, it is nevertheless scholarly, and is based on the latest historical and critical studies of biblical text (including the apocrypha). Seventy scholars, an interfaith group, mostly American, have collaborated in producing this very practical and useful ready-reference commentary. Most contributors represent a moderately critical point of view. . . . [The commentary] uses such small units of text that at times it comes close to being a verse-by-verse exposition, which makes the compendium rather detailed and precise for a one-volume work. There is, generally speaking, a good blending of the historical, critical, exegetical, and theological. . . . A particularly valuable reference feature is the excellent subject index. . . . The maps are superb." R. V. Ritter

Library J 96:3335 O 15 '71 180w

TLS p1234 O 13 '72 150w

LAZERSON, MARVIN. Origins of the urban school; public education in Massachusetts, 1870-1915. 278p $10 Harvard univ. press

370.19 Public schools—Massachusetts. Education, Urban

ISBN 0-674-64482-4 LC 77-168433

In this monograph "Lazerson declares that he 'treats the assumptions, ideologies, and practices of the generation of educators who shaped America's city schools.' . . . Index." (Choice)

"[The author] draws extensively on the experience of 10 Massachusetts cities. As a chronicle of the transformation of the urban school (particularly, in its study of philanthropists and social reformers), it is a valuable study. Yet, incongruously, it largely ignores the immigrant child who was, for the most part, the school constituency of the period and the cities to which the monograph is addressed. . . . As a result, the monograph's conclusions may be questioned. [But] whatever its faults, [it] is an important contribution to the recasting of American educational historiography. Recommended."

Choice 9:260 Ap '72 270w

"Lazerson has transformed his doctoral dissertation into an interesting, well-written, and provocative study. Through the effective use of gem-like short quotations he breathes life into now dry-as-dust wrangles over forgotten issues of educational policy and practice. He displays magisterial command of a wide array of sources. While making an important, sharply focused contribution to the history of education, Lazerson also adds to the fundamental re-examination that social historians are giving to this period of American history." Neil Sutherland

Harvard Ed R 42:296 My '72 1350w

"[This] book is not a case study in the orthodox sense, [and the Massachusetts] municipal school reports, all judiciously condensed, furnish [its] empirical basis. . . . [It] illuminates the long-shadowy limbo between antebellum educational reform and the early twentieth-century progressive experience. This excellent study, however, is somewhat constrained by assumptions similar to those employed by scholars in these other well-worked periods. . . . Urban education emerges much too facetiously out of contrasts with rural education; and 'compulsory' strictures in the city supplant earlier 'voluntaristic' traditions of public schooling. . . . Despite these caveats, Lazerson's book well represents the transformed historical scholarship in the field of American education." P. H. Mattingly

J Am Hist 59:443 S '72 700w

LEACOCK, ELEANOR BURKE, ed. North American Indians in historical perspective. See North American Indians in historical perspective

LEAMER, LAURENCE. The paper revolutionaries; the rise of the underground press. 220p il $8.95; pa $2.95 Simon & Schuster

070.4 Underground press. Newspapers

SBN 671-21143-9; 671-21144-7 (pa)

LC 73-189751

"In this survey of anti-Establishment journalism . . . attention has been given to detailing the significance of the dichotomy between underground newspapers purveying cultural phenomena and those purveying political radicalism during the last 80 years. Emphasis has been reserved for the more recent papers and their cultural and political importance. . . . Many of these papers . . . preceded and anticipated many movements of the counter-culture during the past decade. [Included also is a] discussion of the role of censorship, suppression, and harassment." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] an informative, scholarly analysis of the underground press." R. W. Perdue

Library J 97:1806 My 15 '72 100w

"[This] is a reasonably straightforward account. . . . After dishing out a who-what-when-where-why-how of historical background . . . [Leamer] commences a carefully researched study of the 'undergrounds.' . . . [He] asserts that the underground press has covered and continues to cover material the established press refuses to or is unable to cover. . . . [He also] properly devotes a good deal of space to those who have initiated the underground papers. . . . [In Leamer's account] few opinions intrude upon his assembled facts—but by omitting the interplay between people and process he has lost the opportunity to provide the kind of complex overview the youth culture needs." Norman Schreiber

Sat R 55:58 S 2 '72 360w

LEAN, E. TANGYE. The Napoleonists; a study in political disaffection, 1760-1960. 402p pl col pl $12.75 Oxford

914.2 Great Britain—History—19th century.

Great Britain—History—20th century.

Great Britain—Biography. Authoritarianism

SBN 19-215184-3 LC 79-537520

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by D. P. Resnick

Am Hist R 77:154 F '72 650w

Reviewed by N. O. Keohane

Am Pol Sci R 65:1217 D '71 950w

Reviewed by John Clive

Pol Sci Q 87:515 S '72 550w

LEBEDOFF, DAVID. Ward number six. 179p $5.95 Scribner

329 Politics, Practical. Presidents—U.S.—

Nomination

SBN 684-12823-3 LC 70-37181

"The story of presidential nominating politics within the Democratic-Farmer-Labor party of Minnesota in 1968 written by a participant-observer. Beginning at the level of Ward Six in Minneapolis, Lebedoff follows the process through county and congressional district conventions to the Minnesota state convention and on to Chicago (briefly). Most consideration is given to the conduct of the Ward Six and state conventions." (Choice)

"A supporter of Humphrey in 1968, Lebedoff levels criticisms at some people and actions on both the McCarthy and Humphrey sides of the contest, although his focus is primarily on some McCarthy supporters. The press also receives a few licks for what Lebedoff considers biased or inaccurate reporting. On the whole, this is a readable and entertaining political yarn which provides some revealing glimpses into local and state level party and nominating politics. It is not a 'must' item for college libraries but it would be a good addition to a 'browsing room.'" Choice 9:1040 O '72 170w

"Lebedoff meant his biographical-political essay to be an indictment of the U.S. political system at work, but it is so filled with direct conversation and interminable details as to what the weather was like when he went out to a caucus or how much he needed a cup of coffee, that instead of a picture of the political machinery in operation there emerges an over-detailed look at a bitter, confused local politician. Anyone—student, senior citizen, Establishment or anti-Establishment—who dares to work on the 'other side' is attacked. This is a volume of spite against local politicians and has no value for analyzing the 1968 campaign." Renate Hayum

LEBEDOFF, DAVID—Continued

Library J 97:203 Ja 15 '72 200w

LEBOW, VICTOR. "Free enterprise": the opium of the American people. 145p $4.50; pa $2.50 Oriole eds.

338.7 Corporations. Capitalism. Business—Social aspects
LC 76-185411

"This book is an examination of the system of private enterprise—its morals and motivations. It explains how business uses its power and its propaganda to shape the values and dictate the priorities of American society. . . . The author shows how the system is buttressed and supported by . . . the Congress, the executive agencies, the courts, the schools, the churches, the police, the military and the myriads of fraternal, professional and social organizations whose allegiance is to 'Free Enterprise.'" (Publisher's note)

"This book is an eloquent indictment of the corporate structure in the United States and its mythical label of 'free enterprise.' The main thesis follows the socialist tradition—that a system based on profit is incompatible with the national interest. . . . The book will appeal to the rebels of today, urging them to look within the structure for solutions to its problems." George Charney

Library J 97:2724 S 1 '72 380w

"This is, in many respects, an unusual book. It is written in a most sober style and without any of the worn-out rhetoric that characterizes so much of contemporary 'progressive' literature. . . . It emphasizes the enormous obstacles that any major change in the structure of the American economy would have to face. This is one of the many contributions which the book can make to the enlightenment and education of political activists in present-day America. The book . . . presents an astounding collection of facts, in simple and readable language through which the wit and compassion of the author often shine. The book will be particularly valuable to young readers, as well as to older ones who have had no opportunity to study the character of that 'invisible hand' which directs the operations of capitalism." Otto Nathan

Nation 215:56 Jl 24 '72 1950w

LE CARRÉ, JOHN. The naive and sentimental lover. 455p $7.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47336-1 LC 78-163133

This novel centers about an "emotional triangle involving Aldo Cassidy, wealthy but spiritually impoverished British pram-manufacturer; Shamus, wild artist . . . who advertises his unique life force by . . . dancing on restaurant tables, punching women in the mouth, and offering his best friend's wife five quid to have it off with him; and Helen, the . . . artist's wife. What Shamus sees in Cassidy is a great mystery, but upon chance meeting they become practically lovers. . . . Cassidy is shaken alive by the impact of Shamus, but he manages to blow the whole thing by falling for Helen . . . but then wilting from the heat of his and her stronger bonds to Shamus." (Library J)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 229:107 F '72 450w

Reviewed by J. J. Murray
Best Sell 31:478 F 1 '72 170w

"So few novelists can do interesting plots these days, and since Le Carré is one who can, people who have liked his previous elegant thrillers may be sorry he has departed from his spy mode to write this serious comic novel. . . . You think you have read this book before, but you haven't exactly. The identity-crisis theme is old enough . . . but the variations are amazing and diverting; one might call them ornamentations instead, elaborating the theme with conscious, and impressive, virtuosity. Shamus and Helen try to lead Cassidy . . . into a baroque world where behavior is founded upon spontaneity and feeling. . . . Our own perceptions are often challenged by the skillful way Le Carré blends interior and exterior reality; what is really happening in this book, and what does Cassidy only imagine? It doesn't matter; all the bits, real and dreamlike, are finely wrought, alternately comic and touching. . . . This work is solid, brilliant and . . . marvelously good reading."

Diane Johnson

Book World p4 Ja 9 '72 600w

Choice 9:814 S '72 160w

Reviewed by Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p13 Ja 11 '72 700w

"Le Carré has a proven talent for sustaining suspenseful interest, but outside the security of his usual spy framework his endlessly descriptive prose becomes redundant and frequently boring. A polished and professional, but rather unexciting, novel." Arthur Curley

Library J 96:3777 N 15 '71 180w

Reviewed by Clive Jordan
New Statesman 82:409 S 24 '71 240w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wolff
N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 11 '72 880w

"Le Carré's title is tricky. The phrase comes from Schiller. 'The poet is nature, or he seeks nature,' Schiller wrote. 'In the former case, he is a naïve poet, in the second case, a sentimental poet.' Shamus, as Shamus tells us, is a life force and therefore 'naïve'; Aldo, who seeks to imitate him, is 'sentimental.' It seems a bit forced, but then there is a lot of literary baggage in this story, a lot of metaphorical glop and heavy-breathing symbolism, too. Much of the dialogue is painful. . . . Le Carré struggles to make his surfeit of detail significant, but it is only tedious. The book lacks economy; an essentially good story is spoiled by turgid prose and menopausal romanticism . . . quite different from Le Carré's former bleakness."

Newsweek 79:6313 Ja 10 '72 600w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper
Sat R 55:34 Ja 8 '72 500w

Reviewed by John Skow
Time 99:66 Ja 24 '72 380w
TLS p1138 S 24 '71 500w

LE CLÉZIO, J.M.G. The book of flights; an adventure story; tr. from the French by Simon Watson Taylor. 319p $6.95 Atheneum pubs.

LC 77-139315

This novel "charts fruitless voyages of self-discovery undertaken by its hero, 'Young Man Hogan,' who rambles the known and unknown worlds, and by the author, whose interpolated 'Self-Criticism(s)' . . . examine, then lament the limits of individual personality." (Library J) Originally published in France in 1969.

Reviewed by T. O'Hara
Best Sell 32:54 My 1 '72 650w

"Apparently shapeless, a hodgepodge of pseudo-lyrical meditations, typographical eccentricities, catalogues, guidebook descriptions, rhetorical questions, assertions of a snotty self, this 'adventure story' is a model of skipability. . . . All this guff is easy to dismiss. Too easy, for [the book] is not dismissable as faddish self-indulgence. Rather it is a horrifying vision of the unending war between system and chaos. . . . Technically, the book will remind you of Baudelaire's Little Prose Poems and Wurlitzer's threatening novel Flats [BRD 1971]. The extended sequences in the desert and in the leper-colony are much more than tours de force; they are masterful conceits that contribute to a stunning metaphor." J. R. Frakes

Book World p2 Ja 9 '72 290w

"This is an embarrassingly bad book, the sort of thing that results when a writer rides a theory too hard. . . . The compulsion to escape the prison of self so dominates the novel that one can experience nothing but its monomaniacally reiterated thesis. Hogan does not come to life, nor is he interestingly mysterious. Numerous powerful images and set scenes are rendered meaningless by their subordination to the overwhelming abstractness of Le Clézio's vision of blankness." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:516 F 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by John Spurling
New Statesman 83:87 Ja 21 '72 360w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards

N Y Rev of Books 18:19 Mr 9 '72 650w

"There are parts of this book that are very moving. Yet I find something ultimately self-deceptive about [Le Clezio's] writing. For all his elaborate self-consciousness about the novel, literature and language, he is not finally searching for a further expansion in our awareness of the fiction-making process . . . but for a para-literature and para-language which would . . . restore our freshness of vision and response. He proclaims the futility and terminal illness of literature—only to make, surreptitiously, the highest claims for his form of it. This comes close to self-righteousness." Peter Brooks

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 30 '72 950w

Reviewed by Robert Scholes

Sat R 55:67 Ja 22 '72 300w

"The book is really an anthology of [the author's] 'often talented but sometimes tedious observations, fantasies, parables and jokes'. The aim is to address the reader very directly, the result rather precious. . . . [The] translation is both fluent and resourceful."

TLS p295 Mr 17 '72 50w

LEDEEN, MICHAEL ARTHUR. Universal fascism; the theory and practice of the fascist international, 1928-1936. 200p $9.50 Fertig

320.5 Fascism—Italy. Youth movement
LC 70-185794

This is "a study of the efforts of Italian Fascism to create a 'Fascist International' in the years 1928-36, emphasizing the ideological currents and clashes within the movement. . . . Examination of the appeal of Fascism to youth and youthful intellectuals shows how it attracted partisans from differing social backgrounds in a search to create a new 'Fascist man' on an international scale." (Choice)

"[This work] contains interesting and suggestive sections on the nature of Fascism and its appeal across class lines. A useful contribution to modern Italian history and to the growing literature on the Fascist phenomenon."

Choice 9:1190 N '72 150w

"[This is a] thoroughly researched study. . . . Ledeen includes a discussion of Fascist antagonism to the racist ideology of the Nazis and of the transformation brought about after 1938 by the introduction of anti-Semitic legislation in Italy. Recommended for academic collections." B. S. Viault

Library J 97:2372 J1 '72 110w

LEDUC, VIOLETTE. The taxi; tr. from the French by Helen Weaver. 87p $4.95 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-27253-0

LC 75-189339

"Two children, brother and sister, sixteen and fourteen respectively, decide, one day on a merry-go-round on the boulevard de Clichy, to take three months of lessons in sex from a pimp and a prostitute, and then to dedicate themselves to each other for one whole day, in a taxi driving around Paris. The book is composed of their dialogue on this day." (N Y Rev of Books)

Best Sell 32:194 J1 15 '72 40w

"A brief and trivial bit of erotica, a make-believe record of the oh's and ah's of a young brother and sister who spend a day of mutual sexual exploration." Dorothy Nyren

Library J 97:2200 Je 15 '72 70w

Reviewed by Michael Wood

N Y Rev of Books 19:15 Ag 10 '72 1150w

"'La Bâtarde' [BRD 1965], an extremely graphic memoir of the author's love life, made her famous overnight. . . . [The Taxi,] something of a departure from her previous work, . . . is a remarkable achievement. In [it] she takes a vacation from literary exhibitionism to tell a marvelous fairy tale of incest and sexual initiation. . . . The fairytale quality of the story never flags. With well-bred exactness, [the brother and sister] have planned this day for months. . . . There is a comic undertone in this petit-bourgeois thoroughness. But the poetry of adolescent sexuality, which Violette Leduc renders so beautifully, the defiant complicity of two young bodies, the mirrorlike responsiveness of the incest itself, makes the comedy infinitely tender." Paul Zweig

N Y Times Bk R p6 J1 9 '72 700w

LEE, ASHER. Goering; air leader. 256p il $8.95 Hippocrene bks.

943.086 Goering, Hermann Wilhelm. World War, 1939-1945—Aerial operations
ISBN 0-88254-015-7 LC 72-81241

This book is an attempt "to analyze Goering's effectiveness as an air force general." (Library J)

"When Hermann Goering . . . gulped down that fatal phial of cyanide, he not only cheated the hangman and exploded the sham of the Nuremberg trials, he also laid up against his own name a huge fund of fury and abuse. Lee draws heavily from this fund. . . . [The] rehearsal of Goering's faults becomes monotonous. And, in spite of [the author's] skill in sorting and presenting the facts, it also becomes unconvincing. . . . From Mr Lee . . . a cool, objective assessment of Goering as air leader might have been expected. But here his book disappoints. Although it is better documented than most, it is mainly a diatribe directed against the fat man who committed the crime of not being funny."

Economist 244:60 S 23 '72 430w

"The value of this book is lessened by accumulated stylistic defects. . . . [Lee blends] a summary of material from standard published sources with his own World War II experience in the British Air Ministry's German intelligence section. The book is generally accurate. It is written on a popular level; this makes the unclear presentation more unfortunate, although small public libraries with limited aviation collections may find its summary functions useful." J. H. Oxley

Library J 97:3579 N 1 '72 120w

LEE, E. C. B. Safety and survival at sea [by] E. C. B. Lee and Kenneth Lee. (A Giniger bk) 286p il $8.25 Norton

613.6 Survival (after airplane accidents, shipwrecks, etc.)
ISBN 393-03112-8 LC [77-29854]

This "is an anthology of first-person accounts of man's ability—or inability—to survive at sea. The 'contributions' come from . . . survivors of collisions, fires, torpedoings, aircraft crashes, yacht sinkings and the like, made shortly after their rescue from the sea. There are accounts of experiences on rafts, in lifeboats, and in the sea, from the Tropics to the Arctic oceans, and first-hand observations from the logbooks and writings of such people as Heyerdahl, Bombard, Chichester, Rose and Knox-Johnston. These have been presented . . . in a . . . sequence, from preparation against shipwreck, through survival in conditions of exposure—with reports under such headings as Shock, Thirst, Living off the Sea, Religion, Hallucinations and Cannibalism—to descriptions of rescues and treatment after rescue." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This unusual travel guide is written for shipwrecked sailors, who are becoming more common, especially in the English Channel . . . [and is] a terse, readable, but understandably morbid account of the perils of shipwrecks. . . . Congratulations to the authors, but the book would save more lives if sailors would get it in their pockets as the ship sinks. A paperback version, please."

Economist 239:62 My 29 '71 100w

"[This fascinating book is] a dry, succinct compilation. . . . The intent, in these brief histories, is entirely practical, but the effect, as examples of the art of condensed narrative, is irresistible. A man attacked by a jellyfish: 'Suddenly an invisible thread wrapped around my throat'; another, attacked by a shark: 'The big toe on my left foot was dangling. A piece of my right heel was gone.' . . . A great many similar accounts." P. S. P.

Newsweek 79:[107] Je 12 '72 100w

LEE, KENNETH, jt. auth. Safety and survival at sea. See Lee, E. C. B.

LEE, RAYMOND E. The London journal of General Raymond E. Lee, 1940-1941; ed. by James Leutze, with a foreword by Dean Acheson [Eng title: The London observer]. 489p $12.50 Little

940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives. World War, 1939-1945—Great Britain
LC 78-161861

"This is the diary Lee kept during his service as U.S. military attaché in London, June

LEE, R. E.—Continued

1940 to December 1941. It includes . . . [his] private predictions about the war that were fulfilled and the observations that have been borne out by subsequent historical research. . . . [Included also are] anecdotes . . . about the British character in adversity, Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy's defeatism, and the problems the British military chiefs had with Churchill . . . [as well as an] account of the . . . hesitant American moves toward coming to Britain's help and the problems of coalition warfare." (Library J)

"This absorbing and very readable journal gives not only ample evidence of General Lee's keen military insight and judgment and of his month-by-month reappraisals of Britain's prospects, but also his seemingly inspired guesses as to what the Germans would do next—and why. Interwoven with these details is the author's empathy with the British people struggling against tremendous odds. Never over-writing, [Lee] induces the reader, with a matter-of-fact but very literate style, to share the situation. . . . [This is] a rewarding book which . . . can stand on its own numerous merits." W. H. Archer

Best Sell 31:416 D 15 '71 650w

"Editorial notes amplify and explain many of the journal entries and thus help the general reader. However, this work has appeal mostly for the specialist." A. S. Birkos

Library J 96:3600 N 1 '71 200w

"The main interest of the book on its serious side is to show the instinctive suspicion which even countries closely allied have of each other. . . . It is always useful to have the immediate impressions of a contemporary, even from one rather remote from ordinary life. But I cannot feel that Lee's book is 'a rare story' or 'engrossing reading,' as others have found it. . . . With this diary we are scraping the barrel." A. J. P. Taylor

N Y Rev of Books 18:17 F 10 '72 700w

N Y Times Bk R p18 D 19 '71 90w

"Beneath the anecdotes of quiet heroism from Blackfriars to Claridge's is a more fascinating tale of Britain's desperate machinations to draw America—both its hardware and manpower—into the fray. . . . The journals give a day-to-day feeling of living through the blitz. . . . Though we meet such notables as Churchill, Beaverbrook, generals 'Pug' Ismay and 'Boom' Trenchard, H.G. Wells and G.B. Shaw, 'Wild Bill' Donovan and George Marshall, something in Lee's book balks at real intimacy. . . . Though [Lee] gives a fascinating account of that 'finest hour' that was two years long, something is missing. The book ends as Lee, recalled to the States, comes off the plane toward his waiting wife. It is Dec. 7, 1941. That may be why the journal seems a richly anecdotal prelude to the real story." S. K. Oberbeck

Newsweek 78:105 N 29 '71 1000w

TLS p748 Je 30 '72 1300w

LEE, ROBERT. The spouse gap; weathering the marriage crisis during middlecence [by] Robert Lee & Marjorie Casebier. 222p $4.95 Abingdon press

301.42 Marriage. Human relations. Middle age. Sex
ISBN 0-687-39258-6 LC 75-160795

The authors believe "that marriage offers the best relationship between the sexes and should be preserved. . . . [They] observe that for many couples married from 12 to 15 years seldom does the word spouse rhyme with spice. This, they surmise, is the 'end result of a gradual process, a kind of erosion of the taste buds until general blandness characterizes the marital diet.' They have a number of . . . ideas (mostly related to sexual behavior) on preserving and revivifying the marriage." (Library J)

"Behind the facade of many marriages is the 'middlescent malaise,' as it is termed the authors—a professor of social ethics and a research assistant at the Institute of Ethics and Society. With the help of a panel of 50 couples, Lee and Casebier have written of this problem and others in what is a . . . relevant self-help book. . . . According to the authors, some of the divorces [among those married 15 years or longer] may be traced to a discrepancy between expectation and realization: falling in love may be unrealistic; the courtship game may be dishonest. . . . It is [their] hope . . . that couples will work earnestly to repair damage." Samuel Southard

Christian Century 88:1395 N 24 '71 330w

"[This book is] readable and sensible." E. T. Smith

Library J 96:3332 O 15 '71 50w

LEE, ROBERT H. G. The Manchurian frontier in Ch'ing history. (Harvard Univ East Asian res. center. Harvard East Asian ser, 43) 229p $8 Harvard Univ. press

951 Manchuria—Boundaries. Manchus. China—History

SBN 674-54775-6 LC 70-95926

This study of Manchuria after 1644 considers how "the Manchus strove to keep Chinese settlers out of the northern frontier to avoid the sort of tribesman-Chinese interaction which had permitted the original Manchu conquest of China. Even before the 20th century, however, Chinese migrants had overwhelmed both tribesmen and military-banner government, and in the process demonstrated the flexibility of traditional Chinese forms in a frontier environment. . . . [This] Chinese settlement saved Manchuria from permanent annexation by Russia or Japan." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Lee's elaboration of his doctoral dissertation complements F. Michael's The origin of Manchu rule in China [BRD 1942] by tracing Manchuria's fate after 1644. The thesis is not a startling revisionistic one. . . . [It] is convincingly supported by deft use of contemporary memoirs (Chinese and Western), local gazetteers and Ch'ing documentary collections. The book is well organized, lucidly written, has an ample bibliography and a useful Chinese character glossary. Highly recommended for all colleges offering courses on modern Asia and would be useful for general libraries as well."

Choice 7:1560 Ja '71 160w

"The book is a most valuable contribution to the history of the Ch'ing dynasty in a field which has been rather ignored previously. Perhaps Canadians, Americans and Australians will be struck by the similarity of some aspects of their own history with that of the Chinese colonisation of Manchuria." C. P. Fitzgerald

Pacific Affairs 44:611 winter '71-'72 600w

LEE, WAYNE J., ed. The international computer industry. 299p $12.95; pa $8.95 Applied lib. resources

338.4 Computer industry and trade. Electronic data processing
LC 75-157121

"This publication surveys the leading nations which are users of computer equipment and systems, and presents statistics and background information [intended for] . . . the businessman who desires to participate in the international computer industry. . . . [It also] offers insights into the uses of computers in foreign countries and . . . of the automated business procedures in the large industries of these countries." (Introd) Bibliography. Index.

"Topics covered and depth of coverage vary greatly from country to country. Essentially this book brings together most of what has been published recently on the subject. It leans heavily on U.S. Department of Commerce publications. The bibliography will be of limited use. [The book] will be quite useful to those engaged in export-import of computer items, but will be of more limited value to a school, except as a timely reference on computer economics."

Choice 8:660 Jl '71 110w

"This is actually an international directory of the computer industry in 24 countries with the notable exception of U.S.S.R. and the U.S. Beginning with Argentina and ending with Yugoslavia, the directory shows the growth potential of the computer under such headings as government, education, telecommunications, research, automation, textiles, and duties and trade restrictions. . . . A special section explains the Global Marketing Program of the Bureau of International Commerce. Unfortunately, the index is not completely adequate. Recommended for large public and academic libraries." C. W. Sargent

Library J 96:2071 Je 15 '71 100w

LEEUEWEN, AREND THEODORE VAN. Development through revolution. $10p $8.95 Scribner

309.1 Social change. Economic development. Technology and civilization. Christianity and politics
LC 78-106548

"This book consists of 19 essays on the theology of revolution written from the standpoint of the Christian-Marxist dialogue and stressing the modern trinity of Mao, Marx, and Marcuse. Originally delivered as lectures at theology schools around the country, they range in subject matter from black power to the Communist Manifesto, to the philosophy of history." (Library J) Index.

"Van Leeuwen is the director of the Church and World Institute of the Dutch Reformed Church in the Netherlands. The book reflects his experience in Java and eastern Europe, participating in the Christian dialogue with Communism. The main theological source might be said to be the papers from the World Conference on Church and Society (Geneva, 1967) and the Fourth Assembly of the World Council of Churches (1968). The book tends to be a short summary of the thought of several hundred economists, sociologists, political scientists, philosophers, etc., but not theologians. Good text for a church and world institute." Choice 8:1194 N '71 90w

"[The author's new book] must be read as a 300-page footnote to a book half again that length, which he published in Dutch six years ago, entitled Christianity [in] World History [BRD 1966]. . . . [Leeuwen's new book is] enormously suggestive of what a new global consciousness might look like; a global consciousness which does not negate, but gathers into a new synthesis all the riches of the many pasts of human cultures. Yet [it] . . . ends in a peculiarly unsatisfying way, as though one were just on the verge of posing the really crucial questions when Van Leeuwen breaks off his analysis and leaves everything up in the air. We are given a provocative direction, but not a solution. Yet that unfinished sense, right at the brink of the ultimate question, is exactly where we are in human history." Rosemary Ruether

Commonweal 93:251 D 4 '70 950w

"[The author's] arguments are cogently presented and amply documented in several languages. Recommended for larger academic and public libraries." Jack Clarke

Library J 95:2484 J1 '70 160w

LEFCOURT, ROBERT, ed. Law against the people; essays to demystify law, order, and the courts. 400p $10 Random house

340 Law—U.S. Civil rights. Lawyers
ISBN 0-394-46045-6 LC 79-143287

The authors of these writings argue that the legal system of the United States is bankrupt and that the law "is against 'the people,' law schools only turn out capitalist lawyers, and black or brown poor can never hope to win lawsuits. Thus, a traumatic break with the jurisprudence of the past is needed, along with a radical New Left legal movement." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Essayists include William Kunstler plus others who have represented such persons and causes as Abbie Hoffman, the Fort Dix 33, Timothy Leary, and the Gay Liberation Front. Included are the Panther 21's statement to the court and George Jackson's message, smuggled out of Soledad Prison on cigarette paper. Of interest for its negative criticism of the status quo and for its far-left-of-center proposals for people's courts." W. A. Smith

Library J 96:3112 O 1 '71 170w

Reviewed by Michael Meltsner

N Y Times Bk R p44 Mr 5 '72 900w

LEGÉ, ALEXIS SAINT-LÉGER. See Perse, St.-John

LEGGE, J. D. Sukarno; a political biography. 431p $10.95 Praeger

B or 92 Sukarno, President Indonesia. Indonesia—Politics and government
LC 77-181868

"The author attempts to assess Sukarno's leadership qualities and finds him often at key moments in his career indecisive and willing to let events sort themselves out. . . . Legge follows Sukarno through his leadership of independent Indonesia to his death in June 1970." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The picture of Sukarno that emerges from this book is of a complex man of great talents and weaknesses. . . . It is a tribute to Professor Legge's own balanced approach that he is able to cull from the numerous existing accounts of Sukarno's life a picture of the man that is convincing without being colourless. . . . Not all specialists will agree with Professor Legge's view of Sukarno's role during the second world war, nor with his description of the Indonesian leader as the 'Chairman of the Revolution.' And the author is plainly reluctant to come to a firm conclusion about Sukarno's intentions towards the Indonesian Communist party. But Professor Legge has been meticulous in recording the range of opinions, and the problems of reconciling contrary yet considerable views of Sukarno. He remains a controversial figure; this book . . . provides a starting point for debate."

Economist 244:51 Ag 19 '72 550w

"A biography of Sukarno, which because of the considerable attention given to the context in which he operated, might also be described as a political history of modern Indonesia. . . . For those fascinated by the romantic and flamboyant Sukarno, this book will provide little titillation to the imagination. . . . For those interested in Sukarno the politician this is a fascinating, well-documented and carefully argued study. Recommended for academic and public libraries." C. R. Bryant

Library J 97:3579 N 1 '72 180w

TLS p1232 O 13 '72 950w

LE GUIN, URSULA K. The lathe of heaven. 184p $4.95 Scribner

SBN 684-12529-3 LC 77-162760

In this novel set in the year 2002 George Orr discovers that his dreams have "come true." Frightened, he turns to a psychiatrist for help. The doctor recognizes George's power and starts employing the dreams to solve problems of environment, population, and politics. Due to the capriciousness of dreams, however, the solutions become greater problems than the original issues." (Library J)

Reviewed by Diane Ackerman

Book World p6 D 19 '71 150w

"Le Guin's novel is full of familiar themes, including those of the mad scientist as Faust and the invasion of the earth; but the author's graceful prose and extremely strong character portrayal carry this novel beyond the standard science fiction treatment. Certainly worth reading." D. M. Gilzinger

Library J 96:3641 N 1 '71 90w

Reviewed by Dale Thompson

Library J 97:791 F 15 '72 110w [YA]

"[This] is a beautifully wrought [novel]. . . . The author has done some profound research in psychology, cerebro-physiology and biochemistry, and is familiar with some very recent findings in the field of dream research. In addition, her perceptions of such matters as geopolitics, race, socialized medicine and the patient/shrink relationship are razor-sharp and more than a little cutting." Theodore Sturgeon

Nat R 24:107 F 4 '72 230w

Reviewed by Theodore Sturgeon

N Y Times Bk R p33 My 14 '72 170w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 78:105 N 29 '71 250w

"Science fiction seems to be going through an oddly reflective phase at the moment—no one really leaves Earth, and the quests are all backward-looking. Feeding Dante into the computer is the beginning of wisdom. . . . [In this] consciously unsurprising tale about a man whose dreams change the world . . . the old theme of playing God is treated in a toned-down way. . . . When the arrogant dreams and the nightmares have run their course, they leave behind a hybrid, shabby world that's learnt humility. "Thank you very much", Orr said, and shook hands with his boss. The big green flipper was cool on his human hand." Human warmth, it is hoped, will keep the metaphysics at bay for a while."

TLS p705 Je 23 '72 380w

LEHMANN, LOTTE. Eighteen song cycles; studies in their interpretation; with a foreword by Neville Cardus. 185p $6.95 Praeger 784.3 Singing. Songs
LC 73-171026

"The cycles here considered range from Beethoven's An die ferne Geliebte to Ravel's Shéhérazade; the best known German cycles are studied—even including Brahms's Magelieder,—three by Ravel, one each by Mahler, Berlioz, and Debussy. Most are for voice and piano; some are orchestral cycles. Each song is considered in detail; first the gist of its text, then occasional suggestions for interpretation. (Library J) Index to first lines and titles of songs.

Choice 9:377 My '72 150w

"Lehmann was perhaps the most spontaneous of the great singers. . . . Now, with the mellowness of age, she is still trying to account for what she did for the benefit of those who study with her and for a wider public who do not have that privilege. This attempt to analyze her art is by no means a new thing with Lehmann. . . . [She has already written] of her interpretations in More than Singing [BRD 1946]. My Many Lives [BRD 1948] was devoted to her roles in opera. . . . Apart from helping young singers, [this] book will be welcomed by listeners who simply want the story. . . . There is an appreciative foreword." Neville Cardus
Library J 96:4097 D 15 '71 270w

"[This book] is addressed, presumably, to imaginatively bankrupt student singers, who would anyway surely learn more from a single recording by this great artist than from her all too empathetic prose evocations."

TLS p65 Ja 21 '72 30w

LEIGHTON, ALEXANDER H. Come near. 351p $6.95 Norton

ISBN 0-393-08617-8 LC 73-116104

The hero of this novel, "a 30-year-old white, is saved from suicide by an Eskimo hunting party and becomes, reluctantly, the ward of the village. He is the special responsibility of the shaman, who believes the stranger can save the village from its implacable enemy, a ferocious bear, Ishmael, as he is called by the Yeats-quotng Irish nurse who cares for the villagers, is gradually reconciled to life by love and by an awakened responsibility to his fellow-men." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 124:548 My 22 '71 60w

"It is almost incredible that a working scientist (Head of the Department of Behavioral Sciences at the Harvard School of Public Health), no matter the quality . . . of his professional writing, can produce such a first novel as 'Come Near.' Other medical men who have mastered writercraft come to mind: Maugham, Remarque, Ibanez, Crichton—but unless he has other, unpublished novels, Dr. Leighton would seem to have joined the masters without stopping in the ranks of the apprentices and journeymen. . . . As an adventure story, [his novel] makes a great splash, but while we are watching for it to surface it has taken off for the depths. . . . In addition to all adventure lovers, the line forming to buy [it] should include those who subscribe to the ideas of Bellow, Shaw, Wilder, above all Teilhard." Cornelia Holbert

Best Sell 31:71 My 1 '71 480w

"An Eskimo village on the Bering Strait is the setting for this strange and beautiful first novel. . . . Like [Melville's] Moby Dick, of which it is reminiscent, this novel concerns a man's search for identity and meaning against the background of life in a primitive, out-of-the-way part of the world. Even [here] where survival itself is a desperate full-time struggle, the major drive still is for satisfaction through social relationships. . . . The plot is simple; but the real substance of the novel is in the wealth of detail on Eskimo life and its interaction with Western culture. Leighton's use of symbol in his modern allegory is poetic without being strained and his theme—that man exists only through his interaction with others—is sensitively developed. Highly recommended." George Adelman

Library J 96:1637 My 1 '71 120w

"[This] is in many ways an engaging book. The painstaking depiction of storm, rescue, and the strange polar landscape of the first chapters of the novel is effective. Mr. Leighton's style is honest and accurate, and . . . often moving. But in this story of the hero's restoration to faith in life by an Eskimo settlement . . . too many hares are started, too many matters discussed, too many commonplaces enacted for the full force of the poetically observed sections to redeem the whole book. . . . The real weakness in the novel is the love story, for the two protagonists . . . are cardboard figures in their love affair at least, while the characters of the Eskimos have a more immediate reality."

Rachel Trickett

Yale R 61:121 O '71 500w

LEISHMAN, J. B. Milton's minor poems; ed. with a pref. by Geoffrey Tillotson. 360p $6.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

821 Milton, John. English poetry—History and criticism
ISBN 0-8229-1100-0 LC 78-136095

This "study of all Milton's minor poems . . . [includes and] appraisal of the relation of Milton's poems to poetry around and before him." (Choice) Index.

"Delivered as lectures, these studies represent Leishman's lifelong involvement with 17th-century poetry. . . . Though perhaps a beginning student would not be as greatly aided as a more advanced reader of 17th-century poetry, any reader of Milton will gain a sound scholarly insight from these readable lectures. . . . Bibliographical footnotes bring scholarship up to date so that the book does not suffer for the relative age of the lectures."

Choice 8:1453 Ja '72 130w

"It is [the] 'architectonic power' [of Milton] which most impresses J. B. Leishman in his posthumously published [book]—a marvellous display of scholarship, but also a work in which the temptation to hunt down echoes and allusions comes near to swamping the critic's sense of relevance."

TLS p641 Je 11 '70 270w

LEISS, WILLIAM. The domination of nature. 242p $6.95 Braziller

113 Man—Influence on nature. Science and civilization. Technology and civilization
SBN 0-8076-0646-4 LC 75-188358

"In the present study I have tried to trace the origins, development, and social consequences of . . . the idea of the domination of nature . . . [and] to explain why the so-called 'conquest of nature' can never fulfill the expectations that are conventionally associated with it—generally speaking, the satisfaction of material wants and the establishment of social tranquility on a universal scale." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"One more in the sequence of books questioning whether man ought not to back off from his supertechnological attempt to control nature. This book is distinguished by its historical sense and its conclusion: we should not regard the essence of human technique as the ability to dominate nature; rather, we should view it as the mastery of the relationship between nature and humanity—one which would no longer be bound to repressive demands of the organizational society."

Christian Century 89:807 Ag 2 '72 80w

"Leiss has provided a penetrating analysis of the historical and theoretical foundations of our attitude towards nature. His investigations into the social consequences of attempting to utilize science and technology for controlling nature and man are extremely valuable. . . . He proposes a reversal or transformation 'from mastery to liberation concerning the gradual self-understanding and self-disciplining of human nature.' But it is not clear what is meant by this transformation, nor the part that ethics must play to bring this about. Although his proposals to meet our contemporary situation are ambiguous and abstract, this book is recommended for a historical, theoretical understanding of our attempts to control nature." M. L. Collins

Library J 97:2403 J1 '72 180w

LEJEUNE, RITA. The legend of Roland in the Middle Ages [by] Rita Lejeune and Jacques Stiennon; tr. by Christine Trollope. 2v pl col pl $98.50 Phaidon; distributed by Praeger

704.947 Chanson de Roland. Art, Medieval. Art and literature
ISBN 0-7148-1414-8 LC 73-111061

This is a study "of the iconography of Roland, the hero of the Chanson de Roland, . . .

as he is depicted in sculpture, wall painting, the minor arts and above all, manuscript illumination. It covers the eleventh to the sixteenth centuries in France, Spain, Italy, the Netherlands and Germany, and reveals the evolution of Roland from a stock figure in ecclesiastical art, the conqueror of the heathen, through sainthood at Chartres, into a . . . chivalric hero, and his decline in later manuscripts and woodcuts into a 'type.'" (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This] monumental work . . . is a splendid, beautiful, and scholarly book, but the price is for the town not the gown. Most of the important depictions of the characters and events in various media are here discussed and illustrated. Roland is a Saint at Chartres; in the 16th century he is the jack of diamonds in a deck of playing cards. Sic transit etc. A couple of specialized volumes for a librarian to list as desiderata."

Choice 8:1322 D '71 100w

"The scholarly apparatus of references; lists of plates, both color and black and white; schema of episodes in the life of Roland and Ganelon . . . in addition to the fine illustrations and informative text, make this a substantial publication. Trollope's translation is excellent. History, art, literature, and sociology are all touched upon in this handsomely printed, sturdily bound book. For large academic libraries and those serving readers with special interests, such as medievalists." Julia Sabine
Library J 96:4084 D 15 '71 140w

"Presumably one of the chief reasons for translating the original was to make the matter more readily available to a non-specialist public. It is therefore a pity not to find an introductory chapter tracing the main lines of the legend's literary history. As it is, the layman will have to reconstruct it for himself as he reads the text, and this is no small matter. Nevertheless, it is good to have this milestone in the study of the iconography of medieval secular literature translated into English, to join, linguistically, the other important pioneering works in this field. . . . At times the text reads like that of a first-class detective story, and the identification of one of the statues at the south doorway of Chartres Cathedral as Roland is thrilling and convincing."

TLS p240 Mr 3 '72 750w

LEMAITRE, GEORGES. Jean Giraudoux: the writer and his work. 220p $7.50 Ungar

848 Giraudoux, Jean
ISBN 0-8044-2498-5 LC 77-125965

"Lemaitre traces and analyzes Giraudoux's contributions as dramatist, novelist, and essayist. Chapters . . . [discuss his] ideals, reality, novels, politics, and theater." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] a rather pedestrian work. . . . Lemaitre's interpretative framework is largely based on two sets of coordinates: that Giraudoux's work can usually be explained in terms of his personal circumstances, usually in terms of his unhappy marriage, and that his work reflects a fairly constant interplay between Giraudoux's vision of the ideal and the real. Lemaitre's book throws little new light on Giraudoux. . . . Perhaps its major use will be for undergraduates who are looking for a work that simplifies some of Giraudoux's complexities while providing them with some background information for the reading of individual novels or plays. . . . A disappointing though useful book."

Choice 9:651 J1/Ag '72 180w

"[This book gives] the reader a clear picture of the man and his work. Lemaitre's discussion of Giraudoux's theater is perhaps the most interesting section, and his explanations of well-known plays such as Siegfried [BRD 1931], Amphitryon 38 [BRD 1933, 1963], . . . La Guerre de Troie, [translated as Tiger at the gates BRD 1956] and Ondine [BRD 1963] in terms of their themes (war, religion, love, fidelity, etc.) lend an eternal quality to these dramatic works." B. L. Knapp
Library J 96:4096 D 15 '71 100w

"Lemaitre has tact, patience and taste, and writes without a trace of academic or critical jargon—this is so unusual that it is worth mentioning. . . . Yet I wish something had been done to make the book more appealing to American readers. . . . There are no pictures . . . and there is not even a map to indicate where Bellac and Chateauroux are situated in relation to Paris. It is like having a biography of Proust without a map of the countryside around Chartres. I read [the] book from start to finish with great pleasure. . . . Lemaitre has studied Giraudoux's women, in fiction, with as much care as Giraudoux must have lavished on the originals. . . . What I fear is that his book will drop into the university circuit and die of oxygen failure; I'm sure it was meant to have a better life." Mavis Gallant

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 30 '72 850w

"[This] is a modest addition to the considerable bibliography on Giraudoux. Most interesting on the biographical level—although Mr. Lemaitre too often accepts Giraudoux's statements as incontrovertible facts—it provides some valuable insights into the author's career as a high-level government official. The discussions of the works, however, suffer from being short on analysis and long on plot synopsis. Moreover, the writing is undistinguished—a crucial shortcoming in a book about [so] brilliant a manipulator of language." Tom Bishop

Sat 55:59 F 5 '72 440w

L'ENGLE, MADELEINE. A circle of quiet. 245p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

B or 92

ISBN 0-374-12374-8 LC 75-164542

At the age of 51, the Newbery Medal winner explores the meaning of her life and role as wife, mother, grandmother, public speaker, concerned citizen, practicing Christian and writer.

"There is nothing wrong with this book—from a Reader's Digest point of view. It is Miss L'Engle's 'warm and human' account of her recent life, a life in which she searches for 'meaning,' a sense of proportion, love, and continuing education in a world no longer benevolent. The book is ever so slightly written down to the less fortunately educated among Miss L'Engle's 'dears' (her synonym for 'readers'). . . . I say there is nothing wrong with 'A Circle of Quiet' because Miss L'Engle has already criticized herself for writing about the obvious, for perhaps being shallow, for her naïveté. Why, then, publicize this self-discovery?" Barbara Harte

Best Sell 31:555 Mr 15 '72 440w

"[The author wrote this work as] 'a letter of love' to all who had heightened her joy in living. The 'letter' is essentially autobiographical, a miscellany of candid commentaries and intimate affirmations of a person who enriches as she has been enriched. . . . Her revelations elicit a spontaneous response from the reader, who, in turn, is given a rare glimpse of a successful contemporary writer at home and at work." M. S. Cosgrave
Horn Bk 48:293 Je '72 200w

Reviewed by Jeanne Lopez

Library J 97:1314 Ap 1 '72 90w

"Getting to the core of herself has required admirable honesty, but [the author] has let her artistic self down in the process. . . . Adult women will sympathize with Madeleine L'Engle's role conflict as she struggled to be mother, wife and writer during her thirties, and will rejoice at the literary success that followed long failure and culminated in the crowning moment when 'A Wrinkle in Time' [BRD 1962] won the Newbery Medal. Fans of her books will enjoy meeting the people, the cultural passions, the real-life situations that are transformed into loving husbands, large happy families, artistic adolescents, prescient children and illuminating vignettes in 'The Arm of the Starfish' [BRD 1965], 'Camilla' [Dickinson, BRD 1951], 'The Young Unicorns' [BRD 1968] and others. But I doubt that many young adults will read this book." Polly Longworth
N Y Times Bk R p28 F 13 '72 900w

LENNON, JOHN. Lennon remembers. 189p II $4.95 Straight arrow bks.

B or 92 The Beatles

ISBN 0-87932-009-5 LC 79-158521

John Lennon granted a number of interviews to Rolling Stone "late in 1970; the thoughts and opinions he expressed then to Jann Wenner appear reedited and reorganized in this book. With Yoko Ono an occasional participant, the interviews [concern] . . . Lennon's and the Beatles' triumphs and low

LENNON, JOHN—Continued

points . . . [and the] relationship of the famous [singers]." (Library J)

"Admirers of the Beatles as a group may be disappointed, but admirers of John Lennon's attempts to understand and explain the phenomenon of which he was a part, or of his efforts to convert frenetic musical prestige into beneficial social influence, will undoubtedly find these interviews . . . absorbing. As a form, the interview is always a bit clumsy in print, but this is a minor fault in a generally informative confession by a remarkable man." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 228:153 N 1 '71 90w

"The interviews are pithy, irreverent, and revealing. . . . [Lennon shows] considerable resentment toward Paul McCartney before the final disbandment. . . . One thing is certain: the Beatles were a long-lived phenomenon, but so far as John Lennon is concerned, they are over and done with. If you're likely to be hassled about profanity, be forewarned that Lennon's vocabulary is very dependent upon one particular word: fuck. But also be forewarned that this book will be clamored for." Elizabeth Storey

Library J 96:3917 N 15 '71 160w [YA]

Reviewed by James Heckel

Library J 97:200 Ja 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by J. D. O'Hara

New Repub 166:26 My 20 '72 800w

LENS, SIDNEY. The forging of the American empire. 462p $10 Crowell

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. Imperialism
ISBN 0-690-31309-8 LC 74-158710

The author of Radicalism in America (BRD 1966) traces the foreign policy of the American Republic "from the founding of the U.S. to the present dilemmas associated with the Vietnam War. His thesis . . . is compounded of arguments alleging American economic exploitation of foreign countries and aggressive expansion of our resources, holdings, and international influence." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. F. Kimball

America 126:210 F 26 '72 900w

Reviewed by F. C. Brown

Best Sell 31:461 Ja 15 '72 440w

"[This] is an indictment, a prosecutor's brief. . . . Throughout his discussion of the early decades, Lens extends backwards a century, even two, the totally different attitudes and sensibilities of today. Also, [he] has become so profoundly disillusioned by the Vietnam war that he can see nothing, or almost nothing, good about American foreign policy. . . . Lens's alienation has caused him to examine . . . even, say U.S. participation in World War II, in a curiously jaundiced, although interesting fashion. . . . Yet despite my reservations, this book is a useful and persuasive corrective to the starry-eyed view of American foreign policy that most of us were raised on. I hope it is widely read." R. J. Walton

Book Word p9 Ja 30 '72 1050w

Choice 9:128 Mr '72 170w

"Some folks may be weary of the battle, but Sidney Lens is untiring. He combines the American pamphleteering tradition of dissent with historical inquiry. . . . He does make one think in fresh ways about the American record. . . . Lens ties together American imperial outreaches with domestic capitalism. More often than the establishment-minded might like, he scores with telling effect."

Christian Century 89:49 Ja 12 '72 70w

"Lens, social critic and foe of 'imperialism,' continues his series of lively and controversial inquiries into the passage of the American Republic in this work emphasizing his often emotional and yet compelling criticism of our imperfect society. . . . [His is] a highly negative view of America's manifest destiny. . . . [He] is a fast-paced, assured, and ideologically oriented writer. He holds firm views; and, while scholars will and should dispute his arguments since the facts he marshals are susceptible to other analyses, this is a book which argues competitively, if not definitively, its left-liberal position." R. F. Delaney

Library J 96:3767 N 15 '71 200w

N Y Times Bk R p24 F 20 '72 130w

"The trouble with Mr. Len's book is that, after putting down one myth, the author elaborates another to take its place. . . . As a work of scholarship, [the book] is extremely thin. Mr. Len's main research seems to have been in college textbooks and political tracts. He oversimplifies many things and gets many others wrong. He even omits data that could have strengthened his own argument. . . . Moreover, the text is filled with errors. . . . The record is a good deal more mixed than anyone would gather from Mr. Len's book. But [its] worst failing . . . is its systematic and rigid reduction of a multiplicity of motives for expansion to a single one—namely, the quest for 'economic aggrandizement' allegedly required by the inner necessities of the capitalist system." Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Sat R 55:71 F 5 '72 2050w

LENZ, SIEGFRIED. The German Lesson; tr. by Ernst Kaiser and Eithne Wilkins. 470p $8.95 Hill & Wang

ISBN 0-8090-4907-4 LC 77-163567

"The narrator of this . . . novel is Siggi Jepsen, an inmate on a reform-school island in the Elbe. Assigned a short composition on the quintessentially German topic 'The Joys of Duty,' he begins recounting his life, since it has been shaped by that conception. . . . The central event is the conflict between his father, a policeman, and Nansen, an artist friend who, during the war, is banned from further painting by Berlin because of 'decadence.' . . . Herr Jepsen's duty is to enforce the ban, which he does because it's an order. Though he is reluctant at first, his zeal grows." (Library J) First published in German under the title Deutschstunde.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:110 F '72 60w

Reviewed by A. J. Solomon

Best Sell 32:145 Je 15 '72 250w

Reviewed by Diane Johnson

Book World p10 My 7 '72 550w

Choice 9:820 S '72 140w

Reviewed by Paul Theroux

Encounter 38:71 My '72 1000w

"The timeless conflict which literature has reflected from Antigone's day to our own—'duty' versus individual conscience and morality—is given bizarre, complex form in Lenz' powerful tale. The novel's bleak vision of how little has been learned in spite of World War II is intensified by Siggi's vivid descriptions of Nansen's haunted landscapes (apparently a melding of Turner and Munch) and of the starkly beautiful North Sea coast. Mordantly witty, despairing, impassioned, this is one of the most deeply imagined and thought-provoking novels from Germany in years. For nearly all fiction collections." J. W. Charles

Library J 96:4030 D 1 '71 300w

Reviewed by R. K. Morris

Nation 214:439 Ap 3 '72 1200w

Reviewed by D. K. Mano

Nat R 24:646 Je 9 '72 450w

"The great classic of Schleswig-Holstein, the northernmost part of Germany, which borders upon Denmark, is Theodor Storm's novella Der Schimmelreiter—The Rider on the White Horse. Siegfried Lenz's long novel can take its place confidently next to that powerful piece of imaginative writing. . . . In The German Lesson the landscape is as important as the characters, they owe their development, the tensions of everyday life to it. . . . Lenz describes this part of Germany . . . accurately, with power and feeling, and more successfully than any other writer since Storm. But the theme of the novel and its telling match up to the grandeur of the setting." Susan Hill

New Statesman 82:796 D 3 '71 450w

Reviewed by Ernst Pawel

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ap 9 '72 1150w

"[This] is a tricky, ambiguous book with an awful fake-masterpiece surface: much beautiful landscape writing . . . and hollow, simplistic confrontations. . . . Only when we learn, very late in the book, why Siggi's in jail do we realize the novelist has foreseen our growing exasperation with his story and outflanked us. . . . [The] pathological denouement is a little too schematic. . . . My guess is that 'The German Lesson' was a huge best seller in Germany because it can be read more than one way. A simpler reader can enjoy a wartime adventure, though it ends sadly and rather puzzlingly. But the ending is intended to disarm the more critical: we can read backward into the heroic simplicities of the wartime chapters the postwar evasions of a damaged, unreliable narrator. This is ingenious, perplexing and ver-ry in-terr-est-ing." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:90C Ap 10 '72 550w

"Rarely does the narrator draw a moral or generalize, and when he does, the effect within the context of this book whose ironies and satirical strands are as unobtrusive as its seriousness—is almost startling. . . . Lenz excels at the rendering of . . . family relations between people who are laconic, humorless, and trapped in a patriarchal order that it never occurs to them to question. We get to know them intimately not so much through what they say as by what they do, what they look like, what they eat; by the gestures and movements that express what they feel and think. . . . The translation of any novel that owes so much of its power to the total recall of a specific way of life, will inevitably be a hazardous undertaking. . . . Sensitive and resourceful though it is, the translation . . . may strike the English-speaking reader as too literary, too neutral and formal to convey Siggi's background or character. . . . In any case, [this is] a consistently gripping novel." Michael Hamburger

Sat R 55:71 Mr 18 '72 2250w
TLS p1439 N 19 '71 90w

LEODHAS, SORCHE NIC. See Nic Leodhas, S.

LEONARD, GEORGE B. The transformation; a guide to the inevitable changes in mankind. 258p $7.95 Delacorte press

301.24 Social change
LC 72-4213

"Speaking from a background of involvement in the encounter group movement, Leonard predicts a human transition to a new style of life and consciousness. . . . He foresees an end to the interpersonal alienation of civilization. There will be, he suggests, a new unity of human consciousness that will eliminate war and other 'dis-eases' of our society. . . . Index." (Library J)

"Much of this volume chronicles the social history of the United States and it is fascinating. . . . The author's vision of the future suffers all the blurriness associated with the typical seer. . . . Mr. Leonard can prove quite well that we are in a time of change and he can predict quite accurately that it will be a time of increasing pain in the near future. Beyond that, he's really just guessing. He explores several possibilities that should stimulate much reader response. I doubt if more than a handful of readers will agree with him, but he deserves a wide audience. This interesting volume . . . should be popular in the public libraries." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 32:377 N 15 '72 420w

"The outlines of [Leonard's] Utopia are rather fuzzy. . . . He blames civilization for those ailments and annoying behavior patterns which others might attribute to 'human nature.' He makes some acute observations on the unhealthy aspects of the current scene. Unfortunately, he is especially vague about the means by which the predicted transformation will come about. In the end the book is a long-winded exercise in wishful thinking compounded with murky mysticism." J. W. Weigel

Library J 97:3173 O 1 '72 160w

LEONARDO DA VINCI. Codex Trivulzianus. See Stites, R. S. The sublimations of Leonardo da Vinci

LEONARDO DA VINCI. Fantastic tales, strange animals, riddles, jests, and prophecies of Leonardo da Vinci; drawings by Leonardo da Vinci; ed. and annot. by Emery Kelen. 144p $6.95 Nelson

808.88
ISBN 0-8407-6110-4 LC 75-152874

In assembling this "collection of fables, stories [and] anecdotes. . . . from Leonardo's notebooks, [the editor has included a] biographical sketch." (Horn Bk) Bibliography.

"[Kelen] has provided an enjoyable, as well as intimate, picture of this man as he saw things in his own time. . . . Many of the 'Tales' were anecdotes used by da Vinci to entertain his patrons and other people at court. Some are humorous, some satirical, and some are very deep insights into the human condition—of our own time as well as of his. While this book is small and easy to read, it is a valuable addition to da Vinci literature—not only for libraries, but for anyone who has an interest in the life and character of Leonardo." Sister Babette Opferman

Best Sell 32:98 My 15 '72 100w

Choice 9:634 J/L/Ag '72 200w

"Although many of the selections have been better narrated elsewhere, and many are not particularly interesting, the collection of tales and prophecies intrigues the reader because Leonardo found them worthy of mention and because they illuminate attributes of his own personality. . . . Unfortunately, the editor has unsuccessfully tried to link Leonardo's writing to contemporary issues. This is only a minor flaw however, for the book itself is an aesthetic delight—beautifully illustrated, designed, and produced. It provides either an excellent introduction to the work of Leonardo or interesting reading for devotees, since it incorporates many of his superb but lesser-known drawings. A book for [young] adults as well as for older readers." Anita Silvey

Horn Bk 47:622 D '71 180w [YA]

"[This] book clearly and simply presents one aspect of Leonardo's genius, human and understandable in today's terms. Kelen culled his material from many scattered sources and edited it to make it easy. Reminiscent of Pliny and Aesop's fables, the so-called prophecies (verbal charades) have much charm. For interesting sidelights to Leonardo, recommended for the general reader, and young people." Peter Fingesten

Library J 97:488 F 1 '72 80w [YA]

"While a substantial part of the material here is available in any edition of Leonardo's Notebooks. . . . this handsome edition is, according to the publisher, the only one illustrated with Leonardo's drawings. The editor . . . does not always indicate the sources. Many of the entries in such sections as 'Lessons from Animal Life' and 'Strange Animals' were not original with Leonardo. . . . Grade seven and up." Michael Cart

Library J 97:1614 Ap 15 '72 170w

LEONARDO DA VINCI. Leonardo da Vinci; with an essay by Walter Pater. 16p pl col pl $5.95 Phaidon; for sale by Praeger

759.5

ISBN 0-7148-1482-2 LC [72-141062]

"The Mona Lisa and the wall-painting of the Last Supper . . . are here reproduced in colour as well as many of [Leonardo's] other portraits and religious pictures, among them the unfinished Adoration of the Kings, the Madonna of the Rocks, the Virgin and Child with St. Anne, and the priceless cartoon in London. These 32 reproductions of paintings are followed by . . . sixteen of his . . . drawings in chalk and pen—heads of men and women, caricatures, animals, flowers and landscape studies. The text chosen to introduce this selection from the . . . artist's work [is Walter Pater's essay on Leonardo da Vinci from his book, The Renaissance]. (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"The color reproductions [consisting of] 48 plates . . . are deplorable. Granted that the asking price is minimal for art books today, the prospective customer is not receiving a bargain. . . . Not recommended."

Choice 9:50 Mr '72 30w

Economist 240:53 Ag 7 '71 10w

TLS p1598 D 24 '71 90w

LERNER, GERDA, ed. Black women in white America; a documentary history. 630p $10 Pantheon bks.

301.41 Woman—Social conditions, Negroes—History
ISBN 0-394-47540-2 LC 77-173892

A "collection of documents, letters, statements, manuscripts, articles and other excerpts from books, magazines and newspapers—all of them written or delivered by American women, mostly black, from the 1830s to around 1970." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography.

"[The author] has included not only Harriet Tubman and Sojourner Truth but also Susie King Taylor, a nurse in the Union Army; Maria L. Baldwin, a pioneer teacher; and Maria

LERNER, GERDA—Continued

Stewart, an early militant. There are scores of them, all with something to say. The gallery is large and impressive. It ranges from women in slavery, to freed women, to sharecroppers' wives, to women of relative privilege. Reading these women, I was impressed by their unquenchable fire and dignity. . . . However much this may be a book for blacks it is even more a book for whites. If whites are to know blacks and to join with them in seeking a just and polycultural American society, whites had better discover from the blacks themselves the nature of the black experience. A significant portion of it is here in Dr. Lerner's exemplary book." Alden Whitman

Book World p12 Ap 16 '72 650w

Choice 9:846 S '72 80w

"Various topics—slavery, education, making a living, government service, liberation, etc.—have pertinent documents grouped meaningfully with biographical data about the individuals quoted. Because a number of women made effective contributions in several areas, there is some repetition in the biographical material, but not in the selections, almost all of which are in the words of the subjects themselves. Items range from scattered memories of only a paragraph to essays or addresses covering several pages, from a bill of sale for a female slave to vivid and significant statements by . . . eminent modern leaders. . . . For material on feminism and black culture, this collection is an absolutely essential purchase. J. G. Polachek

Library J 97:1696 My 1 '72 120w

"A chronicle of 350 years of subjugation—of slavery, lynchings, rape, and other atrocities, [the book] is also a story of immense courage. . . . Moreover [it] is an effective refutation of white America's accusations relating to the supposed mental inferiority of blacks, their shiftlessness, and all the rest. . . . While Miss Lerner's introductions to the various sections of this anthology as a rule reveal a profound understanding of black problems, there are some things the documents couldn't tell her. For example, her assertion that 'the theme of racial solidarity recurs persistently in the historical record' simply isn't true. She has ignored the many instances of racial nonsolidarity that record contains. . . . One of the delights of this book, on the other hand, is the light it throws on women's liberation. . . . [It is a] highly readable, comprehensive survey." Joyce Jenkins

Sat R 55:80 My 6 '72 800w

Va Q R 48:xciv summer '72 230w

LERNER, ROBERT E. The heresy of the free spirit in the later middle ages. 257p $10 Univ. of Calif. press

273 Brethren of the Free Spirit. Heresies and heretics

ISBN 0-520-01908-3 LC 78-145790

This is a study of the "Brethren of the Free Spirit [who] were accused of many types of crimes. . . . The most oft-repeated charges in the later Middle Ages were that they thought they could be united with God; that they believed that this mystical communication did not require the sacramental grace administered by the priest (thus removing the need for the institutional Church), and they were thought to believe that they could break the moral law (especially in sexual activities) without sinning. . . . Lerner concludes that the sect was a loosely organized group, often falsely condemned." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The] concluding chapters on Free Spirit beliefs as the adherents themselves explained them, and on sociocultural implications of the heresy, are among the most valuable in the book. Few undergraduate libraries will possess standard German and Italian works on this subject (by Grundmann and Guarneria respectively); the present volume provides a much needed corrective to the somewhat distorted view of the heresy given in the more accessible works of Gordon Leff, Heresy in the Middle Ages [BRD 1968], and Norman Cohn, The pursuit of the millennium [BRD 1970]."

Choice 9:1031 O '72 180w

"A revision of the use revisionists in the 1960s made of the apparently anarchic-licentious heretics of the 14th century. Lerner's book sees among the Free Spirit advocates a serious quest for God."

Christian Century 89:523 My 3 '72 40w

"[This is] a sound study of the movement which many historians have considered the most significant Continental heresy of the 14th Century. . . . [The author has made] an exhaustive analysis of the polemical and prejudicial sources, including sermons and records of the Inquisition. . . . The book is written with unusual sophistication and charm, and anyone interested in heresies or the history of ideas in the Middle Ages will want to consult it." B. D. Hill

Library J 97:2729 S 1 '72 230w

"Although not so novel as [Lerner] appears to believe, his conclusion that the Free Spirit was not a sect or a vast subterranean movement can be accepted without real dispute; the evidence itself is too fragmentary, and nothing pointing to a widespread organization has ever come to light. Where doubts arise is over Mr Lerner's own partisanship. He is so convinced that the Free Spirit never existed as they have been depicted that he has repeatedly to go beyond his own painstaking examination of the evidence to speculate why a particular accusation was brought."

TLS p1295 O 27 '72 650w

LESESNE, J. MAULDIN. The Bank of the State of South Carolina; a general and political history; pub. for the South Carolina tricentennial commission. 211p $6.95 Univ. of S.C. press

975.7 Bank of the State of South Carolina—History

SBN 87249-147-1 LC 75-95259

This is a "history of the bank from its inception in 1812 to its liquidation in 1870, chronicling its growth under each of its presidents." (J Am Hist)

"[The author] confined his attention, as his subtitle indicates, to the story of the bank as recorded in the public documents (the account books, correspondence, and other records have disappeared), and does not concern himself with anything beyond his immediate subject. But he has written an important and significant book and one that may drastically alter the accepted interpretation of the nature of the South Carolina society." T. P. Govan

Am Hist R 76:1597 D '71 500w

"Unfortunately, this new study does not delve deeply enough into the power relationships surrounding the South Carolina bank. . . . Although intriguing questions are raised, they are rarely developed. . . . During the 1840s the bank came under heavy attack, but the author discusses the political battle as if it were motivated by no more than the perversity of several well-placed critics and only hints of the possible rivalry between the privately owned banks and the favored state bank. . . . Lesesne has given us an outline history of an important antebellum bank, but its political and economic significance have not been fully determined." J. R. Sharp

J Am Hist 58:163 Je '71 330w

LESLIE, S. CLEMENT. The rift in Israel; religious authority and secular democracy. 185p $7.50 Schocken 915.694 Judaism. Church and state in Israel.

Israel—Religion

ISBN 0-8052-3410-1 LC 76-150986

This book concerns "the background, nature, and problems of the religious-secular dichotomy of Israeli nationhood. . . . Topics treated include who is a Jew, religion versus irreligion, the rift in government and education, the various groups on the spectrum of Israeli opinion, the role of the army and the kibbutzim, the search for a new spiritual approach by some younger Israelis, and the nature of Judaism and its relationship to Israel." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

"[Leslie writes] from a Christian perspective. He is sympathetic to both the ultra-orthodox and the secularists, but his interpretation of Jewish history is marred by his anachronistic use of the nationalism-religion dichotomy. While he quotes extensively from the writings of the various groups, he does neglect the thinking of Sephardic Jewry, which is more accessible than he believes. The reader should use other sources on Israel in conjunction with this book, especially when dealing with general political and economic features of Israel. Still, on the main topic of Israel's relationship to the Jewish religion, Leslie gives a sensitive presentation."

Choice 9:710 JI/Ag '72 180w

"This is a thoughtful, compellingly written interpretive essay. . . . Important questions are posed, and some answered. A leitmotif of the work is the author's conviction that despite all the sharp differences among Israeli groups and the lengths to which they go in their rivalries (sometimes to the detriment of Israel's welfare), they all, or almost all, feel a common identity as Israelis. Highly recommended for larger general and special collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 96:3619 N 1 '71 180w

"After working as an academic and in business, Mr Leslie entered the British civil service and was at his retirement head of the Information Division of the Treasury. Trained as a philosopher, he uses a method which may be described as journalistic, only with a wish that there were more actual journalism like it. . . . [His book is based] on about a hundred interviews up and down Israel, with a programme of reading. The latter, confined it seems to the English language but very interestingly composed, is indicated only by references in the notes. . . . In a work so thoughtfully concerned with the problems of Jewishness and Judaism and the relations of both to Christianity and post-Christian secularism, Mr Leslie nowhere discloses his own . . . allegiances. But . . . he is . . . a sympathetic analyst."

TLS p1582 D 17 '71 800w

LEVENSON, DOROTHY. Homesteaders and Indians. 90p il lib bdg $3.75 Watts, F.

978 Frontier and pioneer life—The West—Juvenile literature. Indians of North America—Treatment—Juvenile literature
SBN 531-00734-0 LC 79-136832

The author "covers the types of people homesteaders were, where they travelled, what sorts of homes they built, diet, the many uses of buffalo, railroads, some effects of industrialization, . . . the bad times, cowboys and cattlemen, the Army against the Indians, and the end of the frontier. Two . . . chapters deal with the role of women in the 19th Century and black homesteaders. [Index.] Grades four to seven." (Library J)

"Though she focuses on injustices done the Indians as they were robbed of their lands, the author also displays a sympathetic understanding of the homesteaders, their motivations, and the harshness of their lives. . . . The photographs, reproductions and detailed captions greatly enhance the clear text, but readers will wish that a bibliography of related readings had been included." Isadora Kunitz

Library J 96:1828 My 15 '71 110w

Social Studies 63:140 Mr '72 30w

LEVENTHAL, F. M. Respectable radical: George Howell and Victorian working class politics. 276p $7.75 Harvard univ. press

323.1 Howell, George. Labor and laboring classes—Great Britain
ISBN 0-674-76540-0 LC 77-135190

Howell, active in the labor movement in England, was "secretary for the Reform League between 1865 and 1868 [and] . . . in the early 1870s, he . . . presided over the parliamentary committee of the newly formed Trades Union Congress. His negotiating skill helped to put legislation on the statute book to protect the trade unions from legal damages for pursuing their activities. Dr. Leventhal . . . has looked at his subject as an epitome of the mid-Victorian working class radical." (Economist)

"Drawing on the rich materials assembled in the Howell collection at the Bishopsgate Institute, Leventhal has written a definitive political biography, informed by a steady and dispassionate intelligence. We can follow in detail the career of a man who exemplified trade-union consciousness and Lib-Labism. . . . [The author] guides the reader through the maze of working-class politics. He sets forth clearly the ideological and psychological foundations of Howell's political behavior. An excellent first chapter, 'The Making of an Artisan,' in which the author shows the formative influence of Wesleyanism and the artisan ethic, provides the backdrop for what follows. Throughout the book Leventhal writes with the quiet authority that comes from a thorough mastery of his materials." T. R. Tholfsen

Am Hist R 77:150 F '72 550w

"This is a useful biographical study, closely based upon the mass of papers Howell left behind him. . . . He found his feet as an organizer in the agitation for Parliamentary reform in the 1860s—the best chapters of the book cover this period. His later work as Secretary of the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress in the 1870s is handled with less assurance. . . . There had been more to admire in his efforts than is perhaps allowed by Dr. Leventhal, who feels that he must apologize for Howell. A man of his class, a man of his time, it was natural that he should see the interests of Labor and Liberalism as a single cause and it was deserving of more gratitude than he got that he should serve it as well as he was able." P. F. Clarke

Ann Am Acad 400:187 Mr '72 280w

"Leventhal overspeculates concerning the formative influences of Howell's early life, drastically neglects his later career, and occasionally indulges in captious and gratuitous cynicism concerning Howell's motives; nevertheless, this is a welcome addition to the history of the British labor movement."

Choice 9:121 Mr '72 170w

"Dr Leventhal has produced a well-researched and readable account of Howell's life to kick off a new series on radical men, movements and ideas. . . . From a very early age, Howell displayed a restless ambition to make a name for himself in the world and an equal determination to champion the cause of labour. [The author] brings out the tensions which often appeared in Howell's activities through trying to marry the two objectives."

Economist 238:51 Ja 30 '71 600w

Reviewed by E. J. Hobsbawm

New Statesman 81:212 F 12 '71 700w

Reviewed by Henry Pelling

Pol Sci Q 87:512 S '72 600w

LEVER, J. W. The tragedy of state. 100p $6.50; pa $3 Barnes & Noble

822 English drama—History and criticism
SBN 416-08140-1; 416-70000-4 (pa)
LC 72-590690

The author considers eight tragedies as "the product of the intellectual ferment and spiritual upheaval which preceded the first great European revolution." He sees the plays as 'a sounding-board for the ideas of a new age of protest' that led to the English Civil Wars some 30 to 40 years later. . . . Starting with a consideration of Marston's Antonio's revenge and Torneur's (?) The revenger's tragedy, the book contains brief interpretations of three of Chapman's plays, the Bussy plays and Caesar and Pompey; two of Webster's, The white devil and The duchess of Malfi; and Jonson's Sejanus." (Choice) Index.

"[Lever] has given us, substantially, the text of five lectures he delivered at Simon Fraser University. In the book, he is a spokesman for a newly emerging attitude toward 17th-century drama. . . . Students may well be led through approaches [in this book] . . . to find the study of Elizabethan/Jacobean drama exciting and 'relevant.' Many teachers reading it with interest will find themselves stimulated into new ideas about how to teach their courses. . . . This is an excellent book."

Choice 8:1464 Ja '72 260w

"[The author's] initial task, of course, is to prove that the terrible scenes depicted in such strange dramas as Antonio's Revenge and The Revenger's Tragedy . . . were paralleled and even surpassed by historical events in contemporary Italy and elsewhere. Here the author has not the slightest difficulty in convincing us; not so readily, however, can we accept his corollary—that political conditions in England during the early seventeenth century were not dissimilar, and that the bloody scenes were put forward by the dramatists as propagandist material. . . . There appears to be no satisfactory evidence to support Mr Lever's assumption that these revenge dramas were greeted by sympathetic applause by the audiences before whom they were first presented. . . . It seems unfortunate that this . . . search for 'relevance' should occupy so many pages in this study since, when Mr Lever can escape from its entanglements, he shows himself a sound and often subtle expositor."

TLS p1583 D 17 '71 750w

LEVERE, TREVOR H. Affinity and matter: elements of chemical philosophy, 1800-1865. 230p il $14.50 Oxford

540.1 Chemical affinity. Matter. Chemistry—History
ISBN 0-19-858134-3 LC 76-872148

"Because of the author's belief that the concept of chemical affinity did not exist independently of those men who contributed to its development, he has written this book as a series of . . . biographical essays. . . . [The book contains] the detailed analysis of the affinity theories developed by Humphry Davy and Michael Faraday, and to a lesser extent those of J. J. Berzelius and others whose ideas formed the structure for speculation on the nature of chemical force and matter during the first half of the 19th century. . . . [The author also relates] these ideas on chemical affinity to the general intellectual background of the 19th century." (Science)

"Lever's dissertation [has been] modified for publication. Ph.D. theses are often tedious. This one is not, although it is uneven. . . . The seven chapters of this book (each largely self-contained, as the author himself notes) become rather a zig-zag course. But stylistic carping aside, the results are full of information and analyses that can only help to stir more discussion. The book is important for historians of science and for those who have a more general interest in the first half of the nineteenth century."

Choice 8:1600 F '72 170w

Reviewed by D. P. Jones
Science 176:786 My 19 '72 500w

LEVERTOV, DENISE. To stay alive. 86p $6.50
New directions

811
LC 72-159739

In the present volume of poems, the writer "associates herself with poets that work in dissenting voices. Her poetry's unifying thread is resistance—resistance to all things that would destroy life on this earth." (Choice)

"The careful reader of Levertov's poetry has observed over the years a growing sense of wholeness in her work. . . . She acknowledges in a preface, what her readers have recognized for some time, that among her early poems there are fragments of her present theme. To the lengthy 'Staying alive,' she appends such earlier effusions as 'Olga poems' and 'An interim' to suggest a gradual evolution of direction and completeness. The sympathetic reader that wishes reinforcement for his views will find Levertov's poems sustaining, but to most readers her evolution has come too late to make a noticeable impact upon the movement of dissent and resistance."

Choice 9:505 Je '72 160w

"Intelligently political, sympathetic toward friends who have fallen (two suicides and ■ death by violence), [Levertov] writes poems that are a personal testimony to those of conscience in an age of no conscience and little grief at public and private outrages. A lesser poet might have written with nuance and been provocative: Levertov achieves a moving and spiritual document not easily paralleled in America in the 1970s. The author's preface and notes enhance the eloquence of this volume, which every library should purchase even before it becomes a contender for a major literary award." P. H. Marvin
Library J 96:2649 S 1 '71 140w

"The book is heavy with fact: names are named, places and dates given, accusations made, praise bestowed. Its major fault—in the geological sense . . . —results from the attempt to absorb these materials into a specifically poetic dramatization. . . . The time-honored impulse to celebrate, to wonder, to sing is basic in Levertov, and this impulse is, literally, disturbed by the knowledge that an unassimilable evil exists which must be hated and which must be fought on the level of action. Poetic forms are repeatedly laid aside, as if felt inadequate for the rendering of actual life. Pages of the book are devoted to 'real' excerpts, in prose. . . . It is as a human portrait, not as a work of imaginative transfiguration, that this book remains with us, in delicate and anguished echo. Perhaps this is as its author would wish." Marie Borroff
Yale R 62:81 O '72 550w

LEVEY, MICHAEL. The life & death of Mozart. 278p pl $8.95 Stein & Day

B or 92 Mozart, Johann Chrysostom Wolfgang, Amadeus
ISBN 0-8128-1407-X LC 70-163451

"In this biography of the eighteenth century composer, the author analyzes specific musical compositions and considers 'Mozart's . . . genius . . . his relationship with his talented father, his celebrity as a child prodigy, his marital and financial problems, and the . . . neglect of his mature music during his brief lifetime.'" (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Indexes of persons and works.

"We are given a descriptive chronology of the principal works, with special attention to the operas, and an account, often heartbreaking, of the gradually deteriorating circumstances under which they were composed. A literary description of a work of music may seem an unnecessary exercise, but consider the facts. Most people read, but they hear music less easily. To be guided by a loving amateur in how to listen without becoming involved in technicalities is a most valuable service. . . . If I believe that Levey's sensitivity can help readers to become listeners, I am less convinced that his summaries will lead them so far into the operas, and I am a little doubtful that his psychological speculations will serve any useful purpose at all." David Park

Book World p4 D 19 '71 800w

Choice 9:222 Ap '72 140w

"This book . . . is the work of a Mozart-lover who is no musicologist. I have not pretended to what I do not possess in the way of knowledge; nor can I claim to have carried out any original research.' Thus Levey correctly indicates the limitations of his work. We have here a Mozart biography written with considerable affection for its subject, in a precious style—the G Minor Symphony is 'a skeletal cage for some great pining birds, rocked . . . by shuddering gusts which bring a deadly chill.'" Dika Newlin
Library J 96:3328 O 15 '71 120w

"[The author] reconstructs Mozart's life, event by event and Köchel number by Köchel number. The story is lucidly told, with just enough original observations to justify the retelling. It is not a flashy or perverse book in any way, though it does not wholly avoid the temptations which await the non-specialist. . . . Levey is inhibited when describing instrumental works, though this inhibition is better than the romantic metaphors he dresses the Clarinet Quintet in. It is surprising that he makes little of Mozart's corpus of wind music, the greatest ever written by any composer, and highly relevant to the operas. His insights, however, are thoroughly worthwhile." Peter Porter

New Statesman 82:742 N 26 '71 800w

Reviewed by Charles Rosen
N Y Rev of Books 18:15 My 18 '72 2650w

"It is difficult to see . . . what gap [this] book fills in the already staggering Mozart literature. . . . Among major matters that Mr. Levey brushes over in this essayistic biography are the recent scholarly conjectures about the actual illness and death of Mozart. Mr. Levey is terribly skittish about this. . . . [There are] many misprints, transposed or omitted lines and overlooked misspellings." Donal Henahan
N Y Times Bk R p6 Mr 12 '72 950w

"Throughout Mr. Levey's book his remarks on the instrumental music are no match for his penetrating discussion of the operas and the church music. However he writes, as is claimed, 'a deeply-felt biography.' He stresses the acute sensitivity and imaginative power revealed, quite apart from music, in Mozart's letters and in the fantasy kingdom, 'Rücken,' of his childhood. . . . But the chief value of Mr. Levey's book lies in its reassessment of the operas, and not merely the well-known ones. Several pages are devoted to Mitridate, several more to La Clemenza di Tito."

TLS p36 Ja 14 '72 450w

LEVIN, G. ROY. Documentary explorations; 15 interviews with film-makers. 420p il 10; pa $4.95 Doubleday

791.43 Moving pictures, Documentary. Moving pictures—Production and direction
LC 73-169937

This work "contains fifteen interviews with documentary filmmakers from both Europe and the United States . . . [giving] insights into the problems and methods of this cinematic genre. In addition, Levin . . . [draws] out his subjects on such topics as the social functions of documentaries, the role and importance of ethnographic films, the problems of objectivity, and the relevance of cinéma-vérité techniques." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This book could serve as an excellent companion volume to Rosenthal's recent work. The new documentary in action [BRD 1972], which also consists of interviews but deals almost entirely with different documentary filmmakers. Only Levin's work, however, contains filmographies, and they are excellent. Both books are recommended for all libraries desiring strength in cinema studies."

Choice 9:666 J1/Ag '72 130w

"[This] is one of the most informative and provocative books about film that I've read in years. In preparing the work over the last few years, Levin, an experienced director of short films, interviewed a group of highly articulate film makers, people like Basil Wright, Michael Shamberg, and David Cort. . . . The material is so expertly arranged that, like a well-edited film, it flows rhythmically from interview to interview. . . . Levin has also included a short history of the documentary film that prepares us for a clearer understanding of the interviews." Henry Halpern

Library J 97:213 Ja 15 '72 160w

LEVIN, IRA. The Stepford wives; a novel. 145p $4.95 Random house

ISBN 0-394-48199-2 LC 72-2481

"Attractive, talented Joanna moves with husband and kids to a suburb, where she comes to suspect that the village housewives have all been murdered and replaced by robots, the suspected villain being a chauvinistic Men's Association with headquarters in a house on a hill; and so Joanna begins to fear for her life." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:130 N '72 60w

"Since [this] is by the author of the unfortunately popular 'Rosemary's Baby' [BRD 1967], is a Literary Guild Selection, will be condensed by the Reader's Digest, serialized by the Ladies Home Journal and finally made into a film, it's bound to be read however poor its quality. So it would be unfair to tell . . . the story. Not only would it ruin the suspense, it would raise false expectations—the inventiveness of the plot being overshadowed by Mr. Levin's unconvincing story-telling. Apparently Mr. Levin doesn't like women. On second thoughts perhaps Mr. Levin isn't merely anti-women. He's anti-people."

Christian Science Monitor p9 S 27 '72 250w

Reviewed by J. A. Avant

Library J 97:2645 Ag '72 140w

New Repub 167:32 N 4 '72 280w

"Readers should remember that Ira Levin is the dramatist of 'No Time for Sergeants' as well as the author of 'Rosemary's Baby.' There is a broad current of humor beneath the horrific surface of this little ambush of Women's Lib, life and the pursuit of happiness." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p43 O 15 '72 150w

"For a while . . . it seems as though Mr. Levin has written a tract for Ms. The most serious shortcoming is lack of density or complexity. Levin doesn't probe his plot or explore his conceit, robot women, with the fullness of, say, Bill Blatty's ingenuity in The Exorcist [BRD 1971]. . . . He has, however, the magician's touch; he casts a spell, and [the book] becomes believable through emotional transfer. . . . Which isn't to say that Ira Levin has achieved anything of special note. . . . [The book] is written with a grade school vocabulary, a high school version of syntax, and a best-selling author's understanding of what mass audiences want. . . . Levin's characters do not change or grow. . . . His forte is wild ideas. He thinks of a situation. The situation requires bizarre means. The means produce a crisis event. So goes the novel." Webster Schott

Sat R 55:98 O 7 '72 1000w

TLS p1415 N 24 '72 550w

LEVIN, MELVIN R., ed. Educational investment in an urban society; costs, benefits, and public policy; ed. by Melvin R. Levin and Alan Shank. 425p $12.50; pa $9.95 Teachers college press

379.0973 Education—Economic aspects. Education—Finance. Education, Urban LC 70-11039

This collection of 18 previously published papers is "divided among six major topical sections: . . . Human Capital and Education (T. W. Schultz, Gary Becker, Burton Weisbrod); Educational Expenditures and Worker Productivity (Jerry Miner, Charles Benson, T. W. Schultz, John Vaizey); Benefits and Costs of Education (Burton Weisbrod, Thomas Ribich, Jack Wiseman); PPBS [Planning, programming, budgeting system] (Aaron Wildavsky, Melvin Levin, Werner Hirsch); Social Indicators (HEW, Wilbur Cohen); and 'Cost-Benefit in Action' (Sar Levitan and Garth Mangun, Jacob Kaufman). At the end of each section are suggestions for further reading." (Am J Soc)

"How does one review a collection of previously published papers? It must be on the topical organization of the book, the papers the editors select to develop each topic, and the editor's introductory essay. With two qualified exceptions, I think that the editors have done a good job. . . . One of my qualified exceptions deals with the amount of space given to the 'education is like vitamins' idea. . . . [The other] involves the slant in the treatment of PPBS. . . . Because of its usefulness as a management tool, PPBS has a potentially wide application in education. . . . The PPBS section of the book is on balance critical of this analytical tool and sympathetic to the 'experience and judgment' which have gotten us into the current mess. . . . Unless one has reprints of all the included articles, this volume would be a handy item to have on the five-foot shelf." E. W. Erickson

Am J Soc 77:795 Ja '72 1000w

"The economists more and more are trying to measure the value of education, both to the individual and to society. This is a useful primer." L. B. Stevens

N Y Times Bk R p8 S 20 '70 70w

LEVIN, MEYER. An Israel Haggadah for Passover. See Haggadah

LEVIN, MURRAY B. Political hysteria in America; the democratic capacity for repression. 312p $8.50 Basic bks.

973.9 U.S.—Politics and government—20th century. Anti-Communist movements SBN 465-05898-1 LC 71-174826

The author "presents two related themes. The first is that 'political hysteria' in the United States is promoted by 'elites' (businessmen, politicians, journalists, et al.) for their own self-interest. The public, responding to unconscious fears and conflicts and perceiving threats to its values, accepts the repression which follows. . . . Levin proves this part of his thesis as he recalls the Red scare of 1919. . . . The second theme [deals with] why the American people are constantly predisposed to political hysteria and repressive reaction against alien ideas." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Levin relies heavily on sociological theories whose sources are inadequately identified. Still, he argues his point capably. He has obviously given much thought to the American national character. And although he limits himself to one facet of that character—the American identification with 18th-Century political and 19th-Century economic liberalism and the Horatio Alger ideal—he successfully integrates it into a theory of political hysteria and repression." B. N. Smith

Library J 97:1023 Mr 15 '72 150w

"Levin's book is . . . not simply an attack by a liberal on conservatives. The predominant American liberalism, Levin concludes, is itself a reinforcer of traditional Americana (albeit with a Keynesian accent). He complains that the predominant liberalism has been unchallenged either by radicalism or by conservatism, a truth which much of the 'conservative movement' fails to recognize. The truths are too infrequent in this book, however, and the hysteria too prevalent." M. H. Edwards

Nat R 24:806 J1 21 '72 240w

LEVIN, M. B.—Continued

"Levin's analysis is often crude and frequently unsupported by evidence. His style is repetitious and blatantly polemical. Most important, his book is simply unoriginal. Levin's description of the events of 1919-1920 is drawn nearly exclusively from Robert Murray's Red Scare: A Study in National Hysteria, 1919-1920, and his analysis of the monolithic character of American political culture derives from Louis Hartz's classic study, The Liberal Tradition in America [BRD 1955]. In addition, Levin's argument about the pluralist sources of political hysteria is based on Michael Rogin's brilliant book The Intellectuals and McCarthy: The Radical Specter [BRD 1967], while his thoughts on the future of repression are largely drawn from the writings of Herbert Marcuse. These are all significant works; they deserve, however, to be read on their own account, not in garbled paraphrase." Robert Griffith

Sat R 55:75 Ap 22 '72 600w

LEVIN, RICHARD. The multiple plot in English Renaissance drama. 277p $9.50 Univ. of Chicago press

322 English drama—History and criticism. Plots (Drama, novel, etc.) ISBN 0-226-47526-3 LC 75-130306

The author discusses "various kinds of multiple plots—e.g. direct contrast, clown subplots of three sorts, equivalence plots—with . . . analyses of plays demonstrating each type." (Choice)

"Levin is aware of the limits of subtlety and of multiplicity; he never seems to push too hard for plot relationships, but keeps a balanced view. Although not everything in the book is new, the organization creates new relationships between observations which already have been made. Highly recommended."

Choice 8:568 Je '71 200w

"What is delightful and surprising in reading [this study] is the discovery that, unlike some of his fellow-explorers within this territory, Professor Levin has a twinkle in his eye. . . . Despite an impression that at times [he] may be considering a trifle too curiously, in general he displays . . . acuteness in his judgments. . . . He avoids the snare of reading these dramas as though they had been designed as intellectual puzzles for the special delight of academics . . . [and his] examination of Renaissance multi-plot drama is . . . thorough."

TLS p1461 N 19 '71 1050w

LEVINE, ADELINE. The Gary schools. See Bourne, R. S.

LEVINE, EDWIN BURTON. Hippocrates. 172p $5.50 Twayne

610 Hippocrates. Medicine, Greek and Roman LC 70-120489

"The Hippocratic Collection [is] a group of some sixty titles of medical writings, in a stylized Ionic, dating apparently from various times from the fourth to the second century before Christ. . . . Levine gives us a conspectus of [some] . . . of these works. After an introductory chapter recounting the meagre certainties and the more abundant myths of Hippocrates's life and a list of the titles in the corpus, there follow accounts of the titles he selects, arranged under these headings: Medical Theory and Philosophy; The Medical Practitioner and His Profession; The Practice of Medicine; Therapeutics—The Management of Disease; Environmental Medicine and the Loo-sphere." (Class World)

"A short chapter considers Hippocrates the man, the legend, and the myth, and also the present state of scholarship on the Collection itself, but does not place this in a wider historical context. Therefore, this is not an introductory work for beginners without previous background, but readers with some knowledge of ancient Greek science or general medical history will find it most informative and useful."

Choice 9:78 Mr '72 120w

"The author's method is to summarize the contents of the works under each heading, prefacing or following his summaries with an evaluation of the medical knowledge revealed and the professional competence displayed. Interspersed from time to time are remarks on interesting parallels to modern theories or practices. Sometimes these comments come in a little awkwardly, but they serve to show the reader that there are threads of continuity from Hippocrates to the present. . . . What emerges from the study is a picture of a rational profession. The motto, 'to heal or at least do no harm' expresses the cautious ways of these physicians. Careful observation of illness and accurate descriptions mark the papers on professional practice and treatment. . . . This is an excellent introduction to a body of work that all Classicists should know well." J. S. Kieffer

Class World 65:137 D '71 400w

LEVINE, ELLEN, jt. auth. Rebirth of feminism. See Hole, J.

LEVINE, ERWIN L. Theodore Francis Green: the Washington years, 1937-1960. 179p $7.50 Brown univ. press

B or 92 Green, Theodore Francis ISBN 0-87057-128-5 LC 73-127366

A sequel to Theodore Francis Green: the Rhode Island years, 1906-1936 (BRD 1964) this concluding book on Green's political life examines the congressional career of the senator from Rhode Island through its culmination in the chairmanship of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Index.

"A competent study of Rhode Island's aristocratic Senator. . . . [this] ably and sympathetically highlights the Providence blueblood's unquestioning party loyalty. . . . [The book] is based upon extensive use of the Green Papers at the Library of Congress. . . . Admiration shows through on every page for Green's unassuming, craftsmanlike approach to such causes as social security, reciprocal trade, civil rights, trade unions, Zionism, and military suffrage. . . . Green's close ties to J. Howard McGrath, a forerunner of the very McCarthyism Green detested, lie undeveloped. Recommended for large libraries fully covering modern Senatorial policies."

Choice 8:1638 F '72 150w

"This handsome little volume is a tribute to those competent editors, copyreaders, designers, printers, and other craftsmen who still take pride in the book making business. Unfortunately, the work's substance would seem to guarantee that its outward attractiveness will come to the notice of few readers. . . . [In the preceding volume] the author's almost pietistic account of Green's motives and skills and accomplishments left one commentator wondering whether 'an impartial balance ha[d] been struck. . . . The present follow-up volume . . . raises the same question in a most pressing way. And regrettably, it offers as compensation virtually no descriptions or fascinating insight into the developments that confronted Green and the nation during his Washington years. . . . [Much of the] text is a record of Green's votes on the questions that presented themselves to Congress, and in almost every instance Green's position is predictable. All of this makes for dull and uninteresting reading." J. J. Huthmacher

J Am Hist 59:470 S '72 450w

LEVINE, SOL, ed. Social stress; ed. by Sol Levine and Norman A. Scotch. 295p $9.75 Aldine pub.

155.9 Psychology ISBN 0-202-30066-8 LC 68-8159

"Spanning medicine, physiology, psychology, and the social sciences, the [editors] enlist . . . collaborators to explore such sources of stress as the family, work settings, social class, race, and degree of urbanization. Another qualified group looks at consequences of stress through cognitive and personality factors, experimental studies of conflict-produced stress, physical and mental illness in response to stress, and social pathology as both source and consequence of stress. . . . Index." (Choice)

"[This book] accomplishes an ample portion of its goals, providing a broad view of the field and the promise it holds for future research. . . . [It] will probably appeal . . . to sociologists and anthropologists. . . . [The emphasis is] on where we currently stand. . . . What is stress? . . . Is its magnitude enhanced by multiple simultaneous exposures to stress stimuli? Do cognition and then appraisal of stress stimuli determine the degree of stress experienced, or vice versa? Are stress typologies fruitful? These and myriad other questions and issues are wrestled within . . . [this] tight and pithy book." D. L. Dodge

Am J Soc 77:405 S '71 600w

"Two competent social scientists supply a much needed 'thorough and systematic discussion of the conceptual and methodological issues' around social stress and its sources and consequences. . . . Levine and Scotch present a clear and comprehensive introduction. Two other social scientists supply a stimulating analysis of models of stress, and the editors conclude with a chapter of useful synthesis. . . . Recommended for college and graduate level students in the social sciences, social work, psychiatry, medicine, and nursing."

Choice 8:1218 N '71 150w

"This book provides critical reviews of the empirical and theoretical literature on stress. Each author struggles with the concept and it is stimulating to be confronted with these diverse attempts. This book should be on every sociologists' shelf. . . . [It] would also be useful as a text in courses on the sociology of illness." Dean Harper

Contemp Sociol 1:158 Mr '72 700w

LEVINSON, LEONARD LOUIS. Bartlett's unfamiliar quotations. 341p $10 Cowles

808.88 Quotations

LC 70-144314

This book lists some 5,000 quotations in alphabetical order, classified under subject headings.

"Both modern and not-so-modern authors, writers and speakers are duly quoted—including the compiler. . . . The whole is harmless, humorous, and virtually useless as a reference aid. . . . The subject headings are an odd mixture. . . . there are no cross references. . . . nor are the authors identified, nor are the sources noted. . . . Good browsing, but most libraries can skip."

Choice 9:196 Ap '72 190w

"Levinson has put together a collection of unfamiliar quotations from the gamut of familiar sources—proverbs, Shakespeare, Fred Allen, etc. Aside from the fact that you probably have not seen these quotes before, Bartlett's Unfamiliar Quotations is not unlike the many other such works already on library shelves. . . . There is no index, so you'll have to rely on the author's interpretation of the quote to find it, and your chances of finding it a second time are small. Recommended for only the most complete collections." D. M. Hoffman

Library J 96:2757 S 15 '71 70w

LEVIS, LARRY. Wrecking crew; poems. 62p $5.25; pa $2.75 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

811

ISBN 0-8229-3238-5; 0-8229-5226-2 (pa)

LC 72-191820

Some of the poems in this collection first appeared in such publications as Pebble, Northwest Review and Worksheet.

"The title is misleading. It sounds tough-guyish, and although these poems are about violence and death, they are not professionally and permanently 'tough' the way Bukowski is. They are more like Sylvia Plath or Jean Edelman, seeing the violence and pain through multiple layers of repulsion and recoil. The book is finely honed and tuned, and perhaps the only fault is too much polish. . . . However, very few contemporary poets can even approach Levis' existential confrontation with the basics of death and the death-approach (which is really how he defines 'life' in these poems—as a kind of increasing awareness of the death-fact). Highly recommended."

Choice 9:970 O '72 130w

"One striking quality of this book, which won the 1971 U.S. Award of the International Poetry Forum, is its author's remarkably terse style. At times, as in 'Age,' Levis verges on haiku. Elsewhere, he conveys a sense of hard-won self-constraint. . . . 'Bat Angels,' with its bat that 'wants/to chew its own blood and whimper and forget/ the flesh it drags.' is excellent, as is 'The Poem You Asked For'; both display a sophisticated control of tone and imagery. . . . Levis is occasionally maudlin and, indeed, his terseness sometimes falls flat; but, all in all, his first published volume shows exceptionally high promise." Peter Dollard

Library J 96:4097 D 15 '71 140w

LEVITAN, SAR A. Big brother's Indian programs—with reservations, by Sar A. Levitan and Barbara Hetrick. 228p il $8.95 McGraw

970.5 Indians of North America—Government relations

SBN 07-037391-4

LC 78-172027

The authors present "a general analysis and critical evaluation of a wide range of federal [Indian] programs, including programs in education, health, human and natural resources, and community structure." (Publisher's note) Index.

"For anyone interested in contemporary Indian problems, this volume has much to offer. . . . Despite the overemphasis on economics, the volume does contain an excellent economic evaluation of Indian problems and government efforts. . . . Also, one can applaud the authors' truly fine chapters on reservation education and health problems. Unfortunately, the volume does not include a bibliography, and the footnote citations contain only a few books, articles, reports, and statutes. . . . It would have been helpful if contemporary Indian opinion, available through interviews and a growing native American bibliography, had been sought by the authors." A. H. Derosier

Ann Am Acad 402:162 JI '72 500w

"Do not be misled by the 'cute' title. This is a serious book deserving a wide audience which makes a significant contribution to understanding a significant aspect of the relations between Indians on reservation and government agencies ostensibly designed to help the former. . . . Major emphasis, of course, is on the positive and negative aspects of the work of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. As an objective appraisal of current conditions of Indian life. . . . [it is] highly recommended for all libraries."

Choice 9:442 My '72 850w

"This analysis from the Center for Man-power Studies of Georgetown University is the most valuable single book on the modern American Indian and what White Men so arrogantly call 'the plight of the Red Man.' In fact, the book is probably the only really objective study of 'the delivery of contemporary government programs for residents of Indian reservations.' The actual programs and procedures are reported without that kind of self-righteous moralizing we have come to read in the typical Indian polemics. Levitan and Hetrick have proven once again that an honest, rational, and soundly conceived policy interpretation may be the best argument for change." Jack Gregory and Rennard Strickland

Commonweal 96:287 My 26 '72 500w

"[This study] omits the problems of the urban Indian. Generally, the appraisal concludes that the Indian programs in the past were paternalistic and degrading, although the Johnson and Nixon administrations have begun to react to the need of the Indians for self-determination. . . . The prose is straightforward, though unexciting and somewhat repetitive, and the suggestions are valid as far as they go. Primarily valuable for the statistical information it presents." Jack Forman

Library J 97:892 Mr 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by Alberta Hankenson

Library J 97:1183 Mr 15 '72 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Michael Rogin

N Y Times Bk R n4 D 24 '72 290w

LEVITAN, SAR A., ed. Blue-collar workers; a symposium on middle America. 393p $12.50 McGraw 309.173 Labor and laboring classes—U.S.

ISBN 0-07-037390-6

LC 74-172026

"This book is an interdisciplinary [effort] where economists, political scientists, sociologists, and public officials seek to ascertain the state of and thus the possible action of this group. The general conclusion is they are not a deeply alienated group about to revolt. . . . [The articles] attempt to define the group, [its] political expression, [and its attitude toward the race question, unions, and life style. . . . [There is also] an analysis of the effects on them of taxes, income maintenance, and education." (Choice)

LEVITAN S. A.—Continued

"This is an excellent collection in its balance and depth. It is eminently readable, a fact which indicates skillful editing." J. J. Conlin
Best Sell 31:369 N 15 '71 370w

"The authors have done an excellent job of presentation of data, with intricate and careful analysis. . . . Highly recommended."
Choice 9:290 Ap '72 170w

LEVOY, MYRON. The witch of Fourth Street, and other stories; pictures by Gabriel Lisowski. 110p $4.95; lib bdg $4.43 Harper
SBN 06-023795-3; 06-023796-1 (lib bdg)
LC 74-183174

Here are eight "stories about immigrants who settled on New York's Lower East Side during the 1920's. In the title story, an organ grinder's monkey and an old woman are transformed into a leprechaun and a witch by a little Irish girl's imagination; 'The Hanukkah Santa Claus' is a fantasy about a Jewish toy peddler who turns into a flying Saint Nick. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"[These stories] have extraordinary freshness and charm. . . . But Myron Levoy does not compromise with truth: there is pain too, and frustration—and in the final story, death. What makes this such a good book is the author's compassion, imagination, and humor; his clear eye for detail and craftsman's sense of what language means and can be made to do. It is a first book for children by a first-rate writer." Natalie Babbitt

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 7 '72 160w

"Tales and characters are highly original, sometimes humorous, sometimes poignant, and often profound. The art of the short story is not always one that children recognize; one would serve the book well by introducing it, or better still, reading it aloud. The soft drawings are exactly right." E. L. H.
Horn Bk 48:372 Ag '72 200w

"Levoy's descriptions of these people's hopes, fears, and the constant desire of parents to provide better futures for their children evoke empathy and successfully convey the feeling of the period. Reader interest is held with each successive narrative, and the old-fashioned style black-and-white crosshatched drawings perfectly accompany the stories." B. S. Miller
Library J 97:1915 My 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by Nancy Klein

N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 18 '72 120w

LEVY, ALAN. Rowboat to Prague. 531p $10 Grossman pubs.

943.7 Czechoslovak Republic—History—Intervention, 1968—Personal narratives
ISBN 0-670-60920-X LC 72-157872

This is an "account of the Levy family's life in Czechoslovakia before, during, and after the 1968 crisis and Soviet invasion. . . . [The author] was expelled from Czechoslovakia in January 1971." (Library J)

"The chief value of [this book] lies in Levy's eye for local color and detail . . . above all, his talent for capturing and expressing moods—first the exhilaration and flowering of liberal Prague . . . under Dubcek and later the despair and shock of the Soviet invasion. . . . As to [the author's] claim that he was an 'eye-witness to history' and the dust jacket's claim that the Levys were 'participants' as well as 'witnesses' I feel both statements are exaggerations. The book's political reporting is skimpy and unsophisticated. The diary too closely follows the family's personal and domestic life for it to touch on more than the surface of politics. . . . [However, it] will hold your interest and give you a feel, if not always a full political view, of the plundering Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968." J. F. Menez
Best Sell 32:120 Je 1 '72 550w

"There is much that is good in this account. . . . Amusing incidents, revealing if somewhat one-sided glimpses of everyday life among the upper crust . . . and interesting bits of factual and apocryphal history alternate with reports on the political events and personages of the Prague Spring and its aftermath. Particularly moving is the description of the funeral of self-immolator Jan Palach. There are flaws: light and serious elements, instead of enhancing one another, tend to get in each other's way, creating a sprawling, uneven whole." Hana Stranska

Library J 97:496 F 1 '72 150w

"[Levy writes] with an intimacy of detail and emotion that transcend mere journalistic reporting. I was in Prague in April 1969, and Levy was living, essentially, like a Czech. He knew a great many of the political higher-ups and the cultural luminaries (film directors Milos Forman and Jiri Menzel, theatrical satirists Suchy and Slitr) and, as was obvious, these friendships cut far deeper than duty to a job. His narration slides gracefully between official report and sensitive, personal observation, whether he is recording popular, post-invasion graffiti. . . . or recounting the harrowing ordeal of a handcuffed Dubcek and his allies beaten and bullied in Moscow. . . . [The author] has managed to record the short-lived era with all the consequence and compassion one surmises a happily transplanted American could muster." S. K. Oberbeck
Newsweek 79:107 F 21 '72 330w

LEVY, FRANK. Northern schools and civil rights; the Racial Imbalance act of Massachusetts. 190p il $6.95 Markham pub.

344.7 Segregation in education
SBN 0-8410-0912-0 LC 79-155546

This is a "study of the Massachusetts Racial Imbalance Act (1965), and the attempt to eliminate de facto segregation in the Boston public schools. Primarily, it is a political study and for the most part describes the conditions which led Massachusetts to pass a law against de facto segregation and the process by which the law has been enforced." (Choice) Bibliography, Index.

"Although educators will find [the book's] two preliminary sections somewhat abstruse (The politics of passage, De facto segregation and the law), the concluding section (The process of enforcement) is a wonderfully rich commentary on urban politics which have thwarted racial integration in the schools of American cities. The acute contemporary relevancy of the monograph is attested by the Federal charge that Boston is operating a segregated school system (specifically, that Boston school officials were in violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. . . . Should be added to collections holding . . . works on urban education. Appendices; . . . excellent bibliography."

Choice 8:1623 F '72 220w

"In his conclusion Levy points out that while the act has not been totally or even significantly successful it has created an atmosphere which has allowed 'private initiatives such as METCO [Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity] and Operation Exodus' to develop and flourish. While this study is primarily a history of the act, it does address itself to the factors and problems which a nation is faced with when it tries to modify its multiracial society. Although not an outstanding book, it is an interesting and timely study and at present it is the only major published treatment of the subject." J. J. Fox
Library J 97:688 F 15 '72 230w

LEVY, HOWARD. Going to jail; the political prisoner [by] Howard Levy and David Miller. 243p $6 Grove; for sale by Random House

365 Prisons—U.S.
ISBN 0-394-47584-4 LC 76-111019

The authors "each spent over two years in prison, one for refusing to train troops in medical techniques and the other for destroying his draft card. Together, they have put together a volume on prison conditions. They discuss such aspects as religion, work, homosexuality, education, race relations, punishment, violence, and correspondence." (Library J)

Choice 9:577 Je '72 140w

"Two formerly imprisoned opponents of the Vietnam war tell how the prison experience radicalized them; along the way they offer survival guides for future political prisoners. The chapter on religion charges that penal religious services as now constituted support the repressive ethos more than they serve the prisoner."

Christian Century 88:1397 N 24 '71 50w

"As one might expect, the total picture presented is a dismal one, giving the impression that today's prisons, although they maintain an outward appearance of concern with the total inmate, show little interest in his well-being or in changing his values. The authors offer . . . recommendations which include decent wages for inmates; an end to the censorship of mail, books, and periodicals; and a more reasonable program of education, including worthwhile vocational training and an expansion of work-study release programs. The book is recommended for medium-sized and large public libraries and most academic collections." W. M. Forman

Library J 96:2290 J1 '71 170w

"Do not expect the controlled outrage of a Cleaver or a George Jackson from this book, nor the sentimentality that marks the genre [of prison books]. If the authors have a fault of that kind, it is their annoying tendency to look over their shoulders at the radical community, fearful about its possible reactions; they try to cover themselves with a measure of revolutionary rhetoric. . . . Perhaps the most valuable aspect of the book is the authors' analysis of the so-called enlightened federal penal system, with its 'progressive' methods and 'professional' approach. . . . The program [the authors offer] is not particularly radical; better legal services for prisoners; establishing 'service centers' near prisons, where families of inmates may find comfort, share information and encourage one another; and 'highly visible mass demonstrations' outside prisons." Robert Cassidy

Nation 214:91 Ja 17 '72 900w

"[The authors] use this book as a means of expounding the increasingly fashionable argument that most men in prison today are political scape-goats: the real offenders are Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon, and other makers of American foreign and domestic policy. Consequently, the authors argue, it is 'not unreasonable' to demand that 'all imprisoned black people be set free,' as well as a 'vast majority' of the white. Some readers may find this argument logically or at least emotionally satisfying. Having interviewed a large number of victims of violent crimes as part of a research project conducted during the past few years, I remain monumentally unimpressed. . . . I suspect that seasoned convicts will find the Levy-Miller book rather embarrassing and disavow its concern with their best interests." Gilbert Geis

Sat R 54:47 D 11 '71 1100w

LEVY, LESTER S. Flashes of merriment; a century of humorous songs in America, 1805-1905, as written by Lester S. Levy; calligraphy by Henry W. Hoffman. 370p $12.50 Univ. of Okla. press

734 Music, Popular (Songs, etc.). Songs, American

ISBN 0-8061-0914-9 LC 74-108805

Lyrics, music and discussion of approximately one hundred popular songs are illustrated with old sheet music. The subjects of the songs include comic tales, courtship and marriage, dialects, nonsense, history, animals, and drinking. Bibliography. Index.

Christian Century 88:1237 O 20 '71 20w

"This charming collection of anecdotes, songs, and excellent black-and-white reproductions of sheet-music covers . . . will be a source of rich material for the student of popular culture and of simple delight for the casual reader. . . . Each section begins with well researched commentary on the particular genre, biographical notes on performers and composers, and notes on political or social history. Levy . . . is impressive as a social commentator." Richard Jackson

Library J 97:200 Ja 15 '72 170w

"The music and words, with copious notes . . . bring to life the popular entertainment of a far less complicated century." Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk R p12 D 5 '71 40w

LEVY, MARK R. The ethnic factor; how America's minorities decide elections, by Mark R. Levy and Michael S. Kramer. 255p $7.95 Simon & Schuster

324 Elections—U.S. Minorities
ISBN 671-21211-7 LC 77-189752

The authors "show how blacks, Chicanos and Puerto Ricans, Jews, Irish, Italians, and Slavs tend to vote as ethnic groups." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The authors of this compact study . . . rely upon computer analyses of election returns in two thousand precincts over the past dozen years to support their conclusions. . . . This is a powerful professional treatise proving that ethnicity is becoming increasingly crucial in our political scheme. The chapter showing the relationship of ethnicity to the 1972 Presidential race is by far the most pragmatic, comprehensive piece of writing on this subject to date. The book's methodology is scientifically balanced, sophisticatedly presented and the inclusion of an index as well as statistical appendices further enhance its value. This is a basic reference for anyone who will seriously evaluate the coming presidential election." T. H. Scully

Best Sell 32:187 J1 15 '72 550w

"The authors do a commendable job of covering a vast amount of data and convey their reporting in easy-to-read sophisticated journalism. Further, they are as up to date as possible and speculate on the impact and meaning of recent ethnic phenomena such as the Italian Unity Day rally and the activities of the Jewish Defense League. The book is not meant to be a scholarly treatise and its major value is the drawing together of the many findings on ethnic voting. The problems for sociology and political science, however, lie in the book's substantive and methodological shortcomings."

Choice 9:846 S '72 200w

"[This] is a well-documented work, but one which glosses over important dichotomies within ethnic groups; for example, the authors examine differences between the urban/suburban Jewish vote but they do not discuss differences based on Orthodox/Conservative/Reform affiliation. Nevertheless, the book should have interest for those who hope to predict how ethnic groups will vote in coming elections." Hindy Schachter

Library J 97:1302 Ap 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Richard Jensen

Nat R 24:904 Ag 18 '72 450w

LEVYTSKY, BORIS. The uses of terror; the Soviet secret police, 1917-1970; tr. by H. A. Piehler. 349p $7.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

363.2 Police—Russia. Secret service
LC 74-180724

"The first edition of this work appeared under the title of Vom Roten Terror zur Sozialistischen Gesetzlichkeit [in 1961]. . . . The second edition, with . . . additional material, was published [in 1967] under the title of Die Rote Inquisition. . . . The present edition, in English, includes the latest developments in the Soviet Union, down to the middle of 1970, the final chapter being based almost entirely on information derived [from] . . . the underground publications of the Samisdat. The author [seeks] . . . to determine and clarify the part played by terrorism in the Soviet system and Soviet society. [He regards] the security service as the instrument of terrorism." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index of persons.

"The largest amount of attention is given to analysis of post-1939 developments. The bibliography is impressive, but it does not include the more recently published accounts. . . . The work updates S. Wolin and R. M. Slusser, editors, The Soviet Secret Police [BRD 1957], and complements in some respects The Russian Secret Police [BRD 1971]—the latter remaining a more careful and better balanced work. Recommended to graduate libraries and undergraduate libraries with emphasis on Russian-Soviet studies."

Choice 9:869 S '72 170w

"Levytsky, drawing on a wide range of secondary sources, fully describes the cyclic history of the Soviet secret police, the terror methods, key cases, the legal system, recent dissidence in the U.S.S.R., and the failure of Soviet leaders to return to a system of full legality in secret police work since Stalin's death. Recommended." A. S. Birkos

Library J 97:1723 My 1 '72 100w

LEWIN, LEONARD C. Triage 215p $5.95 Dial press

LC 79-38901

"Set in the near future, this posits a situation where various elements of the population—some individuals, some industries, and a government commission—take upon themselves a role which is the reverse of that of a triage officer in the military. That officer determines who will be treated first in a field hospital, thereby giving some the best chance of survival; on the other hand, these people arrange for selective fatal accidents to occur, giving certain people the least chance of survival. In each case, the justification is that these deaths will benefit the public welfare by ridding society of unproductive elements (i.e., the old, the weak, addicts, the poor)." (Library J)

LEWIN, L. C.—Continued

Economist 245:65 O 9 '72 350w

"Each episode is a separate story, followed by an often cynical comment by an unidentified observer regarding the success of the particular effort. The author's style, relying almost totally on dialogue without any quotation marks or introductory phrases and employing straight narrative only in the comments and in what are meant to be newspaper reports, adds to the frightening documentary tone of the book but unfortunately renders the action hard to follow at times. Nonetheless, this interesting, not-too-far-fetched morality tale will bring home to older YA's one possibility of 'big brother' state." Elizabeth Storey Library J 97:1625 Ap 15 '72 150w [YA]

Reviewed by J. Burnham
Nat R 24:651 Je 9 '72 200w

"What makes 'Triage' particularly terrifying is its utter plausibility. . . . [The book] is presented as a work of fiction. . . . Unfortunately, [it] is very poor fiction. It's not just the absence of plot or definable characters. . . . but a certain indispensable tension within the material is lacking. There are no descriptions, nor even any action. Instead, we have the transcript of bland dialogues, intercommittee memos, newspaper clippings, snatches of television interviews, all followed at intervals by Lewin's didactic comments. . . . What comes out is merely sociology." William Hjortberg
N Y Times Bk R p9 J1 2 '72 650w

"We may not be qualitatively far removed from . . . selective atrocities in the name of public welfare. . . . OK, a good idea for a novel, but . . . [the author] lacks the persuasive wit; his arguments are sophomoric; he falls back on absurdities, fails to see that the corruption in our society is too complex to allow for such simple-minded extrapolations. . . . [The book] is intermittently entertaining. Some of the ideas are ingenious, but the whole is silly and the intellectual argument never quite engaged." P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:101 My 22 '72 230w

LEWIN, MICHAEL Z. Ask the right question.
190p $4.95 Putnam
LC 78-160340

"Private investigator Albert Samson hasn't had a case in weeks; business is so bad that he's forced to moonlight at other jobs until 16-year-old Eloise Crystal asks him to locate her real father. Samson drives an old rattle-trap car, eats at greasy spoons and generally takes a direct, no-nonsense approach to his work. The Crystal case is solved with dogged determination and hard work." (Library J)

Best Sell 31:362 N 1 '71 40w

"Lewin's realistic story of a detective at work in Indianapolis is more absorbing than the usual, flamboyant private-eye capers." Brenda Gray
Library J 96:3915 N 15 '71 100w [YA]

"It is always pleasant to come across a promising talent, and Michael Z. Lewin is one. His first book is a smoothly written private-eye story. . . . Albert Samson, the not-too-successful private eye, may over-indulge in self-pity—but he understands people and is basically honest with himself and others. Characters are finely drawn, plotting is logical, details are well worked out. You can be sure that we'll be seeing more of Mr. Samson." Newgate Callendar
N Y Times Bk R p36 N 21 '71 130w

"Halfway through Mr. Samson's fictional debut he has the mystery solved to everyone's satisfaction—except his own. It's then that the case, really opens up. I think you'll like this one." Haskel Frankel
Sat R 54:58 N 27 '71 90w

TLS p612 My 26 '72 40w

LEWIN, RONALD. Montgomery as military commander. 288p pl maps $10 Stein & Day 940.54 Montgomery of Alamein, Bernard Law Montgomery, 1st Viscount, World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles—Africa. World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles—Europe
ISBN 0-8128-1426-6 LC 77-163496

This is an analysis of the British general's military career. Bibliography. Index.

"It must be for the reader to decide whether [Lewin] paints a rosy picture or leans over backwards in his criticism [of Montgomery]. To this reviewer he appears to be fair. What is accomplished is an intensely interesting account of an extraordinary military career, an exciting history of battles, and a penetrating analysis of individual personality and professional attainment. . . . Some of the fourteen maps are inadequate in their scale, for areas too small for the general scope of the actions described. Many places of importance to the action are not found on the map, so that a smaller scale map is necessary to use with them. There are thirty-one magnificent photos from the Imperial War Museum." R. E. O'Brien
Best Sell 31:505 F 15 '72 500w
Choice 9:425 My '72 120w

"Mr Lewin has written a book of distinction which should restore Montgomery's reputation to its proper place, high on the scale of judgment of Britain's military commanders. What is so remarkable about Mr Lewin's reassessment is its fair-mindedness. His comments on Montgomery's failings as a man, a commander and an ally are pungent. But, equally, he succeeds in showing that he was a great general who did not only his state but the western alliance much service."

Economist 240:66 S 25 '71 420w

"Was Montgomery the most over-rated general of World War II? Or was he the best British general since Wellington? . . . Lewin, after weighing the claims of Haig, Wavell, Alexander and Slim (but not Wolseley, Roberts, Kitchener or Auchinleck) comes perhaps a little reluctantly to the conclusion that he was the latter. . . . Clearly the author is not an uncritical admirer of Montgomery. He does not hide his awareness of Montgomery's intellectual and emotional shortcomings. . . . As for Overlord, the author bestows high praise on Montgomery for persisting, until the Ardennes break-out, with a sound method in face of bitter criticism, which admittedly he did much to provoke by failing to make his intentions clear. As regards the great controversy which followed the break-out, Lewin is almost unique among British commentators in taking Eisenhower's part." Basil Collier
N Y Times Bk R p74 N 21 '71 650w

"Lewin's study, although it gives no startling new information about the character and achievements of Montgomery, is a perceptive and lucid piece of military analysis, marred only by [a] professional reluctance to put the knife in when it is obviously needed. After opening the door fractionally on Montgomery's childhood—obviously the key not only to his complicated and ambiguous character, but also to the psychological drives that brought him to high command—Mr Lewin backs away deferentially. . . . Yet he can be devastating too. . . . He does not, however attempt to explain how a man so insecure, so arrogant, and so tactless, could rise to the top of a profession in which these defects would normally be an insuperable barrier to the highest ranks. That remains to be done."

TLS p1360 O 29 '71 430w

LEWIS, ALFRED ALLAN. Miss Elizabeth Arden [by] Alfred Allan Lewis [and] constance Woodworth. 320p il $7.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

B or 92 Arden, Elizabeth
SBN 698-10479-X LC 72-86464

This is the biography of the woman who created a multimillion dollar cosmetic business. Miss Arden died in 1966.

"For readers who enjoy a rags-to-riches story, may I heartily recommend 'Miss Elizabeth Arden'? . . . The portrait drawn by the authors is not a flattering one. . . . [but the book] is very interesting reading." P. J. Earl
Best Sell 32:411 D 1 '72 500w

"The authors are too concerned with irrelevant detail . . . and their style, particularly in the first part of the book, is often tough-cute. . . . When not tough, the style tends to drift into the slush of 'women's fiction,' a manner of writing intended, it seems, for wives who are too bored to play with anything but their own sentiments. The juiciest and most successful aspect of 'Miss Elizabeth Arden' is its gossip. . . . But the personality of Arden is tedious. She was an obsessed careerist . . . the epitome of what a male American was once supposed to be: dynamic, driven, authoritative, successful, rich, powerful, social climbing and a good provider. She was also self-centered, tyrannical, landl snobbish. . . . The interest in Elizabeth Arden is not in her personality but in her industry." Kathrin Perutz

N Y Times Bk R p[44] O 22 '72 1200w

"[This biography] seems as long as a telephone book . . . and it's padded with silly episodes and sillier sayings. . . . The coauthors of this cosmetic tale are Alfred Lewis and Constance Woodworth. He, Mr. Lewis, ghosted [a] Pola Negri autobiography and coauthored books on needlepoint and collage. Constance Woodworth owns a public relations firm. Add to this the success last year of Madame [BRD 1971] Patrick O'Higgins's charming biography of Helena Rubinstein, and you begin to sense the raison d'être of the Arden saga. Unfortunately, comparison is inevitable, and Helena Rubinstein, with her zany ways and delightful accent . . . is more fun to read about." Mary McLaughlin
Sat R 55:36 N 4 '72 1000w

LEWIS, BETH IRWIN. George Grosz; art and politics in the Weimar republic. 328p il $12.50 Univ. of Wis. press
741 Grosz, George
ISBN 0-299-05901-4 LC 79-143764

This volume describes the work of the German artist, "his statements on the function of art, [and] his political involvements in Berlin of the 1920s. The ideological motivations of Grosz's work are here examined . . . in an effort to define further the relationship between art and politics." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Peter Paret
Am Hist R 77:1472 D '72 240w

Reviewed by Richard Hanser
Book World p15 D 12 '71 1050w

"This important book places the famous satirical German artist . . . in the political context of his country. Marvelously documented, it traces his political and social affiliations year by year. Grosz's art was inspired by more than pacifism or humanism—he was a member of the German Communist party. His left-wing affiliations gave his art a propagandistic and political dimension which added insight yet removed something precious. . . . The check list of his work rounds out this valuable contribution. Recommended." Peter Fingesten
Library J 96:2624 S 1 '71 120w

"[Lewis's book] is more a work of political and cultural history than of art history as such, and is all the better for it. . . . The dialectic of idealism and nausea, that is so apparent in Grosz's art is placed, in Mrs. Lewis's monograph, in a political context that illuminates not only a specific body of work but Weimar culture in general. This is one of the best historical studies of art and politics I have read." Hilton Kramer
N Y Times Bk R p74 D 5 '71 100w

LEWIS, C. S. Narrative poems; ed. by Walter Hooper. 178p $5.95 Harcourt 821
ISBN 0-15-164234-6 LC 71-153688

"The introduction by Walter Hooper traces Lewis' early career as a largely unpublished poet. This volume contains the four surviving verse narratives. 'Dymer' [BRD 1927] . . . consists of 295 rime royal stanzas telling of a Romantic rebel who is abruptly killed. 'Launcelot' (written in the early 1930's) is incomplete. . . . It consists of 148 Alexandrine couplets, telling of the knight's start on the quest for the Holy Grail. 'The nameless isle' . . . narrates a voyage to the island of a nature goddess and other marvels, in 740 alliterative lines. 'The Queen of Drum' (written c. 1933-34) has 1,363 lines in varied meters and forms, often couplets; it concludes with the Queen escaping to faeryland." (Choice)

"The poems clearly indicate Lewis' tradition, which runs back through George MacDonald's fantasies and the fairytales of German romanticism. Of cultural interest, although not of modern vitality. . . . Well edited." Choice 9:215 Ap '72 160w

"Of the four narrative poems he wrote, Mr. Lewis published only one. His 'Launcelot,' interestingly, seems to have survived solely because it was written in a notebook containing Renaissance lecture materials. The world Lewis depicts is an excellent corrective to the dry, wasteland world of modernism." Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 30 '72 400w

"[The] poems which comprise this collection reveal the romantic longing that Lewis says in the preface haunted him from the age of six. . . . The postures in the poems sometimes seem melodramatic, and the verse is occasionally forced rhythmically and artificially rhymed. But elsewhere one is charmed by rhetorical felicities and by gallant airs; and Lewis' values are difficult to fault. All in all the volume, uneven as art and too often substituting sentiment for passion, is nonetheless a worthy addition to the distinguished work of this writer." W. A. McBrien
Library J 97:1721 My 1 '72 120w

LEWIS, CLAUDIA. Indian families of the northwest coast; the impact of change. 224p $3.75 Univ. of Chicago press
970.3 Salish Indians—Social life and customs. Salish Indians—Social change
ISBN 0-226-47686-5 LC 70-108776

"A community of Salish Indians living on the east coast of Vancouver Island is the subject of this work. Lewis studied the community in 1954 and 1957, and revisited briefly in 1968. She presents a historical survey of the Salish and includes case studies of three households: one which follows the old Indian ways, one which follows the new white-influenced ways, one in conflict between old and new." (Library J)

"The Canadian ideology of cultural mosaic is now being strongly emphasized. Provincial governments are changing attitudes towards acceptance of responsibilities for their Indian citizens. If these trends and new policies continue, there appear to be some prospects for . . . dependency upon relief, and feelings of hostility towards White men who brought injustice and a bureaucracy to become converted into better standards of living and achievement. Some years hence an investigator may find that Lewis' book may serve as an excellent baseline for gauging how well the Coast Salish in this area have made a better synthesis between their cultural past and modern life." Forrest Laviolette
Am Anthropol 74:82 F/Ap '72 550w

"The Camas Indians of Vancouver Island have been subject to the forces of cultural change for more than a century and a half. . . . Lewis provides an overview of the aboriginal culture and an insightful review of events to 1954. . . . Throughout, family and community life are emphasized. Church and school are given full treatment. . . . Lewis concludes, 'For the Camas pride is the hub; around it all revolves.'" Choice 7:1445 D '70 160w

"Lewis is a perceptive, sympathetic observer. Her book is scholarly yet easy to read, and a valuable contribution to literature on minorities." S. A. Haffner
Library J 95:4190 D 1 '70 130w

LEWIS, GWYNNE. Life in revolutionary France. 192p il $5 Putnam 914.4 France—History—Revolution, 1789-1799
ISBN 7134-1556-8 LC 72-177467

"After a brief, introductory account of the French Revolution, the author discusses its effects on the lives of the nobility, the clergy, the bourgeoisie and the peasantry." (Library J) Glossary. Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"A detailed, informative analysis of the social life of the Revolutionary and Napoleonic era. . . . Although Lewis' style is somewhat formal, he provides excellent insights into French history during these 25 years and effectively conveys the concerns of the officer, artisan and artist in a period that wavered between popular violence and government repression. Many black-and-white reproductions complement the text, and the author includes a helpful glossary [and] chronological guide. . . . Grade seven and up." Ronna Dishnick

LEWIS, GWYNNE—Continued

Library J 97:2962 S 15 '72 130w [YA]

"[Lewis] has produced a comprehensive social history of the years between 1789 and 1815. . . . With a brief reference here and an allusion or a telling quotation there, Dr. Lewis takes in all the major issues and his subject is nothing less than the whole of French society. . . . He handles the problems of condensation so skillfully that only in the last chapter is the reader liable to feel that he is being presented with a catalogue rather than a synthesis. The style is easy and relaxed."

TLS p214 F 25 '72 600w

LEWIS, HILDA. I am Mary Tudor. 422p $6.95 McKay

LC 70-185132

The author "traces the life of Mary Tudor, daughter of King Henry VIII and his queen, Catherine of Aragon, from her birth in 1516 to her accession. Mary was at first favored and treated royally but, by the age of nine, she began to suffer the disfavor of her father. Henry's great desire for a male heir, plus his later passion for Anne Boleyn, made him take the matters of marriage and religion into his own hands. Through Mary's eyes, readers watch Henry declare himself head of the Church of England; declare Mary a bastard; and marry, one after the other, five unlucky women. With her half-sister, Elizabeth, and half-brother, Edward, Mary waited upon the father she both loved and hated until she finally ascended the throne." (Library J) Bibliography.

"This account of the life of Mary Tudor . . . is presented very skillfully in the form of an autobiography, with the story being related by Mary Tudor herself, relying on others at times for events she could not have witnessed. . . . When you finish reading this superb account of Mary Tudor's life to 1553, you will probably hope that Hilda Lewis will later give us an account of Mary Tudor's reign as queen." Paul Kinski

Best Sell 32:40 Ap 15 '72 900w

Choice 9:815 S '72 170w

"If this novel is meant as a vindication of 'Bloody Mary'—'A merciful Queen; my greatest glory to be known now and hereafter'—it misses the mark. . . . As fiction it seems unfulfilled, lacking some needed spark; as history, unconvincing, the source list top-heavy with 19th-Century books. Still, it is thought provoking and captures superbly the Catholic viewpoint of the period; and if it makes no new Tudor buffs, it will interest the old ones." Phyllis Karr

Library J 97:1740 My 1 '72 180w

"A realistic and well-written account of what it was like to live subjected to the extreme moods and absolute authority of England's great King Henry." Virginia Carpio

Library J 97:2246 Je 15 '72 200w [YA]

LEWIS, JERRY. The total film-maker. 208p pl $6.95 Random house

791.43 Moving pictures—Production and direction

ISBN 0-394-46757-4 LC 79-102324

The author describes the total film maker as one who is writer, producer, director and actor. He writes here about "putting films together; the producer's job, writing a script, dealing with actors, the stage crew, preparing for the day's shooting, [and] actual filming. [He] also takes the reader into the cutting room [and] shows how to create and fit music to the sound track." (Publisher's note)

"The book, which is a transcription of lectures given at [the University of Southern California] is so tough, so smart, so arrogant, that it is almost unbearable. However, somewhere around the middle, Lewis starts to talk about the pragmatic realities and details of film production, and the book becomes fairly interesting despite all the glib overstatement. For a library concerned with the often neglected genre of American comedy this little book would be a very useful addition. . . . Otherwise, the money would best be spent elsewhere."

Choice 8:1464 Ja '72 140w

"In this overpriced, ultrashort volume, Lewis offers a rather disorganized sampling of his opinions and philosophy as they relate to film making, screen comedy, his own experiences as a director, and the great film comedians of the past. . . . Unfortunately, the book is mostly dull, self-aggrandizing, and poorly written." J. W. Palmer

Library J 96:2537 Ag '71 120w

LEWIS, JOHN WILSON, ed. The city in Communist China. (Studies in Chinese soc) 3v v 1 449p $12.95 Stanford univ. press

309.151 Cities and towns—China (People's Republic of China)
ISBN 0-8047-0743-0 LC 78-130828

"Most of the papers in the present volume were originally presented at a conference held [in 1968] under the joint auspices of the Social Science Research Council and the American Council of Learned Societies. Both historical and contemporary materials are used to trace the evolution of Chinese Communist policies and their consequences for China's hundred million city dwellers. The papers are grouped around the following themes: law and order, leadership and bureaucracy, modernization, and urban breakdown. Among the specific topics covered are policing, the evolution of the Chinese Communist legal system, manpower policies, the educational system, and the impact of the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution on the city." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The excellent introductory chapter by Lewis attempts to tie together the wide-ranging themes covered. It is a pity that this volume confines itself almost entirely to the political, legal, and sociological aspects of the city and that there is no examination of the way in which the physical structure of cities has evolved, nor is any attention paid to the planning principles that the Communists have applied to the location of new cities. . . . Despite these criticisms, however, the book is a valuable addition to our knowledge of contemporary China and is an essential acquisition for any college library."

Choice 8:1357 D '71 190w

"This is the first of three volumes on Chinese cities as seen by historians and social scientists. . . . Shanghai, Tangshan (in Hopei), and Hui-Yang (in Kwantung) are the major cities under study. The essays are of uneven quality; . . . the best is the one on education and youth. Most others, though interesting, gave this reader a sense of frustration. Without hard data and specifics, the authors' generalizations are . . . not as satisfying as they could be. But as a collection of theoretical treatises on the modernization processes of Communist China, this volume should be of interest to scholars in the field." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 96:1628 My 1 '71 210w

LEWIS, NAOMI, ed. A peculiar music. See Brontë, E.

LEWIS, NORMAN. Flight from a dark equator. 256p $6.95 Putnam

ISBN 399-11012-7 LC 72-83332

"In Los Remedios, a province of Colombia, plans are afoot for a coup d'état which will install the Governor, General Lopez, as President. With the connivance of the CIA, Lopez is imprisoning or murdering the student and liberal opposition in order to discourage sympathy for the rural and urban guerrillas. . . . Robert Howel is sent to Los Remedios on behalf of an international aid organization, SUCCOUR. His principal task is to investigate the conditions of the indigenous Indians, though part of his brief is to take back with him a fieldworker, Liz Sayers, who has ignored instructions to return home." (TLS)

"Although some of Mr. Lewis's novels have received good reviews in England, his work in this instance is definitely off form. . . . There is a jerky, stop-and-go, abrupt shifting movement which lays bare the clumsy narrative skeleton and conveys the impression that not enough time and care was spent in the composition. . . . One comes to feel that the author really doesn't know these characters very well. It's as if he has been a tourist in South America, visited the usual places, watched the usual festivals, and combined these with some material gathered from popular journalism, Guevara's diaries, and a far-fetched imagination." P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 32:298 O 1 '72 350w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3619 N 1 '72 90w

Reviewed by Douglas Dunn

New Statesman 84:364 Mr 17 '72 250w

"[The novel is a] beautifully-staged safari into the nature of evil in faraway places. . . . Liz Sayers, an English girl . . . is involved with a student guerrilla. Graill Williams, an American missionary, is helping convert the Indians from nomads into peons. And the pragmatic, heartless C.I.A. is up to its old tricks. Robert Howel, International Red Cross troubleshooter, sees all this and a bit more through the author's perceptive and jaded eyes. The characters are drawn in colors more primary than their background—but Mr. Lewis's unusual sense of place helps camouflage some stereotypes." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 O 8 '72 190w

"Norman Lewis's new novel is as topical as his political journalism, and in places the tone is no less urgent. . . . Despite the neatly mixed ingredients—intrigue, violence, a love affair between Howel and Liz—Mr Lewis is never guilty of making the country and its people a mere backdrop for his principal characters. His concern for Latin America, and his knowledge of the area, is always in evidence, and without seeming to embark on a political diatribe he manages to make his own opinions felt and understood. . . . [He presents] a convincing, if depressing, picture of overt and clandestine oppression."

TLS p385 Ap 7 '72 400w

LEWIS, RICHARD, ed. I breathe a new song; poems of the Eskimo; il. by Oonark; with an introd. by Edmund Carpenter. 128p $5.95; lib bdg $5.70 Simon & Schuster

897 Eskimo poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature

SBN 671-65170-6 LC 75-144787

In Eskimo "to make poetry" is the same word as "to breathe." The ninety translated poems collected here from nine Eskimo groups include "chants, lullabies, taunts, and poems about hunting, love, death, joy and fear. A few of the poems are modern, but most were recorded before the mid-1950's. [Bibliography.] Grade seven and up." (Library J)

"An altogether delightful collection. . . . Labeled a juvenile, it is actually a book for all ages, with illustrations by Jessie Oonark, Eskimo mother of eight, admirably complementing the poems. An introduction by Edmund Carpenter, anthropologist and film-maker, succinctly sets the stage. . . . Most of the poems in this collection are short. They reflect a variety of moods, more gay than otherwise. There is often an ironic or puckish sense of humor, and a certain urbanity and grace to the turn of phrase. The desolate landscape comes alive, no terror to those who are in their own eyes a part of the nature they celebrate." Chad Walsh

Book World p11 Ap 2 '72 550w

Horn Bk 48:164 Ap '72 60w

"[These pieces] all reflect the simplicity and freshness of the title poem. . . . A lucid, detailed, appreciative introduction explains the importance of poetry in Eskimo culture and elaborates on its traditional forms. Charming drawings by an Eskimo artist provide most appropriate illustrations for the attractively designed, oblong book. Though the entire collection is most suitable for readers of junior high school age and over, teachers may find individual selections well suited for presentation to much younger children, so Mr. Lewis' latest excellent effort is a worthwhile addition to any poetry collection." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 96:3910 N 5 '71 150w

LEWIS, RICHARD S. The nuclear-power rebellion; citizens vs. the atomic industrial establishment. 313p $8.95 Viking

621.48 Atomic energy. U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. Atomic power plants. Radioactivity
SBN 670-51823-9 LC 72-79005

This "account of the nuclear-power controversy reveals the roots of the first nationwide protest in the United States against a new technology. . . . Lewis exposes [The Atomic Energy Commission's] conflict-of-interest role as both promoter and regulator of atomic energy in its alliance with industry and privately owned utilities. . . . The author relates how the AEC sought unsuccessfully to silence the scientist critics of its policies; how it ignored the National Environmental Protection Act until environmentalists won a court decision requiring it to obey the law; and how a spontaneous citizens' movement in state after state finally forced the AEC to reduce allowable radioactive and thermal pollution of the air and water by the nuclear-power industry." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Who is to decide what level of radiation emissions is an acceptable risk in exchange for the benefits of nuclear power? Is it possible for a governmental agency to both promote and regulate? What are the consequences of close ties between government and private industry? In this well-written book Lewis addresses these issues as well as other important aspects of nuclear power development. Bibliographical footnotes are included. Most libraries will want this purchase." Topsy Smalley

Library J 97:3135 O 1 '72 250w

"[The author presents] compelling evidence that the A.E.C. has become a self-serving bureaucracy guilty of violating a public trust and . . . [argues] convincingly that ordinary citizens can and must help shape technological decisions that affect their lives. . . . [Lewis] relentlessly pours out the chilling details of a world in which scientists speak of 'statistical death' and Nobel laureates quarrel about cancer risks. . . . What is common throughout is not merely that the A.E.C. made mistakes; but rather that it tried to cover them up." S. B. Shepard

N Y Times Bk R p50 O 29 '72 420w

LEWIS, SAMELLA S. Black artists on art, v2 [by] Samella S. Lewis and Ruth G. Waddy. 140p il col il $12.50; pa $1.95 Contemporary crafts

709.73 Negro artists. Negro art
LC 76-17788

"Photographs of black artists of varying artistic and life experiences and their personal definitions of black art today are arranged with plates of their work on the same or facing pages of the book. . . . Some artists have let the works speak totally for themselves; some discuss the universal elements of black art while others emphasize its uniqueness." (Choice)

"[The book's] format puts the reader into immediate contact with the artists' messages in both verbal and visual forms. . . . The editors are unbiased in their selections. No one direction of thought or style is favored. Each artist is included on the basis of artistic merit alone. Expressionism, social realism, and abstract forms work together in the book to create a complete picture of the total life cycle. The black message is not lost in this transcendent effect of the whole over the parts. Instead, the individuality of the black experience is highlighted by the broad range of expressions selected and the way they are intermingled throughout the book design. The result is a totally satisfying experience of black art."

Choice 9:797 S '72 190w

"Lewis and Waddy add 73 names to the 74 black artists in Volume I. . . . The editors and many of the artists represented are concerned with the concept of cultural identity and cultural nationalism. . . . The geographical coverage has been expanded to include the South, Midwest, and West Indies. The reproductions are improved over Volume I. Both books are recommended to fill the longstanding need for information about black artists in America. There is very little overlap in artists covered and none in content." P. C. Black

Library J 97:1308 Ap 1 '72 260w

LEWIS, STEPHEN R. Pakistan; industrialization and trade policies [by] Stephen R. Lewis, Jr.; pub. for the Development centre of the organisation for economic co-operation and development. 214p $9; pa $4 Oxford 338.9549 Pakistan—Industries. Industry and state—Pakistan. Pakistan—Commercial policy
SBN 19-215328-5; 19-215333-1 (pa)
LC 79-17877

In this "study of industrial development of Pakistan, . . . major structural changes in the

LEWIS, S. R.—Continued

Pakistani economy since 1947 are described." (Choice)

Reviewed by R. C. Porter

Ann Am Acad 396:130 J1 '71 400w

"The techniques and policies aimed at a faster rate of industrial development (viz. import quotas, tariffs, taxes, and controls) and their effects on the pattern of important substitution, exports, overall efficiency, and regional development have been examined. The volume is a valuable addition to a rather limited literature on economic development in Pakistan. The conclusions drawn are also valid for other underdeveloped countries, especially those in South Asia. Indispensable for students interested in economic development of Pakistan and other developing countries." Choice 7:1708 F '71 120w

LEWIS, VAUGHAN A., jt. auth. Models of political systems. See Davies, M. R.

LEWIS, WILLIAM C., ed. Declaration of conscience. See Smith, M. C.

LEXAU, JOAN M. Emily and the klunky baby and the next-door dog; pictures by Martha Alexander. unp $4.95; lib bdg $4.58 Dial press LC 77-181789

"Emily and the klunky baby live with Mama in her house; Daddy has an apartment by himself. When Emily's tribulations peak on a snowy morning (Mama is preoccupied with her taxes), she decides to run away and live with Daddy. With the baby and the next-door dog (who invited himself) on the sled, she trudges along, careful not to cross the street, turning corners until she thinks she is lost; but then she comes to a house that looks like Mama's. And there is Mama—waving!" (Horn Bk) "Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"Joan Lexau has captured the lonely puzzled, angry feelings of a little girl in crisis. . . . This book may be almost too real in its treatment of a whole family's frustration. The mother looks absolutely frazzled and the house seems cold, as if the heat had been turned back." Deborah Komaiko

Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 4 '72 120w

"A warm and reassuring story of love and security surrounding a small child in a broken home. . . . The illustrations are as realistic and successful as the text in showing the activities and responses of a very substantial, contemporary little girl. Colors are vivid, but soft, and stand out with clarity against the soft grays and whites of the snowy background." B. R.

Horn Bk 48:461 O '72 150w

"Lexau has . . . written a true-to-life story which will appeal to children. . . . [They] will readily identify with the naturally handled family situation and with the accompanying emotions of rage, resentment, repentance, understanding and love. Martha Alexander's gentle watercolor wash pictures complement the mood of the story, which is especially suited to reading aloud." Cherie Zarookian

Library J 97:2938 S 15 '72 170w

Reviewed by Lael Scott

N Y Times Bk ■ p8 S 3 '72 120w

L'HEUREUX, JOHN. The clang birds; a novel. 218p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

LC 72-77652

"Five priests, members of an obscure order, decide to leave the seminary and set up a radical commune in a two-family house. (The other half of the premises is occupied by a Boston policeman, wife, mother-in-law and two depraved sons.)" (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:130 N '72 90w

"A clever satire of with-it priests and nuns. . . . Showing the exaggerated buffoonery of disident religious who are long on 'commitment' to 'relevance' and short on brains, to be truly affecting, requires more novelty and depth than L'Heureux brings to the task. Surely his rare birds are fair game in their new civvies and bumbling bed-hopping, but L'Heureux's report is generally too easy a shot. . . . The final bang with its attendant ironies is a perversely satisfying ending to the protest community and to the novel itself. L'Heureux seems closer to the whole thing than he often realizes and thus his tone vacillates between the deadpan curiosity of a supposedly objective satirist and the smirk of a polemicist bothered by the vapidness of his benighted subjects." R. J. Thompson

Best Sell 32:334 O 15 '72 550w

"One who reads [the book] as a roman à clef, decoding in the direction of Berrigans and Sister Elizabeths, would be responding to a clear invitation. The book's message then is that those priests and nuns whose trials and tribulations you have been reading of are finally a group of horny luses whose private frustrations have been transposed into a public key. But L'Heureux waffles on this and destroys the book's satirical potential. The main reason that the book lacks a single attitude toward its characters, however unjust and however unestablished within the narrative, is that John L'Heureux himself intrudes upon the story. . . . It is difficult to avoid the realization that L'Heureux is the protagonist [Reginald] of this novel." Ralph McInerney

Commonweal 97:184 N 24 '72 550w

"This is a searing picture of damnation, but it remains more vivid than deep, for in spite of an expanded bag of novelistic tricks and an ever more sardonic humor, this is a weaker novel than the author's Tight White Collar [BRD 1972]. Depth is diminished by facility, by sheer artful diversion; we move from surprise to surprise, oddity to oddity, character-skimming in a manner more suitable to the cinema than to the novel." A. G. Mojtabai

Library J 97:2646 Ag '72 180w

"[This] is a bitterly funny once-over of relevancy and religion. After a year of protest, the score is relevancy 2; religion 3, two priests having left the church. On the other hand, a non-Catholic is taking instruction, mainly because of an affair she has had with a straying member of the commune. Mr. L'Heureux's way with his characters is at once splenetic and sympathetic, if you can imagine such a parlay. . . . In the end, the communards and a couple of liberated nuns are left wrestling with their consciences—and, occasionally, with one another—in a dazzling juxtaposition of ironies." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 O ■ '72 240w

L'HEUREUX, JOHN. No place for hiding; new poems. 60p $4.50; pa $1.95 Doubleday

811
LC 75-131090

This collection of poems "is about wars of the flesh and the spirit; wars of the heart and mind. . . . L'Heureux is a . . . contributing editor of Atlantic Monthly. He is the author of three other books of poetry . . . as well as Picnic in Babylon [BRD 1967], a diary of his years as a seminarian." (Publisher's note) Some of these poems have appeared in such periodicals as The Beloit Poetry Journal and New Orleans Review.

"There are some taut yet delicate lyrics in this little book—pieces like 'The Reply' that stand up in splendid control of thought and word; and there are enough of them to give the slim volume considerable distinction. L'Heureux does, however, seem to attribute an unwarranted amount of importance to the slightest things, as though he thought they were exceptional when they were not: his drinking of Scotch, for instance; his awakening, at the age of thirty, to the reality of sex; the juxtaposition of the sacred and the profane. Some of the forms are mannered, some of the words lack the freshness necessary to convey experience, but the best poems are very good indeed."

Best Sell 31:58 My 1 '71 120w

Reviewed by Chad Walsh

Book World p9 F 20 '72 220w

"I didn't care for John L'Heureux's fourth book of poems, No Place For Hiding. The thing that irked me most about [it] is its complacency—there is a satisfied air about it, but no authority. . . . What we get here is self-dramatization, which [the author] tries to deflate into knowledge by means of a sort of sophisticated patter. The effect is one of smugness. . . . To make matters worse, . . . in his more controlled efforts he comes across as something of a poseur; his attempts to relax are downright embarrassing." John Koethe

Poetry 120:57 Ap '72 390w

L'HEUREUX, JOHN. Tight white collar; a novel. 180p $5.95 Doubleday
LC 72-171303

This novel concerns Ransom, "a Jesuit priest whose spiritual distance from the world is a thin cover for rejection of his family. Just ordained, he is called home to preside at a wake. Once there, the constriction of his clerical collar becomes a strangle hold. On the train back, Ransom is restored to his vocation for some years more by a vision 'compounded of exhaustion, anxiety, and a profound unwillingness to admit defeat.'" (Library J)

"I am constrained to write a less-than-kind review of this first novel which I very much wanted to like and resolved at the start to treat kindly. . . . For me the story itself fails in interest and in what Henry James demanded in fiction: intensity. . . . The novel has parts but no convincing whole. This truth is, sadly, underscored by stylistic defects. . . . I can forgive Ransom's selfishness, his egoism, his lack of charity, his whole unsavory self in a way that L'Heureux seemingly cannot. What I cannot forgive . . . is L'Heureux's thinking that he had here a novel . . . or even a palatable subject for one." Doris Grumbach
America 126:619 Je 10 '72 700w

Reviewed by Cornelia Holbert
Best Sell 32:40 Ap 15 '72 600w

Reviewed by Ralph McInerny
Commonweal 97:184 N 24 '72 550w

"A fine, incisive portrait of a man who tries to will sanctity, who cannot give himself to Christ because he cannot give himself to anyone." A. G. Mojtabal
Library J 97:900 Mr 1 '72 70w

"Poet John L'Heureux is writing close to the bone here. The irony is heavy, the priest's revulsions are deeply felt. The book is a moving vision of the torments of spiritual solitude."

New Repub 166:29 Ap 15 '72 230w

"The author skillfully homogenizes bits and pieces of the priest's memory with the external actions that trigger their recall. In this detached interlude, Ransom begins to believe that he was driven to the priesthood by negative motives: his hatred for a Harvard Beelzebub who tried to destroy his faith, an insufficiency of parental love. The Jesuit's uneasy truce with his doubts is finally shaped into a subtle composition of shadows and substance." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 Ap 9 '72 130w

Reviewed by J. W. Hughes
Sat R 55:84 My 13 '72 700w

LI, DUN J. The ageless Chinese; a history. 2d ed 591p 11 maps $10 Scribner 951 China—History
SBN 684-12541-2 LC 73-159451

In this second edition, the author "tells the story of China from the beginnings to the present . . . [discusses] traditional Chinese society and . . . the Western impact in the modern period . . . [and explains] national customs, thought, and language . . . [as aids to a] comprehension of China's political and economic life." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Chronology. Index.

"[The author] has made several significant improvements and additions to the first edition. He has rewritten the chapters on the Chin and Han and Sung and T'ang dynasties, and he has also expanded his chapter, 'The People's Republic,' to include events transpiring since the first edition [BRD 1965]. . . . With these changes, Li's volume has become a fine book . . . for a once-over-lightly introductory course in Chinese history."

Choice 8:1630 F '72 110w

Library J 97:61 Ja 1 '72 20w

LI, YUK-SA, ed. Juche! See Kim, I. S.

LIANG, HSI-HUEY. The Berlin police force in the Weimar Republic. 252p pl maps $8.95 Univ. of Calif. press

363.2 Berlin—Police. Germany—Politics and government—1918-1933
SBN 520-01603-3 LC 74-85452

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by R. F. Bunn
Am Pol Sci R 65:1218 D '71 600w

Reviewed by Bernard Dolnick
Contemp Sociol 1:347 Jl '72 1000w

Reviewed by Robin Lenman
Engl Hist R 87:452 Ap '72 250w

LIBBY, BILL. Confessions of a basketball gypsy. See Barry, R.

LIBMAN, LILLIAN. And music at the close; Stravinsky's last years; a personal memoir. 400p pl $9.95 Norton

B or 92 Stravinsky, Igor Fedorovich
ISBN 0-393-02113-0 LC 72-4499

This is an "account of Stravinsky's last 12 years by his personal representative, who was often companion, secretary, valet, and chauffeur as well." (Library J) Index of works. Index of names and places.

Reviewed by C. J. McNaspy
America 127:346 O 28 '72 150w

Reviewed by Robert Evett
Atlantic 231:91 Ja '73 400w

Reviewed by Sister Gregory Duffy
Best Sell 32:323 O 15 '72 490w

"Miss Libman's book is a warm, constantly readable book, written with restraint and humor, without stylistic pretense, and sufficiently documented to assure the ring of truth. [It] is a record of the complicated mechanics required to keep Stravinsky (and Craft) before the public, and the incredible ramifications it entailed. Arranging tours to exotic places, recording contracts, plans and cancellations (as in later years the composer became less able to fill commitments), and finally, as a crushing climax to his last illness, transatlantic planning for the internationally observed funeral in Venice, in the spring of 1971, were among her responsibilities. Miss Libman's experience in the music world, as well as her natural empathy—particularly with the composer himself—come shining through." Louis Snyder

Christian Science Monitor p9 S 27 '72 600w

"Of Miss Libman's book, Madame Stravinsky has let it be known that it is anathema. . . . [But the author] has set down a warm and totally unbitchy account of the Stravinsky circle, despite his widow's vetoing of quotations from the composer's correspondence. But she does show some of the warts, in any case fairly familiar: his love of money, his calculation of tax deductions, his belief in the restorative power of Scotch whisky."

Economist 215[book survey p24] N 11 '72 120w

"More straightforward than Paul Horgan's or Robert Craft's recent memoirs Encounters with Stravinsky: a Personal Record, and Stravinsky: the Chronicle of a Friendship, respectively, [both BRD 1972], it presents a mellower, more subdued portrait of the composer than either. . . . Useful not only as a prime source on Stravinsky, but as a document of an old man struggling to maintain his dignity. Recommended for medium and large libraries." Hillel Ausubel

Library J 97:2844 S 15 '72 160w

Reviewed by David Murray
New Statesman 84:645 N 3 '72 120w

"From her position as 'executive bystander,' Miss Libman saw a lot. She saw it clearly, and she has described it compellingly. Much of what she saw was very different from what [Robert] Craft had seen, and it wants to be said that the relation of the two portraits is 'both' as often as it is 'either/or.' . . . Miss Libman does get into the question of the Stravinsky-Craft literary collaborations. . . . The Craft issue is crucial because Stravinsky will continue to be quoted on many subjects; and it is worth having some sense of distinction between what he actually said, and what he thought and was then resaid for him, and what he perhaps never even thought. And so the book matters, not only because of its author's own picture of Stravinsky, but also because it is the first portrait of Craft (other than his own in the diaries, of course). It is one drawn with great human sympathy." Michael Steinberg

LIBMAN, LILLIAN—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p6 O 8 '72 1900w

LIBRARIES in the USSR; ed. by Simon Francis. 182p $7.50 Shoe String

021 Libraries—Russia

ISBN 0-208-01059-9

LC 70-26400

This is an account "of the development and status of librarianship in the Soviet Union (including public libraries, specialized, technical, and scholarly libraries, and the problems of Soviet library science)." (Choice)

"Translated collection of essays originally published in 1967 as a special edition of the Soviet Journal Biblioteki SSSR (Libraries of the USSR). . . . Of possible comparative interest to American librarians, but of little use to general readers. Recommended only for institutions with schools of library science. Footnotes; statistical tables."

Choice 8:1322 D '71 90w

"Today . . . the U.S.S.R. is blanketed with libraries of all kinds and types and the present book gives a good indication of this fact. . . . It is important that this book be published because, as Francis points out, it shows Soviet librarians as they see and estimate themselves. Unfortunately, it also points out the weakness of the Soviet people, including librarians; when a discussion of any topic concerning the U.S.S.R., including librarianship, is embarked upon, it usually means a dissertation and a bundle of facts. Little comparison with other countries is obvious in reading these essays, and this is the major weakness of the work. Still . . . it may help to bridge the gaps in language, distance, size and philosophy that too frequently exist between the Soviet Union and other countries." C. D. Kent

Library J 96:3580 N 1 '71 420w

"[This is] a valuable, long-overdue contribution to library literature. . . . From the translation standpoint, Libraries in the USSR is well done; that is, it is fairly accurate and informative, and no apologies are needed for the clumsy English of the text. . . . The largest chapter in the book is a detailed display of statistics delineating library development and growth since 1914. One cannot help being impressed by these figures for the fifty years of Soviet rule; they show a growth that is truly phenomenal and probably unmatched by any other civilized country." T. J. Whitby

Library Q 42:168 Ja '72 1050w

LICHTHEIM, GEORGE. Europe in the twentieth century. 409p il $12.95 Praeger

940.2 Europe—History—20th century

LC 70-187278

The author is concerned with "the transformation of inherited life styles under the impact of social and technological change." 1914, the age of imperialism: the social fabric, the decline of liberalism and the success of nationalism, the trend away from metaphysical idealism towards a new view of the world, dominated by positivism, phenomenology and psychoanalysis. . . . The second part considers war and revolution from 1914 to 1919, and Europe during the interwar period, with special emphasis on the crisis of liberal democracy, the contrast of 'old elites and new ideologies'.

The third part gives an outline of the Second World War and the Cold War, followed by a discussion of social trends [and] the threat posed by an ever more powerful technocracy." (TLS) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Lichtheim, an eminent historian, has attempted to 'bring into view the totality of European civilization.' This is . . . an interpretive history of ideas, a dazzling intellectual fireworks display. Freud and Weber, Wittgenstein and Joyce are as germane to the discussion as Churchill or Hitler. Lichtheim does presuppose a basic knowledge on the reader's part; but for those who aren't blinded by his insights [the book] will provide a sharper, more realistically focused portrait of the past seven decades." M. R. Yerburch

Library J 97:3311 O 15 '72 150w

"The great failure of Lichtheim's historiography is his failure sympathetically to understand the past. For Lichtheim the central problem of historiography is explanation rather than understanding. He believes the past must be rationalized, that everything must be explained in terms of causal connection. That, however, is a manifest impossibility, even, or perhaps especially, for a Marxist. . . . [Lichtheim] can and does teach us in this book how a confused leftist sage can continue to genuflect before the 'necessities' of history." S. J. Tonsor

Nat R 25:37 Ja 5 '73 2350w

"[A] well-illustrated survey of Europe. . . . Throughout the book philosophical ideas and scientific trends are set against the background of major political, military and economic developments. These are briefly but neatly considered with the help of relevant secondary works. . . . There are sections on natural and social science, on art and literature, on philosophy and theology. . . . [However] there is a curious lack of balance. One looks in vain for a discussion of important social phenomena other than those based on class-conflict and the progress of science and technology. . . . There is no discussion of the trends in art and literature after 1945."

TLS p991 Ag 25 '72 1000w

LICHTHEIM, GEORGE. From Marx to Hegel. 248p $7.95 Herder & Herder

335.4 Dialectical materialism, Marx, Karl. Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich

LC 70-167871

These essays "have for their common theme the philosophy of history, and more especially the Hegelian-Marxist tradition. They go back to the Hegelian sources of Marx's thought, and at the same time seek to clarify some of the issues brought to the fore by the European cultural crisis which accompanied the two world wars of the present century." (Publisher's note) Index.

"With this collection of essays which were originally written during the 1960's, Lichtheim continues to advance his status as one of the outstanding critical interpretive essayists of our time in the field of European, Marx-related social philosophy and social theory. As always, Lichtheim comprehends the theoretical standpoint with which he deals in the context of an erudite understanding of the social, historical, and biographical frame. . . . His discussion is clear, informative, and enlightening. Since most of the original works discussed are only beginning to become available to English readers in translation, these essays should serve a double function for Americans—a clear, if polemical, introduction to the subject matter and a sophisticated and knowledgeable commentary." L. S. Kaplan

Library J 97:684 F 15 '72 160w

"[This book is] a random collection of pieces from various journals, notably uneven in both depth and quality. Solid, scholarly chapters on the Hegelian tradition, dialectical methodology and Georges Sorel are interspersed with pieces whose surface-texture seems equally dense, but which turn out in the end to be rather lightweight review articles. This is particularly true of a chapter with the deceptively promising title of 'The Origins of Marxism'. . . . The subtleties of neo-Hegelianism are never quite unpacked; the book hovers indecisively between theoretical critique and high-powered exposition. This weakness is most apparent in an essay entitled 'A New Twist in the Dialectic'."

Terry Eagleton

New Statesman 82:403 S 24 '71 500w

LIEBENOW, J. GUS. Colonial rule and political development in Tanzania: the case of the Makonde. 360p $11.50 Northwestern univ. press

320.967 Makonde (Bantu tribe). Tanzania—Politics and government

ISBN 0-8101-0332-X

LC 72-126898

The author "traces the historical development of the political as well as economic and social transformations of the Makonde and their responses to modernization. . . . While examining the successive rule of Arabs, Germans, and British, the author . . . presents the Makonde's reaction to various policies." (Choice) Bibliography.

Reviewed by P. H. Gulliver

Am Pol Sci R 66:653 Je '72 700w

"According to Liebenow, [the Makonde's] slow economic, social, and political modernization is due to . . . defensive, yet passive, adaptation to external rule, their geographic isolation, and a colonial heritage of administrative neglect and capriciousness. . . . Conducting his research on the Makonde over twelve years (1955-1967), Liebenow found independence altered little their relative lack of development compared with tribes of a similar size. . . . The book presents a clear and insightful portrait of the Makonde in the twentieth century. In other respects, however, it neglects areas that seem important to Liebenow's interest in 'micro-politics.' We are given little idea of . . . how 'modern' Makonde leaders perform and whether traditional and TANU political norms mesh or conflict." R. F. Hopkins

Ann Am Acad 401:160 My '72 600w

"The Makonde people who live in the remote southeastern corner of Tanzania are the focal point of this well written interdisciplinary study. . . . The chapters on the post-World War II period provide illuminating insights. . . . A most valuable addition to any library's Africana collection."

Choice 8:719 J1 '71 190w

LIEBER, JOEL. Two-way traffic. 324p $6.95 Doubleday

LC 76-171304

"Jesse Jacobi had built a successful life as a writer: well-received books, attractive wife, two children. Then it all began to crumble. His marriage collapsed. His writing lost its unity and direction. A decision, any decision became all but impossible. In the second year of my third decade, somebody else has come to live inside me, and I hate that visitor," he writes in one of the journals that make up this novel. Beginning with Jesse's collapse, the journals record his often indecisive struggle with that unwelcome visitor—through a suicide attempt and the subsequent search for new friends, new beliefs, and a new understanding of himself." (Publisher's note)

Choice 9:646 J1/Ag '72 190w

"It should be pointed out that there are striking similarities between the circumstances of The Bell Jar [by S. Plath BRD 1971] and Two-Way Traffic. The most significant is that both books were therapeutic in conception and design, yet both failed as therapy. . . . [This is] an emotional, sad, yet occasionally frustrating book, because one gets the feeling Lieber is allowing the reader to view his sores but barring him from offering a salve. The two-way traffic of the title is in Jesse's mind, which is tugging in two directions: one side of him wants to persevere and the other wants to quit." M. J. Bandler

Commonweal 96:269 My 19 '72 750w

"No matter how often it is described, bottom is still bottom, and for those who have been there, who can speak of it, as Jacobi, a survivor instead of a suicide, can, the tale is in the telling. . . . Death lives in the very framework of the book; sex is its trappings. When Lieber writes of the first, the excessive hyperbole of Move! [BRD 1968] is flattened to telling hardness; the rest is merely fashion and fashionable." Robert Buckeye

Library J 97:215 Ja 15 '72 160w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p52 F 27 '72 190w

"Arranged as a diary or notebook [this book] records the suicidal crisis of a writer whose life is an undisguised echo of Joel Lieber's own. Since Lieber committed suicide immediately after finishing this book, the autobiographical suggestion can become an overpowering distraction and no doubt Two-Way Traffic will arouse greater interest because of this extra dimension. . . . [Books of this sort] are apt to be compulsively honest, and Lieber's diary format, the ultimate confessional device, provides constant occasion for emotional nudism. . . . The prose, reduced to an essential grammar of motives, jumps tensely through dozens of encounters and perceptions. A skilled craftsman, Lieber can compress an hour with an analyst into three telling sentences and convey in a page the most agonizing confrontation with his estranged wife or the difficult emotions of a weekend spent with his two children on loan from her." Larry Duberstein

Sat R 55:68 Ja 22 '72 500w

LIEBER, ROBERT J. British politics and European unity; parties, elites, and pressure groups. 317p $9 Univ. of Calif. press

320.942 Lobbying. Great Britain—Politics and government—1945-. European Economic Community
ISBN 0-520-01675-0 LC 70-104104

This is an "account of how British parties and pressure groups acted on the issue of British participation in European unity. In addition, it provides a . . . theoretical framework for analyzing the influence of organized economic interests on governmental policy. . . . [Lieber first] deals with the formation of sectional, or economic, pressure group attitudes. . . . [He] then analyzes the subject from the standpoint of party government, involving the promotional groups, parties, press and public opinion." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, index.

"Dr. Lieber's analysis of the opinion-forming role of the British press . . . almost completely ignores the weeklies. . . . Television coverage . . . is not mentioned at all. . . . [Dr. Lieber's] main preoccupation—an examination of the attitudes of the Federation of British Industries (FBI), the Trades Union Congress (TUC) and the National Farmers' Union (NFU), to the European issue . . . [results in] some interesting and original conclusions about the role of pressure groups in the formation of foreign policy. . . . [The author's] clearly presented thesis oversimplifies the story, since he has concentrated on examining the relations between the pressure groups and the government, and has paid too little attention to the divisions within the pressure groups themselves. . . . [He has, however,] indicated many of the areas that need to be studied." D. J. Wenden

Am Pol Sci 65:1219 D '71 800w

"British attempts to establish a Free Trade Area linking the European countries inside and outside of the Common Market were spearheaded not by the political parties but by pressure groups. . . . The net result was the shaping of international policy by sectional organizations and not by party government. Only with the direct application for membership in the Common Market by Harold Macmillan in the early 1960's and by Harold Wilson a few years later did the issue take on a political character, thereby changing the role played by the pressure groups. Lieber studies the various stages of this development and contributes to the understanding of a very timely topic."

Choice 8:911 S '71 160w

LIEBERSON, STANLEY. Language and ethnic relations in Canada. 264p $10.95 Wiley

301.2 Language and languages. Ethnology—Canada
ISBN 0-471-53421-8 LC 72-115652

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Maurice Pinard

Am J Soc 77:623 N '71 1350w

Reviewed by M. A. Schwartz

Contemp Sociol 1:87 Ja '72 1150w

Reviewed by Philippe Garigue

Pol Sci Q 87:321 Je '72 500w

LIEBESCHUETZ, J. H. G. Antioch: city and imperial administration in the later Roman Empire. 303p $17 Oxford

937 Antioch—History. Libanius
ISBN 0-19-814295-1 LC 72-177640

This is an "account of Libanius and of the fourth-century Antioch in which he lived, a person of prominence and head of an eminent academy of Greek Rhetoric. . . . [Using Libanius's letters] orations and rhetorical exercises. . . . [the author of this book] writes about their contribution to the understanding of contemporary society." (TLS) Bibliography, index.

"While the work reveals a very fine knowledge of the ancient sources and most of the relevant secondary materials, it suffers from a rather brittle style. It will appeal primarily to scholars in the field of late ancient studies. The notes and index are quite useful, but the select bibliography is much too brief and omits some important works. The two maps are of very limited utility."

Choice 9:560 Je '72 100w

"[This book] has grown out of a thesis. Now a thesis is written with one eye on the examiners. . . . But when the subject is absorbing and the treatment as good and clear as it is in the present case it would be a thousand pities if the book was not read also, because it would certainly be enjoyed, by people whose interest is general, not specialist. . . . All that was needed was . . . a short introduction. . . . However, even without such an introduction, [the] book makes absorbing reading for non-specialists and specialists alike."

LIEBESCHUETZ, J. H. G.—Continued

TLS p376 Mr 31 '72 650w

LIEBMAN, ARTHUR. Latin American university students; a six nation study [by] Arthur Liebman, Kenneth N. Walker [and] Myron Glazer; with an introd. by Seymour Martin Lipset. 296p $11.50 Harvard univ. press

322.4 College students—Political activity. Colleges and universities—Latin America
ISBN 0-674-51275-8 LC 70-180152

"This sociological study concentrates on factors that go into the creation of a leftist-oriented student body. Evidence is drawn from six countries of varying political, economic, and social conditions: Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Puerto Rico, and Uruguay. The authors conclude that, although the students largely come from status-quo-prone upper- and middle-class groups, they become leftist oriented as a result of several factors. Since the governments control the universities, changes in government must precede changes in the school system. Furthermore, the monograph contends, the university's function as a center of intellectual thought naturally makes it a locus of critical activity. . . . Index." (Library J)

"As S. M. Lipset states in his introduction, 'this is the best existing treatment of the situation of the Latin American university students.' Agreed! . . . The most important element of the book is an analysis of the opinion and attitudes of Latin American students toward a range of issues. Generally well written and carefully researched, it is the first full-scale treatment in English of this topic, and will provide a valuable source book for Latin Americanists, those concerned with comparative and higher education, sociologists, and others. Highly recommended for libraries concerned with cross-cultural studies or with student activism."

Choice 9:858 S '72 160w

"The authors have provided the best current explanation of Latin American student behavior, but the style of presentation marks the book for specialists and other scholars. It is not a work for the general reader." L. F. Snow

Library J 97:3174 O 1 '72 170w

LIEBNER, JANOS. Mozart on the stage. 254p $10 Praeger

782.1 Mozart, Johann Chrysostom Wolfgang Amadeus. Opera—History and criticism
LC 70-190694

This "study of the operas of Mozart spans . . . the composer's career from the very early works composed while he was still a child to his last years. . . . [Liebner discusses] the various stages of Mozart's development as a composer for the stage and shows how Mozart moved beyond a sound knowledge of contemporary forms and technique to advance the evolution of operatic technique and achievement." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[This book], thoughtful and thorough as it is, does not add much to the existing literature [on Mozart's operas] except for its extensive comparison between Mozart's Magic Flute and Shakespeare's The Tempest. The operas are discussed one by one: the unusual ones, briefly, and the standard repertory ones, quite extensively—complete with musical examples. The tone is dry and academic, and the book will probably be more useful to students than to opera goers." G. L. Mayer

Library J 97:2844 S 15 '72 160w

"Although his approach varies from work to work [the author] is basically concerned with what he calls Mozart's 'dramaturgy', his understanding of dramatic composition. . . . Liebner is informative, at times informal, and he writes for the knowledgeable Mozart-lover: he is one himself, and his enthusiasm is the book's chief attraction. Many of his observations are original—on Mozart's association of keys, motives and scoring with characters and situations—and he makes many cross-references between the operas."

TLS p1003 Ag 25 '72 700w

LIEHM, ANTONIN J. The politics of culture; tr. by Peter Kussi; il. by Adolf Hoffmeister; with "The socialism that came in from the cold," by Jean-Paul Sartre; tr. by Helen R. Lane. 412p $10 Grove press

914.37 Czechoslovak Republic—Intellectual life
ISBN 0-394-47824-X LC 73-111029

This book contains "14 interviews with . . . members of Czechoslovakia's literary world. . . . Those interviewed represent three generations: those who grew up in prewar capitalist Czechoslovakia, those who knew only the socialist era, and the 'in-betweens.' All of them agree that free expression must become a feature of socialist society, and all tell . . . about Czechoslovak society, past and present. . . . [Included are] comments on art and literature . . . focused on Czechoslovak works . . . [as well as] comments on the generation gap, alienation, and modern woman." (Library J)

"The book, well translated by Kussi, had the original Czech title Generace, which means both 'generation' and 'generations.'" Hana Stranska
Library J 97:2103 Je 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by Neal Ascherson

N Y Rev of Books 19:17 Ag 10 '72 1200w

LIEUWEN, EDWIN, jt. auth. The Cuban revolution. See Valdés, N. P.

LIEW, K. S. Struggle for democracy; Sung Chiao-jen and the 1911 Chinese revolution. 260p $8.75 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Sung Chiao-jên. China—History—Revolution, 1911-1912
ISBN 0-520-01760-9 LC 74-123623

A biography of the political leader who "played a leading role in the 1911 revolution, became the foremost advocate of parliamentary government as opposed to the 'strong presidency' program of Yuan Shih-k'ai, and was assassinated by agents of Yuan just as he was about to become premier. With his death, the Kuomintang, which he had organized, collapsed and the drive for democracy came to an end." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[Liew's] erudition is impressive though the descriptive nature and the quantity of factual data in the book tend to reduce readability. Supposedly Liew's study revolved around the personality of Sung Chiao-jen but actual portrayal of Sung tends to be submerged by Liew's attempt to deal with the entire history of the revolutionary movement. . . . Nowhere does Liew present . . . a systematic study of Sung's political thought. The reader . . . is thus left with puzzling thoughts like what has made Sung so important as to make Yuan Shih-k'ai order Sung's violent death and what significant contributions had Sung really made to the republican revolution after all." A. P. L. Liu

Ann Am Acad 403:176 S '72 340w

"The first biography of the important Chinese revolutionary Sung Chiao-jen (1882-1913), whose career provides a valuable touchstone for understanding of this initial, momentous stage of the revolutionary movement. . . . This judicious and broadly based study . . . amounts to an excellent description and analysis of this period of the revolution, with all the dissensions, rivalries, maneuverings, and ideological differences among the leadership."

Choice 9:562 Je '72 160w

Reviewed by B. L. Evans

Pacific Affairs 45:284 summer '72 370w

LIFTON, ROBERT JAY, comp. America and the Asian revolutions. 178p $5.95; pa $2.45 Aldine pub.

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- . U.S.—Politics and government—1961- . China (People's Republic of China)—Politics and government
LC 76-96799

These essays deal with "either the revolutions in Asia, America's failure to understand Asia's problems, or the effect of that misunderstanding." (Choice)

"The articles are predominantly descriptive, analytical, or critical, and sometimes anecdotal. . . . The kind of research which abounds in most academic journals is absent. . . . Those who wish their students to cut their intellectual incisors on formidable research articles must search elsewhere. . . . [The writing] is lively, challenging, easily readable, and more oriented toward 'activist' than 'establishment' sociology." P. B. Horton

Am Soc R 86:765 Ag '71 40w

"Lifton's thesis is that Americans almost refuse to comprehend what is happening in Asia, that American policy is accordingly misguided, and that the result is to damage American democracy, mainly by straining the nation's physical and human resources. The book is a fair example of argumentative literature, and the essays are individually useful to varying extents. Herein is the major weakness as well; there is no uniform frame of reference aside from general relevance to the book's purpose. Thus the approach varies from psychiatric analysis to political science to journalism. . . . It is not a book of history, though it is mostly quite readable and would be useful in classes discussing current American problems."

Choice 7:942 S '70 170w

LIGHT, IVAN H. Ethnic enterprise in America; business and welfare among Chinese, Japanese and Blacks. 209p pl $7.95 Univ. of Calif. press 338.6 Small business. Negro businessmen. Chinese in the U.S. Japanese in the U.S.

ISBN 0-520-01733-2 LC 77-121189

This book raises the "question of why, on the one hand, Oriental immigrants to America became greatly successful small businessmen while, on the other, black migrants to northern U.S. cities were unable to own most retail enterprises in black areas. . . . [Professor Light seeks to show] that, in the field of credit, the Chinese and Japanese had rotating credit associations and the freed blacks did not; Negro banks were too weak, and white credit too scarce, to provide a substitute. . . . The Orientals benefited from . . . home-district organizations, trade guilds, and surname associations. The blacks had to depend on the weaker and competitive voluntary associations of churches and fraternal societies, and such groups as the National Negro Business League." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The author explores possible explanations in a searching and lucid manner. . . . A successful pioneering attempt to explore a facet of racial experience in America the ramifications of which transcend the realm of small business enterprise." C. T. Goodsell
Library J 97:511 F 1 '72 170w

"Lest you think this book must be like comparing bamboo shoots, mandarin oranges and black-eyed peas, be advised: it is a remarkably successful and intriguing study marred only very occasionally by High Sociologese jargon and low socio-illogicality. . . . Dr. Light appears to be nearly as conversant with East Asian mores as with the Negro experience in America, and in both areas he writes confidently, intelligently, and with simultaneous compassion and reserve—admittedly, a rare combination among academics nowadays." D. J. C. Brudnoy
Nat R 24:857 Ag 4 '72 210w

LILLARD, PAULA POLK. Montessori; a modern approach. 174p il $6.95 Schocken bks.

371.3 Montessori method of education
ISBN 0-8052-3423-3 LC 78-163334

"This book puts together . . . the essence of the Montessori method of education, drawing upon [Maria Montessori's] published works. The author shows how recent research in neurology and the work of Piaget and Bruner confirm Montessori's scientific observations and intuitions of how children learn. . . . The book deals with the Montessori philosophy and with educational methodology. It includes a chapter that shows how this philosophy and methodology are applied to . . . learning to read. The author addresses herself to the parent as well as to the teacher." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Mrs. Lillard's fine introduction . . . discusses Montessori in a logical and organized way. . . . Of interest to many will be an appendix with an appraisal of recent testing of Montessori children in comparison with children from a non-Montessori background. Ideally, every new mother would leave the hospital not only with the new baby but also with a copy of Mrs. Lillard's chapter on Montessori and parents. How much happier and more relaxed parents and children would be if the former understood the true nature of the child who is fashioning within himself the adult he is destined to be. . . . Montessori, I am convinced, has much to offer today, whether at home, in the small private school or the disadvantaged ghetto school. Hopefully, Mrs. Lillard's excellent presentation of the scope of Montessori will extend its influence." Marianne Miller

America 126:99 Ja 29 '72 280w

"[This book] is of great value, well organized and well written. . . . Particularly worthwhile is the chapter on 'The Montessori approach applied to writing and reading' which demonstrates how the Montessori method works in a specific area. Although Lillard quotes profusely from Montessori, her own commentary provides an intelligent guide to the famous philosophy and method. . . . The photographs of children using the materials are well chosen to illustrate the variety of experiences possible in a Montessori school. . . . Good basic bibliography. Highly recommended."

Choice 9:260 Ap '72 120w

"In attempting [a] revaluation [of the Montessori method], Lillard has spent too much time in answering the critics and too little time in explaining the subject. The book abounds with too many quotations and is poorly organized and confusing. The author has done Maria Montessori a disservice by backing up valid teaching practices with psychological findings of doubtful value when more pertinent research could have been cited. The appendix on research results will prove useful to those desiring additional information, but the results could have been described in more detail." R. W. Barber
Library J 96:3604 N 1 '71 120w

LILLIE, BEATRICE. Every other inch a lady; aided and abetted by John Philip; written with James Brough. 360p pl $7.95 Doubleday

B or 92
LC 78-161313

The entertainer "recounts the ups and downs of her life: her childhood in Toronto and youthful performances in the backwoods of Ontario; her early success in London and New York in André Charlot's revues; her marriage to Sir Robert Peel and the tragic loss of her only son during World War II; her widely acclaimed shows and films, and her . . . reputation as 'the funniest woman in the world.'" (Publisher's note)

"[Bea Lillie's ability was] based on a marvelous sense of timing, of the absurd, the incongruous, the unforgivable. If for no other reason we must be grateful to this book for reminding us of past glories: worried ('Tea for two and twelve for tea'), resigned ('This is my fifth affair; so please be quick'), batty ('it's better with your shoes off'), and occasionally armed with a platinum machete ('We're rotten to the core, Maud'). How can these qualities be caught on paper by a non-professional writer? The answer is, they can't. . . . And yet there is an excellent story behind the surface damp. . . . But those who never saw her on stage will have little idea of what they miss." Alan Pryce-Jones
Book World p13 Ap 23 '72 460w

100w
Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 6 '72

"Lillie's memoirs are likely to be widely read, but they're not up to one's expectations. Although there are plenty of perceptive lines (she describes her walk as a 'cab horse encountering mud') and the book gets a bit of zing toward the end, [it] is too sketchy to be satisfying as autobiography, even as an example of that notoriously sketchy genre, show-business autobiography; and the attempted literary comic style doesn't come off. Lillie's humor depends largely on her delivery; the best approach to this autobiography might be to have her read excerpts on a video-tape cassette." J. A. Avant
Library J 97:1314 Ap 1 '72 100w

LILLY, JOHN C. The center of the cyclone; an autobiography of inner space. 222p $6.95 Julian press

154 Consciousness. Hallucinogenic drugs
LC 71-170949

The author explores "different states of consciousness [and] his own consciousness. . . . His ultimate goal is to understand man and his mind. . . . He contends that subjective inner experience is as valid an area for careful investigation as the objective measurable world. He has proceeded from LSD and isolation experiments to exploring mystical-spiritual states achieved through ritualistic Yoga-like exercises and meditation." (Library J)

LILLY, J. C.—Continued

"[This] fascinating book, detailing experiences in these different subjective worlds, is recommended." George Adelman

Library J 97:2194 Je 15 '72 150w

"The chapters on LSD—originally conceived as part of a book 'to help parents and the youngsters understand one another and understand LSD'—are among the best writing I have seen on the subject. In them [Lilly] manages to convey the enormous exploratory potential of LSD without worshipping the chemical or denying its dangers. . . . Though [there are some] serious objections, I still feel the book is extremely valuable. John Lilly is a gifted explorer and the territory that he is working contains the enormous riches of greater understanding of ourselves and of our relationship to the natural universe." J. S. Gordon

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 26 '72 1000w

LINCOLN, MARY TODD. Mary Todd Lincoln: her life and letters [by] Justin G. Turner [and] Linda Levitt Turner; with an introd. by Fawn M. Brodie. 750p il $15 Knopf

B or 92

ISBN 0-394-46643-8 LC 69-10700

This collection of "letters (609), of which more than half have never before been published . . . spans forty-two years; they are addressed not only to husband, children, friends, but also to such historical figures as Stanton, Sumner, General Grant, and Queen Victoria. They . . . are interwoven with a biographical narrative." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This well-annotated collection of Mary Todd Lincoln's letters offers some interesting sidelights on the first lady and some of her better known associates—the President, of course, Secretaries Stanton and Sumner, and others of the official family. The letters, which begin in 1840, detail 40-odd years of a life that was at once historic and ordinary. There are many different kinds of letters—social, business, political, family; and they provide an interesting portrait of a woman often misunderstood and criticized for being a Southern sympathizer, a psychotic, and a hindrance to her husband's career. For scholars and armchair historians as well. Recommended." E. G. Dettlefsen

Library J 97:2721 S 1 '72 100w

"As the editors . . . remark in this massive compilation of her letters, a nation that has erected monuments to her husband 'prefers not to think of [Mrs. Lincoln], but when it does, dismisses her as a shrew, a spendthrift, a madwoman.' The justice of the verdict and the reasons for it are the theme of the Turners' book. . . . [The letters] afford countless insights into the life of the period and will be a priceless source for historians." T. H. Williams

N Y Times Bk R p3 S 24 '72 1600w

The LINCOLN Library of essential information. 2v 34th ed 2,213p il maps deluxe ed $59.95; to libs & schools $56.50 Frontier press

031 Encyclopedias and dictionaries
LC (24-14708)

An encyclopedia containing information grouped in the subject fields of "The English Language, Literature, History, Geography and Travel, Science, Mathematics, Economics and Useful Arts, Government and Politics, Fine Arts, Education, Biography, and Miscellany. . . . Editors and contributors have increased . . . to 106. . . . There are new articles on the cell, ecology, meteorology, microbiology, molecular biology, oceanography, and solid state physics. . . . The Biography department now has a total of 4,000 entries. . . . The Index, which appears in each volume, . . . includes more than 26,000 entries." (Booklist) For reviews of the 28th edition see BRD 1966.

"[This work] provides basic information written in a condensed factual style at the high school level. . . . [It] includes 63 glossaries (called 'Dictionaries') dispersed among the subject departments. . . . The greatest amount of revision is noted in the dictionary of Business, Banking, and Legal Terms. . . . Most of the several hundred charts and tables have been revised to include information from the late 1960s, if not from 1970. . . . There are 35 new color photographs, some of which replace less distinct color reproductions [and] a 64-page Atlas of the World. . . . This edition of Lincoln Library retains the editorial policy, broad coverage of general knowledge, and arrangement which made earlier editions recommendable. The information presented . . . is generally confined to basic factual material, but its arrangement in subject departments makes it uniquely suitable for self-education. Since a reasonable amount of revision has been made, owners of . . . an earlier edition should consider replacing it. . . . Recommended."

Booklist 68:865 Je 15 '72 1250w

LIND, JAKOV. Numbers; a further autobiography. 140p $5.95 Harper

B or 92

ISBN 06-012628-0 LC 79-138790

"In this sequel to his first volume of autobiography Counting My Steps [BRD 1969] Lind continues his story of the sexual, spiritual, and philosophical search for identity of a 20th-Century Candidate. The child of his pre- and post-World War II age, he travels from Palestine to Marseilles, Vienna, Amsterdam, Paris, Lugano, Hamburg, Copenhagen, and Stockholm, working—when he feels like it. . . . He associates with the offbeat; beds down with a succession of women in a succession of cities, having freed himself from his wife and infant son; and tries to shake off the claims of his own Jewishness, which will not let him go." (Library J)

Reviewed by N. J. Loprete

Best Sell 32:187 J1 15 '72 200w

"The horrors [of World War II] abide. . . . Counting My Steps is less a linear, consecutive narrative than an album of vicissitudes which permits thought to separate itself from events, from chronology even, its ultimate effect being more that of a mentality paraded than of a war-torn Europe exhumed. And Numbers, deliberately evoking the homelessness and faithless lost plants of an identically titled book of the Bible, resumes the same mode, more extremely in fact, and should not be read without a preliminary training spell on Counting. . . . Numbers is one of those books that exist only a bit more than they don't, and that is its appeal, why it's unnerving to read, like a shower cubicle turned into a Caligari cabinet." Paul West

Book World p12 My 21 '72 1150w

Choice 9:1136 N '72 210w

"[Lind] studies with an honest (if prejudiced) and cynical eye the mores of postwar Europe, the mystique of cities, and the plight of those whom he thinks obsessed by petty mindedness, the need for security, and the fear of tomorrow. He dreams of an incestuous relationship with his mother and fantasizes a remembrance of his own birth. . . . An interesting extension of Lind's tragicomic tale, which leaves us awaiting with interest his next episode." L. W. Griffin

Library J 97:1804 My 15 '72 190w

"The latest installment in this on-going identity crisis is the self-portrait of a man determined at all cost to avoid looking at himself, a blank canvas framed by litanies about as inspiring as a laundry ticket. . . . Even the anecdotes and character sketches that enlivened the initial volume are gone, buried under endlessly repetitious inventory lists itemizing genitalia, place names and platitudes. The writing itself has deteriorated to a level that matches the triteness of the thought behind it. . . . 'Numbers,' with its ersatz, cynicism and synthetic angst, can hardly be regarded as an articulate account of [Lind's] conflicts, or of anything else." Ernst Pawel

N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 12 '72 1200w

LINDBERGH, ANNE MORROW. Bring me a unicorn; diaries and letters of Anne Morrow Lindbergh, 1922-1928. 259p pl $6.95 Harcourt

B or 92

ISBN 0-15-114180-0 LC 71-182329

"This is the first volume of a personal record, to be continued through 1947. . . . The account in Anne Morrow's own words begins when she was 16 with a letter to tell Grandma Cutter that 'we children' are having a fine time traveling with Mother and Daddy in Scotland, and ends in 1928 with a letter to Corliss Lamont: 'Apparently I am going to marry Charles Lindbergh.' (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

Reviewed by Lael Pritchard
Best Sell 31:539 Mr 1 '72 500w

Reviewed by Jean Stafford
Book World p1 F 20 '72 1600w

Christian Century 89:259 Mr 1 '72 40w

Reviewed by Neil Millar
Christian Science Monitor p10 Mr 2 '72 500w

Reviewed by M. S. Cosgrave
Horn Bk 48:293 Je '72 210w

"[The author's] intense, sometimes tortured, outpourings reveal a shy, serious, sensitive nature, adoring but envious of and overwhelmed by her lively, talented, attractive family. Daughter of a prominent financier, statesman and ambassador, she was able to observe great events and people during this period (J.P. Morgan, Jean Monnet, League of Nations meetings), but the descriptions of these are incidental to a central concern with finding herself and with the special delights of literary academe. Most interesting is her absorption with Lindbergh after Christmas 1927, and the delineation of her ambivalent feelings of admiration and fear of emotional involvement. . . . Recommended." R. R. Gambee

Library J 97:491 F 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
Nat R 24:528 My 12 '72 900w

"The decision not to shape this extraordinary material into an autobiography took courage and, I think, perfect wisdom of choice. At first it seemed too bad: young Anne Morrow, who wanted intensely to be a writer . . . is left struggling to compose, full of transport and exclamation marks, rapture and despair. . . . But I was wrong. The picture that emerges is neither girlish nor partial. In a charming self-portrait that might be labeled 'before and after meeting Colonel Lindbergh,' she reveals herself as the complex person she was—strong-willed yet meek, firm yet apologetic, timid yet independent, terribly vulnerable, a poet fond of unicorns, a girl falling in love." Helen Bevington

N Y Times Bk R p3 F 27 '72 1200w

New Yorker 48:108 Ap 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by Glendy Culligan
Sat R 55:72 Mr 4 '72 1100w

TLS p936 Ag 11 '72 470w

LINDEMANN, GOTTFRIED. History of German art; painting, sculpture, architecture; tr. by Tessa Sayle. 228p il col il $12.50 Praeger 709.43 Art, German—History
LC 79-89605

The author includes the graphic arts in this survey, which describes "not only the special characteristics of German art but also the features which it has in common with the art of other European countries. The . . . book illumination of the Carolingian monasteries, the . . . buildings of the Romanesque and Gothic periods, the paintings, drawings, and engravings of Dürer, Holbein, and their contemporaries, the frescoed palaces and churches of the Baroque, and the works of Klee, Nolde, the members of the Bauhaus, and other recent artists . . . [are covered]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A modest but professional survey. . . . The work is illustrated by 179 plates, of which [64] are in fine color. . . . The text [has been translated] with admirable skill."
Best Sell 31:361 N 1 '71 70w

"The text is responsible and up to date but it stops far short of the scholarly, lacking footnotes and bibliography and with life dates of artists introduced only in illustration captions. Black-and-white illustrations range from superior to unacceptably while the color plates are uniformly good. . . . Surprisingly, this is the only halfway serious survey of German art in English so that acquisition is nearly an obligation."

Choice 9:205 Ap '72 120w

"What a pleasure to review an art book moderate in size and price, yet with superb reproductions and an intelligently written text. This work . . . is announced as a survey. Yet the author never dilutes his material by outlining, nor does he string out names, dates, and events for an illusion of completeness. The chapters are ordered chronologically; but each is a well-developed, interesting, and informative essay with key words analyzed in detail. Laymen will like this book and students will find it an excellent guide. Recommended for all collections." P. S. Andersen

Library J 96:4084 D 15 '71 110w

LINDNER, RICHARD. Lindner [by] Rolf-Gunter Dienst [tr. by Christopher Cortis]. unip il col il $5.95 Abrams

759.13

ISBN 0-8109-4412-X LC 69-14195

"Seventeen pages of introductory text are devoted to the painter's subject matter, his place in today's art world, and a scattering of biographic references. Fifty works spanning the years from 1950 to 1967 are reproduced." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The book includes] a substantial bibliography to take the reader further if he is so inclined. This volume is a popular survey presented on a more modest scale than Dore Ashton's Richard Lindner [BRD 1971], but it is recommended because it is compact and inexpensive." W. J. Dane

Library J 97:1309 Ap '72 90w

"The present monograph . . . seems a somewhat exaggerated tribute to an artist whose work is meretricious and in poor taste."

TLS p484 Ap 23 '71 240w

LINDOW, WESLEY. Inside the money market. 308p $15 Random house

332.4 Money. Banks and banking. Investments

ISBN 0-394-47885-1 LC 70-37059

"The term 'money market' refers specifically to short-term high-grade investments. . . . [The author] begins with explanations of the market and follows with a description of its participants—Federal Reserve, commercial banks, the Treasury Department, and corporations. There are sections on the external forces which affect the money market and on its future prospects." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Perhaps the best known money-market instruments are federal funds, treasury bills, bankers' acceptances, certificates of deposit, and commercial paper. Lindow, vice-chairman of Charter New York Corporation and former head economic analyst of the Treasury Department, is highly qualified to instruct on this lesser known market, and he brings great personal knowledge to his book. . . . Notes, [and] an appendix of terms which is not the usual rehash . . . conclude the book." M. R. Brown

Library J 97:1708 My 1 '72 150w

"With the passion of the specialist, Lindow describes the operations of a money desk of a large bank in a transaction-by-transaction diary of three days' exchanges. Purchases and sales in the tens of millions of dollars are commonplace and executed with never, or hardly ever, a blink." Kenneth Koyen

N Y Times Bk R p12 O 1 '72 350w

LINDSAY, JACK. Origins of astrology. 480p il $12.75 Barnes & Noble

133.5 Astrology—History

ISBN 389-04118-1 LC 73-28190

Lindsay "traces the scientific and religious foundations of star divination from its beginnings in Mesopotamia to its full development in Hellenistic Greece and the Roman Empire." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is generous in pages and in information, culled through wide and generally intelligent reading. The footnotes and bibliography, however, are so compressed that they are virtually useless. . . . Lindsay overwhelms the reader with the quantity of data, and undoubtedly his work will be a rich quarry for many a college term paper. . . . One may demur at his notion that [astrology] flooded into Greece as a result of disillusionment with democracy after 400 B. C., but the concluding chapter in which astrology aligns itself with post-Newtonian physics gives a hint at the passionate enthusiasm that has propelled the author and the weary reader through so much dreariness." M. H. Jameson

LINDSAY, JACK—Continued

Am Hist R 77:1421 D '72 250w

"Because of the contemporary opinion that astrology is an outmoded superstition, historians have failed to appreciate the enormous significance of the astrological viewpoint in ancient life. Lindsay's thesis is that astrology had deep roots in reality and corresponds in many ways to the complex cosmic conceptions which are now evolving. . . . Since institutions of learning are now offering courses for the study of astrology, the appearance of the book is timely. The copious references to little-known historical figures and innumerable quotations from obscure sources limit the work's potential readership, but the serious student of the subject will welcome Lindsay's thorough examination of the fascinating interconnections of astrology and ancient culture, the extensive bibliography, and detailed notes on sources. . . . Highly recommended for college, high school, and public libraries."
Choice 8:1600 F '72 200w

"Lindsay is a most thorough researcher; there is hardly a name from all the ancient astrological fragments which he does not mention in this very complete account. For that reason, the book tends to be more useful as an encyclopedia of astrology than as an entertainment for the casual reader. Its coverage is broad, and its facts are reasonably accurate."
J. R. Bram

Library J 96:4019 D 1 '71 120w

"In [this] long book . . . [Lindsay] finds a place for most of the topics scholars have discussed—which is saying a great deal. Babylon, Egypt, Greece and Rome are all given a due proportion of space. Perhaps the most cogent sections are those on astrology as it related to political life in Rome—which, needless to say, are the best documented. The remainder is a somewhat rambling compendium of astrology, magic and divination generally, filled to the brim with curious and even unfathomable human activity. Any underlying rationale which there might have been is left regrettably obscure. . . . With one or two ill-understood analogies . . . purporting to show that a future synthesis of acceptable science will be 'incomparably closer to the world-view of the astrologers than to any of the mechanistic theses from the seventeenth century on to the present day', Mr Lindsay ends in a way neither necessary to an essentially historical book, nor worthy of it. But the astrologers will love it."
TLS p1170 O 1 '71 900w

LINEHAN, PETER. The Spanish church and the Papacy in the thirteenth century. 389p $18.50 Cambridge

282.46 Spain—Church history. Papacy—History
ISBN 0-521-08039-8 LC 75-154505

This study presents a "picture of ecclesiastical life and problems at the height of the Iberian Middle Ages. . . . [It portrays the] nationalistic opposition [of the Spanish church] to papal authority and to Rome's reformist and financial pressures . . . [as well as the] grave economic crises confronted by this supposedly wealthy church, its many struggles against the crown and papal tiara, and the activities of Spanish churchmen at the papal curia." (Va Q R) Bibliography.

"The bibliography begins with a list of archives and libraries from which Dr Linehan has used material, a list which includes thirty-seven Spanish ecclesiastical archives. Anyone who has secured admission to a church archive in a Latin country will know what a wonderful achievement this represents and what an expense of time, patience, and tact. The book that has resulted from this astonishing performance is a very able treatment of a splendid subject. . . . Combining papal with Spanish sources with great skill, Dr Linehan makes available to his readers a really impressive body of new knowledge. Not that he is easy reading. He has a jerky, allusive style, and a passion for metaphors."
TLS p1268 O 15 '71 400w

"This is one of the few recent major books on medieval Spanish church history of which it can be said that it rests upon thorough archival investigations [and] escapes conventional biases whether Catholic or Protestant. . . . The work displays an insight, an unfailing zest, and a lively wit that makes it absolutely unique in its field: at once emphatically scholarly and irrefutably revisionist, the fresh breeze sweeping through the hothouse. Here we behold a Spanish Church very different from that of the traditional view. . . . [This] book must rank as one of the most notable contributions in many years to the history of both Spain and the church in the Middle Ages."

Va Q R 48:xvii summer '72 190w

LING, KEN. The revenge of heaven: journal of a young Chinese; English text prepared by Miriam London and Ta-ling Lee. 413p maps $8.95 Putnam

B or 92 China (People's Republic of China) —Politics and government
LC 78-163413

This is an "account of life inside China today and of the events surrounding the Cultural Revolution of 1966 as revealed in the . . . journal of a teen-age leader of the Red Guard." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Ronald Steel
Book World p1 Ap 9 '72 160w
Choice 9:420 My '72 240w

"As much a scholarly as a popular work, this assumes greater familiarity with the jargon and background of Chinese Communism than most young American readers possess, and some may be put off by the stilted dialogue and mass of detail. Nevertheless, Ken's account is a valuable supplement to broader reports written by outsiders, and YA's will be intrigued by the experiences of their contemporaries in the non-Western world." George Merrill

Library J 97:1183 Mr 15 '72 290w [YA]

"This book is first-rate reportage; it is incomparably the best 'inside' modern China book I've yet read." D. Brudnoy
Nat R 24:414 Ap 14 '72 300w

"Through Ling's eyes, the reader sees an enormous amount of China, because Ling, on his travels (he got as far as Peking), found other provinces almost as strange as foreign countries, and therefore carefully recorded the look of all sorts of places and people. . . . From Ling's accounts of everyday life, it appears that the Chinese Communist revolution did not produce a 'new Chinese man,' and that the vast population of that vast country went right on obeying parents, revering ancestors, worshipping gods, propitiating demons, marrying by arrangement, gambling for entertainment, and so on and on through the list of traditional Chinese mores."
New Yorker 48:102 F 26 '72 300w

"Here is an extraordinary and important book. . . . A preface tells us that [it] was 'developed' by Ivan and Miriam London, of Brooklyn College, and Ta-ling Lee, a U.N. translator, from a manuscript of nearly half a million Chinese characters written by Ling after his disillusionment and escape to Taiwan. The Londons and Lee also had some 300 hours of personal interviews with the author and his older brother. . . . What results is a document that is chilling as well as surprising in its dramatic narration of the ferocious yet debilitating energies released by Mao upon the land, remarkable in its calm depiction of the ironclad politicization forced upon the Chinese masses and rewarding in its panoramic picture of everyday life in cities and villages." S. K. Oberbeck

Newsweek 79:76 Ja 17 '72 850w

LINGUISTICS at large: the fourteen linguistic lectures presented by the Institute of contemporary arts, London, 1969-70; ed. by Noel Minnis. 328p il $8.50 Viking

410 Language and languages
ISBN 0-670-42941-4 LC 76-150359

The first three lectures "are on the structure of language, phonology, and grammar including brief explanations of both generative and transformational grammar. The fourth lecture is on semantics and the fifth on meaning. Those following deal with the relationship of language to other fields of study, e.g. literature, anthropology, socialization. Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

Choice 9:640 J1/Ag '72 170w

"[The book] demonstrates that linguistics 'remains at the point of intersection of the human sciences, and in many ways is at the heart of the proper study of mankind,' and also shows the advantage of essays by specialists over books written by one author who attempts to cover all matters of interest. . . . The lectures are excellent throughout. . . . This collection is highly recommended to all readers—from the intellectually curious, through the student at any level, to the specialist in any of the areas covered—as a great storehouse of information, new ideas, and clarity on a difficult subject." W. L. Ballard

Library J 96:1712 My 15 '71 200w

"Linguistics is a subject, of course, whose links or tentacles stretch in many directions. Two of the most germane and skilful contributions are those by F. R. Palmer (on the various tasks of English language teaching) and Randolph Quirk (on the description of usage and the factual problems of English dictionaries and grammars). . . . Some other sub-fields are unfortunately excluded. . . . However, the shortcomings of this kind of book do not lie in specific lacunae. One cannot take a series of individual lectures, reproducing them 'as far as possible . . . as they were delivered', adding an index, some uncoordinated and partial bibliographies, and sundry editorial cross-references, and hope that the result will be as successful as the original occasion. At the ICA [Institute of Contemporary Arts] the audience could apparently ask questions; doubtless many difficulties were cleared up on the instant. But readers of books are on their own and are less tolerant. Surely, partial rewriting and re-editing would have helped."

TLS p810 J1 9 '71 850w

LININGTON, ELIZABETH. See Egan L.; Shannon, D.

LINK, ARTHUR S., ed. The papers of Woodrow Wilson, v10. See Wilson, W.

LINK, ARTHUR S., ed. The papers of Woodrow Wilson, v11. See Wilson, W.

LINKLATER, ERIC. The voyage of the Challenger. 288p il pl col pl maps $15 Doubleday 574.92 Challenger expedition. 1872-1876.
Oceanography—Research. Voyages and travels
LC 70-186381

This volume describes the voyage around the world in 1872-1876, which was undertaken by HMS Challenger to "chart the depths, movement and content of the seas, to scour the oceans for marine life, for clues to climatic phenomena, and for minerals. . . . [The account is based on the journals of the] naturalists on board—Henry Mosely and John Murray . . . and the narratives and drawings of the naval officers, Lord George Campbell, Herbert Swire and Richard Channer." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Linklater is a novelist and a historian, and he skillfully blended his talent for storytelling with his penchant for historical research. . . . [He] has created a brisk and continuous narrative that has appeal for the general reader and absorbing interest for the armchair navigator-explorer. This oversize edition with its striking color plates and numerous illustrations . . . might be considered as a gift book." C. P. Collier

Best Sell 32:377 N 15 '72 550w

"The voyage took three years and from over 300 soundings the team of Scottish scientists on board put together the first theories of oceanography. . . . The Challenger's primitive dredges found many specimens of deep sea life and proved the ocean floor to be as geologically interesting and as rugged as dry land, with mountain ranges, plains and astonishing mineral wealth. . . . The voyage, 40 years after Charles Darwin's expedition in the Beagle, covered much the same route. Not much had changed, but by this time the camera had been invented and the book is studded with contemporary photographs as well as beautiful engravings. The Challenger's crew spent as much time collecting fauna as plumbing the oceans."

Economist 244:45 S 2 '72 140w

"[The accounts of the adventures of the ship's personnel on ship and shore . . . vary from sober scientific treatises to light-hearted commentaries on the customs of exotic peoples. Linklater, a prolific British author, has drawn upon these chronicles to put together a readable, profusely illustrated narrative of the Challenger's cruise. The Voyage of the Challenger is similar in content and format to Alan Moorehead's Darwin and the 'Beagle' [BRD 1969] and should attract the same readership." J. F. Husband

Library J 97:3586 N 1 '72 150w

LINKS, J. G. Townscape painting and drawing. 261p il $20 Harper

704.94 Cities and towns in art

LC 74-157504

The author "discusses early examples of topographic art in terms of a 4th-Century mosaic in Antioch, Ambrigio Lorenzetti's 14th-Century Sienese frescos, and the . . . illuminated manuscripts of the 15th Century. The development of scientific perspective in relation to townscape painting is considered, as is the role of printed books with their use of illustrations by and for travellers. There follows a . . . chapter on 17th-Century Dutch townscape painting, with commentary on the Saenredam, Vermeer, van der Heyden, and Berckhyde. . . . [Links also deals with] 18th Century townscape painting . . . [which culminated] in Canaletto's paintings of Venice and England. A . . . final chapter discusses the 19th and 20th centuries." (Library J)

"[Links] has written a readable, scholarly, well-coordinated book on a subject which has not previously been treated in this manner. The black-and-white illustrations are excellently placed in the text and much comparative use is made of them. Recommended for all art collections." J. E. Burns

Library J 97:2565 Ag '72 200w

"[This] book is a fascinating one, written with an extraordinary range of learning. . . . [Links has covered] a vast range of time and space with conspicuous success. The illustrations alone would make the book worthwhile, for the author has not only selected many unfamiliar details but has wisely chosen to illustrate them full-size almost always with a reduced plate of the whole of the painting from which they are taken. If the off-set printing used for the plates sometimes leads to a slight clogging of detail in the shadows, this is more than compensated for by the advantage of having plate and relevant text close together."

TLS p443 Ap 21 '72 950w

LINN, CHARLES F. Probability; il. by Wendy Watson. 33p lib bdg $3.75 Crowell

519.2 Probabilities—Juvenile literature

ISBN 0-690-65601-7; 0-690-65602-5 (lib bdg)

LC 79-171006

The author gives directions for experiments in probability (using such materials as thumbtacks, marbles and coins) and for organizing the results so that they may be useful in making predictions. "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"[This book is] part of the Crowell Young Math Series, and [is] extremely well-done. [It is] amusingly and thoughtfully illustrated . . . [and does] an excellent job of conveying specific aspects of the field [it] represents." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:490 O '72 110w

"An elementary introduction to probability theory with lengthy testing methods used to illustrate prediction, sampling and ratio. Many of the experiments require readers to perform tasks such as throwing thumbtacks or rolling a cuboctahedron one hundred times—which will be tedious for primary schoolers. While the style and development of ideas are appropriate, this lacks appeal because of the difficulty of relating the concepts to everyday life: polling voters, patterns of events and weather prediction are not the first considerations of young children. . . . [However] if there's a special demand for this material, it will serve."

Sandra Weir

Library J 97:2231 Je 15 '72 110w

LIONNI, LEO. Alexander and the wind-up mouse. unpag. col il $3.95; lib bdg $3.79 Pantheon bks.

Mice—Stories

LC 76-77423

"Alexander is a real mouse who envies his friend Willy, a toy wind-up mouse who is cuddled and loved. Alexander decides to ask a magic lizard to turn him into a wind-up mouse, but when Willy is discarded with other old toys, Alexander [reconsiders]. . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

LIONNI, LEO—Continued

"Something happens to convince Alexander that to be real is more satisfying than to be mechanical, and the story ends happily for both little mice. Leo Lionni's collage illustrations are dazzling in their color and bold design and contribute to a beautiful and appealing picture book." P. G.

Book World p12 Mr 29 '70 130w

"[Alexander's story] is a simple one with an obvious message; the pictures, apart from the overly whimsical mice, are worked in beautiful, imaginative collage." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 46:153 Ap '70 130w

"Alexander's story lacks the depth and resonance of Lionni's previous mouse fable, Frederick [BRD 1967], but the illustrations employ the same imaginative collage techniques—less subtly, perhaps, but with even richer and more spectacular effects. Tissue-paper, marbelized and patterned papers, newspaper, Japanese rice paper are some of the surfaces used to provide a brilliant background for the endearing little grey mouse who looks a lot like Frederick but has a personality all his own." Sada Fretz

Library J 95:1930 My 15 '70 150w

TLS p1515 D 3 '71 120w

LIPMANN, FRITZ. Wanderings of a biochemist. 229p il $8.95 Wiley-Interscience

574.1 Biochemistry

ISBN 0-471-54080-3

LC 75-138915

The first part of the book is an autobiography in which the author describes his experiences as a medical student in Germany and his work as a biochemist in the United States. "The second portion is devoted to 8 essays previously published in such journals as Perspectives in biology and medicine or in books such as Currents in biochemical research. One was published as early as 1946; the most recent, in 1969. In Lipmann's words, 'the essays are chosen to show how conceptual innovations are distilled from experimental work.'" (Choice) Chapter bibliographies.

"Lipmann's wanderings have brought him in close contact with many of the most exciting currents in modern molecular biology. . . . He describes in a rather informal and most interesting way his experiences in elucidating some of the mysteries of energy transformations in the living cell. There emerges some perception of the disappointments, as well as the satisfactions, of scientific research; a perception which should be of great interest to young people contemplating a scientific career. . . . In one essay in particular, Lipmann's concern with the humanistic aspects of science is emphasized. . . . Some photographs of men associated with important work in biochemistry add to the human interest. Highly recommended for all undergraduate libraries."

Choice 8:1471 Ja '72 170w

"The narrative is supplemented with relevant excerpts from Lipmann's technical publications; this approach is most helpful in giving the reader an understanding of the reasoning behind his research. . . . The general essays Lipmann has included in the second part of the book are timely and easily read. They . . . are exciting discourses in biological thought. . . . This book should become a contribution equal to Lipmann's scientific accomplishments. It should serve as an inspiration to students at all levels as well as to mature investigators and can be of value not only to those interested in biological sciences but also to physical scientists, for it is a volume that should encourage a new generation of scientific wanderers." N. O. Kaplan

Science 173:1226 S 24 '71 1050w

LIPPARD, LUCY R., ed. Dadas on art. 178p $5.95; pa $2.95 Prentice-Hall

709.04 Dadaism

SBN 13-197459-9; 13-197442-4

LC 71-140271

Lippard portrays the history and "spirit of the Dada movement by presenting the prose, poetry, and polemic of the artists themselves and of their poet friends. Articles . . . by Marcel Duchamp, Max Ernst, Richard Hülsenbeck, and . . . others reflect the political and artistic revolution with which the Dadas confronted the crises facing Europe after World War I. This collection provides . . . examples of the Dada influence on the Western world and demonstrates Dada's continuing power to affect the arts of the sixties and seventies." (Publisher's note)

"The present book makes its contribution by focusing mainly on writings by visual artists. This explains the absence of André Breton, Paul Dermée, Paul Eluard, Philippe Soupault, et al. The presence of Jean Cocteau is less understandable. . . . [This book includes] lively material from some dadas who are not well known, and it will please dadaphiles by its assertion that 'Surrealism, for all its achievements, was housebroken Dada.'" Choice 8:1440 Ja '72 120w

"Brief biographical and contextual introductions make this item particularly suitable for undergraduates, although the lack of illustrations is regrettable. Some of the material is translated into English for the first time, and the widely representative nature of this compact collection will make it a handy source book for background on the aims and effects of an important 20th-Century art movement." Karen Horny

Library J 96:3116 O 1 '71 100w

LIPPMAN, THEO. Spiro Agnew's America, by Theo Lippman, Jr. 256p $7.95 Norton

B or 92 Agnew, Spiro T.

ISBN 0-393-07470-6

LC 71-38950

The author discusses Mr. Agnew's social, political and professional development "from Baltimore county politics, to governor of Maryland, to the Vice Presidency." (Library J)

Reviewed by Rowland Egger

Ann Am Acad 403:200 S '72 550w

"There are engaging chapters in Spiro Agnew's America about growing up Greek and being outside the establishment; about the dynamics of anti-ism and the mechanics of a Southern strategy, what it is and how it works." Walter Jacobson

Book World pl My 14 '72 300w

"[Lippman, a] newspaper journalist, has written [a] good, substantial political biography of Spiro Agnew. . . . [His book makes] enjoyable reading . . . and contains an excellent index." D. A. Bower

Library J 97:1424 Ap 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by N. B. Freeman

Nat R 24:527 My 12 '72 700w

"More than one-third of this country's population now lives in suburbia and it is Lippman's thesis in this always interesting and thoughtful study that they will soon become the new centers of political power and that men such as Spiro Agnew are its first representative and successful political products. . . . But there is no evidence that their voters, including their newly emancipated young, have any special allegiance to either political party or to any style of leadership. . . . Agnew no more 'represents' [suburban] . . . America than do his liberal counterparts." Murray Polner

New Repub 166:29 Ap 29 '72 1000w

"A careful and detailed study of the man and his campaigns. The writing, which approaches in density a legal brief, is hard going, probably the result of Lippman's attempts to be fair."

N Y Times Bk R p[28] My 21 '72 150w

LIPSET, SEYMOUR MARTIN. Passion and politics; student activism in America, by Seymour Martin Lipset [and] Gerald M. Schaflander. 440p il $8.95 Little 378.1 Youth—U.S.—Political activity. Students—U.S.

LC 70-149459

This book consists of two parts, each written by one of the authors. Lipset seeks to coordinate the "literature and data on students, protesters and the causes of campus turmoil. He [draws on] data from other countries. . . . Schaflander concerns himself primarily with liberal-moderate, marginal ambivalent students (MA's, as he terms them), basing much of his exploration of [their] attitudes on . . . interviews and taped conversations. . . . [He examines] the behavior patterns, values, and attitudes of MA's towards sex, drugs, and politics." (Library J)

"The first part continues Professor Lipset's work on intellectual politics. It is related to his Politics of Unreason [BRD 1970], a study of extremism on the right, and has been published separately in paperback under the title Rebellion in the University. The other book, by Mr. Schaflander, is in part an analysis of the student style of life and an apologia for his own. It will not stand up to analysis. . . . There are discussions in Lipset's section that should be fundamental to future research on students, their politics and, indeed, their identity as a historical and social group. . . . The most important discussions center on student activism in the past and the strange alliance between students and their ideological models. . . . [The book's second section is] simply a chaos of good intentions. There is a twenty-five-page account of Mr. Schaflander's being fired by one institution, and a collection of diatribes against others. There are some painfully innocent reflections on student politics, sex and drugs." R. S. Berman Am Scholar 41:296 spring '72 1000w

"[This] book provides [an] excellent analysis of an important topic. . . . In contrast to the irrelevance of the Schaflander essay, Prof. Lipset has written an overview of the historical and sociological dimensions of student activism which is both interesting and helpful. . . . His comments on the faculty's changing role in student activism are particularly valuable." P. G. Altbach
Christian Century 89:227 F 23 '72 200w

Reviewed by Stanley Rothman
Commentary 54:92 J1 '72 2100w

"Lipset . . . lucidly coordinates much of the vast [material about this topic]. . . . Voluminous footnotes provide access to a wide range of relevant materials. . . . [Schaflander] took the role of an involved observer in this data collection; normal sampling procedures and statistical analysis of data were not used. Thus his is a rather personal examination. . . . Lengthy chapter notes cite supporting commentary from other sources. [Schaflander's] tendency, at times, to overgeneralize rashly is unfortunate. [He] pleads for greater involvement by MA's to effect change within the university system, and large public and academic libraries may want to consider the book for this aspect and for Lipset's more authoritative treatment." Topsy Smalley
Library J 96:4025 D 1 '71 290w

Reviewed by Ernest Van Den Haag
Nat R 24:107 F 4 '72 1200w

LIPSEY, ROBERT E., Jr. auth. Price competitiveness in world trade. See Kravis, I. B.

LIPSKY, MICHAEL, comp. Law and order, police encounters. 144p il $5.95; pa $2.45 Aldine pub.

363.2 Police—U.S. Riots. Public relations—Police
LC 78-115947

These essays "cover black revolts, police riots, police brutality, the adequacy of crime rate calculations, sniping, and motorcycle gangs. It contains case studies of public attitudes about police and on-the-spot observations of police on the beat. The authors are social . . . scientists who are interested in observing the police." (Choice)

"None of the articles contains any footnotes or formal references, although a handful suggest further readings. Fortunately the writing is uniformly clear and free of jargon. . . . While the first three articles [concerned with rioting] do little to challenge the 'common wisdom' of sociologists, the last three do much to debunk common views on the extent and nature of the problems under consideration. . . . [This volume is one of a series dedicated] 'to establishing guidelines for social solutions based on the social sciences.' However, the articles make little use of hard data and none of statistical tests. . . . [Despite the] experiences and the descriptive and anecdotal material . . . firmer bases for establishing policy guidelines [are needed]." J. A. Winter
Am Soc R 36:1141 D '71 100w

"Six essays that originally appeared in Trans-action magazine. The format of the periodical requires the authors to use a journalistic writing style. . . . This collection of articles . . . [is] worthwhile for introducing the freshman-sophomore level student to the usefulness of social science in working out alternatives to the enforcement of order by violence. No index; very little bibliography." Choice 8:920 S '71 120w

LIST, ELY, ed. Girl scout cookbook. See Girl scouts of the United States of America

LIST, ILKA KATHERINE. Questions and answers about seashore life; woodcuts by the author; line drawings by Arabelle Wheatley. 123p $5.50; lib bdg $5.21 Four Winds 574.92 Marine animals—Juvenile literature.

Marine plants—Juvenile literature
LC 71-105340

The author, a zoologist-artist attempts to explain how the animals and plants along the shore "live—how they move around, find food, reproduce—and how their unique body structures are adapted to the life they lead. [In addition to] . . . clams, mussels, crabs, and jellyfish . . . [she also describes such animals] . . . spirorbis, whelks, anemones, and sea urchins." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"A collection of questions and answers, appropriate for beginners, that are based on firsthand observations of invertebrate marine life. There is no index, but the table of contents includes the questions contained in each chapter. The text is expanded by [the] helpful, precisely drawn and labeled line illustrations and by the author's decorative woodcuts—which are, however, drawn on a different scale. Neither text nor illustrations indicate the size of the seashore animals, and occasional inaccuracies have resulted from oversimplification. . . . Nevertheless, the attractive format will lure readers to learn new information from the short, specific, generally accurate answers." Jane Austin
Library J 96:3469 O 15 '71 150w

"Is the horseshoe crab dangerous? Do lobsters lay eggs? To each of well over 100 questions, arranged topically, there is a brief, simply written answer in this very handsome book. The questions are chiefly quite natural ones, based on observation at the shore itself (sometimes stimulated by the fish market). The life discussed is that of plants and invertebrates, mainly Atlantic-centered. . . . This is a first-rate book, whether as stimulating reading, direct reference or guidance at the actual shore; it is accessible to readers in the lower grades." Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 225:106 D '71 100w

LISTER, MARGOT. Costumes of everyday life; an illustrated history of working clothes. 178p $12.95 Plays

391 Costume—History
ISBN 0-8238-0097-0 LC 77-172485

"This book focuses on working class apparel. From 900 to 1910, the clothing of peasants, artisans, tradesmen, servants and minor officials is . . . presented with over 250 line drawings by the author. Each chapter describes the history of the period and provides a summary of the general characteristics of the apparel of the time. Although the dress of Britain and France is emphasized, clothing from Italy, Germany, the Netherlands and the United States is included." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography.

"Those readers who are familiar with Lister's earlier work will find the same clear line drawings with accompanying brief outlines explaining hair style, headress, type of garments, footwear, and accessories. The scope of the book makes it of value to theatrical costumers. . . . Unlike her earlier works, Lister tries to explain the evolution of clothing with an introductory synopsis in each chapter of social and political trends of the period and how they gave rise to various occupations. This is followed by illustrations of clothing worn in that period. However, except for one or two examples, most of the illustrations have little to do with the text, and occupations suggested in the text are not illustrated." Choice 9:1144 N '72 210w

LISTER, MARGOT—Continued

"This volume, in the same album format as the author's Costume: an Illustrated Survey from Ancient Times to the Twentieth Century, lacks an index as did the earlier book. . . . A shallow work—about half the size of the first book but the same price. . . . Overambitious in scope and difficult to consult or follow, this book is only for collections aiming at completeness." S. C. Gross

Library J 97:2172 Je 15 '72 130w

"Because of its unique scope which differentiates it from other costume books concentrating on sumptuous court dress and the clothing of the upper class, this book offers an appreciation of the social structure of an age and points up the development of the middle class. Thus, this detailed and concisely-written account will appeal to a wide range of readers, from history students to directors of costume plays." A. M. Skivington

Library J 97:2962 S 15 '72 160w [YA]

LITTLE, JEAN. Kate. 162p $3.95; lib bdg $3.79
Harper

SBN 06-023913-1; 06-023914-X (lib bdg)
LC 70-148419

"Eight-year-old Susannah (Susan Rosenthal) . . . helps a young adolescent girl, Kate Bloomfield, to come to terms with the meaning of her Jewishness, her place within her unconventional family, and the depth and value of her relationship with her longtime Protestant friend Emily. Kate takes a lost Susannah home thus missing an appointment with Emily; from this, Emily mistakenly infers that Kate has forsaken her for Susannah's older sister, Sheila, and their relationship is severely strained. It's also through Susannah's family that Kate learns about her father's father and sister, with whom he has not communicated for 26 years. . . . Grades five to eight." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p14 (children's issue) N 7
'71 150w

"[This] is a moving, thematically contemporary book, about a 13-year-old's search for identity. . . . Girls with more on their minds than future housekeeping and maternity will find 'Kate' more to their taste than many other books intended for them." Nancy Garden

Christian Science Monitor pB5 N 11 '71
60w

Horn Bk 48:49 F '72 120w

"There are several deftly handled plots in this satisfying sequel to the author's Look Through My Window. . . . While slow-paced, the novel is perceptively written and characterization is excellent." L. L. McConnell

Library J 96:4185 D 15 '71 140w

Reviewed by D. M. Broderick

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 16 '72 60w

"The story has vitality and honesty [and] a fluent style." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:57 O 16 '71 110w

LITTLE, STUART W. Off-Broadway: the prophetic theater. 323p pl $7.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

792 Theater—U.S.

LC 76-187144

This is an account of the off-Broadway theater from 1952 to the present.

"[This book is documented] with an insider's knowledge of the New York theatrical world.

[The author] impugns the New York critics for failing to see the 'social significance' of the Living Theater and other experimental efforts, which he greets with an almost breathless enthusiasm. . . . Little's twenty-year chronicle is an admirably detailed, well-illustrated and useful contribution to contemporary theatrical history; and, like all success stories, it makes interesting reading." G. J. Schiffrorst

America 126:619 Je 10 '72 450w

"[This book] reveals almost all that the student or layman needs to know in order to understand the importance of the 'new' theater that has begun to feed and literally keep alive the uptown commercial theater in New York. . . . To one who has seen at least three-fourths of the productions mentioned, Little's book reads like a diary of theatrical joys and sorrows. To one who would like to know what it was like, this is the best introduction. To all, it is a record to be studied and from which to learn." R. M. Buck

Library J 97:2427 J1 '72 360w

"[This] careful, exact, and faithful history . . . runs on as smoothly as a good novel and never degenerates into inside 'show-biz' gossip. Mr. Little classes Off Broadway as 'prophetic' because, in two decades, the works performed have foreshadowed trends not only in drama but in other arts, in politics, and even in what are nowadays referred to as life styles. He never labors that point, though, and by sheer good writing makes the productions he tells about very vivid; He does not list, he resurrects, and one quite literally sees what he is talking about."

New Yorker 48:142 Ap 29 '72 80w

"Little evokes for us Geraldine Page's electrifying performance in Summer and Smoke, and Anne Meacham's in Hedda Gabler. . . . [there are] useful, if elementary, introductions to the dramaturgy of The Blacks and Paradise Now. . . . The title, however, indicates that the book is more than a history; it hints at thesis. Unfortunately, hints are all that we get." Richard Horwich

Sat R 55:72 Je 24 '72 600w

LITTLEJOHN, DAVID, ed. The André Gide reader. See Gide, A.LITTLEJOHN, DAVID. The patriotic traitors: the history of collaboration in German-occupied Europe, 1940-45. 391p 11 maps $8.95
Doubleday

940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Collaborationists. World War, 1939-1945—Occupied territories
LC 70-186037

This is an account of "the leaders (as well as their affiliations, parties, and movements) who willingly cooperated with the German conquerors during W.W. II. . . . A chapter [is] devoted to each country—dealing with the organizations (political, military, social, and journalistic) that made the occupation work." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] writes objectively, compassionately and always interestingly of the muddled yet not always wholly despicable individuals and political groups that developed more or less willy-nilly into the wartime collaborators of Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, France and the Soviet Union. His longest chapter is devoted to France. . . . [This] book breaks new ground to good effect."

Economist 243:56 Ap 15 '72 450w

"[Littlejohn] has compiled a highly useful reference source. . . . His presentation is clear; it is more factual than analytical, more expository than dramatic. Rather than a history of the collaboration, the book is a series of sober accounts. . . . Readers who wish to distinguish between collaborators like Doriot and Darnand, or the various French police forces that collaborated with Germany (e.g., Milice Française and Milice Bretonne) will find the differences here." Martin Blumenson

Library J 97:3311 O 15 '72 220w

"[This] is a pioneer work in English . . . [but the] subject deserved a professionally more competent author. . . . Littlejohn is a library cataloguer, and is thus bound to be accurate and systematic. . . . But the cataloguer's need to leave nothing out is a poor attribute for the historian, who needs to select, survey, and compare. Nor would many historians be content to rely so largely on secondary sources, or to specify so seldom or so vaguely what their sources were. Yet Mr Littlejohn displays one most valuable historian's attribute: scepticism. Torrents of propaganda engulfed the collaborating armed forces, with which his book chiefly deals; he disposes of many legends, put out by both sides. . . . The photographs are good, and out of the common run. . . . The prose does not flow easily, and frequent cross-headings heighten the resemblance to a sustained newspaper article, rather than a work of scholarship. This is a titbit book: but, on a subject that matters, better than no book at all."

TLS p921 Ag 4 '72 650w

LITWAK, LEO. College days in earthquake country; ordeal at San Francisco State; a personal record, by Leo Litwak and Herbert Wilner. 235p $7.95 Random house

378.794 California. State College, San Francisco
ISBN 0-394-47228-4 LC 70-159355

"The authors, professors at San Francisco State during the 1968-1969 upheavals there, write . . . of their personal involvement in the student and faculty strikes. Both men, committed to humane values, discovered in themselves unsuspected residues of racism as the violence on the campus accelerated." (Library J)

"[This] is most useful for the insights into the minds and reactions of liberal professors to academic crisis. The authors try to analyze what it was in their backgrounds and their roles as professors that made them react as they did. One begins to wonder why so many have written in so much detail about San Francisco State. An interesting situation, no doubt, but hardly worth the veritable shelf of books which have appeared. . . . [The] volume will be of use to serious students of higher education and experts on San Francisco State."

Choice 9:413 My '72 180w

"The authors' contempt for Hayakawa is open; their uneasiness with the negotiated settlement evident. They recognize how much they have learned from their 'black mentors,' and they 'await something new.'" F. M. Blake
Library J 97:1030 Mr 15 '72 130w

LIU, ALAN P. L. Communications and national integration in Communist China. (Mich. Univ. Center for Chinese studies. Michigan studies on China, no2) 225p $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

301.15 Propaganda, Chinese
ISBN 0-520-01882-6 LC 79-142050

This study "concerns itself with the role of the mass media—mass campaigns, radio broadcasting, the press, book publishing, and the film industry—in achieving national integration in a Communist China." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] book is replete with factual errors, contradictory accounts of events, inconsistent evaluations, questionable interpretations, and a virulent anti-Mao bias. . . . [It] contains very little merit but much misinformation." F. W. Houn

Am Pol Sci R 66:1064 S '72 800w

"Although slightly repetitious, each chapter is well and clearly written and evidences an enormous amount of research. Included in the text and the seven appendices are many excellent charts, and there are copious chapter notes making reference to numerous original Chinese sources, a large bibliography, and an adequate index. Professor Ithiel de Sola Pool contributes an illuminating foreword. I heartily commend Dr. Liu for his treatment of this difficult but interesting subject." A. E. Kane

Ann Am Acad 402:146 J1 '72 450w

"[This] is an interpretative essay, rather than an extensive factual study. . . . Although more up to date, this book does not supersede such detailed studies as Frederick T. C. Yu's Mass Persuasion in Communist China [BRD 1965] or Franklin Houn's To Change a Nation. However, it does add a useful dimension of politically sensitive interpretation." A. J. Nathan

Library J 96:2766 S 15 '71 120w

LIVESAY, HAROLD C., Jr. auth. Merchants and manufacturers. See Porter, G.

LIVINGSTON, PETER VAN RENSSLAER. How to cook a rogue elephant: the recipes and recollections of Peter Van Rensselaer Livingston. 498p $10.95 Little 641.5 Cookery. International

LC 71-161862

These recipes from various "places around the world [are accompanied by a] running comment and anecdotes." (Best Sell) Index.

"The author, who has travelled widely and has been interested in the fine art of cooking (and eating) from early childhood . . . [has written] an interesting book. . . . Although the recipes . . . are indexed . . . this is much more of an autobiography than a book for the kitchen shelf. However, there are some unusual ideas and much sound comment on cooking mixed, like nuggets of candied citron in a fruit cake, throughout. For the collector, this may prove a real boon." Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 31:408 D 1 '71 130w

"Who is Peter Van Rensselaer Livingston? I was unable to find any biographical information, but he writes ■ though I should know him and his whole family, from step-grandmother down to distant aunt. Half the book is devoted to his reminiscences of estate living, genteel war experiences, and a superficial view of life in the State Department up till 1950. The recipes included are not easy to follow and need a certain amount of expertise. They are printed in italics, which increases the difficulty of using this book. It is neither an interesting memoir nor a quality cookbook. Instructions on cooking a rogue elephant are not included. Not recommended for purchase." Sue Pearce

Library J 96:3136 O 1 '71 100w

LLEWELLYN, ALEXANDER. The decade of reform; the 1830s. 221p $7.95 St Martins

942.07 Great Britain—History—19th century
LC 71-182187

This work is divided into three parts. " 'Politics and Politicians' are covered in the first part, including the working of Parliament and the party system, with an appraisal of the 1832 Reform Act. 'Politics and the People' comes in part two, with a discussion of the rise of the Chartists and the Anti-Corn-Law Leaguers, and the reform of the Poor Law and introduction of workhouses. 'Public Opinion' as it affected foreign and colonial policies comes in the third part, where the relations between Church and State are examined. Economic forces . . . are also discussed where relevant." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:1343 D '72 150w

"Llewellyn endeavors, with some success, to present a political overview of a decade in which the modern two-party system was in its nascent stages. The work's focal points are the activities of politicians, the burgeoning involvement of the common people in politics, and opinion in tangential political spheres such as foreign and imperial affairs. Llewellyn's prose is rather turgid . . . and one can only deplore the absence of annotation. Despite these limitations, the study is a concise, useful introduction to a critical era in modern British history." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:2392 J1 '72 150w

"To seek to isolate a decade in British history for a study of this sort makes for neither convincing argument nor comfortable reading. [The author's] prose style is staccato and his indulgence in line rulings . . . give the reader the impression that this may only be a brief symposium on the subject. . . . Llewellyn's best chapters are those in the second part of the book under the sub-heading of 'Politics and the People.' He has studied to good effect the problem of rural poverty. . . . Finally, in an historical work, it ought to be possible to look up particular references instead of being confronted with only a bibliography."

TLS p451 Ap 21 '72 850w

LLOYD, ALAN. The king who lost America; a portrait of the life and times of George III. 369p $7.95 Doubleday

B or 92 George III, King of Great Britain.
Great Britain—History—1714-1837
LC 73-139042

The author devotes "space to George's education, his idea of monarchy, and his early relationships with Parliament and his ministers. . . . Lloyd also provides sketches of such leading figures of the time as Bute, North, Fox, Wilkes, Chatham and the younger Pitt, and Franklin. George's domestic life and character, differing in many respects from those of the other Hanoverians, receive . . . attention. Quotations from such contemporary observers as Fanny Burney, as well as from the king's voluminous correspondence [are provided]." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Alas! Poor George still awaits an adequate biography. Lloyd's contention that his effort 'does not pretend to be a study for scholars' is more than fulfilled, for his is an uneven and overblown review of all the clichés and many of the anecdotes of the reign. But neither can it be recommended for popular consumption. There are no illustrations, the 'times' portrait is poor, and the last 30 years of his life are surveyed in the last 20 pages."

Choice 9:425 My '72 100w

"This popular biography is intended for the general reader, rather than the scholar. As such, it is useful to those who wish ■ brief, interesting work providing more information about George III than can be found in American textbook treatments of the Revolution—the only source, for many, of knowledge of that king. . . . This work will not be essential for scholarly libraries, but will be useful in larger ones serving a more general audience." R. W. Ryan

LLOYD, ALAN—Continued

Library J 96:2629 S 1 '71 200w

LLOYD-JONES, HUGH. The justice of Zeus. (Calif. Univ. Sather classical lectures, v41) 230p $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

880.9 Greek literature—History and criticism. Philosophy, Ancient
ISBN 0-520-01739-0 LC 71-121190

This book contains six lectures the author gave as Jane K. Sather Professor of Classical Literature "in 1969 at the University of California, Berkeley, dealing with early Hellenic religion-based morality, in particular with the concept of 'dike' ('justice'; the moral world order) and its attachment to the supreme god, Zeus. It examines the Hellenic views of divine justice in the Homeric epics and some of the later poetic, dramatic, philosophical, and historical works (including those of Hesiod, Herodotus, Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides and Thucydides.)" (Choice) Glossary. Index of modern authors. General index.

Reviewed by J. F. Oates

Am Hist R 77:1420 D '72 550w

"[The author] centers not so much on a study of words conveying moral concepts as on situations and behavior illustrating them. [He] tries to steer a middle course between extreme interpretations of Hellenic religion and morality and to enable us sympathetically to understand the early Hellenic view of the world. The work is superbly documented (45 pages of notes). . . . Very readable; its appeal should not be limited to specialists."

Choice 8:1574 F '72 150w

"The real significance of this book is not in its central thesis but in its often masterly assessments of recent directions in scholarship and in its suggestiveness about paths future classical scholarship might profitably pursue. The final chapter, apparently not incorporated in the oral version of the lectures, is especially important in this regard. The production of the book leaves much to be desired. The reader will need a finger at the back of the volume to keep his place in the notes . . . another in the addenda, another in the abbreviations, and . . . yet another in a remarkably uninformative glossary. . . . The setting of the Greek in the notes must be a vast embarrassment to the Regius Professor and, one hopes, to the University of California Press." W. R. Connor

Class World 65:233 Mr '72 600w

"With an understanding of morality as complex as that of the average adolescent, the Regius professor of Greek at Oxford comes equipped to explain how Greek poets, playwrights, and historians presented the relation between morality and religion. So much nonsense has been propounded and accepted within classical scholarship that Lloyd-Jones has an easy time of refuting most of it; but if an intelligent schoolboy reads the Classics in translation, he will find nothing here he has not formulated for himself on a first reading. Lloyd-Jones' most obvious failure lies in his not observing that what we call morality has as its Greek equivalent 'the noble (beautiful) and just things.'" Seth Bernardete

Library J 96:3763 N 15 '71 140w

"Professor Lloyd-Jones has produced a paradigm of humanism, and of that peculiar sense of reality as well as that broad and intricate technical scholarship which have characterized Greek studies at their best. . . . It is a towering and individual achievement. . . . [He] has a happiness of opening and closing and of sudden phrases in common with purely literary writers. . . . [He] devotes some excellent pages to Hesiod. . . . Among the tragic poets, and particularly on Aeschylus, he is at his best, brilliantly persuasive, unexpected and original, densely rich in new insights and scholarly arguments. . . . [He] extends his researches as far as Thucydides and the sophists. . . . Brilliant and fascinating as it is, [this book] will not make relaxed reading for non-specialists."

TLS p365 Mr 3 '72 2200w

Va Q R 48:lxv spring '72 190w

Reviewed by Carroll Moulton

Yale R 62:127 O '72 2350w

LO, KENNETH H. C. Quick and easy Chinese cooking; with decorations by Bobby Altman. 229p $5.95 Houghton

641.5 Cookery, Chinese
ISBN 0-395-13523-0 LC 70-151463

"Mr. Lo begins with Basic Ingredients and Kitchen Equipment and Methods. He then considers broths and sauce, menu-making and portions. After that come the major recipes for Soups, Rice Dishes, Pasta or Noodle Dishes, Pork, Beef, Lamb, Chicken, Duck, Eggs, Fish, Shellfish and Vegetables. A last chapter includes some desserts, or sweets." (Best Sell)

"[This is] one of the best, because lucidly clear and uncomplicated, books on Chinese cooking. . . . Recommended to any cook who is beginning to explore Chinese Cooking." Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 32:44 Ap 15 '72 70w

"For the most part [these] recipes are dull; where other Chinese cookbooks 'strain for authenticity,' this one strains for mediocrity." Sue Pearce

Library J 97:71 Ja 1 '72 90w

LOBEL, ARNOLD. Frog and Toad together. 64p il $2.50; lib bdg $2.92 Harper

Frogs—Stories
ISBN 0-06-023959-X LC 73-183163

This collection of five stories includes: "A List." Toad makes a list of things to do and is lost himself when he loses the list—so he goes straight to bed! Then there's "The Garden," in which Toad yells at his slow-to-sprout seeds and tries to make up for frightening them by playing and singing to them. Frog and Toad face the problem of willpower versus temptingly fresh cookies in the third piece, and explore the quality of courage in the fourth. . . . [In The Dream] Toad finds friendship more precious than fame and glory." (Library J) "Ages six to seven." (N Y Times Bk R)

"'I-Can-Read' may be what it's all about, but those who take children's books seriously are likely to dismiss any work so marked as simply a salable product. . . . Yet Arnold Lobel's second venture into I-Can-Read territory is a worthy sequel to his Frog and Toad Are Friends (BRD 1970). . . . This collection contains more droll tales about the splayfooted duo. . . . Lobel draws with both precision and ease on almost every one of these old-fashioned-looking pages. Whether frog's country cottage or Toad's dreams of grandeur, the pictures make them real. And Lobel's words are full of insight into the concerns of small children. The book is a delight—and a bargain." S. G. L.

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 7 '72 140w

Reviewed by J. F. Smith

Christian Science Monitor pB3 My 4 '72 150w

Horn Bk 48:264 Je '72 130w

"[This] good easy-to-read story . . . [takes] honors at the top of the list this season. . . . Once again, Arnold Lobel has created a masterpiece of child-styled humor and sensitivity." Evelyn Stewart

Library J 97:1926 My 15 '72 170w

Reviewed by Ingeborg Boudreau

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p37 My 7 '72 460w

"A sequel to Frog and Toad Are Friends which was a finalist for the National Book Award and a Caldecott Honor Book last year, [this book offers more] stories of the two friends earnestly solving problems and helping each other. The illustrations and text are blithe and ingenuous. Especially funny is Toad reading poetry and playing music to his newly planted seeds to make them grow. For reading aloud to younger children, as well as for the beginning independent reader." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:80 My 20 '72 80w

LOCKARD, DUANE. The perverted priorities of American politics. 337p $7.95; pa $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

320.973 U.S.—Politics and government—1961-
LC 76-122297

The author "examines the American political system to see what effect certain arrangements—federalism, legislative and executive organization, judicial functioning, the dual party apparatus—have had on individual policy outcomes. . . . He is concerned with such issues as the war in Vietnam and the treatment of blacks." (Library J)

"[Lockard's book] has passion, anger and anxiety for the future of America. But . . . [he] demonstrates that such qualities can be combined with what is best in academic life—scholarship, concern for evidence, and devotion to fairness and justice. The only unfortunate aspect of the book is Lockard's discussion of foreign policy . . . [which] goes on to embrace a number of fashionable 'theories' of American foreign policy, like the doctrine of the 'new imperialism.' The discussion of such issues, as compared with the rest of the book, is simple-minded. . . . These are, however, relatively minor faults. . . . Lockard has made a major contribution to political education, to what will hopefully be a retraining of Americans in political life." W. C. McWilliams

Commonweal 94:504 S 24 '71 900w

"The book is easy to read and Lockard is obviously familiar with the history and workings of the American political system. He admits that he does not take a morally 'neutral' stand in this book and believes that such a stand would obscure the real issues. Doubtless, the publication of this work will inspire other writings on the effect of system on policy. . . . Lockard makes an intelligent case for his views, and libraries would do well to purchase this volume." Hindy Schachter

Library J 96:643 F 15 '71 130w

"[The author's] diagnosis of our troubles and his prescriptions for recovery are cast in generally acceptable forms. . . . He knows what is sound, reasonable, humane, orderly, decent—knows what politics, rightly understood, must amount to. . . . [He] does not presume to offer a structure for perceiving anew the form of the political process. Nor does he perceive a pattern which might help make sense of the ongoing transformation of the forces of the economy and technology. We get a series of well-articulated snapshots and TV clips of current events—but not a view of their context, of their inner meaning. . . . [However, this] volume has its uses. . . . It unintentionally instructs us to look about us in a new way, to create models for seeing not only what we know—the miserable situation which is ours—but also what we might yet know." H. S. Kariel

Nation 212:503 Ap 19 '71 2000w

LOCKLEY, R. M. Man against nature. (A Survival bk) 239p il col il pl $15 Transatlantic

574.5 Natural history—New Zealand. Wild life—Conservation, New Zealand—Description and travel
LC [76-517069]

This book describes the changes in the New Zealand ecological situation first caused by "the arrival of the Maoris with their domestic dogs and rats several centuries after the birth of Christ, [and the consequent] extermination of the giant moas by hunting and the loss of ground-dwelling birds to the rats . . . [followed by] the impact of European man with his deliberate introduction of mammals from Australia, Europe, Asia and North America." (Choice)

"Lockley presents one of the world's most dramatic stories of the ecological impact of man and introduced mammals in a personal and highly readable style. Exterminators, population explosions, major shifts in vegetation, and even a change in the face of the land through massive erosion are brought to vivid life. While not a scientific treatise, this book is based on a combination of intensive study and a feel for the land. It will provide enjoyable and informative reading for anyone interested in the natural scene."

Choice 8:1046 O '71 180w

"In a dignified and readable manner, Lockley describes the deteriorating ecological situation in New Zealand, with detailed examples of the destruction wrought by both man and the animals he brought to the islands from other continents. He also includes an excellent history of the development of New Zealand. . . . Well written and attractively illustrated, this volume is recommended to all libraries." Clarence Gorchels

Library J 96:2528 Ag '71 90w

LOCKRIDGE, RICHARD. Death in a sunny place. 187p $5.50 Lippincott

LC 75-159729

"Enid Towne accepts Lillian Stanton's invitation to visit The Hilltop Club in North Carolina because Aunt Lily says she needs her niece's reassuring company. Although all seems well when Enid arrives, the next morning a guest's body is fished out of the lake." (Sat R)

"The plot is well developed and the characters sound human. After all, Mr. Lockridge has a long list of successful mysteries and suspense thrillers to his credit."

Best Sell 31:450 Ja 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:4033 D 1 '71 100w

"[This] is an example of formula writing without much vitality. . . . The author's approach is urbane, there is a touch of romance, but the story is limp and predictable. Men, too, can write lady prose." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk ■ p24 Ja 30 '72 90w

"[This novel] leads up, with a minimum of suspense, to a solution that fails to surprise." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:73 Ja 29 '72 50w

LOCKWOOD, LEE. Daniel Berrigan: absurd convictions, modest hopes; conversations after prison with Lee Lockwood. 227p $7.95 Random house

322.4 Berrigan, Daniel. Prisons—Connecticut—Danbury. Government, Resistance to
ISBN 0-394-48228-X LC 72-2700

In these discussions held after his release "from the federal prison at Danbury, Connecticut, where he had served seventeen months of his sentence for burning draft records, Father Daniel Berrigan [condemns] . . . the inhumanity and destructiveness of our penal system and . . . [defends] his continuing commitment to resist violence and oppression. . . . He describes the study groups [held with other inmates] . . . that led to the work-and-hunger strike in the prison in 1971 and the prison-wide strike against the war in 1972." (Publisher's note)

"These theologically weighted [comments] . . . carried on by Daniel Berrigan are full of passion and vision and occasional wide-of-the-mark generalizations."

Christian Century 89:990 O ■ '72 30w

"The recounting of the debilitating effects of prison has become a familiar theme. . . . An inside-outside account of the Harrisburg trial also is provided, and a good deal of disappointment is expressed in its failure to become a rallying point for the Movement. Although Berrigan's dependence on moral example as a method of changing society wears one's credulity thin, this is a fascinating, inspiring book that can temporarily make even the sly cynic believe in the goodness of man." Gloria Gehrman

Library J 97:3319 O 15 '72 150w

LODGE, DAVID. The novelist at the crossroads, and other essays on fiction and criticism. 297p $8 Cornell univ. press

823 English fiction—History and criticism. American fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 0-8014-0674-9 LC 77-163130

The author deals with "modes and genres in modern fiction and literary criticism. . . . He explores the relationship between fiction and reality through . . . analyses of individual texts as well as through . . . critical discourse. . . . The title essay assesses the current state of the novel and [is followed by] three . . . studies on fiction and criticism, including an experiment in self-analysis. [Lodge] then discusses fiction and Catholicism as represented in the writings of Graham Greene, Muriel Spark, G. K. Chesterton, and Hilaire Belloc. The last two groups of essays deal with fiction and modernism (Samuel Beckett, Ernest Hemingway, William Burroughs) and Utopian themes in the works of H. G. Wells, John Updike, and others." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Any one seriously interested in the contemporary British and American novel and especially in the criticism of fiction will find this book informative, perceptive, and often provocative. . . . Very readable, nearly jargonless. Most useful for the student attempting to develop a perspective on the complexities of modern fiction or searching for fresh insights into the works of individual writers."

LODGE, DAVID—Continued

Choice 9:369 My '72 180w

"[Lodge] is excellent on writers like Greene and Wells, who are relatively close to his own temperament; and writes a lively, argumentative, splendidly unprofessionalised prose."

Jonathan Kaban

New Statesman 82:864 D 17 '71 230w

"The best things in . . . [this study] are not the general arguments and expositions but the consideration of individual writers, some of them unfashionable, from a liberal viewpoint. There is an excellent article on the attitudes of Chesterton and Belloc towards the Jews, which examines what they actually wrote; a sympathetic examination of what remains imaginatively valuable in Wells's novels; a damaging piece on Burroughs. Most of the essays are occasional, and one or two have actually appeared between covers. Too many of them have the tone of a teacher talking to students ('I propose to examine the relationship between method and meaning in Muriel Spark's fiction'), and for the most part the quality of the insights, like the tone, is moderate."

TLS p252 Mr 3 '72 600w

LOEVGREN, SVEN. The genesis of modernism; Seurat, Gauguin, Van Gogh, & French symbolism in the 1880's. rev ed 241p il $9.50 Ind. univ. press

709.44 Art, French. Modernism (Art). Symbolism

ISBN 253-32560-9 LC 76-135009

The author attempts "to find a pattern in the stylistic and conceptual developments of the period from c1886-91; the particular focus is on the works and ideas of Seurat, Gauguin, and Van Gogh. . . . [Loevgren discusses the] relationship between Symbolist writers and critics and the painters, and their shared attempts to establish a viable art and art theory in a time of economic and psychological crisis." (Choice) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in Stockholm in 1959.

"Essentially a reissue—and a welcome one— . . . [this discussion] is still uniquely rich. [Loevgren's] insights into the qualities and iconography of the major paintings discussed remain challenging if not always convincing. The changes in this edition are very modest. The style of English has been smoothed off here and there, one error in identification has been corrected, and an additional paragraph in one quotation has been added, for example. All text quotations are now given in English, and extensive footnotes, omitted in the first edition, are now included. A few reproductions have been changed. Highly recommended for all libraries without the first edition."

Choice 8:1325 D '71 180w

"Loevgren discusses Gauguin's love-hate relationship with the critics, Seurat's reliance on the brilliant and eccentric theories of Charles Henry, and the similarity between Van Gogh's painting theories and literary tastes. A book whose footnotes are as interesting as its text." P. S. Andersen

Library J 96:3116 O 1 '71 170w

LOEWENBERG, BERT JAMES. American history in thought; Christopher Columbus to Henry Adams. 731p $14.95 Simon & Schuster 973 U.S.—History—Historiography. America—History—Historiography

ISBN 671-20856-X LC 79-139641

The author has undertaken "a four-volume study of American historical scholarship. This first volume . . . mixes details and . . . generalizations about historians and history from Columbus to Henry Adams." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. B. Nye

Am Lit 44:523 N '72 280w

Reviewed by G. D. Lillibridge

Am Scholar 41:677 autumn '72 1250w

"Loewenberg's qualifications as a student of American thought are unimpeachable, and this, his chef d'oeuvre, is truly a work of large proportions. . . . The many portraits are well drawn and should profit newcomers as well as experienced scholars. Yet ultimately the work is a disappointment. Loewenberg does not carry his re-definition of historiography far enough. There is little analysis (and almost none of it is original) of the historical ideas of his subjects. If, in periods of intellectual crisis, historical works and historical thinkers played crucial roles, such episodes are not dealt with by the author. Despite these weaknesses, [the book] remains a valuable introductory study . . . and [is] a genuine pleasure to read."

Choice 9:712 J1/Ag '72 160w

"Loewenberg's unobtrusively learned book is distinguished by its measured judgments of events and by its incisive portraits of the makers and writers of American history. . . . His comments on the collectors and editors and on the emergence of graduate centers of historical study are informative. Other sections seem less so. The pages on the early colonial chroniclers ignore some recent publications on the subject, and in fact the author's thirty-six page bibliography betrays an excessive loyalty to his intellectual mentors. Yet his sympathetic re-reading of forgotten or neglected figures, his conviction that these 'who once created new perspectives now no longer fresh deserve a better fate than polite citation,' may account for the persuasiveness of this well-written and important survey."

Daniel Aaron

J Am Hist 59:672 D '72 600w

"Because Loewenberg carefully introduces each subject before analyzing what has been written about it, one need not have great familiarity with American history to follow his complex ideas. Sympathy and understanding are apparent on every page, as when he writes of John Adams: 'Adams found fault with other men's weaknesses, but he was no more charitable of his own. The severe judgments of his compatriots attest the lack of popularity during his lifetime; it does not explain the lack of appreciation since.' It is good to think that there are three more volumes to come." Jerome Nadelhaft

Library J 97:1808 My 15 '72 120w

LOEWENSTEIN, PRINCE LEOPOLD. A time to love . . . a time to die [by] Prince Leopold of Loewenstein; foreword by Edward Carpenter. 276p $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Gollancz, Diana

LC 74-139053

This is the "story of a gentleman . . . [and his] love for his sick and ailing wife . . . [who] is going to die." (Best Sell)

"The story moves inexorably toward its inevitable destiny at [the wife's] deathbed, and even though this may sound grim or depressing, actually the accent of the tale is on the great love that existed between the man and his affectionate spouse. It is truly a great and good love story, and even though it does tell of the steady decline of the girl into unconquerable cancer, the harshness of the cold fact is tremendously softened by the smoothly-flowing pen of the author. . . . A reader cannot put this book down without a feeling of admiration for [him]. . . . Midway through the book he reveals his feelings toward the Church and toward religion in general. . . . This book is a grand tribute to [his wife's] gentle personality." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 31:58 My 1 '71 750w

"[This book] makes painful reading, and in many respects it raises the same doubts as a whole shelfful of similar books, wrung from their writers under the stress of grief at the loss of a beloved person. Are we not intruding on secrets too intimate for the telling? Do we gain anything except embarrassment by turning our stranger's gaze to the humiliations of a sickroom and listening in to whispers never designed for our hearing? Not that Prince Leopold overplays the drama of his sad story. He is a model of tact."

Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p4 My 30 '71 390w

"There are so many treasures in this remarkable book that sensitive readers will keep going back over especially moving or enlightening parts. . . . [The author] felt compelled to write the story in order to come to terms with his crushing calamity and to try to discover some transcending principle which would bring understanding, acceptance, and comfort to himself and others. This beautifully written, deeply moving, and compelling book is highly recommended." M. L. Garvey

Library J 96:952 M: 15 '71 160w

LOGIC & art; essays in honor of Nelson Goodman. Richard Rudner and Israel Scheffler, eds. 330p il $10 Bobbs

100 Philosophy. Goodman, Nelson
LC 76-140799

"The 16 essays (15 published for the first time) in this Festschrift for Goodman are organized under four headings: 'Science and Mind,' 'Art and Representation,' 'Logic and Language,' and 'Implication and Modality.' ... [Included also] is a bibliography of Goodman's writings." (Library J)

"The subtitle indicates . . . the dimensions of the work. Possibly Goodman's best known work is The structure of appearance (1966). . . . Many of his confreres, among them J. J. C. Smart, E. H. Gombrich, W. V. Quine, M. W. Wartofsky and the editors named above, have contributed essays which may be looked upon together as an informal inquiry into the perspectives of reality and the empirical and conventional elements of report about reality. . . . Needless to say, this makes up an exceedingly impressive volume."

Choice 9:658 J1/Ag '72 130w

"All but one [of the essays] are of high quality philosophically; and that one, by a psychologist, though philosophically naïve, is psychologically informative. Half of the pieces presuppose familiarity with the terminology and techniques of modern logic, and all presume that the reader is familiar with the issues discussed. A collection of valuable essays." Robert Hoffman

Library J 97:2101 Je 1 '72 90w

LOGSDON, JOSEPH. Horace White, nineteenth century liberal. 418p $13.50 Greenwood pub. corp.

B or 92 White, Horace
ISBN 0-8371-3309-2 LC 77-105982

A biography of the editor of the Chicago Tribune and later the New York Evening Post. Bibliography. Index.

"A good, solid biography. . . . This work is based on sound scholarly research in the primary sources and provides a sharp picture of White and the dilemma faced by reformist Republicans in the closing years of the 19th century and early part of the 20th century, as their party lost the reforming, humanitarian zeal with which it was born in the 1850's. Extensive bibliography, critical notes, and index. Should prove most useful for undergraduates and graduate students as well as the general reader."

Choice 9:128 Mr '72 90w

"The career of Horace White poses for a biographer a serious problem: its climax came with the decade 1856-1866 and White did not die until 1916. Joseph Logsdon seeks to overcome this problem by compressing the last forty years of White's life into some one hundred pages, but the solution is not fully satisfactory. The strength of this carefully researched study lies in its depiction of the antislavery and Chicago Tribune phase of White's long career. White's work with the New York Evening Post and his crusades as a Mugwump, Gold Democrat, and anti-imperialist are described with less detail and conviction." R. E. Welch

J Am Hist 59:152 Je '72 350w

LØGSTRUP, KNUD E. The ethical demand; tr. by Theodor I. Jensen; foreword by James M. Gustafson. 237p $3.95 Fortress press

170 Ethics
LC 75-141253

This work "is an existential and phenomenological analysis which makes use of novelists like Lawrence and Forster to establish what are the features of our existence to which the proclamation of Jesus speaks and which it helps us to understand." (Choice) Index of names. Index of subjects.

"Originally published in Danish, this work in German attracted much attention on the continent. This clear and flowing English version will interest many a student of ethics and of moral theology who find the more common analytic or pragmatic approaches unsatisfactory. . . . It compares with [J.] Fletcher's Situation ethics [BRD 1966], in that both are works of moral philosophy even though their ultimate purpose and sources are religious. Løgstrup is, however, clearly more sophisticated and erudite. And though in his own way equally controversial, he is the more insightful and stimulating. Recommended for theological and graduate philosophy collections."

Choice 8:1461 Ja '72 150w

"Jensen's English translation retains the original's remarkable lucidity. . . . [This book] is enthusiastically secular, as empiricist as it is existentialist, more persuasive than not, and withal humane." R. W. Bertram

Christian Century 88:1064 S ■ '71 390w

LOH, PICHON P. Y. The early Chiang Kai-shek: a study of his personality and politics, 1887-1924. 216p $7.50 Columbia univ. press

B or 92 Chiang, Kai-shek
ISBN 0-231-03596-9 LC 70-158461

The author "avoids explaining his subject in terms of Chinese culture and instead employs Erik Erikson's ideas about personality formation in a detailed analysis of the Nationalist ruler's first 37 years. His view is that, as a child, Chiang developed a personality 'incapable of responding normally . . . to a wide range of emotional situations' but able to be 'challenged and fulfilled when confronted with a crisis' which called up his strength of purpose and leadership ability." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Loh seems frequently to bog down in starchy jargonese—for example, 'the moment of his induction into the family' for 'he was born.' The nonspecialist will be hard put to follow the narrative, since scant background information is provided."

Choice 9:119 Mr '72 90w

"Even now, in his 80's, Chiang Kai-shek is one of the least understood men of his times. Loh has gone a long way toward unraveling the mystery of Chiang's personality. . . . He describes Chiang's youthful devotion to the revolutionary cause as being based on psychological rewards rather than ideological commitment; and he analyzes the period of crisis marked by an ungovernable temper and intemperate actions; the subsequent emphasis on traditional Chinese virtues . . . and the development of a personal style of leadership. . . . Loh's book is an important piece of personality analysis of a non-Western leader written for the specialist, but his conclusions will have wide influence on our views about Chiang." D. D. Buck

Library J 97:491 F 1 '72 240w

LOHMAN, PHILIPP H. The art of investing. 352p $8.95 Hawthorn bks.

332.6 Investments. Stocks
LC 73-181552

A "basic survey of the securities investment field. Lohman was vice president and director of training for Walston & Co., and is now professor of economics and finance at the graduate school of Pace College. . . . Index." (Library J)

"A solid groundwork book . . . [this] makes for slow, careful, attentive reading and provides a great deal of useful information."

Best Sell 32:219 Ag 1 '72 50w

"An excellent basic survey. . . . [The] book covers nearly the whole spectrum of investing and is written clearly and simply. It is practical enough to explain how buy and sell orders are executed and how short sales and margin accounts are handled, yet it also discusses what determines the price of securities. The chapter on balance-sheet and ratio analysis is especially good for the novice. There is a summary at the end of each chapter. Recommended for those who want a beginning book on the subject." M. R. Brown

Library J 97:2580 Ag '72 100w

LOIS, GEORGE. George, be careful; a Greek florist's kid in the roughhouse world of advertising [by] George Lois with Bill Pitts. 245p pl $7.95 Saturday review press

B or 92
ISBN 0-8415-0190-4 LC 72-80671

In this "autobiography, Lois, who is now in his early 40's, retraces his life from his boyhood on the streets of the Bronx during the Depression to the present—he is now one of

LOIS, GEORGE—Continued

Madison Avenue's advertising moguls." (Library J)

"In this candid autobiography [the author] ... sets everything down simply, frankly, and unpretentiously, making every effort to present himself just as he is—bluff and hearty and crude. While some readers may be thrown off now and then by the inelegance of Lois's speech (he swears like a trooper), they will discover several fascinating accounts of how the advertising industry operates and many entrancing stories of the people who are involved in various kinds of promotion." A. J. Anderson

Library J 97:2725 S 1 '72 180w

"In racy, sometimes excruciating prose (although it improves as it goes along) [Lois] details a string of successes (Volkswagen's 'Think Small') and, all told, takes one long ego trip for himself. Only, unlike advertising, it's true."

N Y Times E R p38 O 1 '72 80w
Sat N 55:37 N 4 '72 400w

LOMBARDI, JOHN V. The decline and abolition of Negro slavery in Venezuela, 1820-1854. 217p maps $11 Greenwood pub. corp.

326 Slavery in Venezuela

ISBN 0-8371-3303-3 LC 74-105976

This study "is divided into two parts: the slave, manumission and apprenticeship (apprenticeship) systems ... and the long struggle over abolition." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[Lombardi] has produced not a study of slavery but an overview of the politics and economics of abolition; the book deals more with white men than with black. ... Scholars should appreciate the discussions of bureaucratic problems after 1830, of labor and credit patterns in the coffee sector, and of the conflict between human rights and property rights. ... Still, the book leaves many basic questions unanswered [such as] what were the sex ratio and family structure among slaves? What differences, if any, existed between highland and coastal or urban and rural slavery? What was the political position of the individual slaveowners? ... [Lombardi] ... has made a useful start toward explaining a complex problem in a complex period; much remains to be done." J. L. Arbena

Am Hist R 77:605 Ap '72 480w

"Both scholar and informed layman will find this volume worthy of attention though it suffers from repetition and a dehumanized quantitative and legalistic emphasis which is leavened by Lombardi's occasional pungent sarcasm. The research is very good; the bibliographic and footnote references extensive and helpful. Nineteen pages of tables on slaves, manumissions (free born children of slaves), and major exports are valuable. ... The importance of [the] study lies in its expansion of the geographic scope of studies on slavery into a country where slavery was of small economic importance and in its contribution to the long overdue revision of the thesis that slavery was more paternalistic in Latin America than in North America."

Choice 8:1078 O '71 180w

LONDON, JOAN. So shall ye reap [by] Joan London and Henry Anderson. 208p il maps $6.95 Crowell 331.6 Migrant labor. Mexicans in the U.S.

ISBN 0-690-75365-9 LC 76-137823

A social history of the farm labor movement in California from the early 1920's to the present. "Index." (Library J)

"The authors have coldly and calculatingly stripped the patina from California agriculture and have exposed it as a harsh and dictatorial throwback to the days of slavery. The plight of the Mexican-American farm laborers is emphasized, and their leader, Cesar Chavez, receives one of the fairest analyses yet found. Other prominent figures who have become involved in the farm workers' struggle are featured, including John Steinbeck, Martin Luther King, Jr., and Bobby Kennedy. This is a worthy addition to the growing bibliography of farmworker literature and is recommended for general purchase." J. L. Buelna

Library J 96:464 F 1 '71 160w

Reviewed by D. K. Rynne

Library J 96:1537 Ap 15 '71 120w [YA]

"A sober and lucid report." John Womack
N Y Rev of Books 19:15 Ag 31 '72 200w

LONERGAN, BERNARD J. F. Grace and freedom; operative grace in the thought of St. Thomas Aquinas; ed. by J. Patout Burns; with an introd. by Frederick E. Crowe. 187p $9.75 Herder & Herder

230.2 Thomas Aquinas, Saint. Grace (Theology)

ISBN 0-232-51146-2

LC 75-164029

"This is the complete text of Bernard Lonergan's ... study of operative grace in St. Thomas, revised and updated by the author. ... The work traces the historical background on Aquinas's teachings on grace to Augustine, Anselm, and Peter Lombard, and then proceeds to ... [an] examination of Thomas's thought as contained throughout his major and minor works." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index locorum. Index of names and subjects. This study was originally published in 1941 in Theological Studies 2.

"The first and most obvious thing that should be said about this work is that it is not easy. One is immediately dropped into the intricacies of the medieval theological world which seems so foreign to the world of 1972. ... But for most of us the interesting aspect of Grace and Freedom is the mind of the interpreter of Thomas' mind. For many (including non-Catholics) Lonergan represents the most effective thrust of Catholic faith into the realm of contemporary scientific culture. As such, he represents the heritage of Aquinas, not by repeating Aquinas' words, but by doing for our day what Aquinas did for his." R. M. Liddy

America 126:156 F 12 '72 850w

"In his inimitable fashion Lonergan provides succinct and telling insights into the [medieval] theology of grace. ... [This] book—derived from Lonergan's dissertation—is scrupulously well footnoted [and] the notes have been updated. ... Though it is highly 'professional,' its clearly outlined chapters provide introductions, vignettes and conclusions of ready intelligibility and profitable simplicity. Knowledge of medieval Latin, as well as some prior acquaintance with the primary medieval luminaries, will be of considerable help to the reader." Ronald Burke

Christian Century 89:227 F 23 '72 460w

"Lonergan disciples and those interested in problems of theological method will welcome this addition to their libraries. ... [It] will do nothing to diminish Lonergan's reputation as a competent student of Aquinas. ... [but] the material is more limited than the title may suggest. ... [Still, the book is] one that one will still want to have, even after five or ten years. That's probably saying a lot for a book these days." R. P. McBrien

Commonweal 97:115 N 3 '72 350w

"[This] book as a whole is a model of accurate and scholarly exposition of a great thinker of the past, in such a way as to show his relevance to problems of the present day."

TLS p1228 O 8 '71 140w

LONG, A. A., ed. Problems in stoicism. 257p $13 Oxford

188 Stoics

ISBN 485-11118-7 LC 70-563536

"Long is lecturer in Greek and Latin at University College, London. His anthology includes papers by such ... scholars as F. H. Sandbach, J. M. Rist, A. C. Lloyd, S. G. Pembroke, I. G. Kidd, G. Watson, and two contributions by A. A. Long himself. Most of the material appears in print for the first time and deals with problems of Stoic epistemology, logic, metaphysics, and ethics. According to the editor, the book is a 'statement of work in progress'; the topics dealt with have already been treated in recent literature, and further publications by the contributors are due to appear soon. Many of the essays were presented at a series of seminars in the Institute of Classical Studies, University of London." (Choice) Bibliography. Indexes.

"Most of the essays are too scholarly for the undergraduate reader and the nonspecialist; they include a profusion of Greek terms, either in transliteration or in the original Greek, and many untranslated quotations from Greek and Latin sources and even some untranslated quotations from French and German scholars. However, the one or two more readable articles, such as those on freedom and determinism and natural law, would justify this book's inclusion in an undergraduate college library. Copious notes at the end of each chapter, significant bibliography, index of quotations arranged according to author, index of Greek and Latin words, and index of proper names."

Choice 8:1461 Ja '72 160w

"F. H. Sandbach discusses two epistemological problems. He examines in the first chapter the concept of kataleptikē phantasia. In the second chapter (previously published in Classical Quarterly) Sandbach deals with ennoia and prolepsis. . . . J. M. Rist helps sort out some of the confusion surrounding the Stoic doctrine of categories. . . . [His] chapter previously appeared in his Stoic Philosophy. . . . A. A. Long in the most valuable chapter . . . interprets lekta in their function of mediating between sounds and 'states of affairs'. . . . The second section of the book shifts the emphasis to ethics. . . . This collection of essays constitutes a long overdue recognition that Stoicism is philosophically interesting and packed with problems. The three indices are most helpful." Louis Roberts

Class World 65:97 N '71 600w

LONG, BARBARA. The Civil War day by day. See Long, E. B.

LONG, E. B. The Civil War day by day; an almanac, 1861-1865, by E. B. Long with Barbara Long; foreword by Bruce Catton. 1135p maps $17.50 Doubleday

973.7 U.S.—History—Civil War
LC 73-163653

The text of this book "begins in November, 1860, and ends with the conclusion of hostilities in May, 1865, and the start of reconstruction. . . . [It] is divided into months, each month preceded by a summary which helps to set the military and political facts in context of the time and reveals the attitudes of people, North and South, toward the war at that point. This . . . volume [also includes] special studies, covering the facts and figures of population, casualties, and the economics of the war." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index by dates. Index to special studies.

"[This is an] encyclopedic daily running account of the war, including both the major actions and the minor skirmishes. . . . Barbara Long has prepared a series of excellent maps. E. B. Long served as director of research for Bruce Catton's The Centennial History of the Civil War [Vol I BRD 1961 and 1962; Vol II BRD 1963; Vol III BRD 1965], and this book is designed, in part, as a supplemental volume to that work. Recommended." W. E. Parrish
Library J 97:1419 Ap 15 '72 80w

"Mr. Long writes well, although with necessary terseness."

N Y Times Bk ■ p40 F 6 '72 40w

LONG, JOHN H. Shakespeare's use of music: the histories and tragedies. 306p $11 Univ. of Fla. press

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Songs and music. Shakespeare, William—Stage history
ISBN 0-8130-0311-3 LC 61-17588

"Long attempts to determine the functions of the performed music, the manner of performance, the original music scores or notation (when possible), and the significance of these data to peripheral problems of interpretation, text, staging, and stage history. . . . The first two books of this three-volume work [are] Shakespeare's Use of Music: A Study of the Music and Its Performance in the Original Production of Seven Comedies, and Shakespeare's Use of Music: The Final Comedies." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"No scholar has done greater service in extending our knowledge of the use of music in Shakespeare's plays than John Long, who here completes the trilogy that is the fullest treatment of the subject. . . . Like its predecessors, this book is admirable in exposition and clarity, abounding with musical examples (including appendices with typical military and ceremonial music). The bibliography is excellent. . . . Footnotes appear on the proper page. There is no confusion about what can be proved and what is conjectural. The best part for the general reader is coming to understand better characters, circumstances, and even whole plays, through the music employed: music to underline stage action, to emphasize the sense of order, to create psychological effect, to show proper scene division of undivided Folio scenes."

Choice 9:1144 N '72 200w

"[This study is] conscientious, lucid, and precise. Its chief value is practical: J. H. Long furnishes the producer with suitable contemporary music for every sound effect demanded in the histories and tragedies. The musical material is impressive, and it is the book's best feature. The rest is a literary analysis of the sound effects' import. This is initially undermined by the author's ignorance of the distinctions between authorial and playhouse directions in the original Quartos and the First Folio. He is consequently driven to ingenious and elaborate elucidation of what are mere duplications and plain compositorial errors. . . . Luckily, such faults are local. More pervasive is Professor Long's critical naivety. The book's narrow focus [leads to] . . . analysis of trivialities. . . . However, critical simplicity does not exclude occasional insights."

TLS p867 J1 23 '72 330w

LONG, NORTON E. The unwalled city; reconstructing the urban community. 208p $6.95 Basic bks.

309.1 Cities and towns—U.S. Sociology, Urban
ISBN 0-465-08898-8 LC 72-76903

In this study of how to solve the social and economic problems that exist in cities, the author deals with "the economics of local labor and housing markets, production and consumption of public and private goods, and the politics of city and metropolitan decision-making. . . . Long argues that [the urban problem] . . . may rather be between the way the city needs to use its resources and the way it actually uses them. The central dilemma of the metropolitan area is that of equalizing the conditions of citizens in political power and access to public goods while providing for the differentiation of consumption within its local economy." (Choice)

"[This book is] necessary reading for those concerned about the present agonies and alternative futures of U.S. cities. . . . Although a political scientist by profession, Long is an astute student of the new urban economics. He sees the city whole and avoids the clichés that prevent seeing it anew. This book is worth plucking from the torrent of urban literature to read, to think about, to quote, and like the others, to argue with occasionally."

Choice 9:1008 O '72 230w

"This well-written book will be of interest to laymen and scholars alike. Much of the text is devoted to an analysis of the origins of the critical situation facing the central cities; Long provides an excellent review of the wide spectrum of views on the problem held by other writers, and also of the solutions that they have put forward." E. B. Murphy

Library J 97:2623 Ag '72 150w

LONGLEY, LAWRENCE D. The politics of electoral college reform, by Lawrence D. Longley and Alan G. Braun; with ■ foreword by Birch Bayh. 222p il $10; pa $2.95 Yale univ. press

324 Presidents—U.S.—Election
ISBN 0-300-02587-9; 0-300-01588-7 (pa)
LC 72-75202

This "book summarizes the creation and operation of the electoral college, its performance in the elections of 1960 and 1968, and various proposals for its reform. Among the plans for reform are the 'automatic elector' plan, which eliminates the possibility of an elector being faithless to the electoral mandate, and the 'direct vote' plan, which completely abolishes the present electoral college system. The authors favor the latter plan, as does Senator Birch Bayh in his brief Foreword." (Library J)

"There is ample documentation (33 pages of footnotes!) and a good index. . . . I find the book's argument [for direct election is] informative, objective and satisfyingly specific in its conclusions." P. G. Steinbicker

America 127:16 J1 8 '72 260w

"All this book attempts to accomplish as ■ scholarly study of problems of the electoral college—and more—has been done and in a superior manner by the recent Voting for President; the electoral college and the American political system by [W. S.] Sayre and [J. H.] Parris [BRD 1971]. . . . One looks in vain for the 'politics' promised in the title. . . . Not recommended."

LONGLEY, L. D.—Continued

Choice 9:1204 N '72 180w

"This book is one of Yale's 'Fastbacks'—works designed to provide up-to-date material on critical topics in the contemporary world; it achieves this goal, and many libraries will wish to purchase it." Hindy Schacter
Library J 97:2170 Je 15 '72 120w

LONGSTREET, STEPHEN. We all went to Paris; Americans in the City of light: 1776-1971. 448p il $10.95 Macmillan (N Y)

920 Americans in Paris. Paris—Social life and customs
LC 78-165572

An account of the passions, loves, joys, and sorrows of some of the Americans who lived, and sometimes died, in magical Paris. Included are Benjamin Franklin, James Whistler, Edith Wharton, Gertrude Stein, Henry Miller, Ernest Hemingway, Cole Porter and Richard Wright.

"A meandering account of some of the things that happened to some of the Americans who at one time or another happened to visit Paris. . . . The writing is very gossipy, full of innuendo and inaccuracy (Alfred Perles, Arthur Miller's friend, is referred to consistently as Perkes). Longstreet delights in the sex histories of his famous folk and refers with enthusiasm to 'limp-wristed charms,' 'bohemian venality,' and 'aberrant pleasure.' Despite all that, Paris and the people discussed here are too good material to make a completely bad book. Entertaining trivia." Dorothy Nyren
Library J 97:2392 J1 '72 170w

"Books about la vie Bohème are a commonplace, but the subject continues to fascinate. Longstreet, who has been collecting diaries, letters, clippings, etc., for years, has written a big book that surveys the long procession of expatriates. . . . Mr. Longstreet is episodic, and the effect is rather like those Newsreels in early Dos Passos. But the book has genuine flavor: 'We all had a girl,' said Hemingway, 'and her name was Nostalgia.'"
N Y Times Bk R p10 Ap 23 '72 150w

"A march-past of Americans who, for one reason or another, went to Paris and in some way were forever marked by the experience. The parade . . . does not get into its swing until the artists and writers appear in the hordes that reached their peak in the years after the First World War. The book has no validity as historical scholarship and no stylistic charm; the author acts like a ringmaster as he brings out his very well-known performers. . . . He patronizes them, he condescends to them . . . and in the end he cheapens them. Drawings, by the same hand."
New Yorker 48:143 Ap 29 '72 150w

LOOMIS, CHARLES P. Marxist theory and Indian communism; a sociological interpretation, by Charles P. Loomis and Joan Rytina. 148p $7 Mich. state univ. press

335.43 Communism—India
SBN 87013-151-6 LC 70-130282

"This volume analyses classic and contemporary Marxist thought primarily as a sociological, rather than economic, theory of 'the class antagonism of the productive process.' Loomis's 'Processually Articulated System'—a method for comparative analysis of beliefs, sentiments, goals, status-roles, power, sanctions, boundary maintenance, and other social processes—helps explain Indian Communism's ideological divisions, responses to nationalism, and ways of accommodating its materialistic purview to India while competing with Gandhian and other life-views current in India today. The work grew out of a seminar on Marxism at the National Institute of Community Development in Hyderabad." (Publisher's note)

"This volume contains two appendices. Appendix B is a brief summary of the PAS Model [Processually Articulated System]. Appendix A consists of two parts: the first, by Mohit Sen . . . is an attempt to defend dialectical materialism against the attacks of the authors; in the second, Dr. Gautam Mathur . . . comments on the inapplicability of Marxian analysis to modern economics. This reduces the major portion of the book to slightly more than 100 pages—which, at $7.00, is a rather expensive publication even by today's inflationary standards. Regardless of their theoretical disposition, students of political sociology and political theory, especially of Marxist thought, may well wish to acquaint themselves with this work. Students of Indian communism, however, would find the effort less rewarding." J. P. Haithcox

Am Pol Sci R 66:254 Mr '72 900w

"An Indian socialist's criticism of the paper, included in the appendices, is correct in questioning Loomis's knowledge of Indian Marxism. Loomis is more concerned with an opportunity to explain his favorite concepts, with Indian Marxism drafted into service as an occasional backdrop, than to develop a thorough or systematic critique of Indian socialism. Because of the book's brevity, the treatment of Marxist thought in general suffers from excessive compression. Loomis raises some interesting questions about the adequacy of Marxist ideas to Indian conditions but he fails to develop them clearly."

Choice 8:290 Ap '71 130w

LOOMIS, STANLEY. The fatal friendship; Marie Antoinette, Count Fersen and the flight to Varennes. 341p il $9.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Fersen, Hans Axel von, Count. Marie Antoinette, consort of Louis XVI, King of France. France—History—Revolution, 1789-1799
LC 72-173388

This is the story of Marie Antoinette, Queen of France, and her friend the Swedish nobleman. Loomis attempts to answer such questions as: "Were Fersen and Marie Antoinette lovers in the full physical sense? How constant was Fersen's love? Did Louis XVI know of the affair? What was Fersen's part in the planning and execution of the Royal Family's disastrous flight to Varennes?" (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by V. J. Collimore

Best Sell 31:506 F 15 '72 430w

"Loomis concentrates on the destiny of three human beings caught in tragedy—Louis XVI, Marie Antoinette, and her probable lover, the Swede, Count Fersen—and largely ignores the tidal forces which bore them to disaster. . . . The skill of [the author] lies in this—he invests this well-known story with real suspense. Although we know that the King, the Queen, the Dauphin, the King's sister are all going to die, we feel that they might not. . . . With exceptional dexterity Loomis maintains the suspense, even though the result is foregone. . . . It becomes almost unbearable to read the last four pages as they are trapped in Varennes. As sheer story this would be hard to beat, but it is far more than story. Loomis has a novelist's insight into character and a deft skill in bringing back the historical dead into vivid life. And his Marie Antoinette is more credible than any that I know." J. H. Plumb

Book World p4 F 6 '72 1200w

Choice 9:869 S '72 130w

"This exciting account . . . has all the proven elements of a best seller—love, intrigue, and self-sacrifice set against a background of momentous political events. . . . Well-written and packed with colorful details of the French court, this book requires no special knowledge to follow the intricate narrative of events. Unfortunately, the author's literary style is superior to his historical scholarship. Most of the works cited in his bibliography are memoirs of doubtful veracity or older secondary works whose generalizations have since been challenged by historians." J. A. Clarke

Library J 97:1314 Ap 1 '72 130w

"The hallmark of [the author's] writing in this as in his previous book on Paris during the Terror, is fairness. He never stretches a fact to suit a thesis. He never chooses among conflicting interpretations the one that will best advance his narrative. He does not tug at our heartstrings. These qualities of measure and restraint contribute to the persuasiveness of his account. . . . Because Mr. Loomis refuses to embellish the evidence, Fersen, usually presented as a romantic hero, emerges as an unsympathetic, secretive, deceitful man, only partly redeemed by his devotion to the queen." Sanche De Gramont

N Y Times Bk R p 10 Ap 16 '72 800w

New Yorker 48:147 My 6 '72 240w

"Whether or not Fersen became the Queen's lover in deed rather than in name only has been (and still is) a subject of controversy.

Stanley Loomis . . . claims that he was, and offers interesting quotations from their correspondence and from Fersen's journal as proof of his contention. . . . The familiar story is well told, smoothly written, and well researched. The author's familiarity with primary source material is impressive." Barbara Levy
Sat R 55:80 F 12 '72 600w

LOOS, ANITA, jt. auth. Twice over lightly.
See Hayes, H.

LÓPEZ, FRANCISCO PÉREZ. See Pérez López, F.

LOPEZ, ROBERT S. The commercial revolution of the middle ages, 950-1350. 177p $5.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall

330.9 Commerce—History. Economic conditions
ISBN 0-13-152934-X; 0-13-152926-9 (pa)
LC 79-160536

"Analyzing first the character and collapse of Roman economic life, Lopez then traces the revival of agriculture, commerce, and manufacturing in medieval Europe. . . . [He] treats demography, coinage, techniques of business and finance, products and routes of trade, and the complex patterns of socioeconomic expansion and contraction from the mid-10th to the mid-14th century." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This is] an interpretive essay and [is] not documented (except for a short but valuable bibliography). . . . It should be read in conjunction with Lynn White's Medieval technology and social change (BRD 1962), thus bringing the technological progress of the period into a clearer focus than Lopez achieves." Choice 9:546 Je '72 130w

"[The author] doesn't limit his discussion to commerce alone, but instead traces the interrelationships between commerce, politics, agriculture, religion, etc. As a result, the reader is presented with a lucid synthesis of the economic history of the Middle Ages. Because Lopez attempts to explain the commercial revolution as the basis for the industrial revolution, this little volume should be read by students of modern history as well as by those of medieval history." K. G. Madison
Library J 96:3608 N 1 '71 100w

LORD, JOHN. The maharajahs. 241p pl $7.95
Random house
915.4 India—Kings and rulers
ISBN 0-394-46145-2 LC 73-159356

"Introductory chapters review the age of the Moguls and the coming of the British, and others tell the stories of princes such as the 7th Nizam of Hyderabad, reportedly the richest man in the world; Sir Tukoji Rao III, heir of a great Mahratta king who was to die penniless, Sir Madhav Rao Sindhia of Gwalior, the greatest tiger hunter of all time; and . . . Nawab Sultan Jehan, Begum of Bhopal, who ruled in spite of purdah." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Christopher Hibbert
Book World p6 D 5 '71 350w

"The princes of India discussed here were feudal barons living in medieval splendor in the modern age. . . . The more important came directly under the viceroy's suzerainty, and it was this group that presented to the world a picture of fabled magnificence. . . . An informal, readable, sometimes gossipy, but accurate account." S. L. Hopkinson
Library J 97:496 F 1 '72 180w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall
New Statesman 84:199 Ag 11 '72 350w

"[This book is not likely to be] on college reading lists, and yet students might read it with profit before turning to scholarly monographs. [It is] curiously old-fashioned in its approach to the past, but it provides a summary of the past against which more serious, or at least more original, scholarship can analyze and evaluate Indian history. . . . [It will appeal] to the mythical 'general reader'." A. T. Embree
Pacific Affairs 45:447 fall '72 240w

LORD, WALTER. The dawn's early light. 384p pl $8.50 Norton

973.5 U.S.—History—War of 1812
ISBN 0-393-05452-7 LC 73-163373

In this account of the War of 1812, the author describes "the capture and burning of Washington, . . . [the] repulse of the British at Baltimore, and . . . General Jackson's . . . victory at New Orleans." (Atlantic) Index.

"As a narrative, [this work] . . . is handicapped by a weak beginning. It requires a special skill to describe the movement and encounter of troops, and this Mr. Lord possesses to a limited degree, with the result that the first third of his text reads like a chicken yard where the roosters are being decapitated. The characterization of President James Madison and his Cabinet members is superficial. . . . The burning of Washington was a disgrace, and there are times when the author sounds as confused as its defenders. . . . Mr. Lord's narrative accelerates in interest and confidence in the latter half of the book, and his account of the reaction in London, where the level-headed Wellington had from the first taken a dim view of the British armada, bears a distant parallel to our distress in Vietnam." Edward Weeks
Atlantic 230:94 J1 '72 500w

Reviewed by W. H. Archer
Best Sell 32:171 J1 1 '72 600w

"Battles can make dull reading. But not in this book—not in Mr. Lord's account of the heartbreaking defeat at Bladensburg that left Washington open to the burning, devastating British. When Mr. Lord drops names he likes to drop remarkably small ones, a device that somehow brings the past very near." Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 19 '72 600w

Economist 245 [book survey p15] N 11 '72 70w

"Lord's detailed account . . . is filled with enough human-interest stories to keep it from becoming just a run-of-the-mill military history." Jerome Nadelhaft
Library J 97:2090 Je 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by Karen Stevens
Library J 97:3822 N 15 '72 120w [YA]

"The War of 1812 was an important war and a very strange war—and, for lack of a theoretical underpinning, Mr. Lord's stage has a very fragile and transitory look. Exciting as this little book has often been, one puts it down with an empty feeling: for it is, after all, with the irrevocable (not the usable) past that Mr. Lord has been dealing. His carefully marshaled evidence now appears as the faint trace of a huge something that has vanished beyond recall. His many actors merely remind us of the other thousands upon thousands of people, citizens and soldiers, whom his narrative has not and could not have observed. Thus, his book, for all its engaging qualities, has become at the last little more than a memento mori. And history, whatever else it may be is never that." George Dangerfield
N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 23 '72 1050w
New Yorker 48:82 J1 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper
Newsweek 80:80 Ag 28 '72 650w

LORIOT, NOËLLE. See Oriol, L.

LOSHAK, DAVID. Pakistan crisis. 152p maps $6.95 McGraw

320.9549 Pakistan—Politics and government
ISBN 0-07-038752-4 LC 71-38934

The author "writes of the conditions that led to the brief Indo-Pakistan war which resulted in the birth of the world's newest state, Bangladesh." (Sat R) Chronology.

"Many people would have been deterred from writing on the Pakistan troubles so soon. But Mr. Loshak, the south Asia correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, has plunged in and produced a good little book, short on facts and figures, but giving valuable background. His basic thesis is that the attempt to join such very disparate territories, 1,000 miles apart, by the thin thread of a common religion in a united Pakistan was doomed from the very beginning, and this leads him on to a pretty wholehearted support for an independent Bangla Desh. In reaching this conclusion Mr. Loshak makes some fair points in favour of the West Pakistan regime. . . . While Mr Loshak supports the case for a Bangla Desh, he is . . . gloomy about what an independent Bangla Desh would mean."

LOSHAK, DAVID—Continued

Economist 241:67 O 23 '71 390w

"The author writes well when he deals with events he personally encountered; the historical part is scrappy and the last chapter obsolete, although a postscript makes mention of the war, which at the time of writing was still in progress. A useful book for understanding recent South Asian history." B. G. Gokhale

Library J 97:1302 Ap 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by Neville Maxwell

N Y Rev of Books 18:8 Mr 23 '72 700w

"[Loshak's] account is valuable—not least because he was one of the few neutral outsiders to witness the horrors that preceded the outbreak of full-scale war. Reports written by men who must rush from one area of conflict to the next . . . frequently show signs of [haste. The] . . . last-minute, four-page postscript, written just after the Indian army had captured Jessore but before the fall of Dacca, begins: 'As anticipated, all-out war between India and Pakistan . . . eventually erupted on December 3, 1971.' Yet he himself had not anticipated that India would go to war with Pakistan. . . . A more serious flaw . . . is that the people involved in [this account] lack life and depth. Despite all its bloody scenes, the book remains curiously bloodless. . . . Even prominent figures seem curiously hollow or simply flat." Alexander Campbell

Sat R 55:69 Mr 4 '72 3500w

TLS p1502 D 3 '71 1050w

LOTTINVILLE, SAVOIE, jt. ed. Soldier in the West. See Hine, R. V.

LOUIS XIV, King of France and of Navarre. Mémoires for the instruction of the Dauphin; introd. tr. & notes by Paul Sonnino. 281p $7.95 Free press

B or 92 France—History—Bourbons, 1589-1789
LC 70-81669

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by B. R. Barber

Ann Am Acad 399:203 Ja '72 800w

Reviewed by H. G. Judge

Engl Hist R 87:423 Ap '72 600w

Reviewed by Orest Ranum

Pol Sci Q 87:301 Je '72 600w

LOUIS, WILLIAM ROGER. British strategy in the Far East, 1919-1939. 284p $10.50 Oxford 327.42 East (Far East)—Foreign relations—Great Britain. Great Britain—Foreign relations—East (Far East)
ISBN 0-19-822346-3 LC [75-3545550]

This study deals with Great Britain's diplomatic and economic policies in the Far East between World Wars. Bibliography.

"Louis' book uses newly opened British archival papers. He writes well, and it is a pity that he allows copious use of quotation to interrupt at times the flow and grace of his argument."

Choice 9:114 Mr '72 120w

"[This is a] scholarly and generally sound, if at times impressionistic, survey of the period. The title [Louis] has chosen for his work may be thought infelicitous, seeing that common usage has given the word 'strategy' a military connotation that it can now scarcely hope to shake off. For the book has little to do with the plans and activities of the armed services in the Far East: it deals almost entirely with British diplomatic and economic policies. . . . It cannot be said that Professor Louis presents an entirely new interpretation of the facts. From time to time he appears to be on the verge of making much of the problem of race; but as a scholar he is too honest to press this argument in the absence of weighty documentary evidence that might sustain it. He paints a rather attractive picture of the operations of British diplomacy in the Far East 40 and 50 years ago."

Economist 240:49 Ag 14 '71 390w

"The book provides a very rewarding review of a subject and a period that has suffered from a shortage of new material to the extent that it has tended to become the haunt of stereotypes and clichés, some of which have for the first time had a large-scale exposure to new facts. There are considerable parts of the book that retain too much of the format of an anthology, contending views being left to 'speak for themselves.' Others, such as the chapter on the economy of the Far East, analyze specific situations. In general, the book is uneven in approach though individual subjects are effectively and interestingly handled. It has a map, useful selected bibliography, and an index." J. A. White

Pacific Affairs 45:277 summer '72 340w

LOUIS, WILLIAM ROGER, jt. ed. France and Britain in Africa. See Gifford, P.

LOVE, JOSEPH L. Rio Grande do Sul and Brazilian regionalism, 1882-1930. 311p il $10 Stanford univ. press

981 Brazil—Politics and government. Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil (State)
ISBN 0-8047-0759-6 LC 71-130829

"This analysis of the state's political dynamics is in two parts. Part One emphasizes internal developments from 1882 to 1908, and Part Two deals with the influence of Rio Grande do Sul in national politics from the maneuvering for control of the presidency in 1909 to the revolution of 1930. The author traces the complex relations between modernization and political centralization, showing how state governments continued to account for most major social and economic initiatives in Brazil down to Vargas's assumption of power." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by L. A. Tambs

Am Hist R 77:854 Je '72 390w

"Love's account . . . immediately preceding and during what he calls the 'Old Republic' . . . is based on a well-assimilated bibliography almost exclusively in Portuguese, plus seventeen months of residence in Brazil. Extensively documented and fascinatingly written, it affords a detailed picture of a previously neglected era. Analyzed are the development of a highly disciplined political organization under the leadership of an organizing genius, Julio de Castilhos . . . and the increasingly significant role, meanwhile and subsequently, of Rio Grande do Sul in the national political order. . . . There is an epilogue, to bring the story up-to-date." Donald Pierson

Ann Am Acad 400:201 Mr '72 380w

"An excellent, scholarly analysis of the social and economic development of the southernmost state in Brazil. It also examines the political importance of that state in Brazilian history down to the early 1960's (in spite of its title). . . . Footnotes and bibliographic information are clear and very useful. Love has even included a brief glossary that will clarify obscure words or terms for the casual reader. This book . . . should be in the library of any institution offering work in Brazilian history. There is no comparable work in English, and for sheer factual content, there is nothing like it in Portuguese on this part of Brazil."

Choice 8:1241 N '71 90w

LOVEJOY, DAVID S. The glorious revolution in America. 396p $15 Harper

973.2 U.S.—History—Colonial period
ISBN 06-012721-X LC 71-156533

This work "traces the effect of English colonial policy in America after restoration of the monarchy in 1660, including rebellions led by colonists whose convictions foreshadowed . . . those of the revolutionary generation a century later. The Glorious Revolution of 1688, which toppled Catholic James II from his throne and ended a century of turmoil, was cheered by most Americans. News of William and Mary's success provoked revolt against James' American governors the following year. Lovejoy describes the causes and consequences of the overthrow of the Dominion of New England in Boston, the eviction of Lord Baltimore's regime in Maryland, and the rise and bloody fall of rebel Jacob Leisler in New York—all attempts by Americans to exploit England's religious and constitutional crisis of 1688." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This is a scholarly and detailed study of the Colonies from about 1675 to 1695, with particular emphasis on events in the major Colonies. . . . The bibliographic essay and notes are exhaustive. Highly recommended." E. D. Johnson

Library J 97:2590 Ag '72 200w

"[Lovejoy's] research is thorough, and his reach in time and space is impressive. . . . He is strong on the English background, and especially on the shifting locus of responsibility for colonial policy. Lovejoy is at his best in explicating the formal language of public documents to reveal the colonists' underlying political consciousness. . . . On the debit side, [the book] is dry going in some stretches. Its substance is fairly institutional, developmental and is made to seem almost inevitable. There is little drama, much detail, and some awkward problems of organization. We hop back and forth chronologically, hither and yon geographically; and sometimes we get a sense of déjà vu. . . . Still, this is a judicious and significant book, the best we now have on the subject." Michael Kamen

N Y Times Bk R p5 N 12 '72 1050w

LOVELAND, ANNE C. Emblem of liberty; the image of Lafayette in the American mind. 196p $7.95 La. state univ. press

973.3 Lafayette, Marie Joseph Paul Yves Roch Gilbert du Motier, Marquis de
ISBN 0-8071-0804-9 LC 70-142336

The author "attempts to describe and analyze America's reaction to the Marquis de Lafayette from his grand tour of the U.S. in 1824 and 1825 until his death in 1834. One . . . chapter traces American attitudes about him from 1834 to the 20th Century. He was hailed as a super-patriot who served a cause solely for freedom's sake." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The author sensibly concentrates on the tour when much American attention was focused on Lafayette. [She] competently touches on the main strands of American response, but often stretches her argument beyond what her evidence can bear. . . . [Her] conclusion that 'Americans made Lafayette their primary exemplar' of virtue is not borne out by her evidence and is contradicted by the nineteenth-century deification of Washington." David Grinstead

J Am Hist 59:133 Je '72 550w

"Loveland, assistant professor of history at Louisiana State University . . . rightly believes that we can learn something about Americans by studying their creation of a Lafayette image. Unfortunately, she chooses to draw a composite image, not differentiating often enough between the attitudes and opinions of Northerners and Southerners, conservatives and liberals. Seldom do we learn what lies behind American evaluations." Jerome Nadelhaft

Library J 96:4009 D 1 '71 130w

LOVERIDGE, RONALD O. City managers in legislative politics. 224p $8.50 Bobbs

352 Municipal government by city manager
LC 73-140112

The author "examines the city manager as a political actor and his relation to the process of policy making as it exists today. Using data gathered in interviews with 435 city councilmen in 87 cities and towns in the greater San Francisco Bay area, he traces the history of the City Manager plan and points up how the plan has worked in actual practice." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book] needs a subtitle which indicates that the data are from the San Francisco Bay area. . . . The information was collected in 1966 and 1967 from both interview and mail questionnaires including more than 100 city managers and 350 councilmen. . . . The author informs us that this is one of a few, if any, scientific studies of the city manager. If this be social science, and by the canons of the social science establishment it most certainly is, then one might hope for a counterscience which is steeped in an empiricism whose theory is more existentially based. Theory should be grounded in the game play itself of managers, councilmen, and significant others." R. E. Edgar

Ann Am Acad 400:210 Mr '72 440w

"The general discussion of the city manager movement (Chapter 2) and the description of different policy strategies used by city managers are especially good. Other sections, however, suffer from a slight overdose of role theory jargon. Given the increasingly frequent adoption of the manager form of local government, all college libraries should add this volume to their urban politics collection."

Choice 8:1382 D '71 120w

LOVESEY, PETER. Abracadaver, 220p $4.95 Dodd

ISBN 0-396-06627-5 LC 72-3146

This novel is set in Victorian England. "A series of accidents occurs in a series of different music halls which, when finally someone sends a warning note, attracts the attention of Sergeant Cribb and his phlegmatic assistant (on such excursions) Constable Thackeray. They are present at the midnight show at the Paragon Music Hall when a young lady is murdered during a 'disappearance' act." (Best Sell)

"The plotting is almost incredible, but the ambience and the background are novel and intriguing."

Best Sell 32:283 S 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3934 D 1 '72 80w

"Lovesey . . . tries to imbue his writing with a Victorian flavor. The result is pleasant reading, even charming reading." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 15 '72 80w

"The nineteenth-century London of Holmes and Watson and the return of that delightful Scotland Yard Team, Sergeant Cribb and Constable Thackeray make [this novel] pure entertainment. The artistes of London's famed music halls are being insidiously sabotaged. Moustaches twirl, ladies take to their beds with the 'vapours,' (alimentary, my dear Watson) and, when it all gets sticky wicket, edicts echo across the Thames: 'The Yard has watched and waited long enough.' Lovesey, author of . . . Wobble to Death, [BRD 1970] has a special flair for re-creating Victorian England with to-the-manner-born wit. I love Lovesey." O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:89 O 28 '72 100w

TLS p783 J1 7 '72 40w

LOW, D. A. Buganda in modern history. 265p pl $8.75 Univ. of Calif. press

967.6 Buganda—Politics and government
ISBN 0-520-01640-8 LC 73-100019

"This book is a collection of seven . . . essays on Uganda and Buganda. . . . [Topics discussed include] relations between the Kingdom of Buganda and the Republic of Uganda during and after the independence struggle. . . . the religious revolution in 19th-century Buganda. . . . 'The advent of populism in Buganda,' . . . [as well as] 'Political parties in Uganda, 1919-62.'" (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"There is a certain amount of perhaps unnecessary repetition among the . . . essays, but the major insights cannot be faulted, and the total effect is cumulative. . . . Low sets out 'the attitudes of mind which the Buganda have displayed on issues of major importance to them,' so in his essays he keeps in focus the continuously complicated relationships between the Kingdom of Buganda and the larger protectorate, now the nation, of Uganda." Prosser Gifford

Am Hist R 77:1492 D '72 200w

Choice 8:719 J1 '71 120w

"The author writes with great perception on the later stages of colonial rule. He provides a balanced and sympathetic assessment of the role of the late Sir Andrew Cohen as Governor. He is full of praise for the work of Sir Keith Hancock at the Namirembe Conference at which the first formula for the return of the Kabaka from exile was evolved. The main strength of his study, however, lies in his careful analysis of the shifting balance of power within Buganda itself, beginning long before independence for colonies was even discussed. He is particularly interesting, for instance, on the continuing conflict over the interpretation of the early British-Buganda agreements, a conflict between the theory of an alliance of equals and the practice of control of British power. It was, as he shows, by no means a one-sided conflict."

TLS p648 Je 4 '71 750w

LOWE, ALFONSO. The barrier and the bridge; historic Sicily; written and ill. by Alfonso Lowe. 200p $6.95 Norton

914.58 Sicily—Description and travel—Guide books
SBN 393-05436-5

This account "is divided into two parts; the first, 'Mainly People,' discusses Sicilian history and focuses on the long line of conquerors of the island—from the Greeks to Garibaldi. . . . The second part, 'Mainly Places,' draws the reader beyond the traveled sites to spots where . . . little-known architectural remains testify to the variety of Sicily's many talented builders." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Lowe's book offers a sympathetic appreciation of the fabled island. . . . The author's frequently opinionated historical judgments are at times inaccurate, as in his ubiquitous misnomer 'Dionysus' for the tyrant 'Dionysius I. . . . [He] believes that the facts of Sicilian history, in order to be fully understood and enjoyed, must be taken with 'a generous helping of legend.' The result is an offbeat guidebook with some uncommon insights. The color and black-and-white illustrations, however, are not of first quality." Elizabeth Cameron

Library J 97:2597 Ag '72 140w

"For anyone interested in the cultural club sandwich that the island of Sicily represents, this handy little volume should be very valuable. It is not precisely a history, but it notes countless facts of historical interest; it is not precisely a guidebook, but it can serve as a superior one. Mr. Lowe has obviously been over practically every square foot of the island and delights in correcting misinformation found in traditional guidebooks. He is full of knowledge about pre-Christian influences."

New Yorker 48:79 J1 22 '72 160w

LOWI, THEODORE J. The politics of disorder. 193p $6.95 Basic bks.

320.5 U.S.—Politics and government
SBN 465-05965-1 LC 74-156941

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Dale Pontius

Ann Am Acad 39:230 Ja '72 290w

Reviewed by Peter Lyon

Encounter 39:73 J1 '72 140w

Reviewed by Robert Nisbet

Va Q R 48:117 winter '72 2500w

LOWITT, RICHARD. George W. Norris; the persistence of a progressive, 1913-1933. 590p ill $15 Univ. of Ill. press

B or 92 Norris, George William
SBN 252-00176-1 LC 76-147923

In this second volume of a projected three-volume biography, "Lowitt examines Norris's influence on critical issues from the crisis leading to World War I, through the Versailles Peace Treaty, to the . . . plight of rural America through the 1920s and the depression. . . . [He analyzes] major currents in American history from the viewpoint of a senator interested both in traditional progressive reforms and in social and economic reforms that included government ownership and operation of public utilities throughout the 1912-1932 period." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index. For volume one, George W. Norris: The Making of a Progressive, 1861-1912 see BRD 1964.

"The research for this book was meticulous, the footnotes are ample, the style is very readable and the paraphrasing of Norris' many speeches and articles is excellent. . . . [The issues of these years] are adequately discussed in this welcome volume. The index is accurate, the essay on bibliography is of lasting value. Both author and publisher are to be congratulated upon this must book for understanding progressivism in 1913-1933." George Osborn

Ann Am Acad 402:163 J1 '72 650w

"[Lowitt's] writing sustains interest. Moreover, Senator George Norris of Nebraska is there: after reading the book we know the man, defects and virtues. . . . Lowitt has deliberately limited his scope and so we learn much more about Norris himself than the wider political content in which he moved. The author grapples with almost none of the major historical problems that Norris' career touched. It is particularly frustrating that Lowitt pulls back in a book coming so close, time and again, from extending itself into that context. . . . On the grounds he has chosen, the life of Norris himself, Lowitt is strong, though he did not use the Hoover papers, which were opened almost five years before he published. But this is a rare omission in a work that makes especially intelligent use of . . . primary materials." David Burner

J Am Hist 59:753 D '72 350w

"[[This biography is] balanced in its judgments, the first worthy of a man because of whose dreams—as Hiram Johnson put it—'human beings may be a bit happier.'"

N Y Times Bk R p[28] My 21 '72 220w

LOWMAN, EDWARD W. The how-not-to-miss-the-cocktail-hour cookbook, by Edward W. Lowman with Robert E. O'Donnell. 242p $6.95 McKay

641.5 Cookery
LC 70-150667

The emphasis in this cookbook "is on preparation well beforehand and the use of canned and frozen [foods] to make work easy so that one can spend all but a few necessary minutes with one's guests instead of popping in and out of the kitchen." (Best Sell)

"Good for those who fancy this kind of amateur-gourmet cookery." Friede Gruenrock
Best Sell 31:408 D 1 '71 60w

"Not content to devise a series of holding patterns, coded SA, R, RO, F and TAG, [the author] lumbers further into N.O.O.C.D. Not of our class, darling!—which is what he dubs inferior prepared foods. . . . Despite the leaden cuteness (probably Robert O'Donnell's fault) and the consuming passion for MSG. . . the fact is that the fellow is a fairly inspired cook. So skip the preamble (and the MSG), and revel in the recipes for hearty rustic dishes, spoon breads, and such delicacies as caviar and artichoke aspic or eggplant and oyster pie. My one question is: why 4 teaspoons of vanilla where 1 will suffice in the familiar sand cookie?" Nora Magid

Book World p5 F 13 '72 130w

LOWRY, RITCHIE P. Sociology; social science and social concern [by] Ritchie P. Lowry [and] Robert P. Rankin. 2d ed 692p ill $10.95; pa $5.95 Scribner

301 Sociology
SBN 684-12708-3; 684-12712-1 (pa)
LC 74-37182

In this second edition of a book which first appeared in 1969 "new material has been added on drugs, counterculture, population control, the future of education, and the sociology of urban riots. . . . There is one new chapter, 'The dynamics of conflict.' (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index of authors and researchers. Index of subjects and concepts.

"The book is written largely from an implicit functionalist or social systems point of view which lends it an inherent conservative bias. On a more general level, the authors are quite successful in accomplishing their basic purposes of demonstrating how theory and substantive research are interrelated; how differing and competing sociological perspectives serve to improve the general state of the discipline; and how sociology is both a purely scientific endeavor and a potentially valuable tool for human betterment."

Choice 9:1212 N '72 180w

"Religion receives due attention in this . . . introduction to sociology."

Christian Century 89:634 My 31 '72 40w

LOYE, DAVID. The healing of a nation. 381p $8.95 Norton

301.45 U.S.—Race relations
SBN 393-08628-3 LC 75-123409

In the first part of this book alternating chapters present "segments of black history in America, each followed by findings from present social science that can enhance understanding of the events of that period. Frustration-aggression, dissonance, identity and self-actualization, social Darwinism, and conformity are among the theoretical formulations considered in these early chapters. Part II builds upon the group dynamics approach of Kurt Lewin and suggests how present technology and imaginative leadership by a 'great President' could produce the reordering of national priorities required to cure the sickness." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"An insightful application of well founded social and psychological theory to the 'black-white sickness' of racism in the U.S. . . . Loye's use of theory is competent without being dry; his program is workable, if optimistic. An excellent example of the social relevance of current social science."

Choice 9:96 Mr '72 120w

"This is an ambitious book. Loye seeks to analyze and suggest a remedy for the 'black and white sickness' in America. To this end, he gives the first part of the work over to an analysis of the sickness, alternating chapters on the black experience with chapters on social science research which help to explain the historical phenomenon he describes. This technique, superb and innovative, is clearly superior to the second half of the book, which offers a cure for the sickness. As a firm believer in social science research, Loye offers his remedy in an offhand manner, stating that on the issue of curing racism 'the problem is not the lack of proven measures, but the lack of healers.' . . . An important book, albeit one certain to create controversy. Essential for all libraries." F. A. Burdick

Library J 96:1695 My 15 '71 130w

LUARD, DAVID EVAN TRANT. See Luard, E.

LUARD, EVAN, ed. The international regulation of civil wars. 240p $8.95 N.Y. univ. press

341.6 International law. United Nations—Armed Forces. Civil war
SBN 8147-4953-4 LC 79-185330

"This book discusses the causes and resolution of major civil wars, from Spain in the 1930s to the post-Second World War upheavals in [various countries]. . . . There are chapters devoted to the implications of international law in this field, and the practical problems of UN Headquarters and UN peace-keeping forces. In the final chapter the editor draws . . . conclusions about the international regulation of civil conflicts." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The fact that the replacement of external wars by internal conflicts is an important modern international political phenomenon lends contemporary relevance to this work. . . . Luard draws some useful generalizations both on the rapid increase of civil strife and methods devised to regulate it. Other general chapters cover legal problems (Roslyn Higgins) and U.N. peacekeeping operations (by two ex-U.N. generals). All other contributors are British scholars except for two Americans. . . . For what it intends to do, [this book] . . . is detailed and complete and serves as an excellent supplement to studies on U.N. peacekeeping."

Choice 9:1204 N '72 200w

"The seven case-studies which form the first part of the book are on Spain (1936-39), Greece (1946-49), the Lebanon (1958), Laos (since 1959), the Congo (1960-64), the Yemen (1962-67) and Cyprus (since 1964). The four authors . . . add many more examples. . . . Mr Luard shows . . . a commendable loyalty to the United Nations (in which he has served himself) and a disposition to believe the best of it. His disposition to believe the worst of the great powers is less well founded. . . . In a sense, the weakness of this book is that all the contributors are so expert. It would be impossible to find anyone better qualified than Hugh Thomas to write on Spain or than John Campbell to write on Greece, and so on. . . . It must regretfully be concluded that Mr Luard has failed in his editorial role of either extracting or imposing a clear common theme. These are individually interesting essays, but a book deserving the title has still to be written."

TLS p407 Ap 14 '72 1500w

LUBAC, HENRI DE. The eternal feminine: a study on the poem by Teilhard de Chardin, followed by Teilhard and the problems of today; tr by René Hague. 272p $6.95 Harper 232 Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre. Love (Theology)
LC 77-871482

"Basing his study on a poem written by Teilhard when he was a stretcher-bearer during World War I, de Lubac explores Teilhard's philosophy of love and virginity. He traces Teilhard's growing awareness of love as the 'fundamental impulse of life' . . . [and] elucidates Teilhard's concepts of analogy and transfiguration. . . . The second part of this commentary contains chapters on Teilhard and the problems of today, a personal God, Jesus Christ, the church of Christ, and tradition and obedience. Although Teilhard's poem, written when he was about 30 years old, expresses only the beginnings of his ideas on love, de Lubac refers to letters and essays written during his entire lifetime." (Library J)

"The unique merit of this work is to be found in the first chapter which traces the development of the essay from its conception in Teilhard's mind to its birth in the written form now available to us in Writings in Time of War [BRD 1968]. . . . As a Frenchman, a Jesuit and a Christian humanist [the author] has insights into Teilhard's thought that will remain a basic source of inspiration and knowledge for any real Teilhardian scholarship." Catherine O'Connor.

America 126:578 My 27 '72 600w

"De Lubac demonstrates again the utterly charming subtlety and simplicity of this great thinker, so often crudely misunderstood. . . . However, one wishes that the publisher had included the text of The Eternal Feminine with de Lubac's commentary." G. M. Casey
Library J 96:1278 Ap 1 '71 200w

"[The author here] offers two books in one. The first half is devoted to an analysis of one short poetic text by Teilhard. Then Fr de Lubac expounds his reaction to the current upheaval in the Catholic Church through an affirmation of Teilhard's standpoint on a number of issues which are under debate today. Fr de Lubac's study of The Eternal Feminine is a masterly piece of literary, theological, and biographical inquiry. . . . The second half of the book is less attractive. . . . Fr de Lubac's exegesis is sound within its limits. But he fails to treat adequately those texts in which Teilhard envisaged a transformation of Christianity, incorporating old and new visions."

TLS p1399 N 5 '71 260w

LUBECK, STEVEN G., jt. auth. Silverlake experiment. See Empey, L. T.

LUBENOW, WILLIAM C. The politics of government growth: early Victorian attitudes toward state intervention, 1833-1848. 237p $10
Archon bks.

309.142 Great Britain—Social policy. Railroads and state. Great Britain—Politics and government—19th century
ISBN 0-208-01227-3 LC 70-26511

The author "discusses four aspects of [English] lawmaking in the second quarter of the nineteenth century: poor law reform, public health, railways, and hours of factory labour. He aims to show how power was shared out between central and local authorities." (TLS) Bibliography.

"An interesting book. After examining Victorian [social] legislation. . . . Lubenow concludes that the term 'welfare state' is at this time a misnomer. . . . Early Victorian social legislation is best understood within the context of traditional politics, not as socialist attempts at creating a welfare state. There are points of agreement with writers such as . . . D. Roberts [in] The Victorian origins of the British welfare state [BRD 1961], while also extending our understanding of the issues as Victorians saw them. Select bibliography is an excellent guide for students and libraries."

Choice 8:1238 N '71 140w

"The book began as a doctoral dissertation at the University of Iowa, prepared under Professor Aydelotte. Some of the professor's great learning has rubbed off on the pupil, but not much of his wisdom; and the words they use in Iowa to describe what people did in England a century and a half ago are not always easy for Englishmen to follow today. . . . [Dr. Lubenow] has filled more than a fifth of his book with scholarly apparatus, including many long notes. . . . But he does not always seem to understand what purpose notes might serve, nor always to grasp the quality of the material he has handled. He relies mainly on the parliamentary papers and reports. He frequently analyses divisions in the House of Commons, among eight small parties—without informing us how he decides who belonged to which party. . . . Again, he treats all members of the House of Commons as if they carried equal weight. . . . This is hardly history; nor is it desirable that historians should have to spend their time ploughing through it."

LUBENOW, W. C.—Continued

TLS p10 Ja 7 '72 500w

LUCAS, JOHN. The melancholy man; a study of Dickens's novels. 353p $9.50; pa $4.50 Barnes & Noble

823 Dickens, Charles
SBN 416-07340-9; 416-07350-6 (pa)

In this study, "each of Dickens' successive novels is discussed to show how the novelist achieved increasing technical discipline over certain major motifs, such as the dilemma of freedom, the need to be prescriptive, and the problem of depicting social and human probabilities." (Choice) Index.

"Sane, well written, and respectful literary criticism is too rare. Lucas' study of Dickens' artistry has all these characteristics and the additional benefit of affection for both the novelist and his novels. . . . This book, however, avoids the current tendency to concentrate upon biography, topical themes, or critical disputes. . . . Admirers of Dickens will find some unusual judgments. . . . The independence of such observations and the intelligent, detailed rigor with which they are argued are a delight. Any college library with a biography of Charles Dickens should have a few companion volumes of criticism such as this one."

Choice 8:1179 N '71 170w

Economist 237:xxi N 21 '70 40w

"For John Lucas, Dickens is 'far and away the most intelligent of all English novelists.' . . . Dr. Lucas is an acute, fully engaged and loving critic, most helpful perhaps on the earlier works, about which (in the current state of Dickens criticism) there remains most to be said; he is excellent, for instance, on Barnaby Rudge, the importance of which in Dickens' intellectual and artistic development he, like Angus Wilson in his recent The World of Charles Dickens [BRD 1970] . . . persuasively argues."

TLS p1521 D 25 '70 950w

LUCE, GAY GAER. Body time; physiological rhythms and social stress. 394p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

574.1 Biology—Periodicity. Physiology
ISBN 0-394-46891-0 LC 70-162394

The author of Insomnia (BRD 1969) and Sleep (BRD 1966) has written a book about the role of biological time cycles in our health and enjoyment of life. Topics discussed include Tides of life; Travel, work schedules, and isolation; Sleep, dreams, and the biological hour; Daily changes; Rhythms of symptoms and cells; Hours of vulnerability and resistance to drugs and illness; Time and the consequences of stress; Periodic symptoms in sickness and health; Light—a link with the rhythms of earth. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 228:135 D '71 50w

Reviewed by F. J. MacEntee
Best Sell 31:399 D 1 '71 270w

"Rhythm is a basic fact of life. . . . Luce's summary and interpretation of the research on biological cycles as they apply to man indicate that rhythms may be pertinent to medical diagnosis, surgery, and drug effectiveness, as well as work schedules. Though the work is not easy to read, it presents an excellent coverage of the field and is thoroughly documented. A valuable bibliography of recent works is appended." S. B. Hesslein

Library J 96:3336 O 15 '71 130w

LUCID, ROBERT F., ed. The long patrol. See Mailer, N.

LUCID, ROBERT F., comp. Norman Mailer; the man and his work. 310p $6.95 Little 818 Mailer, Norman
LC 78-161853

An anthology of criticism on the American writer.

"Although this first collection of critical essays about Norman Mailer seems at first to fill a definite need, it may finally be quite limited in its readership audience. Most of the 17 pieces included are by major critics; but because many have been printed elsewhere, the book provides little service to the advanced student of Mailer. Nor is the book entirely satisfactory as an introduction for the undergraduate. With the notable exception of Richard Foster's study . . . most of the essays selected demand a set of shared intellectual assumptions absent in the average undergraduate."

Choice 9:61 Mr '72 170w

"The high points of this [book] . . . include Calder Willingham's brilliantly scathing verbal assault; penetrating essays by Richard Poirier and Leo Bersani on An American Dream and by John W. Aldridge on Why Are We in Vietnam? . . . Unfortunately, though, only five of the 17 pieces (all originally published elsewhere) have appeared since 1967, when Mailer's writings began to rekindle significant critical attention. As a result, the essays are rather redundant in their concern with the tired old question of Mailer's notorious public career, especially since Lucid himself resolves the problem admirably in his introduction. . . . Although there is a checklist of Mailer's published work, it is not balanced with a checklist of criticism on Mailer. These weaknesses seriously lessen the volume's usefulness." P. A. Dollard

Library J 96:4014 D 1 '71 150w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards

N Y Rev of Books 18:21 Je 15 '72 700w

"[This collection] should surely win for Mailer both new and more respectful readers, for here are critics writing, whether in praise or condemnation, about a man whom they clearly consider a literary phenomenon of great importance. The book contains an extremely discerning and appreciative introduction by Mr. Lucid, Richard Foster's fine long study, which first appeared as one of the University of Minnesota Pamphlets on American Writers, the early and classic essay by Diana Trilling and by Norman Podhoretz, Elizabeth Hardwick's delightfully indignant and mostly uncomprehending review of An American Dream, as well as other pieces of varying quality and temper by such critics as Alfred Kazin, Tom Wolfe, Midge Decker, Jack Richardson, Gore Vidal, and Dwight Macdonald." J. W. Aldridge

Sat 54:45 N 13 '71 1450w

Va Q R 48:civ summer '72 160w

LUCIE-SMITH, EDWARD, Jr. ed. French poetry today. See Taylor, S. W.

LUCIE-SMITH, EDWARD, comp. Primer of experimental poetry. 138p $5.95 Bobbs

808.81

LC [71-580303]

"The purpose of this . . . anthology is 'to illustrate, in schematic form . . . the close connection between literary modernists and the innovators in the visual arts.' Thirty-six poems are included, representative of Symbolism, Modernism and the fusion of the arts, war poetry, Dada, and the . . . language experiments of Stein, Hugo Ball, and Khlebnikov." (Library J)

"Because of its rigid selectiveness salient aspects of . . . [this] poetry are more clearly grasped than would be possible in a more general, inclusive anthology. All foreign poems appear in the original and in translation. . . . Many of the poems are not otherwise available in English, and there is no other book which deals with experimentalism from this angle, especially with such exemplary conciseness. With section introductions and biographical notes. Recommended for all poetry collections." J. W. Charles

Library J 96:2649 S 1 '71 140w

"Lucie-Smith is right to point out that few scholarly attempts have been made to examine the common preoccupations of modern painting and poetry, and he is well-equipped to make a start on the problem. Whether the first Primer of Experimental Poetry can be considered more than a tentative start is a more debatable matter. . . . [The author's] introductions strike no sparks; in fact they offer only very sketchy information by way of help."

TLS p1168 O 1 '71 420w

LUCKETT, RICHARD. The White generals; an account of the White movement and the Russian civil war. 413p il $10 Viking 947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921
SBN 670-76265-2 LC 79-149019

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 9:556 Je '72 140w

Reviewed by A. S. Birkos
Library J 97:496 F 1 '72 100w
TLS p1295 O 27 '72 200w

LUCKHAM, ROBIN. The Nigerian military; sociological analysis of authority & revolt, 1960-67. (Cambridge. Univ. African studies centre. African studies ser, 4) 376p $18.50 Cambridge

966.9 Nigeria—Armed Forces. Nigeria—Politics and government
ISBN 0-521-08129-7 LC 73-152643

This is an "analysis of the structure of the Nigerian army and an attempt to account for its behavior during the turbulent period from independence (1960), through the two military coups in 1966, and up to the initial stages of the Nigerian/Biafran war. There are . . . presentations of the strains within the army and the stratification of its loyalties in terms of . . . the effects of regional and tribal affinities, educational and institutional ties, and the effects of the . . . rapid promotion of Nigerian officers to replace the departing British." (Library J) Index of names. Index of subjects.

"This is a major work which makes use of much sociological theory and many conflict models to help explain concrete events. Luckham has extracted detailed statistical information out of publicly available sources on African armies which has great comparative potential. The book is certainly essential reading for all who would attempt to understand or analyze the period of military rule in Nigeria." Barbara Callaway

Ann Am Acad 402:173 J1 '72 1150w

"[This book is] destined to become a definitive study in military sociology in the tropical African context. . . . [It] includes 43 tables, two appendices, and good indices—though no bibliography. Strongly recommended for university and professional collections on Africa and civil-military relations."

Choice 8:1498 Ja '72 120w

"[This study is] not only significant from a historical point of view; it is important for an understanding of Nigeria's current power structure. . . . Luckham did not conduct his study to provide Nigeria-watchers with a political crystal ball—his work is of much wider and more serious application—but to stress its practical use is not to deny its academic value."

Economist 241:65 O 16 '71 470w

"While the author attempts to remain neutral, the last section, which deals with political analysis, seems less critical in its approach. In particular, the role of foreign interests in federal policy formation and the difficult problem of the minority tribes require deeper exploration. This is, in short, not a definitive study, but certainly a very useful one." M. M. Reik

Library J 97:69 Ja 1 '72 140w

LUKACS, GEORG. Lenin: a study on the unity of his thought [tr. by Nicholas Jacobs]. 104p $4.95; pa $1.95 MIT press

335.43 Lenin, Vladimir Il'ich. Communism
ISBN 0-262-12-047-X; 0-262-62-024-3 (pa)
LC 74-165074

This account is concerned with "the theory and practice of Lenin. It is . . . an attempt . . . to show the relationship between the two, written in the belief that it is precisely this relationship which is not clearly enough in evidence, even in the minds of many Communists." (Foreword)

"[The author] evaluates Lenin's credentials as a Marxist and finds them genuine. Lukács, an Hungarian Marxist philosopher, argues that those who point to Lenin's voluntarism as a deviation from the teachings of Marx misunderstand the essence of Marxism which according to Lukács, is not a rigidly deterministic system. . . . [He] provides a most interesting interpretation of Lenin, but it requires of the reader at least some knowledge of Marxist terminology and Russian history. The publishers have provided a useful set of explanatory notes."

Choice 9:425 My '72 130w

"This is among the more acceptable offerings for the Lenin centenary year. Its 85 year old author, who wrote it immediately after Lenin's death in 1924, shortly after he himself had been severely criticized for publishing an ideologically suspect book, is still an admirer of Lenin."

Economist 235:54 My 23 '70 80w

"Not the least interesting feature of the present volume on Lenin is the short post-script written for its republication in 1967. It is an elusive document. Mention is made on the first page of the falsity of the 'solutions' offered by Stalin and his followers to the developing crisis of the revolution, though with the hint that nobody else would have done better. But, apart from a reference to 'dogmatism in theory and sclerosis in organization, which Stalin himself also continually condemned, it is not clear what 'solutions' are meant, or why Lukács now regards them as false."

TLS p1295 N 6 '70 850w

LUKACS, GEORG. Solzhenitsyn; tr. from the German by William David Graf. 88p $6.95; pa $1.45 MIT press

891.73 Solzhenitsyn, Alexander
ISBN 0-262-62021-9 (pa) LC 77-158648

"The late Hungarian Marxist philosopher and critic has here applied his methodology to a critique of the novella One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich [BRD 1963] and [to] the two long novels, The First Circle [BRD 1968, 1969] and The Cancer Ward [BRD 1969]." (Library J)

"[This] is less literary exegesis than a polemic on socio-ideological concepts in literature, studded with references to mimesis, social praxis, stasis, and 'totality of reactions.' For those unversed in Marxian dialectic, this may be heavy going—thorny and repetitive. Lukács sees Solzhenitsyn as a worthy successor to the socialist realists of the 1920's, with roots in the revolutionary tradition of Tolstoy and Dostoevsky, but finds his criticism of the Stalinist era based on a 'plebian' rather than 'communist' attitude. . . . A rather doctrinaire appraisal, first published in Germany in 1969 but still of considerable interest as a Marxist reaction to Solzhenitsyn's achievement." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 96:3614 N 1 '71 150w

Reviewed by István Mészáros

New Statesman 81:273 F 26 '71 500w

"[This] is a slim, somewhat contrived book. . . . [The essay on] Ivan Denisovich originally appeared in 1964; the second [essay] . . . came out in 1969. Both appear to have been hastily written, and their publication adds little to Lukács's reputation. While [the book] contributes little to our understanding of the Russian novelist it reveals a good deal about the thought of the Hungarian critic near the close of his long career. Briefly, Lukács tried, until the very end, to reconcile within himself the disciplined Marxist and the objective literary theoretician. . . . That he was less than successful is amply demonstrated by the tortured reasoning displayed in these two essays. The ponderous prose style—all too faithfully reproduced in [the] translation from the German—is an additional aggravation." Maurice Friedberg

Sat R 54:60 D 4 '71 1200w

TLS p868 J1 23 '71 200w

"[A] gem of a little book. In it, Lukács sees Solzhenitsyn as the harbinger of a new current of socialist humanism (note humanism, not realism) in literature. 'Socialism with a human face' was one of Lukács' own shibboleths, and he believes it was the desire to humanize socialism that led Solzhenitsyn to write the brilliant 'Ivan Denisovich,' 'Cancer Ward' (which Lukács compares with 'The Magic Mountain'), 'The First Circle,' and other masterpieces. Though one does not have to agree with everything Lukács says about Solzhenitsyn, it must be recognized that this study represents the finest criticism anyone has yet written about that distinguished Soviet author."

Va Q R 48:xiv winter '72 140w

LUKÁCS, GEORG. The theory of the novel; a historico-philosophical essay on the forms of great epic literature; tr. from the German by Anna Bostock. 160p $5.95 MIT press

809.3 Fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 0-262-12048-8 LC 73-158647

Lukács' "theoretical work on the novel . . . begins with a comparison of the historical conditions that gave rise to the epic and the novel. In the age of the novel the once known unity between man and his world has been lost, and the hero has become an estranged seeker of the meaning of existence. Later Lukács offers a typology of the novel based on whether the hero struggles for the realization of a meaningful idea, or withdraws from all action. The balance of these extremes forms the third possibility, and each type is exemplified." (Library J) Index of names. Index of subjects.

"The book is not a study of artistic technicalities, but of man, history, and art tied closely in their development. It is written in a moving, lyrical style well rendered by the translation." Zoltan Feher

Library J 97:2187 Je 15 '72 150w

"[According to the author the] novel, the characteristic modern form, was 'the epic of a world that has been abandoned by God,' 'the form,' said Lukács quoting Fichte, 'of the epoch of absolute sinfulness.' One responds more to the grand Calvinist sweep of Lukács's argument than to its details. Like a preacher conjuring up the awful destiny of 'Man,' he is exclusively concerned with this fallen animal 'The Novel.' . . . Nor does the language of the book help, at least in its English translation. It seems, indeed, to be aspiring towards the condition of English without quite achieving it. . . . What gets through is a desperate reverie upon the nature of estrangement, on the fatal separation of the individual, the hero of the novel, from the world he lives in." Jonathan Raban

New Statesman 82:864 D 17 '71 650w

LUKACS, GYÖRGY. See Lukács, Georg

LUKAS, RICHARD C. Eagles East; the Army air forces and the Soviet Union, 1941-1945. 256p $10 Fla. state univ. press

940.53 U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia. Russia—Foreign relations—U.S. World War, 1939-1945—Aerial operations
LC 78-126957

This is an account "of men and planes and how they served American military and political objectives during the Second World War. . . . [The] author describes the air force aspects of Russo-American wartime relations and the problems . . . [of] that collaboration." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"Lukas examines such main themes as Lend-Lease, base rights, internee release, bombing jurisdiction. He has done his homework well, especially in American archives. Especially useful are the detailed bibliography, index, and appendix recording U.S. aircraft shipments—from transfusion to 'overdose.' [Despite] an unexciting style, . . . [this] lucid and fact-crammed [book] deserves inclusion in upper-division undergraduate libraries, and without fail in research-oriented collections." Choice 8:1370 D '71 170w

"This study of Russo-American relations during World War II begins with an analysis of the impact of operation Barbarossa in the summer of 1941 as the Nazis swept across Russia. . . . Originally a doctoral dissertation completed at Florida State University in 1963, [the book] reflects extensive research and effective writing. An excellent balance has been achieved between factual presentation and interpretation." S. H. Frank
J Am Hist 58:800 D '71 900w

LUNDEEN, LYMAN T. Risk and rhetoric in religion; Whitehead's theory of language and the discourse of faith. 276p $9.50 Fortress press

200.1 Religion and language. Whitehead, Alfred North
ISBN 0-8006-0050-6 LC 71-171501

This is a "study in the philosophy and language of religion." (Christian Century)

"Lundeen contributes an important alternative for the present dialogue concerning religious language. Those most interested in this problem . . . have usually sought a way to affirm the significance of religious utterance while avoiding all metaphysical commitments. Whitehead's analysis of language, however, focusing upon the connectives of speech and its interplay with environment, uncovers its implicit metaphysical fabric. Of interest to both students of philosophy and religion, this book can also be read as an introduction to Whitehead's thought via the analysis of language. A reworked doctoral dissertation, it is somewhat repetitious and overly cautious, but it is careful, thorough, authoritative, and well documented. The topic has not been handled in detail elsewhere."

Choice 9:1140 N '72 140w

"There is no point in disguising the fact that this is a fairly technical study. . . . Given the current interest in 'process thought' and the renewed interest in Alfred North Whitehead, this Whitehead essay should draw attention in the theological world."

Christian Century 89:634 My 31 '72 60w

LUNN, JOHN E. Ralph Vaughan Williams; a pictorial biography [by] John E. Lunn and Ursula Vaughan Williams. 119p $10.75 Oxford

B or 92 Vaughan Williams, Ralph
ISBN 0-19-315420-X LC [79-885544]

Vaughan Williams' widow "and Lunn have put together this collection of nearly 300 pictures, gathered from many sources. They provide a panorama of Vaughan Williams' life from childhood to death in 1958." (Library J) Chronology.

"An excellent visual record of [the composer's] life. The pictures] . . . are attractively arranged in sepia and black-and-white. . . . A slim, expensive volume, but a fitting remembrance of a composer who was for so many years a vital part of England's musical life." B. D. Henry

Library J 97:2100 Je 1 '72 190w

"One thinks of Vaughan Williams as a composer of music . . . he did many other things in his long life—served in the army, went on walking tours with his friend Gustav Holst, dug his garden, collected folk-songs, played tennis, served on committees. The snapshots in this family album show all these activities even when, as is the way with snapshots, they are under-exposed. More formal pictures show him receiving honorary degrees, rehearsing, conducting, relaxing with friends and bowing acknowledgements. The story is told mainly in captions but the pictures are supplemented with . . . a list of works, and an essay on the family background. . . . A panorama of English musical life in the twentieth century is unfolded." TLS p131 F 4 '72 310w

LUPO, ALAN. Rites of way; the politics of transportation in Boston and the U. S. city [by] Alan Lupo [and others]. 294p il $7.95 Little 388.4 Transportation. Boston—Politics and government. City traffic

LC 72-167850

"This is a case study of Bostonians battling the highway builders. The . . . account of the protest movement is followed by an analysis of the planning, political and administrative dynamics of transportation in eight large cities in the United States." (Ann Am Acad) "Index." (Library J)

"With many insights into the nature of urban transportation politics and with the lessons learned in organizing to fight the 'highway establishment,' the book is valuable for courses such as urban problems, community organization, and public policy. . . . [It] is a useful guide for others intent on changing transportation plans or policy." J. R. Bell

Ann Am Acad 401:193 My '72 440w

"It is refreshing to read of how the poor and blue-collar workers with the aid of young professional advocates can change the course of events through organization and demonstrations. . . . Public rapid transportation alternatives to highways are emphasized. In all, a useful addition for urban affairs and most large political science collections." D. A. Bower
Library J 96:3311 O 15 '71 130w

LURIE, LEONARD. The king makers. 271p pl $7.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

329.6 Republican party. National convention, 25th, Chicago, 1952
LC 74-166587

The author describes events and persons at the 1952 political convention in Chicago which culminated in the nomination of General Eisenhower and Senator Nixon as the Republican party's candidates for the office of president and vice-president. Index.

"[This is a] book which manipulates facts and spews innuendo. When not dealing in irrelevancies—the book oscillates between 1952 and today as though to educate the readers and 'round out' the narrative—it deals with myths, half truths, and exaggerations. The dramatic personae—in this case the leading Republicans—are evil, incompetent, power-grasping politicians conspiring to divide the spoils. The book contains no documentation and no bibliography. . . . It is filled with trivia. . . . The author ends this negative and graceless book with a shallow analysis of the nominating convention." J. F. Menez

Best Sell 31:486 F 1 '72 1250w

"Lurie adds to his stature as a journalist with a well written presentation of the events at the 1952 Republican Presidential nominating convention. . . . In the last two chapters, however, Lurie enters the realm of political prescription. The moralisms he gives us and the remedies he proposes for the hypocrisy, chicanery, and unbridled ambition which he sees the present nominating system encouraging, are one-sided, bereft of a solid discussion of implications, and, all in all, best left unread. . . . All in all [however, this is] a worthwhile description of a particular convention."

Choice 8:1642 F '72 190w

"Though scholars will cavil at Lurie's failure to footnote his sources, readers of [his book] will find a reasonable objectivity, a freedom from the egocentricities of the New Journalism, and a gift for bringing minor and major figures alike into clear focus."

New Repub 165:28 O 30 '71 260w

LURIE, LEONARD. The running of Richard Nixon. 409p pl $10 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

B or 92 Nixon, Richard Milhous, President U.S.

ISBN 698-10441-2 LC 72-76660

Lurie is chairman of social studies for the New York City school system. His book "traces Nixon's development from his youth in California to the present day. The emphasis of the author's case against him focuses on the years from his entrance into Congress in 1946 to his election as President in 1968. Lurie sees Nixon as a man completely lacking in principle, statesmanship, or honesty, and driven compulsively by political expediency and lust for power." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"I do not recall any statement in the 409 pages that is actually favorable to Nixon. . . . This is a long, detailed biography, decidedly unfriendly in tone." Paul Kinyery

Best Sell 32:259 S 1 '72 850w

"This book offers much valid criticism of the President, but the effort is cheapened by Lurie's personal slurs and the bitterness of his attack." J. H. Thompson

Library J 97:2738 S 1 '72 200w

"Lurie's book is a hatchet job. It is skillful, witty, readable, often brilliant; it uses the finest cutlery from Hoffritz, but it is a hatchet job, albeit with redeeming insights." M. F. Nolan

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ag 27 '72 250w

LURIE, NANCY OESTREICH, jt. ed. North American Indians in historical perspective. See North American Indians in historical perspective

LUSKIN, JOHN. Lippmann, liberty, and the press. $7.95 Univ. of Ala. press

323.44 Lippmann, Walter. Freedom of the press
ISBN 0-8173-4722-4 LC 72-4060

The author, a professor of journalism at the University of Alabama, writes this profile of the American journalist and Pulitzer prize winner, focusing on his writings relating to the public right to know versus the necessity of government secrecy.

"A university press book such as this one, with a number of indications that the volume was originally a Ph.D. dissertation, should not have very much possibility of wide readership.

. . . [However] in this day of credibility crises on the parts of journalists and politicians, the views of one of the most respected journalists of the century can be quite valuable. The author writes engagingly and has utilized well the Lippmann collection at Yale University. At times he makes Lippmann to be a bit more conservative than I feel he was in reality. [But this] is generally a very useful book." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 32:354 N 1 '72 550w

"A dull thud of a book, built on a foundation of 22 solid pages of footnotes and constructed of endless paragraphs littered with 'Lippmann said,' 'Lippmann believed,' 'Lippmann wrote,' etc. It's not easy to make the lucid, stylish, thoughtful dean of American columnists boring, but the author's pedestrian prose and mechanical, academic treatment pull off the trick. Lusk's book may be a useful secondary source of information on Lippmann's journalistic career for those who don't want to make the effort to go back to the original writings, but few will read Lusk for pleasure." Eric Moon

Library J 97:2726 S 1 '72 180w

LUTTWAK, EDWARD. A dictionary of modern war. 224p pl $7.95 Harper

355 Military art and science—Dictionaries
SBN 06-012732-5 LC 77-159574

"This book is a guide to the weapons and concepts of modern war. As such it is intended to cover the more important weapons currently in service as well as the terms, ideas and organizations of the military dimension of modern life. It is a . . . selective guide, and the choice emphasizes the 'strategic' over the 'tactical' throughout." (Foreword) Cross-reference index of aircraft, missiles and armoured vehicles designations.

"The best small reference work on modern weapons, especially for the general reading public. . . . Recommended for large and small libraries."

Choice 9:492 Je '72 90w

Economist 242:55 F 12 '72 110w

"Modern war, its prosecution, its hardware, and its technology have produced a whole new, unique, and well-nigh incomprehensible language. This reference work for the layman gives meaning to modern military jargon. Principal emphasis is upon weapons, but it covers the range from aircraft carriers to the Vulcan British bomber. There is interpretive and evaluative comment, and the descriptive material is succinct, technical and understandable. Detail is surprisingly precise (e.g., the rated tonnage of the Enterprise class carriers—a rarely published figure). The author also gives attention to some modern concepts inherent in present-day military strategy (e.g., 'minimum deterrence'). This is a very useful and readable work which meets a real need. A novel cross-reference technique adds greatly to its utility, and there is an excellent selection of illustrations." R. T. Redden

Library J 97:485 F 1 '72 120w

LUXEMBURG, ROSA. Selected political writings of Rosa Luxemburg; ed. and introduced by Dick Howard. 441p $11.50 Monthly review

335.4 Socialism
SBN 85345-142-7 LC 75-142991

This collection of speeches, pamphlets, articles and manifestoes of the economist and political theorist of the European socialist movement is published to commemorate the 100th anniversary of her birth in 1871. Glossary.

"Recently a selection of Luxemburg's speeches, pamphlets, and articles (Rosa Luxemburg Speaks) was published. . . . Naturally, there is considerable overlapping in the two books. For the general reader Rosa Luxemburg Speaks will probably suffice, and its appendixes by Lenin and Trotsky may add interest. On the other hand, the new translations; the clever use of summaries, footnotes, and inserts; and the inclusion of some rarely found articles, such as 'Organizational Questions of Russian Social Democracy' (1904), in the present volume may, for the specialist in socialist history, provide additional value." H. H. Bernt

Library J 96:1990 Je 1 '71 160w

TLS p172 F 18 '72 200w

LYAS, COLIN, ed. Philosophy and linguistics. 332p $9.95; pa $3.50 St Martins 149 Analysis (Philosophy). Semantics
SBN 333-10513-3; 333-10534-6 (pa)
LC [76-147781]

This is a "collection of previously published articles [concerning] . . . the relations between linguistic philosophy and linguistic science." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This volume would be] useful for advanced undergraduate and graduate courses. [It has] a substantial introduction by the editor. . . . It contains seminal papers in both areas. The diligent reader will find the notes useful for further reference. . . . On balance, one of the better anthologies in this area." Choice 9:826 '72 100w

"[This is] a useful but grossly over-priced . . . collection of already well-anthologised papers." Peter Hacker
Encounter 36:84 Ap '71 200w

LYDON, J. F. The lordship of Ireland in the middle ages. 295p Can$12.50 Univ. of Toronto press

941.5 Ireland—Politics and government. Ireland—History
ISBN 0-8020-1883-1 LC 72-75737

This volume examines "the feudal lordship of Ireland as a whole, and . . . [traces] the origins of the conflicting Gaelic and Anglo-Irish traditions which were to determine the whole pattern of Irish history in succeeding centuries. In the opening chapters the author provides . . . background information which sets the Anglo-Norman invasion, the grant of Ireland to Henry II and his son John's achievements as Lord of Ireland in perspective. The central section of the book covers the thirteenth century—the high point in the history of the lordship. . . . The final section of the book examines [the collapse of the lordship]. . . . In the last chapter the author indicates the relevance of his subject to the present day by discussing the immense heritage of the middle ages." (Publisher's note)

"In spite of the fact that Lydon . . . has included too many military narratives in this study, it is for the most part well written. However, it can in no sense be considered a major contribution to the scholarship of the period. . . . Lydon does a good job explaining why almost insurmountable problems were involved in the imposition of a feudal system on a tribal society, and why attempts to change the Gaelic Church from an abbatial to a diocesan organization resulted in the formation of two societies. The work is marred by several serious flaws: no bibliography, a paucity of footnotes, no index, and, most inexcusably, no map. The major research value of this work will be in smaller academic and research libraries which do not have much in this field." Thomas Bourke
Library J 97:3153 O 1 '72 180w

"The central theme [of this study] . . . is the origin and development of the Anglo-Norman colony in Ireland. But . . . over large areas the native Gaelic population retained not only its own language and its own cultural tradition, but also, in somewhat modified form, its own political system. The relationship between the two populations occupies a good deal of Professor Lydon's attention; and he treats it with an admirable combination of sympathy and fairness. Professor Lydon discusses also the no less important topic of the relationship between the colonists and England. . . . [He] has, in fact, produced an admirable introduction to medieval Irish history: readable, thoughtful and authoritative." TLS p778 J1 7 '72 1150w

LYON, DANNY. Conversations with the dead; photographs of prison life with the letters and drawings of Billy McCune #122054. 196p $14.95; pa $6.95 Holt

365 Prisons—Texas. Photography—Portraits
ISBN 0-03-085068-1; 0-03-085069-X (pa)
LC 70-117265

"Late in 1967 I was given permission to photograph, without restriction, the convict life of Texas. . . . The photographs [in this volume] are drawn from life in six separate prisons, each a unit in the Texas Department of Corrections. . . . Life inside depends to some extent on the prisoner's assignment. . . . The lowest position is to be assigned to the line, the force marched to the fields each day for farm labor. When they return to the building, twice each day, they are stripped and searched. The text of the book, compiled from prison records and convict writings, presents the lives of a few of these men." (Foreword)

"Photographically, [this book] is magnificent. It is Lyon's best work to date and many of the images could well become classics. 'The Line' (38) and 'The Line' (47) are beautifully realized photographs, graphically superb. 'Shakedown' (116) is a real and symbolic image of human degradation and 'Schizophrenic Inmate' (175) is one of Lyon's most intense portraits. . . . The printing is rather uneven throughout the volume, although a majority of the photographs are reasonably well printed. . . . A number of reports and records dealing with individual inmates have been thrown in to give more of a sense of what prison is about. It is done poorly, with the texts set adrift at random places. . . . The McCune section works because it is given a chance to do so, unlike the other textual material." Stu Cohen

Commonweal 96:16 Mr 10 '72 460w

"Lyon's co-star, Billy McCune (a 'lifer' Lyon met while working on the project), has a normal quota of self-pity and a cheerful color sense. The photographs have a gentle beauty." David Vestal

N Y Times Bk R p43 D 12 '71 110w

LYONS, LOUIS M. Newspaper story; one hundred years of the Boston Globe. 482p il $9.95 Harvard univ. press

071 The Boston Globe
ISBN 0-674-62225-1 LC 74-152697

"This book celebrates the founding of this . . . New England newspaper in 1872. . . . Lyons worked on the Globe for more than a quarter of a century, and his account includes his own memoirs and the reflections of the staff, and draws on the newspaper's files. Appendixes include letters and complete lists of board members, editors, and publishers and of awards." (Library J)

Reviewed by V. A. Lapomardo

America 126:546 My 20 '72 140w

"This is perfect journalistic history—highly readable for a general audience, ample indices and references, well illustrated, full of human interest, and thoroughly documented. Lyons' key suggestion to the Globe when asked about planning its centennial history was that 'most institutional histories were a bore and the Globe's hundred years was entitled to something better.' The Globe indeed has received something better."

Choice 9:48 Mr '72 170w

"In a hundred years, a newspaper piles up some in-house anecdotes and there are plenty of them in this affectionate history. As the paper is published in Boston, some of those anecdotes must necessarily revolve around the Kennedys. . . . Louis Lyons has told the Globe's story with as much dispassion as any newspaperman can muster about a newspaper that he thinks is doing the right things well. He has also laced the story with the wry wit which viewers of his nightly news program on Boston's educational television station have come to expect of him." John Hughes

Christian Science Monitor p14 D 9 '71 600w

"Recommended for general and school libraries." S. J. Riccardi

Library J 96:3604 N 1 '71 150w

"[Lyons'] writing is Yankee-spare, yet leaves out practically nothing, which may make it too much for some but certainly makes it good reading for us journalism nuts. . . . [He] is a cantankerous, opinionated liberal who doesn't lose many opportunities in his book to dig needles gently into the other side—sometimes, I think, he doesn't know that there's anything respectable on the other side—or to show where Truth lies. Although Mr Lyons is still fighting the (Joe) McCarthy wars in the last pages, and rather oblivious to the lamentable turn to the left taken of late by his beloved Globe, [his book] is a model account of a notable newspaper written by a journalist's journalist." D. J. C. Brudnoy

Nat R 23:1478 D 31 '71 280w

Reviewed by E. D. Canham

New Eng Q 45:125 Mr '72 750w

Reviewed by T. M. Bernstein

N Y Times Bk R p35 F 27 '72 850w

TLS p596 My 26 '72 350w

LYSAGHT, A. M., ed. Joseph Banks in Newfoundland and Labrador, 1766; his diary, manuscripts, and collections; with a foreword by Joseph Smallwood. 512p il col il $40 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Banks, Sir Joseph, Bart. Natural history—Newfoundland. Natural history—Labrador
ISBN 0-520-01780-3 LC 70-81800

This "work provides an . . . analysis of Banks' early scientific efforts and a review of Newfoundland's and Labrador's early history." (Choice)

"Banks's diary of [his] voyage [to Newfoundland and Labrador] has not been published before, but it is now presented to the public in a very attractive format. Beautifully illustrated and carefully edited . . . it should be warmly received by both scholars and general readers."

Choice 8:1600 F '72 160w

"The meticulously edited text . . . [of the diary] gives only a suggestion of the mighty scope, the energy, the life-enhancing qualities of an insatiably curious man. Banks is enthralling as a human being, and in some ways he reminds the reader of Samuel Johnson. . . . This edition of the record of an eighteenth-century expedition by sea is not only sumptuously presented but is valuable in many ways, scientifically, sociologically, and as biography. It would have rejoiced Banks's own heart."

TLS p1048 S 3 '71 700w

LYTLE, HUGH W. Lawrence M. Judd & Hawaii. See Judd, L. M.

M

MAAS, HENRY, ed. The letters of A. E. Housman. See Housman, A. E.

MAASS, WALTER B. Assassination in Vienna. 180p il $7.95 Scribner

943.6 Austria—History. Dollfuss, Engelbert
SBN 684-12587-0 LC 71-162772

This is an account "of the abortive Nazi Putsch in Austria in July, 1934 which resulted in the murder of Austrian Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss. . . . [Maass] describes the plot against the government by German agents and Austrian Nazis and follows . . . its implementation." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Maass has done a fine job of pulling together the loose strings of this convoluted plot. He was in Austria at the time and, although he wasn't involved in the activities, his presentation reads very much like a first-hand account." E. D. Schmiel

Best Sell 31:540 Mr 1 '72 390w

"[Maass] believes that the story of the Dollfuss assassination has not been told well in English. He sees as his task the presentation of a more objective and critical picture of the Austrian Chancellor and a detailed account of the Nazi coup. Filled with interesting facts which frequently add nothing to the narrative, this monograph of popular history contributes little to the world of scholarship. Moreover, Maass' negative reassessment of Dollfuss is not very convincing. . . . In an epilogue he takes his story to 1938, but again his treatment is superficial. In sum, this is an adventure story written for the general reader and perhaps the college freshman."

Choice 9:566 Je '72 130w

"[The author has used] various Austrian and German documents and memoirs (which should have been identified more carefully). . . . Certain questions still remain (e.g., the extent of Hitler's role in the affair), but . . . [Maass] skillfully analyzes all the probable answers and points out the lessons that could have been learned by the other powers as well as by the Austrians themselves. Recommended for all sizable history collections." B. D. Loynd

Library J 96:4092 D 15 '71 120w

MACANDREW, MARIE-CHRISTINE, ed. & tr. Planning for economic growth in the Soviet Union, 1918-1932. See Zaleski, E.

MACBETH, GEORGE. Collected poems, 1958-1970. 254p $7.50 Atheneum pubs.

821
LC 78-183613

"The poems in the five sections of this book are drawn from about ten years' work. . . . In the first section, the theme is public crisis, interlaved with family deaths. In the second section I have tried to offer my own kind of white goddess poem. Section three groups together poems written for those who (like myself) regard themselves as children. The fourth section includes poems written primarily for performance. . . . The last section [contains] only new poems." (Foreword)

Choice 9:646 J1/Ag '72 100w

"[These poems] display a remarkable shift from the elegiac and earnest to the flippantly technical; from the elevatedly baroque to neologistic form in fifty-seven lowdown varieties. The first part of the book—poems of 'public crisis interlaved with family deaths'—is the most impressive. 'An Elegy' is successful enough for me to believe that the novelties and grotesqueries of later sections represent a mistaken use of [MacBeth's] abilities." Douglas Dunn

Encounter 38:76 My 72 200w

"Macbeth has exuberance. He loves to write. But what he writes is so often, at least in this collection, premeditated whimsy. A sense of imagination that . . . cannot express itself with honest freedom . . . but one that is fettered by structure. His poems, no matter what the subject—and the range is broad—fall into a traditional order of spacing, rhythm, and length. . . . Attempting amusement and intense subjectivity, he creates contrived sets of words—statements after the fact of feeling. Perhaps in this paradox lies Macbeth's appeal." J. M. Warner

Library J 97:1019 Mr 15 '72 160w

"Chunky as it is, the Collected Poems is really a very meagre selection from a Victoriously massive output. It's a treasury of special effects, noises off, jokes, tricks, games, experiments; the semi-detached, Auschwitz edition of 101 Things To Make And Do. . . . Macbeth's verse recreates [this] lost and stable [19th-century] world even while it flirts with today's totalitarian horrors; at heart he remains a stranded Victorian clergyman, forlornly in search of an Alice. So his poems hum with as many rules as Mrs Grundy's withdrawing-room. . . . He pounces on our susceptibilities, plays with our embarrassment and wheedles us into submitting before the force of our own bad taste. It is a poetry of justified exploitation; insidious, inventive, flagrant." Jonathan Raban

New Statesman 82:481 O 8 '71 900w

Reviewed by Michael Schmidt

Poetry 120:170 Je '72 850w

Reviewed by P. J. Callahan

Sat R 55:71 Ap 15 '72 2650w

"The diffuse range of styles covered by [the] organization [of this collection] can be reduced, perhaps, to a single, fundamental contrast: between the poem as elaborately sculptured object, and the poem as play, process, performed event. Different as they are, those two phases seem united by a single trend: a tendency to self-conscious artifice. . . . In several of the poems . . . [Macbeth's] brief, poised sentences become less an energizing conciseness than a rhetorical mannerism. The poems seem cold, unapproachable, despite the surface shimmer and colour of their calculated imagery. . . . [His] scrupulous attention to the sound and weight of words can result in an attractively sinewy, sharp-edged diction . . . [but] futile and tedious verbal acrobatics . . . fill too many pages of this volume."

TLS p1306 O 22 '71 320w

MACBETH, NORMAN. Darwin retried; an appeal to reason. 178p $6.95 Gambit

575.01 Evolution

ISBN 0-87645-048-6 LC 73-160418

In this "study of evolutionary theory [the author] accepts evolution, but questions the contribution that biologists have made in understanding its mechanism. He . . . points out that classic Darwinism is dead and has been replaced by a synthetic neo-Darwinian view." (Choice)

"This is one of the finest overviews of the subject that exists. . . . [The author's] thesis is 'simply that the professionals have moved away from classical Darwinism but that no one had informed the public. The purpose of this book is to make the news available to the public. . . . The value of the present small volume is that it takes the main points of the Darwinian Theory, Natural Selection, The Struggle for Existence, Survival of the Fittest, Adaptation and Sexual Selection, explains them all clearly, points out the discrepancies that exist even among the experts and lets the reader draw his own conclusions . . . so as to force a reexamination of the whole question. No thinking person, certainly no one who does anything explicitly dealing with Darwinism, can afford to ignore this book." F. J. MacEntee

MACBETH, NORMAN—Continued

Best Sell 31:487 F 1 '72 210w

"By extensive quotations from leading evolutionary theorists, [Macbeth] points out some of the controversies that exist. . . . He takes his own professional, legalistic viewpoint and concludes that the synthetic theory cannot be proven beyond the shadow of a doubt and, therefore, should be 'thrown out of court.' Macbeth may be making a contribution if he leads biologists to sharpen up the logic of some of their arguments, but there is nothing in the book not known to the professional. There is also little of value . . . for the nonspecialist. The author's quotations are misleading concerning the overall thrust of the synthetic argument, and of just what is known and not known."

Choice 8:1471 Ja '72 220w

"A Harvard-trained lawyer moonlighting as a scientist tries Darwin, finds him wanting, and feels 'missionary' about pointing to gaps in Darwinian theory. Polemical and lively."

Christian Century 88:1271 O 27 '71 30w

"[The author] is not trying to tell biologists how they should analyze living matter, he is simply showing them the flaws in their present analysis. He . . . is not arguing that current evolutionary theory rests on faulty statistical reasoning. He simply confesses his feeling that evolutionary theory should not rest on any kind of statistical reasoning. . . . He is a romantic, of Tennyson's depleted school. He pines for 'the unreasoning wonder of a child' in looking at the living world; he complains that 'all this explaining takes the charm out of biology. . . . In place of the delights of nature we are offered the deserts of argumentation'. He is as unlikely to revive such romanticism in biological science as he is to revive blessing of the fields in commercial farming. In those trades calculation works, blessing does not." David Joravsky

N Y Rev of Books 19:23 S 21 '72 800w

MCCAFFREY, DONALD W., ed. Focus on Chaplin. 174p il $5.95 Prentice-Hall

791.43 Chaplin, Charles LC 78-153443
ISBN 0-13-128207-7

This "compilation of writings . . . is divided into four sections: Career, Working Method, Essays, and Reviews. . . . [There are] evaluations [by] Montgomery, Delluc, Seldes, Sherwood (to name just a few), and . . . passages from Chaplin himself." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"In his attempt to mirror the totality of Chaplin, the editor succeeds only in reflecting an incomplete image. Chaplin is too complex to capture in so few pages. But to [McCaffrey's] credit, those reflections he does present are excellent . . . and because of this, the book has merit. . . . The index and selected bibliography are helpful, and the book's inclusion on library shelves should prove advantageous to cinema students."

Choice 9:75 Mr '72 180w

"These 24 selections, five of which are by Chaplin, provide a survey of the love which America felt for [him] . . . for a period of 50 years, without giving much hint of the equally extreme hatred that finally developed in some quarters. Still, as a primer, this is a good introduction to Chaplin's blend of pathos and humor, as well as to his artistry as a mime. For those more familiar with his work, there's not much of interest here. Three brief scenario extracts from 'Shoulder Arms,' 'The Kid,' and 'Modern Times,' along with the juxtapositioning of critical assessments, suggests that this work would be best used as a source book for an introductory film course." Marshall Deutelbaum

Library J 96:3633 N 1 '71 120w

MCCAFFREY, JOSEPH A., ed. The homosexual dialectic; ed. by Joseph A. McCaffrey with the special assistance of Suzanne M. Hartung. 218p il $6.95 Prentice-Hall

301.41 Homosexuality
ISBN 0-13-394585-5; 0-13-394577-4 (pa)
LC 72-77525

"The editor of this collection of essays . . . has made a . . . selection of material which affords a cross section of opinion on the subject. In Part One of the book, entitled 'Straight Perspectives,' he presents the opinions of several . . . theorists, and follows this in the briefer second part—called 'Radical Gay Perspectives'—with articles that reflect the social unrest that has precipitated the birth of the Gay Liberation Movement." (America)

Reviewed by G. D. Phillips
America 126:660 Je 24 '72 350w

"This excellent introductory overview of the many facets of the subject begins with highly readable excerpts (tables omitted) from A. C. Kinsey's Sexual Behavior in the Human Male [BRD 1948] on 'Homosexual Outlets.' . . . An equally worthy selection is the concluding chapter from a widely publicized but poorly controlled study of homosexual patients, Homosexuality by I. Bieber and others [BRD 1962]. It summarizes the orthodox psychoanalytic view of homosexuality as an illness."

In a sharp-witted critique (from The Manufacture of Madness [BRD 1970]) T. Szasz demolishes the illness concept. . . . The remaining scholarly reports, all of recent vintage, make solid contributions. . . . [In Part 2] C. Wittman stridently demands civil rights for homosexuals and goes on to denounce exclusive heterosexuality as a disease. . . . The brief articles in this part present a strong case for society to move toward greater respect for differences." Harold Wilensky

Library J 97:2194 Je 15 '72 250w

MCCALL, ROBERT B. Change and continuity in infancy. See Kagan, J.

MACCALLUM, HUGH, jt. ed. An elegant and learned discourse of the light of nature. See Culverwell, N.

MCCALLUM, JOHN. College football, U.S.A., 1869-1971; official book of the National Football Foundation [by] John McCallum and Charles H. Pearson. 559p il $25 Hall of Fame pub: McGraw

796.33 Football—History
ISBN 07-044801-9 LC 79-180212

This survey includes "the early history of football; capsule biographies and photos of players and coaches; sections on records, awards, bowl games . . . and original contributions such as a participant's account of the first college games in 1869 (Rutgers vs. Princeton)." (Library J)

"There must indubitably be some omissions in 'College Football U.S.A.' and there are some noticeable typographical errors, but who cares? . . . The writing may be a little gung-ho at times but the information is there to be mined at leisure through many pleasant sessions. And where memory is faulty, as it frequently is, the correctives are here with records and game descriptions."

Best Sell 32:310 O 1 '72 100w

"What [this volume] lacks is editorial organization and an index. There is a two-page table of contents, but the reader will be terribly confused by the illogical way material is presented—a chapter on old versus modern football is followed by a feature article on the Ivy League, then by 'General Ike Talks Football.' There is a wealth of material here, so the question is why was careless editing and an almost complete lack of organization allowed to destroy most of the book's value?" M. R. Nunn

Library J 97:3329 O 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 55:1771 N 25 '72 40w

MCCARRY, CHARLES. Citizen Nader. 335p $7.95 Saturday review press

B or 92 Nader, Ralph
ISBN 0-8415-0163-7 LC 70-182488

This biography of the consumer advocate covers "Nader's background, his rise to prominence, his forays into various issues, and the evolution of his thinking." (N Y Times Bk R) Chronology. Index.

"McCarthy produced a needed book on a needed man, but . . . [his] repeatedly incorrect assessments of Nader suggest either resentment of the subject or laziness in not focusing on the wider picture. 'He has become,' McCarthy says, eyes half-closed, 'the first national political figure who has not submitted to an election or even to the public scrutiny of his ideas and his activities.' McCarthy is wrong twice. First, Nader is not a political figure. He represents values, not voters. . . . As for public scrutiny, Nader is . . . regularly questioned following testimony in congressional hearings, and every document or statement of Nader and his associates is closely examined . . . from the legal offices of the business lobbies to the editorial offices of anti-consumer newspapers." Colman McCarthy

Book World p13 Ap 9 '72 500w

Choice 9:1168 N '72 150w

Reviewed by Dem Polacheck
Library J 97:1415 Ap 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by Harry Malm
Library J 97:2973 S 15 '72 110 [YA]

Reviewed by Thomas De Baggio
Nation 214:597 My 8 '72 450w

"[Nader is] one of the most significant figures of this period . . . [and] this first book-length profile . . . goes a good way toward explaining why. . . . McCarthy catches a good bit about Nader the human being that seems to have eluded many who write about him; the sense of humor . . . the insatiable appetite for sheer information. . . . More important, the author is on to several of the things that set Nader apart from other would-be reformers and made him no accidental public figure. . . . [McCarthy has] done a solid job of reporting. . . . What is missing, and keeps it from being a definitive work on Nader, is . . . its failure to deal at any depth with the philosophical backdrop of what Nader is really all about." Elizabeth Drew

N Y Times Bk R p7 Mr 19 '72 1800w

"McCarthy, chief speech writer for Henry Cabot Lodge in his 1960 campaign as Republican Vice Presidential candidate and a prolific contributor to popular periodicals, has researched his subject well. . . . [He] has checked up on Nader's private life. . . . The portrait that emerges here is one of . . . an unblemished missionary, singularly able, dedicated, dogged, uncompromising, and selfless." Robert Eisner

Sat R 55:73 Ap 1 '72 950w

Reviewed by Hays Gorey
Time 99:64 Ap 3 '72 750w

MCCARTHY, ABIGAIL. Private faces/public places. 448p il $8.95 Doubleday

B or 92 McCarthy, Eugene Joseph
LC 70-171305

"This book is an autobiography by the now-divorced wife of Eugene McCarthy. . . . In her examination of the changes in her own habits, Mrs. McCarthy [analyzes] . . . changes in politics, in Catholicism, in education, and in the role of women." (Library J) Portions of this book appeared in the June 1972 Atlantic magazine. Index.

"'Women accept the fact that their lives are determined by relationships, that before they are persons they are somebody's wife, somebody's mother.' It is from such comments, scattered throughout the book, that one senses the growth of this woman in her struggle to find herself. . . . Revealing her thoughts to the public would seem a giant leap for a wife who had always been careful never to take a stand on her own. That Abigail McCarthy decided to write this book is ample proof that she has taken the risk of putting on a 'new life.' No longer is she the object of someone else's history; rather she has become the subject of her own. By daring to reveal herself to us, she has gained an insight into who she is and we are enriched by the experience." Edna McCallion

America 127:98 Ag 19 '72 1200w

Reviewed by Jeanne Kinney
Best Sell 32:233 Ag 15 '72 600w

"Unlike so many other current examples of Catholic nostalgia, this one does not belittle its origins but rather makes them understandable and attractive despite the economic and psychological realities which soon steered the values which drew [the couple] first to the farm, then to teaching, and afterwards . . . into politics, to pursue more effectively the demands of justice and the constant search for Gene's vocation. . . . [Abigail McCarthy's] honesty in recording [her] feelings makes her memoir a uniquely representative document of the dilemma of American women today at the same time it stands as proof of their rising awareness and resilient promise." Sally Cunneen

Commonweal 96:456 Ag 25 '72 1000w

Reviewed by Sister M. H. Valentine
Critic 31:69 N/D '72 1300w

"[The author] writes with clarity and sensitivity. Her descriptions of the small towns in which she taught English and German make those places come alive to this urban reader, and her explanations of the McCarthy campaign apparatus in 1968 are both detailed and precise. This fine book is valuable not only for its political insights into the role of a candidate's wife, but also for the warmth of its writing." Hindy Schachter

Library J 97:2083 Je 1 '72 100w

"Abigail McCarthy's accomplishment in her study of her life with Eugene is very great. It is a sensitive, delicate, undogmatic, cool testimonial to the truths which most women in the liberation movement have been declaiming with much heat and only occasional concern for the sensibilities of either sex. Written with admirable reserve and taste, it suffers at times from too many details, too dogged and strict a chronology of un-events and insignificant details of what-we-did-next, but fortunately the tone—dispassionate unself-pitying—covers these faults. . . . That she is able to end such a profoundly personal history with no recriminations and all personal hurt seemingly obscured . . . is a tribute to the person she is." Doris Grumbach

New Repub 166:28 Je 17 '72 1700w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Janeway
N Y Times Bk R p4 Jl 2 '72 2000w
New Yorker 48:84 Ag 5 '72 120w

MCCARTHY, MAX. Elections for sale. 205p il $5.95 Houghton

329 Elections—U.S. Campaign funds
ISBN 0-395-13648-2 LC 79-162009

"The advent of television has increased campaign costs to such a degree that this book speculates a man today must either be personally wealthy or have special-interest support to win a major American election. The author, a former congressman and unsuccessful aspirant for the Democratic nomination in the 1970 New York senatorial race, details his own problems raising funds and running against a multimillionaire's son. . . . The book . . . [is also concerned with] funding procedures in several other countries and [includes] suggestions for improvement in the U.S." (Library J)

"I have to report McCarthy's three-term service in the House (along with his abortive run for a New York Senate nomination) may only have served as motivation for his decision to write a book. His experience in office, however, is not being shared in any factual way with the readers of this book. . . . McCarthy does have some good proposals to offer—particularly in tightening even further the amount of bought television time and establishment of an independent agency to supervise campaign fund reporting. However, for ideas such as these to move through the legislative process, solid, accurate, and definitive information on the dangers of the present system is needed. Often in this book McCarthy described journalist Polk as 'enterprising,' 'digging' and 'probing.' If only the author himself had employed those attributes." Walter Pincus

Book World p11 My 21 '72 850w

"While [McCarthy] obviously has a great deal of political expertise, his book suffers analytically because he does not sufficiently examine elections in which the candidate with the most money lost (for example, the last gubernatorial campaign of Winthrop Rockefeller in Arkansas)." Hindy Schachter

Library J 97:880 Mr 1 '72 120w

"[The author] has written a study-tract that has been rendered partially obsolete by new legislation. The main target of McCarthy's criticism . . . is the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, which was, in effect, more loophole than law. On February 7 of this year, however, President Nixon signed into law a bipartisan bill that limits campaign spending and is designed to end what has been a charade: the way candidates formerly reported on contributions. Still, many of the basic arguments presented by Mr. McCarthy . . . retain their cogency despite this belated reform. . . . [This book] will be of value to those who believe that the public should have an opportunity to select their candidates rationally rather than emotionally, as well as to those who are concerned about whom their representatives actually represent." L. L. Golden

MCCARTHY, MAX—Continued

Sat R 55:67 Ap 15 '72 600w

MCCARTHY, RICHARD DEAN. See McCarthy, M.

MCCARTHY, SHAUN. See Cory, D.

MCCARY, JAMES LESLIE. Sexual myths and fallacies. 206p $6.95 Van Nostrand-Reinhold

301.41 Sex
LC 77-159148

"A psychology professor (at Houston) . . . discusses briefly 83 'widely held' misconceptions about sex." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Another book about sexual behavior for the layman, written . . . in an informative if somewhat prosaic manner. McCary's style is unfortunately academic and dull, and it is easy to see why the general public prefers the snappy style of the more popular sexologists. . . . A more serious criticism is that although McCary seems to be knowledgeable concerning the necessary biological and physiological material, he is somewhat weaker on the psychological, psychiatric, and sociological side. [His work] is designed especially for the unknowing, unsophisticated reader who still needs to be reassured that sex education is not a Communist plot."

Choice 8:1648 F '72 150w

"The format of this book . . . is that of presenting the fallacy in a sentence or two and then refuting it by the fact. In a few instances, the fallacy seems so obviously ridiculous that one wonders why it was included. . . . The book contains a very good discussion of the various causative factors involved in the development of a homosexual personality, and useful information about child molesters, etc. In dealing with the allegation that the typical sex offender is aggressive and homicidal, McCary states that 'the vast majority . . . are frightened, guilty, woefully inadequate, harmless people.' Finally, there is an excellent chapter on pornography." B. G. Kohler

Library J 97:205 Ja 15 '72 210w

"McCary's excellent new book . . . is remarkably balanced, judicious and thoughtful. . . . [It is] a welcome addition to the literature on sex."

D. J. C. Brudnov
Nat R 24:1071 S 29 '72 190w

MCCLEERY, ROBERT S. One life—one physician. See One life—one physician

MCCLELLAN, JAMES. Joseph Story and the American Constitution; a study in political and legal thought; with selected writings. 413p il $12.50 Univ. of Okla. press

342 Story, Joseph. U.S.—Constitutional law
ISBN 0-8061-0971-8 LC 75-160499

The author, an associate professor in the department of government and foreign affairs at Hampden-Sydney College, Virginia, writes of Joseph Story who "sat on the United States Supreme Court for more than 30 years and imparted strong nationalist views to his fellow judges and the nation." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. K. Faulkner

J Am Hist 59:704 D '72 900w

"Because he served for many of the same years as John Marshall, [Story's] fame has not been great. . . . [McClellan] amply demonstrates in this well-written study that Judge Story was often more nationalistic than [John] Marshall and that sometimes Marshall was the spokesman for Story's views." Jerome Nadelhaft

Library J 97:394 Mr 1 '72 110w

"With this study, audaciously ignoring the powerful taboos of legal positivism and liberal historiography, Professor McClellan . . . has exhumed a forgotten statesman. More important, he has, in the process, peeled away generations of parasitic encrustations and taken a fresh look at the tree of American liberty. . . . I would enter an objection to McClellan's flogging of Jeffersonian democracy, which he, with most conservatives, finds the villain in American degeneracy. The trouble is that the Federalist skirts were not clean either. . . . This objection, however, does not blunt the significance for our time of Story's commentary. McClellan's skillful exposition of which . . . gives heart to those who hope some day to wring from the judiciary a writ of replevin on the American inheritance of ordered liberty."

Clyde Wilson

Nat R 24:166 F 18 '72 1050w

"One can easily differ with McClellan. It seems fair to point out, for example, that natural law decrees that a man not be subject to another's grace in the exercise of his civil liberties and that natural law would dictate, and most Americans would agree, that to be deprived of personal liberty would be a more deeply felt loss than the deprivation of property. In our society, more citizens seem to resist conscription laws than taxation laws. To disagree with the author's editorializing, however, is to quibble. McClellan has done justice to Story which is a creditable task, made more so by the dimensions of his subject. To master Story is to master much of American law; to do it so skillfully is an impressive achievement." T. P. Campbell

New Eng Q 45:439 S '72 900w

MCCLELLAND, CHARLES E. The German historians and England; a study in nineteenth-century views. 300p $16.50 Cambridge

301.15 Historians, German. England—Foreign opinion
ISBN 0-521-08063-0 LC 79-154514

This "study in the history of ideas and the political influence of historians . . . traces a significant trend in the opinion of the German intellectual elite. Warm admiration for England and its literature, political institutions, and commercial success gradually gave place to suspicion and outright hostility. Over 50 representative historians and social scientists and their general views on England form the subject matter, the leading exemplars being Niebuhr, Hegel, von Gentz, Marx, Ranke, Gneist, and Treitschke." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"With thoroughness, but above all with intelligence and good judgment, McClelland has described the variety of ways in which German historians . . . have looked at England. . . . The chapter on Treitschke is especially well done. The man, his work, and his time receive judicious appraisal that illuminates a whole period of history. . . . The bibliographical essay is a model of its kind."

D. W. R. Bahlman

Ann Am Acad 403:190 S '72 350w

"Attitudes to free trade, nationality and race, and imperialist rivalries were among the most prominent in which the German professoriate revealed itself as highly articulate and influential. The book is broadly based on original sources in German, and uncovers an important facet in German history in the century prior to the First World War."

Choice 9:270 Ap '72 150w

"[The author] has provided an eminently useful survey of a theme that has long wanted this kind of thorough treatment."

Economist 241:xvi N 6 '71 600w

"McClelland's fair discussion may be especially welcome to the reader who has made acquaintance through work on some English topic with a German writer, whom he now finds placed properly in his German context—with a biographical note for good measure. Dr McClelland hardly needs the defence of the history of ideas with which he has thought it proper to preface his book, but since it is the occasion for a suggestion of the reason for the popularity of this approach in the United States, one would not wish it away. The work itself is packed with interest and the fruits of a lively and probing curiosity."

TLS p1380 N 5 '71 1450w

MCCLELLAND, DAVID C. The drinking man. See The drinking man

MCCLINTOCK, ROBERT. Man and his circumstances: Ortega as educator. (Stud. in culture & communication) 648p $15 Teachers college press

196 Ortega y Gasset, José
LC 76-149404

Exposition, critique and intellectual biography of the Spanish philosopher, whom the author attempts to place in his European and Western as well as Spanish context. Bibliography. Indexes of names and of subjects.

"Ortega y Gasset is finally getting—posthumously—the exposure he merits. An expanded doctoral dissertation... McClintock's work has the customary apparatus: copious footnotes; 91 pages of annotations expanding the literary, historical, and textual background; and 36 pages of bibliography, of which only seven are devoted to Ortega and the remainder to a largely redundant mélange of books and articles whose relevance to Ortega scholarship is peripheral at best. The text proper... is earnest, prolix, and somewhat over-ambitious. Its attempt to define Ortega's place in the corpus of Western philosophy results in a spate of allusions which punctuate rather than illumine the discussion." Library J 97:1328 Apr 1 '72 140w

"Aptly titled, written with exemplary clarity, and organized with systematic allusiveness, [this] is difficult to review. The book is very long... [but it] is exciting throughout. It makes Ortega understandable and interesting, and in so doing develops a devastating critique of contemporary educational thinking, or, better, non-thinking... [McClintock] possesses authentic command of philosophical history... Especially valuable in my view, is [his] delineation of what Ortega shares with—yet how he differs from—the best-known twentieth century existentialists and phenomenologists. By [his] lucid exposition, McClintock establishes his subject as a truly central figure in twentieth-century culture, one whose influence seems sure to expand in the future." Karl Kroeber
Teach Col Rec 74:121 S '72 1400w

MCCLINTON, KATHERINE MORRISON. Antiques in miniature. 182p il $8.95 Scribner

745.1 Antiques—Models
LC 75-123843

This book identifies a "variety of under-four-inch house furnishings:... exact replicas of American and European beds, desks, etc.; fine glass; hallmarked silver; pewter, tin, and copper." (Library J)

"Miniatures, Miss McClinton points out, come in all sorts of sizes. She aims to concentrate on the in-betweens—too large for dolls' houses and too small for children—which are usually the finest, the rarest and the most expensive. That might explain why one of the most beautiful and famous antique dolls' houses in England—at Nostell Priory in Yorkshire, with furniture by the young Chippendale—is accorded only a brief mention. This omission is disappointing... But otherwise the choice of illustrations is quite admirable... There is perhaps too great an emphasis on American furniture. But Dutch and English cabinet-makers are well-represented."

Economist 243:83 My 27 '72 300w

"Perfect or comically askew, these enchanting tidbits remind readers to ask even in august museums—Winterthur, Henry Ford Museum, Cooper Union—to see the antique miniatures." S. C. Gross
Library J 96:66 Ja 1 '71 100w

MCCLOSKEY, PAUL N. Truth and untruth: political deceit in America. [by] Paul N. McCloskey, Jr. 264p $7.95; pa $2.95 Simon & Schuster

973.924 U.S.—Politics and government—1961-. Nixon, Richard Milhous, President U.S.
SBN 671-21201-X; 671-21219-2 (pa)
LC 70-18506

"The author asserts that the present administration 'encourages concealment, deception, and news management on a massive scale... [He condemns] the Nixon Administration's perversion of priorities... and the planned deceit of innumerable governmental officials. McCloskey argues that a renewal of faith and trust in our system of government must be America's main goal, and that the best means of achieving that restoration is through an end of the seniority system in Congress, an end of the Vietnam War, the preservation of the environment, and the establishment of world peace through world law." (Library J) Index.

"This example of campaign rhetoric... will probably give more aid and comfort to the Democrats than the Republicans. The strong anti-Nixon bias of the author, however, will alienate even readers who are no admirers of President Nixon or of many of his policies. Just what [McCloskey] is trying to say is not too clear; there is much insistence on the need for 'faith in government' which depends on 'truth' but the words are used in different senses throughout the text... Indeed the whole work gives the impression of being a series of separate speeches or articles put together in a haphazard way." F. J. Gallagher
Best Sell 31:540 Mr 1 '72 230w

Reviewed by Garry Wills

Book World p4 Mr 5 '72 500w

"This frankly partisan book is Congressman McCloskey's political platform in his attempt to win the Republican nomination for President in 1972... Recommended." W. W. MacDonald

Library J 97:860 Mr 1 '72 100w

New Repub 166:33 Mr 18 '72 420w

"[This] rather slight book... adds little to the knowledge of McCloskey for those who have watched his moves from dissent from the Nixon policies to outright antagonism and the decision to run in the March 7 primary against his own party leader. It is clear that he is not... an intellectual or an original thinker... If [this book] tells one anything about the candidate it is that he is a decent man, with good instincts; a person who would like to see a better world, is opposed to lies and deceit, but does not grasp the realities of life. Manifestly he is not a philosopher; nor would he get high marks as a student of government." L. L. L. Golden
Sat R 55:72 F 12 '72 700w

MCCLOSKEY, ROBERT GREEN. The modern Supreme Court. 376p $12.95 Harvard univ. press

342 U.S. Supreme Court
ISBN 0-674-58055-9 LC 70-173408

McCloskey "emphasizes not so much the court's accomplishments but its evolution from the... liberalism of the war years to the 1960's." (Library J)

"The book inevitably emerges as a conglomerate. It is deeply rewarding for those—and I am one—who admired the extraordinary qualities of Professor McCloskey's cogent analyses of the work of an institution he loved. These qualities shine through in this work. He was a superb essayist. He wrote clearly, with style, grace, and sophistication. He had an envious grasp of American history and of the nature of human nature, especially that of Supreme Court justices... Finally, he provided perceptive and sensitive analyses of the linkages between the Supreme Court's behavior and public opinion and public policy. The book is especially commended to students of constitutional history and of the judicial process." H. N. Carroll

Ann Am Acad 404:296 N '72 400w

"The fact that the seven articles on the Warren Court which comprise the last two chapters of this work have been previously published does not detract from its value. New chapters on the Stone and Vinson courts add a fresh viewpoint, and the whole work seems to have been integrally planned... This dispassionate historical approach by a knowledgeable and perceptive writer enables the reader to follow the growth not only of a new body of constitutional law, but also of a new concept of the judicial function. Both readable and authoritative, it is a real contribution to the literature." Marian Boner

Library J 97:895 Mr 1 '72 190w

Reviewed by Walter Berns

Nat R 24:953 S 1 '72 1450w

MCCLURE, JAMES. The steam pig. 247p $5.95 Harper

SBN 06-012896-8 LC 72-410

This novel is "set against the background of a small city in South Africa. The starting point is the sudden death of a young woman, and it is only by chance that her death is discovered at all. The pivot of this [book] is race and apartheid, what with Zondi, the Bantu detective sergeant; Kramer, the Boer detective; Zulu gangsters; and a bizarre white necrophile undertaker." (Library J)

MCCLURE, JAMES—Continued

"[This] blood-curdling thriller . . . [is] truly tough, brutal, unfair, and quite impossible to put down." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3618 N 1 '72 80w

"Purists of the detective novel will fault a hasty and slightly forced resolution, slice-of-life though it may be. What commands the attention here is a gripping style, real characters and an exotic locale. Few first novels make this kind of impact. 'The Steam Pig' will not only keep the reader's nose to the page. It will also make the reader think." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk ■ p47 O 22 '72 200w

"An absolutely scathing look at contemporary South Africa is provided in [this] . . . first novel that is uncanny in its multi-leveled perceptions. It is a grotesquely vivid picture of life under apartheid. But it is also a first-rate murder mystery with a solution that is a shocker. The pace is relentless, the prose riveting, and the pair of detectives Tromp Kramer, white, and Bantu Detective Sergeant Mickey Zondi—remarkable. Not to be missed, or lightly dismissed as just another murder mystery, it is the essence of what the best of the genre aspires to." O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:89 O 28 '72 100w

TLS p1370 O 29 '71 100w

MCCLURE, RON. Rawlins. 279p $6.95 Dial press

LC 76-37441

"Carroll Rawlins is a saddle bronc rider—the best in the world. Only booze, bad luck, a couple of mean horses and the Rodeo Cowboys Association have conspired to keep him from proving it. He suffers the indignities of working small town shows for two years to build up enough money to pay off an RCA fine and make one last try for the championship." (Library J)

"Readers of this book will learn a little about the rodeo game and become re-acquainted with four-letter words and their dialectical counterparts. . . . Over all, Rawlins' life isn't really very exciting or interesting." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 32:145 Je 15 '72 490w

"Written by a former rodeo contestant, this first novel has its rough spots . . . but the story is lean, tough and accurate. Even reluctant readers will be asking for another just like it." J. G. Daly

Library J 97:2246 Je 15 '72 120w [YA]

Reviewed by E. H. Jones

Library J 97:2433 J1 '72 120w

"What is fascinating in Rawlins' character is the Sisyphean persistence with which he follows his harsh trade. . . . [McClure] catches the exotic flavor of such attractions as Cowtown, N.J., which has a resident rodeo, and the carnival climate of a rigged Wild West show. His hero comes through as a Ring Lardner kind of athlete, short on gentility but long on professionalism." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk ■ p41 Ap 23 '72 230w

MACCOMBIE, JOHN. The prince & the genie; a study of Rimbaud's influence on Claudel. 197p $10 Univ. of Mass. press

848 Claudel, Paul, Rimbaud, Jean Nicolas Arthur
LC 70-164440

MacCombie delineates "the bases for the . . . claims (by Claudel and others) that the adolescent poet-seer was the primary force in the latter's spiritual and poetic development. He insists . . . on Claudel's commitment to his own 'mythical' Rimbaud and elimination of the 'unacceptable' aspects of his predecessor's character. After dwelling on a number of psychological affinities, the author . . . [analyzes] similarities in imagery, particularly in their associations of sounds and colors. [His] treatment of Rimbaud's 'Voyelles' and its various interpretations . . . serves as the basis for his . . . 'correlations of imagery.'" (Choice) Bibliography.

"This is a very useful book for the student of French poetry and 20th-century literature, but one wishes for a more complete bibliography and an index, and that translations of quotations be eliminated from the text proper."

Choice 9:651 J1/Ag '72 170w

"[The author] brings insight, understanding, and scholarship to his assessment of these two literary giants; even more important, his analyses are sensitive and carried out with an open mind." B. L. Knapp

Library J 97:1438 Ap 15 '72 100w

MCCONNELL, JAMES V., ed. Science, sex, and sacred cows; spoofs on science from the Worm Runner's Digest; ed. by James V. McConnell and Mariys Schutjer. 183p il $5.95 Harcourt

808.7 Science—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc. Wit and humor
ISBN 0-15-179595-9 LC 75-160405

This is "a collection of humorous pieces taken from the Worm Runner's Digest . . . [now incorporated in] The Journal of Biological Psychology." (Introd)

"The Worm Runner's Digest, a kind of trade organ for that group of psychologists concerned with studying the behavior of the planarian (common flatworm), is well known for its spoofs on science, sex, education. This book is a collection of satirical essays, poems, reports, letters, and drawings which have appeared in that journal. . . . Much of the material is humorous only if the reader knows a good deal about science, Freudian jargon, behaviorism, and flatworms. The book will probably have a limited audience." M. S. Feider

Library J 96:2773 S 15 '71 80w

"Jokes, verse, parodies from . . . a little periodical that has fun with science. While scientific humor is roughly equivalent to legal humor, the pieces here on grantmanship, jargonism, elaborate experiments probing into nothing, and scientific sadism are on target. The trouble with science, the Worm Runner's Digest seems to be saying, is scientists, who are willing to study anything but themselves." N Y Times Bk R p14 F 13 '72 80w

MCCONNELL, R. A. ESP curriculum guide. 128p il $5.95; pa $1.95 Simon & Schuster

133.8 Extrasensory perception
SBN 671-21007-6; 671-21009-2 (pa)
LC 75-159134

"A curriculum guide which presents the principles of science as used in the study of extrasensory perception. . . . [There is an] annotated list of books and articles on ESP. . . . Explanations of methods of conducting experiments are given. The effects of attitudes and expectations of both subjects and experimenters are discussed." (Choice) Indexes of names and of subjects.

"Fills a long-felt need. . . . Of especial importance is McConnell's description of the evolution of a science and the present state of ESP. . . . [The annotated bibliography] is excellent and covers a wide range of pertinent material including personal experiences of psychically sensitive people as well as scientific treatments of ESP. . . . More detail as to how to conduct telepathic versus precognitive or clairvoyant experiments would have been helpful. Even so, this is the best book of its type on the market. . . . Would make [an] excellent text choice for high school and college classes."

Choice 9:285 Ap '72 130w

"The author of this short guide certainly is qualified. He began his study of parapsychology in 1947 after visiting J. B. Rhine's laboratory then at Duke University and is currently research professor of biophysics at the University of Pittsburgh. . . . [The guide] is written for the secondary school and college teacher who either needs direction for adding material and experiments in parapsychology to his present course or who wishes to teach a beginning course. Anyone needing basic information would do well to read it." R. A. Lyders

Library J 96:2525 Ag '71 140w

MCCORMACK, ELIZA. Would you believe love? 216p $5.95 Random house

ISBN 0-394-47298-5 LC 78-162956

This "novel, told in diary form, concerns Sophie, age 39, married to a Cambridge, Massachusetts college professor, and mother of two teen-agers. Sophie's marriage has gone stale; she and her husband can't communicate. Psychotherapy hasn't helped. Then through her volunteer work at a draft counseling center, Sophie meets Gabriel, a fellow worker. He is black [and] 25. . . . [Her affair with him] has a therapeutic effect upon Sophie." (Library J)

Reviewed by E. C. Howley
Best Sell 31:393 D 1 '71 400w

"[Although] it is abundantly clear that [Sophie's] marriage is on the rocks, it is never really clear why; we are given the symptoms of the moment . . . but the causes are buried somewhere in the past, well beyond the reach of our sympathy and understanding. . . . The character who should be the strongest—Gabriel, the black lover—is in fact the weakest, Strong, saintly, and black, he emerges less as a person than a figure of fantasy. . . . [Thus] the sentimental ending [becomes] virtually inevitable. It may be true, as Hemingway was fond of saying, that the art of writing consists of omitting the obvious, but omitting the essential is another thing entirely." L. J. Davis

Book World p12 O 10 '71 420w

Sophie's strong anti-Nixon bias and her habit of calling people she dislikes by such charming names as 'Pig-Face Agnew' and 'Shit-Face Buckley', may antagonize some readers. Yet this spunky, petite heroine, with her disarming honesty and sturdy sense of humor, will appeal to many. The background is contemporary, the cast of characters lively and real, and the simple story has the ring of truth." S. M. Batzdorff

Library J 96:2671 S 1 '71 190w

Reviewed by John Spurling
New Statesman 83:496 Ap 14 '72 80w

"Well, no—I wouldn't believe love. I wouldn't even believe infatuation. I might just accept a verdict of early climacteric. First off, Miss McCormack's representation of love—as conveyed through her narrator-protagonist—is as deeply passionate as a head cold. . . . So second-hand are her emotions, her deepest revelation of love concerns wearing apparel. . . . After a brief interlude, she is willing to give her Ph.D candidate up to a teaching job, and adopt in his place a black child of 7 or 8. Miss McCormack's heroine, in short, is subject to few impulses that cannot be written on a placard. Her fund of purely topical indignation—e.g., Spiro Agnew and the Moratorium—leaves little room to substantiate her alleged emotions." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p80 N 21 '71 220w

"Sophie begins the part of her diary which comprises [this novel] after a particularly trying session with Ass Bird, her therapist. Why anyone as sanely nutty or as funnily sad as Sophie should need the help of anyone so hide-bound by theory as this psychiatrist is one of the secrets of the American way of life. Indeed [the book] could be taken as a testament to the muddleheadedness, the sentimentality, but ultimately the strength of mid-twentieth-century, liberal, educated, cause-ridden, political, American woman. . . . Sophie is the salt of the earth and it is good to welcome a new American author with a talent that can please both the head and the heart."

TLS p537 My 12 '72 250w

MCCOY, ALFRED W. The politics of heroin in Southeast Asia [by] Alfred W. McCoy; with Cathleen B. Read and Leonard P. Adams II. 464p pl maps $10.95 Harper

363.4 Heroin. Opium. Asia, Southeastern—Politics
SBN 06-012901-8 LC 70-182807

This book discusses the nature of international heroin and opium traffic, focusing on the traffic coming from Southeast Asia, and explores attitudes of the governments concerned and the Mafia connections with the illicit narcotics trade. Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by Flora Lewis
Atlantic 230:112 N '72 2700w

"[This is] a diligent and thoroughly investigated study. . . . [It] is a magnificently informative work. Its features include an appendix by Author Adams on 'China: The Historical Setting of Asia's Profitable Plague.' . . . There are twenty-four pages of photographs showing major narcotics dealers, and a visual categorization of the heroin traffic, including the Vietnamese National Airforce and packaged popular heroin brands. There are also eleven good maps [and] five organizational charts." R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 32:324 O 15 '72 650w

"These young Ph.D. candidates have done a first-rate job of putting together research and documentation on the heroin problem in particular. They describe the methods of heroin production, the history of its use, the growth of the industry during the Southeast Asian war, and the importance of the industry's profits to the current governments of Thailand, Laos, and South Vietnam. They provide names and dates, trace distribution routes with numerous maps, and clearly draw the full circle of heroin. . . . One of the year's most important books." Colin Clark

Library J 97:3696 N 15 '72 180w

Reviewed by B. M. Russett
Nation 215:568 D 4 '72 1700w

"[The authors assert] that the great increase in poppy-growing and heroin manufacture is the result of American policy especially the misbehavior of the C.I.A. The book causes one to ponder both its reliability and its message. It contains allegations—such as that So-and-So heads the heroin trade in the United States—of a kind that make good reading but are rarely proved in courts of law. . . . The introduction of irrelevancies and of statements first offered as probabilities and then considered facts are irritating, too. Yet . . . a reader may very well feel that there is something to the authors' story. Even if only a few accusations are true, that could make the worst of the Harding Administration's scandals look rather quaint."

New Yorker 48:126 S 30 '72 240w

"McCoy makes a good case against the CIA and the State Department. He documents— from U.S. government and Interpol reports, interviews with Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs officials and agents in the field, and even drug traffickers themselves—the role of the U.S. government in the heroin contagion that struck at GIs in Vietnam and Americans at home. . . . During the past twenty years only eleven books of any consequence have been written about the international trafficking in narcotics, and McCoy's book is by far the best. Its flaws are minor ones. . . . It is copiously footnoted, sometimes sentence by sentence, and much of this might have been incorporated into the text."

Sat R 55:72 S 23 '72 1900w

MCCRINDLE, JOSEPH F., ed. Behind the scenes; theater and film interviews from the Transatlantic review; with an introd. by Jean-Claude van Itallie. 341p $7.95; pa $3.45 Holt

792 Theater. Moving pictures
ISBN 03-085091; 03-085379-6 (pa)
LC 76-134166

Included in this book are interviews with such contemporary artists as Joan Littlewood, Federico Fellini, Edward Albee, Alan Schneider, and Gore Vidal.

"Although there is undoubtedly much one could learn from the persons interviewed in this book, there is little to be learned from the book itself. Owing to the basically haphazard nature of the collection—these interviews appear together only because they all originated in the Transatlantic review—there is no coherence to the book. Although this does not of itself destroy [its] validity, it does weaken it. The interviews bear no relation to each other; moreover, since there are 19 different interviewers represented, there is not even the unifying thread of consistency. Contrary to its stated intentions, this book does not, for the most part, take the reader behind anything at all, or even into anything very deeply."

Choice 9:521 Je '72 150w

"[Most of the interviews] are unfortunately somewhat similar to the sort of thing offered on television. . . . This work will no doubt be of interest to professionals as well as to the theater and film buffs. Recommended for performing arts collections." A. C. Willers

Library J 95:4278 D 15 '70 100w

MCCUBBIN, CHARLES. Australian butterflies; with a foreword by Robert Menzies. 206p col il $30 Entomological repr. specialists

595 Butterflies
ISBN 0-17-001895-4

This book "is illustrated by . . . paintings by the author. . . . Not only the true butterflies (Papilionoidea) but the very numerous skippers (Hesperioidea) are included. Food plants and the early stages of many species are [also] illustrated. . . . [The book contains] paintings of butterfly habitats and collecting localities . . . [and] accounts of courtships and mating behavior, flights, oviposition, larval activities, 'hilltopping,' and the relationships with ants." (Science) Bibliography.

MCCUBBIN, CHARLES—Continued

"The paintings of specimens are excellent and accurate, and entirely adequate for identification. . . . There are also a large bibliography, a map and key to localities, a glossary, and two indexes, one listing the plants separately. . . . This is a very important book that will have special appeal to all naturalists and collectors." A. B. Klots

Science 177:342 J1 28 '72 300w

"McCubbin's book makes a wide appeal and is intended for anyone wishing to take up the collecting of Australian butterflies, for he includes hints on capturing, killing and preserving these insects. . . . [He] paints with a rare skill and the critical eye of the expert. He introduces a dynamic quality, showing, for example, a drift of butterflies as though in flight against a background of forest trees or perhaps a clump of waving grasses. . . . McCubbin lists 357 [species of butterflies] giving much interesting information . . . and presenting his facts in the careful and balanced manner necessary in a work of this kind."

TLS p975 Ag 18 '72 130w

MCCULLOH, WILLIAM E. Longus. 143p $5.50

Twayne

883 Longus—Daphnis and Chloe

LC 77-9541

In this study of Daphnis and Chloe, by "pointing out allusions to classical authors, the meaning of standard narrative patterns, and the religious and social significance of the countryside in late antiquity, McCulloh illustrates . . . the range and intention of Longus' art . . . [as well as his] emphasis on constructive human relationships and social institutions. . . . Citation of relevant passages from English literature indicates the extent of Longus' influence [and] reference to current writing and events suggests that Daphnis and Chloe may have particular value in today's urbanized and mechanized society." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[An] analysis of Longus' style in comparison to his contemporaries' reveals the shortcomings of the various translations available. . . . Highly recommended for anyone interested in the history of the novel. . . . Critical bibliography and detailed, informative footnotes make this work useful also for the seasoned scholar."

Choice 8:218 Ap '71 180w

"Is Daphnis and Chloe just a dirty book? It is, no doubt, if you have a dirty mind. Or is it effete, trivial, decadent? Students of all ages, in all ages, have asked these questions; they still do. In McCulloh's book the first is seen to dissolve; the author cleverly turns his exposition to face the second directly. The twentieth century, he suggests, the ambivalent twentieth century, is the right time for Longus. . . . [The author's] thesis is that Daphnis and Chloe is a hybrid, in which literary tradition is infused with the dynamic religious force of its period to produce a serious and civilized work. The study is brief, but well-judged and carefully executed, alert and readable. . . . [It] is also distinctly sounder than some . . . modern studies of classical literature. It can be recommended with the same controlled enthusiasm as the author shows for his subject." B. P. Reardon

Mod Lang J 56:99 F '72 340w

MCCULLOUGH, DAVID. The great bridge. 636p $10.95 Simon & Schuster

624.2 Brooklyn Bridge

ISBN 671-21213-3 LC 72-81823

A history of the engineering of Brooklyn Bridge and of the Roebling family who designed and built it. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Judson LaHaye

Best Sell 32:355 N 1 '72 500w

"Alan Trachtenberg wrote a splendid study of the Brooklyn Bridge as a cultural symbol, Brooklyn Bridge: Fact and Symbol [BRD 1965]. We now have an equally splendid history of the engineering of the bridge. . . . The two books complement each other, and both belong in all collections on American history and culture. McCullough has used a wide variety of sources, including previously untapped manuscript collections, to produce a work that is scholarly and that will also have a wide appeal for general readers. A superb selection of illustrations adds much to the value of the work. The Brooklyn Bridge is probably the most famous bridge in the world; McCullough's book is worthy of its subject." Jack Goodwin

Library J 97:3311 O 15 '72 100w

"The impact of the soaring structure upon the American imagination and American life has now been measured with sagacity and style by . . . a writer with a sound intuitive sense of what to put in and what to leave out of his narrative. . . . Though the author is writing for a general audience, he has not slighted the technical story and deals as carefully and lucidly with the geology of the New York area, the functions of caissons and air locks and the spinning of the 15¾ inch cables, as he does with the sinuous turnings of municipal politics in the Boss Tweed era or the wider social setting. One gets a sense of the best and the worst of America during the 14 years covered. . . . The author conveys a vivid sense of what the Brooklyn Bridge has meant to the passing generations. He is equally successful with his biographical vignettes."

Gerald Carson

N Y Times Bk R p7 O 15 '72 900w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliven

New Yorker 48:187 N 11 '72 1600w

"[This] is an engrossing piece of social history, a latitudinal view of the politics and business practices and daily life of the two or three decades after the ending of the Civil War. . . . McCullough does justice to [the] gamy background but never allows it to get the better of his subject or his narrative or to turn into that familiar historical stereotype that obscures the fact that the Gilded Age was a period of enormous achievement in virtually every area of activity. . . . It is a measure of Roebling's daring that many of his contemporaries believed that the bridge would never be finished. . . . McCullough displays throughout a passion for detail and an admirable skill at making the technical aspects of bridgebuilding both clear and dramatic." Justin Kaplan

Sat R 55:70 S 30 '72 1800w

MCCUNE, BILLY. Conversations with the dead. See Lyon, D.

MACDERMOT, VIOLET. The cult of the seer in the ancient Middle East; a contribution to current research on hallucinations drawn from Coptic and other texts. 829p $24 Univ. of Calif. press

248 Asceticism. Visions. Hallucinations and illusions

ISBN 0-520-02030-8 LC 79-152047

The core of this book consists of translations mainly from Coptic texts of the early Christian era reporting hallucinatory experiences. The author is a Coptic student trained in clinical medicine and uses this background in an attempt "to distinguish the visions of ancient seers—particularly those of Egypt from the third to seventh centuries A.D.—from modern psychedelic experiences. . . . Her literary-historical analysis seeks to interpret these visionary experiences by means of a . . . survey of the lives of these seers together with attention to the forms and concerns of the literature recording these experiences." (Choice) Bibliographies. Index of quotations. General index.

"This book is in many ways a welcome addition to the literature of visionary and hallucinogenic experience. . . . While scholars will find much with which to quarrel, particularly [MacDermot's] broad generalizations about the religio-historical context in which these seers and their biographers lived, [her] approach is essentially sound. . . . [This together with] the wealth of textual citations make this volume more valuable than the methodologically deficient work of [J.M.] Allegro. The sacred mushroom and the cross [BRD 1970, 1971] or R. Gordon Wasson's attempt to identify Soma with 'the divine mushroom of immortality' [in his Soma: divine mushroom of immortality]. A major barrier to acquisition is the high price."

Choice 9:495 Je '72 150w

"This selection of rare material is of unusual interest for the history of religion and for the psychic and physiological components of asceticism in particular. The book, however, also claims to be of use to researchers concerned with the problem of modern hallucinatory drugs, and it additionally offers a lengthy introduction on the place of the seer in religious life, commenting mostly on Greek and Hebrew sources. The Coptic material is sufficiently valuable to stand up by itself; the other material is rather thin and lacking in background, particularly the comments on Greek religion. The Coptic section has been reworked by the author from other people's translations; the Greek and Hebrew quotes appear to have been taken from standard English translations. The cumbersome indexing appears to be unnecessarily complicated." J. R. Bram

Library J 97:1334 Ap 1 '72 160w

MCDERMOTT, GEOFFREY. Leader lost; ■ biography of Hugh Gaitskell. (Vertex bk) 218p $6.95 Auerbach pubs.

B or 92 Gaitskell, Hugh Todd Naylor
ISBN 0-87769-037-5 LC 73-124628

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Economist 242:61 Mr 25 '72 280w

Reviewed by Alan Watkins

New Statesman 83:395 Mr 24 '72 600w

TLS p413 Ap 14 '72 500w

MCDOWELL, ROBERT E., ed. Third World voices for children; ed. by Robert E. McDowell and Edward Lavitt; ill. by Barbara Kohn Isaac. 146p lib bdg $5.95 Third press

808.8 Negro literature—Collections—Juvenile literature
ISBN 89388-020-5 LC 71-169091

This is a "collection of short stories, folk tales, poems, and songs from . . . Africa, New Guinea, the West Indies, Puerto Rico, and Black America. Selections are grouped geographically; each section is preceded by an introduction which provides background information." (Library J)

"The selections vary greatly in the quality of the writing—some are excellent, some inept; and the volume seems more of a pastiche than a unified collection with any traceable theme. Yet, the total collection serves as an interesting introduction to the motifs of third-world writing."

Horn Bk 48:156 Ap '72 180w

"'Breaking a Kola Nut' and 'Burial of a Titled Man' by Rems Nna Umeasiegbu explain the significance of kola nuts and titles among the Ibos. . . . [There is a] poetically-written short story, 'Joseph the Zulu,' by Peter Abrahams. . . . 'How the Milky Way Came To Be' and 'Nyangara, the Python' are brief folk tales suitable for use with younger children. . . . Excerpts of poetry are simply written and easy to understand. . . . Illustrated with stylized pen-and-ink sketches, this fine addition to world folklore collections is highly recommended for purchase by all libraries." R. K. Carlson

Library J 97:1171 Mr 15 '72 330w

"The genesis tales . . . [seek] to explain creation, the universe, the heavens, natural phenomena. The animal fables clue us into values and ethics. The snatches from autobiographies document the experience of slavery [and] . . . the struggle to maintain allegiance with the traditions that sustain a people. . . . But mostly there are the songs. If there is anything that links together the various periods, regions and people met in these pages, it is the persistence and function of song. . . . The other nice thing is that the editors treat the young reader as an independent. The notes are so informative that you need not suffer the interference of teachers or librarians." T. C. Bambara

N Y Times Bk ■ pt 2, p45 N 7 '71
550w

MACE, DAVID R. Getting ready for marriage. 128p $3.75 Abingdon press

301.42 Marriage. Family life education. Counseling
ISBN 0-687-14135-4 LC 75-175280

The author "outlines his general counseling procedure for premarital consultations. He urges couples contemplating marriage to discard romantic ideas, admit that problems inevitably arise, and begin working on them before the ceremony takes place. Provided are questions which each individual should ask himself and his partner concerning background, present attitudes and ideas, and future goals. . . . Major problem areas such ■ sex, in-laws, money, children, friends, and recreation are covered, and new problems brought about by working women and the trend to smaller families are noted." (Library J)

"Simple counsel for the engaged."

Christian Century 89:49 Ja 12 '72 10w

"An appendix tells how to locate a counselor and suggests others who can be of help. Mace obviously regards marriage as valid and rewarding if couples are truly committed and willing to face rather than side-step conflicts; his simply presented manual should be useful to young people both individually and ■ couples." Marcia Keller

Library J 97:1631 Ap 15 '72 150w [YA]

MCFARLANE, BRIAN. The Stanley cup; the story of the men and the teams who for over three-quarters of a century have fought for hockey's next prized trophy. 192p il $6.95 Scribner

796.9 Hockey
ISBN 0-684-12606-0 LC 72-162941

In this account of the Stanley Cup, the oldest trophy competed for by professional athletes in North America, the author "mentions the contending teams and their stars in each Stanley Cup playoff since its inception and . . . [provides] some background color on these contests." (Library J)

"[The Stanley Cup] deserved a better book. McFarlane, a hockey broadcaster, has attempted to do too much in one work. . . . The result is a superficial chronology consisting of a large number of names dealt with in a quite cursory manner. The Stanley Cup will satisfy neither old-timers nor contemporary fans." G. W. Whitbeck

Library J 97:212 Ja 15 '72 80w

"If you're already a hockey fan, you will find this irresistible; if you're not a hockey fan, The Stanley Cup may convert you. . . . In describing the early days of Stanley Cup play, [the author] tells some rough, tough tales of turn-of-the-century hockey and the free-wheeling teams that grew into the highly organized league and Cup play of today. And, of course, details of recent Cup years' competition will arouse nostalgia and/or wrath from sin bin bulls." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:110 Mr 25 '72 110w [YA]

MCFARLANE, K. B. Hans Memling; ed. by Edgar Wind with the assistance of G. L. Harriss. 74p 153pl $19.50 Oxford

759.3 Memling, Hans

This work contains "essays on the Donne triptych, the Danzig 'Last Judgment,' and the character and reputation of Memling's art." (Library J) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

"The book is refreshing in its independent views, unusually convincing, and very well illustrated. Belongs in every college and university library with strong holdings in the history of art."

Choice 9:206 Ap '72 110w

"The essay on the Donne triptych offers new evidence on the chronology of the artist's work that should alter many past evaluations of his development. In this context, the appended lists, genealogical tables, and chronologies are particularly useful. It is unfortunate that the author did not live long enough to write more extensively on Memling because these essays clearly demonstrate that he had the insight and understanding to accomplish a major monograph. (The illustrations lack color and are of uneven quality.)" W. R. Treese

Library J 97:1420 Ap 15 '72 90w

"The present book has been extracted from ■ [McFarlane's] lectures and lecture notes by Edgar Wind (who himself died before it could appear) and G. L. Harriss. The resulting volume is described by Wind in ■ preface as 'only a shadow of the Memling that McFarlane would have published,' but it is none the less an incisive, articulate and highly original book. . . . In some respects the most brilliant section of the book is the last, which deals with the character and reputation of Memling's art."

MCFARLANE, K. B.—Continued

TLS p294 Mr 17 '72 750w

MCGEEL, REECE. Academic Janus; foreword by Theodore Caplow. 264p $9.50 Jossey-Bass 378.1 Colleges and universities—U.S.
ISBN 0-87589-097-0 LC 70-149913

In this "study of the liberal arts college, . . . [McGeel] discusses the overall prospects for such colleges . . . and such matters as faculty, college administration, and the 'style' of the liberal arts college." (Choice)

"The data are from a sample of some 11 colleges in the Midwest but an effort is made to generalize about the small liberal arts college nationally. . . . This is probably the best single study on its topic now available. It is well written, and has the uncommon advantage of using sociological data in a convincing and readily understandable way. Highly recommended to anyone interested in the current plight of American higher education, as well as to libraries wishing to keep abreast of current literature on education."

Choice 8:1367 D '71 130w

"McGeel's techniques . . . afford suggestive means for examining job motivations. Also to be commended are his illuminating sketch of the social structure of private colleges, his 'prestige algebra,' which has intriguing possibilities, and the perceptive notes in the Appendix on the interviewing process and coding of responses. . . . Although lightened by flashes of brilliance, the report fails because of its faulty design and often unjustified interpretations." R. E. Eckert

J Higher Ed 43:411 My '72 750w

MCGEEHAN, ROBERT. The German rearmament question; American diplomacy and European defense after World War II. 280p $10 Univ. of Ill. press

327 U.S.—Foreign relations—Europe. Europe—Foreign relations—U.S. Germany (Federal Republic)—Defenses
SBN 252-00160-5 LC 79-146009

This account traces "America's support of German rearmaments from the outset of the Korean War . . . to the establishment of a sovereign West Germany in 1955." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Most of the narrative covers familiar ground, and there is little that is new either in terms of source material or interpretation. But McGeehan tells his story effectively, and the material is organized in a way which allows the reader to follow a fairly complicated and many-sided issue with relative ease." W. F. Hanrieder

Am Pol Sci R 66:1090 S '72 1150w

"Much of the book . . . addresses itself to the diplomacy of conflict or dilemma resolution. . . . Within its stated limits this book must be considered a valuable contribution, for it does raise a number of questions not previously broached." H. L. Bretton

Ann Am Acad 402:140 Jl '72 420w

"This badly written book is painstakingly researched from public documents and memoirs; the concerned governments have not yet opened their archives. Recommended particularly for college and university libraries and for larger public libraries."

Choice 9:262 Ap '72 140w

"[McGeehan] treats a topic which aroused public opinion in Western Europe to a fever pitch two decades ago with the calm detachment of a true scholar. He presents a well-rounded picture of the problem with its many facets and draws some pertinent historical perspectives concerning its long-range significance. . . . [He] arrives at the sound conclusion that the American pressure for EDC led to the political rehabilitation of the Federal Republic, even though European politicians had grave reservations about large-scale German rearmament so soon after Hitler's demise. This useful monograph is well written and carefully documented." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 97:1323 Ap 1 '72 200w

MCGIMSEY, CHARLES R. Public archeology [by] Charles R. McGimsey III. 265p $9.50 Seminar press

353.008 Indians of North America—Antiquities—Conservation and restoration. U. S.—Antiquities
ISBN 0-12-872450-1 LC 76-183468

"The first part of the book is devoted to a . . . description of archeological practices and to the responsibilities of the archeologist, and the public concerning archeological sites, and ends with a view of the plight of archeology today. The heart of the text consists of three sections containing . . . advice on designing a state archeological program and a state antiquities act. . . . More than two-thirds of the text is a sourcebook of state-by-state information collected for many years on the various archeological programs and local and state legislation. The last section is on federal legislation affecting archeological preservation." (Science)

"Convenient reference work as well as a guide to public programs and legislation pertaining to archaeology, although it tackles only the major points. McGimsey has had considerable experience in setting up a model state program (Arkansas) to protect archaeological sites and to further archaeology, and the book abounds in useful information on state and Federal laws and programs. Professional archaeologists, concerned legislators, and other public leaders will be the principal users of this volume. It is perhaps in the nature of a reference work to lack index and bibliography but they would have been helpful. Recommended for university and law libraries since the information brought together here is hard to come by otherwise."

Choice 9:792 S '72 120w

"The book is aimed at archeologists, legislators, and citizens concerned with the archeological heritage of their locality or state. A basic principle is proposed that 'no individual may act in a manner such that the public right to knowledge of the past is unduly endangered or destroyed' for 'no one owns rights to an archeological object or to archeological data,' not even the archeologist. . . . The book should be required reading for all students of archeology, professional and nonprofessional. It is an invaluable source of information for archeologists, legislators, and the public interested in learning what programs in archeology are provided in each state and what legislation is available for the preservation of archeological resources and support of archeological projects." C. H. Chapman

Science 177:1097 S 22 '72 550w

MCGINNIS, JOE. The dream team. 213p $5.95 Random house

ISBN 0-394-47992-0 LC 73-38589

The unnamed narrator of this novel "is ■ best-selling author on a publisher-financed promotional tour. Barnaby Blaine is a San Francisco radio personality who is obsessed with horse-race betting and claims to make money at it. Jennifer is a young aspiring journalist who wants to join Federated Press's 'collection of the brightest, prettiest girl reporters in the country,' the Dream Team. These three . . . characters fly to Florida for a week at Hialeah, to try to beat the races and find themselves." (Library J)

"The alcoholic and extra-marital fling [of the three characters] lasts for a week, and the novel tells of the events in those crazy mixed-up days. . . . The author tries to make all this add up to a breezy novel, and though he may be given an A for effort, he really gets a dismal D for his results. The story is too brittle, too sophomoric, too silly. . . . McGinniss and his fertile mind can surely come up with a better story line than this dreary novel." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 32:92 My 15 '72 360w

"[This story] is suspenseful, insightful, and often moving. This beautiful first novel—one of the best I've ever read about racing—probably won't draw as wide a readership ■ McGinniss' first book, The Selling of the President 1968 [BRD 1969, 1970], but it deserves to." J. L. Breen

Library J 97:1347 Ap 1 '72 150w

"A light book that reads well and will probably get the Hollywood treatment—Hialeah, handsome horses thundering out of a curve, Jennifer in and out of hot pants."

New Repub 166:33 Ap 29 '72 120w

Reviewed by Joe Flaherty

N Y Times Bk R p34 Ap 30 '72 750w

Va Q R 48:ci summer '72 90w

MCGIVERN, WILLIAM P. Caprifoil. 250p $6.95
Dodd

ISBN 0-396-06552-X LC 72-727

"'Caprifoil' is the code name of a top French Minister who once operated in espionage in company with the . . . American agent, August Spencer, and the . . . British agent G. N. Wyndom Ackerley. Together, these three agents had . . . survived. But now Caprifoil is missing, and Spencer and Ackerley are marked for execution. The only way to stay alive is to find Caprifoil. Their search [leads them] . . . to a fortress in Algiers where a well organized force of Arab guerrillas have pledged their lives in an ingenious plot to destroy Israel." (Publisher's note)

"The plot is good; the pace of the story varies throughout. Mr. McGivern's characterizations, particularly of the secret agents and the President of the United States, are well done. In general, the story provides exciting reading."

Best Sell 32:283 S 15 '72 130w

"The plot is sufficiently exciting but contrived; it might make a good movie." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3619 N 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by Carol Kalamaras

Library J 97:4094 D 15 '72 40w [YA]

"August Spencer, a retired American agent, dodges an assassin's bullet on a trout stream in Western Ireland. He returns, shaken, to his cottage, and to a letter suggesting that he and two former colleagues are marked for death by an unidentified enemy. . . . What began on a human scale—a man's problem of survival—now becomes a world problem: jet planes, paratroopers, bombs bursting in air. This is an entertaining thriller, but the beginning promised more than that."

New Yorker 48:182 O 14 '72 170w

Reviewed by O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:79 S 30 '72 130w

MCGOVERN, GEORGE S. The great coalfield war, by George S. McGovern and Leonard F. Guttridge; ill. with phot. and with maps by Samuel H. Bryant. 333p $8.95 Houghton

331.89 Strikes and lockouts. Miners

ISBN 0-395-13649-0 LC 72-177532

An account of the seven months strike against the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company which reached a climax at Ludlow, Colorado in April, 1914, when "nearly 100 people [were] killed, including women and children, in 10 days. The miners, mostly immigrants from eastern and southern Europe, worked in . . . unsafe mines for up to 12 hours a day, averaging pay of less than $700 a year. The biggest mining company in the State was controlled by John D. Rockefeller, Jr. [who refused to recognize the union.] At the request of the mine-owners, the governor sent in the State militia. Afterward Federal troops restored calm." (Publishers' Weekly) This book has been adapted from Senator McGovern's 1953 doctoral dissertation. Bibliography.

Reviewed by I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 32:173 J1 1 '72 600w

"Strongly recommended for students of labor history and college libraries and for those wanting to learn more about the thinking of the Democratic nominee."

Choice 9:1326 D '72 250w

"[This book] should be read for a number of important reasons. For one, Americans should know of the grim and brutal lives men have lived—and live—in the remote canyons and valleys of the American hinterland where coal is mined. . . . This book should also be read because one of the authors may someday be President of the United States, and the book reveals, to some considerable degree, the careful, orderly, incisive, and sympathetic way in which he thinks. . . . There is a maddening quality about this tragic tale. It is utterly American in essence and much of it is timeless. . . . But outrage against the system itself does not emerge." H. M. Caudill

N Y Rev of Books 19:38 S 21 '72 2100w

"[This is] the rarest sort of campaign document. . . . [However] we will never know exactly which changes in the text . . . are McGovern's own. With that qualification, this is as valuable and revealing a book as Presidential candidates have offered us recently—more scholarly and more original than [J.F.] Kennedy's 'Profiles in Courage' [BRD 1956] and less narcissistic than [R.M.] Nixon's 'Six Crises' [BRD 1965] even if it is less readable than either of these others. Considering the coal war as a microcosm of American violence—indeed, only a snapshot in the still-bloody story of the United Mine Workers—it documents, long before Vietnam, the fascination of this former minister of the Social Gospel with the ugliest side of our public business." Christopher Lydon

N Y Times Bk R p4 J1 9 '72 1050w

"A well-researched account of a violent, pathetic episode in American labor history. . . . [The authors] are remarkably good at grasping and conveying the personalities of the powerful people who figure in their sanguinary tale—the Governor of Colorado, Eliza Ammons; the richest of the mineowners, John D. Rockefeller, Jr.—as well as the obscure miners. . . . The effect of this work is simply engaging, for the reality that the documentation evokes, both of wickedness (exploitation allied to smarmy smugness) and the suffering that that wickedness caused (poverty, death, disease, maiming, servitude, ignorance), is intolerable."

New Yorker 48:111 Je 3 '72 140w

MCGOVERN, JAMES. To the Yalu; from the Chinese invasion of Korea to MacArthur's dismissal. 225p ill $6.95 Morrow

951.9 Korean War, 1950-1953. MacArthur, Douglas

LC 74-170249

This is an "account of the Korean War from the time of President Truman's meeting with General Douglas MacArthur on Wake Island in October 1950 to MacArthur's dismissal by the President in April 1951. The author . . . traces the 'entirely new war' which began during these months when intervening Chinese Communist armies compelled the United Nations (American and South Korean) forces to beat an agonizing retreat from the Yalu River in North Korea." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"[This] swift and limited little narrative of the American adventure in Korea . . . [is based on] official accounts, newspaper accounts, [and] personal reminiscences. . . . The book does its small job of telling an important tale in small space, and in an interesting way." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 32:120 Je 1 '72 350w

Choice 9:861 S '72 120w

"[McGovern's] brief, popular account . . . presents little that is new. Yet [the] volume is appealing because of its sprightly style and soberly drawn judgments. In his final pages, the author thoughtfully compares the American military involvement in Korea and in Vietnam." Hyman Kublin

Library J 97:2090 Je 1 '72 100w

MCGRATH, ROBERT L. Early Vermont wall paintings, 1790-1850. 105p ill $10 Univ. press of New England

751.7 Mural painting and decoration. Vermont—Social life and customs

ISBN 0-87451-062-7 LC 73-177448

The "professor of art at Dartmouth College has uncovered new examples of early American wall painting which he considers as significant as ancient Roman house decoration. This art was unique in both cultures in being secular, decorative, and historical rather than morally instructive. The author concentrates on overmantel paintings (the artists were usually anonymous), tracing the development of their subjects from simple nature forms to complicated architectural and symbolic designs." (Library J)

"A welcome addition to the small literature on American mural painting, detailing the work of itinerant limners and two late 19th-century decorators as it traces the history of wall painting in Vermont. The murals are likened to those at Pompeii in farfetched comparisons which are illuminating if forced. The works could have been better analyzed as American social history. McGrath (Dartmouth) uses a style which makes for dull reading. Unnecessarily pedantic footnotes; books on Roman works and Vermont history will be very hard for the average reader to obtain. . . . McGrath is best on Rufus Porter, much too hard on the 'Victorians,' but the whole forms a good survey of the state's murals including those few found in churches. . . . The book sorely lacks color plates."

MCGRATH, R. L.—Continued

Choice 9:960 O '72 170w

"McGrath admits his theories and interpretations are highly personal, but he has made a contribution to a neglected subject. The illustrations are black and white, somewhat dimmed by the mat paper, and there is no index. However, the book will be needed in art libraries and useful, (if expensive) in regional history collections." Jeanne Lopez

Library J 97:2566 Ag '72 140w

Reviewed by M. A. McCorison

New Eng Q 45:605 D '72 750w

MCGRATH, SYLVIA WALLACE. Charles Kenneth Leith; scientific adviser. 255p il $15 Univ. of Wis. press

B or 92 Leith, Charles Kenneth

ISBN 0-299-05970-7 LC 73-157394

A biography of the University of Wisconsin geologist who was "an authority on the pre-cambrian period and the geologic structure of the Lake Superior region. An active field man, he soon became enmeshed in mineral exploration, developing mining rights, corporate finance, etc., as well as a leading figure in the development of economic geology. He later extended his practical work into government, working for the U.S. Geological Survey, serving as mineral and resources advisor to several war boards, and on President Roosevelt's Science Advisory Board." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The book itself is tedious, incredibly detailed, and includes many intimate and trivial episodes in Leith's life. It reads sometimes like a dime romance, at other times like the Congressional record. . . . Of interest is the diversity of Leith's career. . . . There is relatively little emphasis on pure geology in the book, though what is there is handled well and accurately explained. The book is well documented, heavily footnoted, and has a not-very-reliable index."

Choice 9:78 Mr '72 260w

"McGrath's study of Leith's multifaceted career is straightforward and authoritative. . . . Yet for all its strengths, this is a disappointingly narrow biography. McGrath leaves one wondering how Leith, the scientific activist and adviser, fitted into the larger, including the ethical and political, development of his profession. She ventures virtually no judgments. . . . [Her] study is also lamentably short on analysis of Leith's governmental activities." D. J. Kevles

J Am Hist 59:211 Je '72 650w

MCGRAW, JAMES R., ed. Dick Gregory's political primer. See Gregory, D.

MCGREGOR, CRAIG, ed. Bob Dylan; a retrospective. 407p il $10; pa $2.95 Morrow

B or 92 Dylan, Bob

LC 77-182455

This anthology of articles contains interviews with and writings about the singer-composer of pop and protest music. "Included are 45 selections from such sources as the New York Times, the New Yorker, Playboy, Ramparts, Rolling Stone, Crawdaddy, Fusion, etc., and a concluding essay by Wilfred Mellers written especially for this book." (Library J)

"Covering 1961-1971, this comprehensive anthology of articles about Bob Dylan (né Zimmerman) is, as McGregor states in his introduction, 'partly a source book, and partly a critical anthology.' Beginning with folk songs in the style of his idol, Woody Guthrie, Dylan switched to songs of social protest. When he deserted dissent for folk-rock at the Newport Folk Festival in 1965, reactions were mixed. Did Dylan sell out or grow up? Were his changes traitorous or natural? . . . Mature YA's who have grown older along with Dylan will appreciate this collection representing every point of view about him." Virginia Borland

Library J 97:2248 Je 15 '72 140w [YA]

"McGregor has collected some of the most significant published reactions to Dylan's career. The shift from folk and protest to rock

'n' roll and surrealism; the motorcycle accident, disappearance, and rumors, followed by the simplicity of John Wesley Harding; the placidity of the later albums and Dylan's subsiding into a family man. . . . McGregor follows him all the way, chronicling also the fans' repeated attempts to turn Dylan into a guru and Dylan's repeated evasive actions. . . . Dylan looks pretty good; but no man is a hero to his interviewer's tape recorder, and tape recorders are the foundation of [books such as this] . . . which are full of unheroic real talk." J. D. O'Hara

New Repub 166:26 My 20 '72 800w

MCGUINNESS, ROSAMOND. English court odes, 1660-1820. 249p $13 Oxford

784 Songs, English—History and criticism.

Courts and courtiers

ISBN 0-19-816119-0 LC 77-880814

This study of court odes covers "musical encomiums to British sovereigns from Charles II to . . . George III. . . . Functionally these odes greet a monarch on his birthday or homecoming or on New Year's Day. Musically they bring together gala vocal and instrumental forces, and textually they followed the type of address established by Abraham Cowley in his Pindaric Odes of 1656." (Mus Q)

"Seldom has a subdivision of a single musical genre been canvassed as thoroughly as in [this book]. . . . The chronological record of odes in chapter 2 . . . the result of years of digging and cogitating, is Dr. McGuinness's most definitive contribution. . . . One can share the disappointment of the author, who 'discovered that little of the music or poetry has much aesthetic value,' while agreeing that studying them in detail contributes to our total view and 'illustrates some of the pitfalls of patronage.'" H. L. Clarke

Mus Q 58:479 J1 '72 1350w

"We have before us . . . a volume luxuriating in lengthy musical examples and clearly based on considerable travail, all of which adds up to a somewhat negative result, so that the reader may well begin to wonder whether he is the victim of an egregiously academic practical joke. . . . If the author had been advised to lie fallow for a few years and forget [her] dissertation, then return with a brilliant and readable study of this genuinely fascinating facet of English musical life, the result would have been a book worth having. The present volume, in spite of all the effort put into it by everyone concerned ranks a little more than a non-book."

TLS p131 F 4 '72 1750w

MCHARGUE, GEORGE S. Facts, frauds, and phantasms; a survey of the spiritualist movement. 296p $4.95; lib bdg $5.70 Doubleday

133.9 Spiritualism

LC 73-180090

This study ranges "from mediums and phenomena such as materialization and cross-correspondences to prominent figures (such as Robert Browning, President and Mrs. Lincoln, the magician Houdini, and Bishop Pike) whose lives were in some way affected by spiritualism. The author offers numerous possible explanations for . . . spiritualism, from outright fraud to extrasensory perception and the workings of the unconscious mind." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The author has conjured up some of the apparitions of the spiritualist movement from Margaret Fox—whose crackling big toe initiated séance rappings in 1848—to the Rev. James A. Pike—whose spiritualist leanings were not always of an Episcopalian bent. Florence Cook and her spiritualist sidekick 'Katie'; Andrew Jackson Davis, the Poughkeepsie Seer; and the Duke University E.S.P. staff appear in the phantasmagoria of images presented to the reader. . . . [McHargue's] treatment of [spiritualism] vibrates with life; filled with intriguing details, the exposition is lively and humorous, although quick to condemn frauds, the author leaves openings for speculation and occasionally admits that some phenomena—like those performed by Eusapia Palladino—cannot be dismissed as trickery and that they have not yet been explained. Fascinating material treated in a tongue-in-cheek style." A. S.

Horn Bk 48:478 O '72 230w

"[This] thoughtfully written and impressively researched . . . history of spiritualism . . . is a genuine rarity—a juvenile title which can stand with adult books as being as nearly a complete popular introduction to a subject as one might wish. The author has treated her subject with thoroughness and a careful consideration of the causes and meanings of this interesting and enduring phenomenon: most satisfying is [her] felicitous display of wit and humor." Michael Cart

Library J 97:3471 O 15 '72 120w

"Comprehensive, well-researched and written with style and wit, this history of spiritualism is one of the best titles dealing with the occult for young people. Although intended for a slightly older audience than D. Cohen's In Search of Ghosts [BRD 1972], this book is far superior and should become a standard work on the subject." Michael Cart
Library J 97:3814 N 15 '72 100w [YA]

MCHARGUE, GEORGE. The impossible people; a history natural and unnatural of beings terrible and wonderful; ill. by Frank Bozzo. 169p $6.95; lib bdg $6.59 Holt

398.2 Folklore—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-03-080237-7; 0-03-080238-5 (lib bdg)
LC 75-150033

"Giants, Trolls, Witches, Pixies, Demons, Mermaids . . . [are included in this] compendium of mythological beings. . . American and European folklore are the author's main fields of research, but . . . examples range as far as the Zambesi and the Himalayas. She analyzes and describes the chief mythological 'people,' noting the curious backward evolution—from god to whimsey—that characterizes many. There are also . . . speculations on the possible origins of these persistent imaginary beings." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Ages nine to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"A frolic of infinite variety spreads ahead of the reader who is even slightly fey. . . This book is recommended to those children old enough to remember when Faeries did dance in the moonlight and could be seen by any child lucky enough to have a silver penny. Any reader will regret seeing 'The End' after this moving, humorous, informative, and loving ode to our best side, that of dreams and imagination." Mrs. J. G. Gray
Best Sell 32:32 Ap 15 '72 700w

"Despite the inherent appeal to the subject matter, the book is unlikely to be one that many young readers breeze through at a sitting or two. Bozzo's oddly static illustrations, the advanced vocabulary, and the urbane distance the author maintains from her material all conspire to discourage a race to the finish. Its lasting value is as a highly original work of reference." Judith Williams
Book World p4 (children's issue) My 7 '72 160w

"[The author] provides long-needed definitions for hitherto obscure characters—such as the Transcendent Pig, who 'once had the unspeakable audacity to swallow a nephew of the Emperor of Heaven' . . . . She offers helpful hints to those foolhardy enough to venture out on dark and stormy nights—brownies when 'seriously annoyed, can turn into Bog-garts or Boggles.' Whether discursing on the Blue Men of the Minch, the Brown Man of the Moors, or the shocking misnomer of Gentle Annie, Miss McHargue uses her subject with marvelous humor and an unflagging sense of style. . . . My only reservation is that the author too often seems to 'explain away' her creatures by concrete physical manifestations." Christian Science Monitor pB4 My 4 '72 220w

Horn Bk 48:380 Ag '72 90w

Reviewed by Brooke Anson

Library J 97:1915 My 15 '72 110w

"I have given a certain amount of thought in my life to mythical beasts (unicorns, griffins and the like) but rarely have I pondered mythical people—and it is this intellectual gap that Georgess McHargue has come along to fill. I suspect that she will fill it for a great many others too, for her knowledge on the subject is dazzling. . . . [She] tracks the origins of her impossible people with the determination of a Sherlock Holmes. In a cheery, business-like way, she guides the reader through a veritable labyrinth of detail—simultaneously explaining that myths, and mythical creatures, are but one of humanity's means of coping with the paradoxes and terrors of existence. . . . I cannot imagine anyone disliking this book . . . [which] is a rare blend of scholarship, entertainment, wisdom, gravity and grace." Barbara Wersba
N Y Times Bk R p8 Ap 11 '72 430w

MACHLIN, MILT. The search for Michael Rockefeller. 256p il $6.95 Putnam

B or 92 Rockefeller, Michael Clark, New Guinea
LC 72-175266

"In 1968, seven years after the disappearance of Michael Rockefeller in the jungles of New Guinea, the author heard a rumour that the Rockefeller heir was still alive. Here he recounts the 'story of his subsequent personal odyssey in search of solid clues to Michael's fate—and his reasons for believing the youth was captured, killed and cannibalized by Stone Age natives.' (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 31:556 Mr 15 '72 260w

"To support his murder theory, Machlin, executive editor of Argosy . . . has collected evidence based primarily on personal observations and interviews. Almost exclusive use of such subjective techniques detracts from the credibility of the findings. Despite a fast-paced, occasionally suspenseful narrative, the book is neither convincing nor conclusive; and the whys surrounding Rockefeller's death remain in the realm of conjecture." M. H. Zack
Library J 97:866 Mr 1 '72 110w

"The book offers insights into anthropology and investigative journalism alike; but most of all, it is a story of adventure and mystery, told in the relaxed, oral style of a good yarn being spun to pass a long, languid evening at one of the steamy outposts that Machlin visited in his quest. . . . In building his case, Machlin often finds himself in a cross fire between mutually hostile anthropologists and missionaries. He also becomes familiar with the natives and, when he concludes, he expresses anger only toward the white intruders who aroused the tribesmen, precipitated the murder of Rockefeller and then hid the true facts." Pete Axthelm
Newsweek 79:99A Mr 13 '72 550w

MACINNIS, DONALD E., comp. Religious policy and practice in Communist China; a documentary history. 392p $8.95; pa $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

200.951 China (People's Republic of China)—Religion
LC 74-182020

The book's "117 documents, primarily from Chinese sources, cover three broad topics: first, official policy toward religion; . . . second, the actual relations between the government on the one hand and Christian churches and Taoist and Buddhist temples and monasteries on the other; and third, Maoism as a new religion in the life of the people." (Library J)

"[The documents] begin with selections dating back to Edgar Snow's interviews of the 1930's with Mao Tse-tung in the caves of Yen-an and continue right up to the period that has followed the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution. The editor's intent was to provide the solid meat of history for the reader to chew before digesting his conclusions about religion in Communist China. He has provided a wonderful service. For the average reader, however, the book is a bit weighty and could have benefited from more interpretation. The editor's introductions to each section are fine." W. J. Richardson

America 127:102 Ag 19 '72 600w

Choice 9:1185 N '72 130w

"This will be a useful sourcebook for all who are interested in the fate of religion in China. . . . [The documents include] constitutional provisions, government directives, Chairman Mao's writings on religion, and excerpts from a fascinating series of articles in the Chinese press debating whether religion might be rooted out through suppression or long-term persuasion. . . . MacInnis, director of the China program of the National Council of Churches, has performed a great service by perceptively and painstakingly excerpting the most revealing passages from the vast body of source material on the subject." A. J. Nathan
Library J 97:2710 S 1 '72 130w

MACINTYRE, ALASDAIR. Against the self-images of the age; essays on ideology and philosophy. 284p $10 Schocken

192 Philosophy, Ideology
ISBN 0-8052-3370-9 LC 74-130208

In these "pieces published in various journals over the past decade and [in] others specially written now and hitherto unpublished . . . [the author] criticizes Christianity, Marxism and psychoanalysis for their failure to express the forms of thought and action which constitute our contemporary social life, and argues that a greater understanding of our complex world can come about only through a more thorough enquiry into the philosophy of the social sciences." (Publisher's note)

MACINTYRE, ALASDAIR—Continued

Reviewed by Gabriel Gersh
Canadian Forum 52:34 S '72 1000w

"Though some of the essays are quite good and worth any undergraduate's time, it is hard to argue that this volume is indispensable for the college library."

Choice 9:223 Ap '72 110w

"The awkwardness of the book's structure—its paradoxical air of claiming a synthesis while in fact presenting an opposition—can be seen to spring from the transitional character of MacIntyre's current thinking. The ideological orthodoxies are bold but disreputable; the philosophical alternatives are sound but modest, still far removed from bringing to birth a new, satisfactory world-view. This transitional character reveals itself in one major, serious obscurity: MacIntyre's attitude to Marxism. . . . The reader anxious to learn where exactly Marxism went wrong can rattle through these pages till the workers' state arrives without uncovering a single serious analysis of Marxism's political and theoretical deficiencies." Terry Eagleton

New Statesman 82:241 Ag 20 '71 700w

"The essays on moral philosophy that make up the first hundred pages of the second part of the book constitute the most solid and head-on refutation that the dominant prescriptivism of the postwar years has yet encountered. Professor MacIntyre's argumentative fertility combines with his knowledge of the history of culture and his ideological vigour in the mounting of a satisfyingly broad assault which leaves the object of his criticism standing up in less than, in his relativistic moods, he seems ready to allow. Here, as elsewhere in the book, he is consistently interesting. He shows conclusively by his example that a broadening of ethical perspective is by no means bound to lead to thinness and diffuseness."

TLS p466 Ap 28 '72 1500w

"If MacIntyre's work has a thesis, it is that the Utopian projections of our time are self-images in that they inadvertently reflect the standards, values, and objectives of the status quo. . . . The book contains some interesting criticism of psychoanalysis." Martin Lebowitz

Yale R 61:448 Mr '72 800w

MCINTYRE, W. DAVID, ed. Speeches and documents on New Zealand history: ed. by W. David McIntyre and W. J. Gardner. 489p maps $19.25 Oxford

993.1 New Zealand—History—Sources
ISBN 0-19-873009-8 LC 71-21344

"The editors present excerpts from 194 speeches and documents, which stress New Zealand's legislative and social experiments, race relations between Maori and European, and the dominion's ties with Great Britain." (Choice)

"[This volume] is an original and long needed publication. . . . The editors show a competency in their choice of material, but the volume needs an introductory essay and more extensive editorial comment. A more imaginative approach, probing further into the small state's interesting social and cultural history, would also have added to the book's worth. . . . In spite of its limitations the volume should be added to the undergraduate library."

Choice 8:721 Jl '71 140w

"On the history [of New Zealand, this] is as near to being an indispensable book as one commonly sees. . . . It is, however, not perfect and some of the imperfections by omission are detailed in the Preface, while others seem to arise from the fact that it was designed for the use of students of New Zealand history in New Zealand's universities and so has a somewhat different coverage from that needed by outsiders exploring the story from afar." C. H. Grattan

Pacific Affairs 44:473 fall '71 140w

MACK, STANLEY, ft. auth. 1 one dancing drum. See Kredenser, G.

MACK SMITH, DENIS. Victor Emanuel, Cavour, and the Risorgimento. 381p il maps $22.50 Oxford

945 Italy—History—1815-1915. Victor Emanuel II, King of Italy. Cavour, Count Camillo Benso di
ISBN 0-19-212550-8

The author "chooses a number of controversial episodes and historical problems involving the king and Cavour, and looks at them in the light of the documentation now available. His fifteen interlocking chapters deal with constitutional history, diplomacy, economic and social questions, military history, administration and local government; their underlying theme is the personal contribution . . . [these two men] made to Italy's becoming a nation." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by A. W. Salomone
Am Hist R 77:1482 D '72 900w

Reviewed by H. J. Burgwin
Ann Am Acad 402:157 Jl '72 350w

"All university and college libraries should acquire this valuable revisionist history."

Choice 9:270 Ap '72 190w

"The transformation of nineteenth-century Italian history which [Mack Smith], more than any other writer, has brought about will probably have to wait, for its definitive presentation, for another hand. Mr Mack Smith continues by indirection to find direction out. His immense learning, his extreme clear-headedness, and his flair for things Italian (marred only by a certain flatness of style) are displayed only in purely academic studies on limited topics. . . . His faithful readers find, after a book or two, that his view of the risorgimento is not merely perfectly clear but has become their own. They continue to welcome new variations on the theme, for Mr Mack Smith is perpetually deepening and sharpening his interpretation. His latest book well illustrates the point. Its most original element is its portrait of Victor Emanuel II [who] has never before been so fully treated in English, and has seldom been so faithfully dealt with in any language."

Economist 242:47 Ja 1 '72 600w

Reviewed by R. L. Blanco
Library J 97:1716 My 1 '72 160w

"The facts that Denis Mack Smith dug up and published often contradict the official mythology. . . . Mack Smith is not only an antique researcher but . . . a remarkably good writer. . . . His work is so rich in the new material he has gathered (or the material many of his Italian predecessors did not dare use) that he can often afford to leave out anecdotes and lines too well known to be recounted one more time. His books can be read with as much pleasure as good novels, at least by Italians who know the background. . . . Nevertheless Mack Smith is not Italian and his view of Italy is inevitably that of a twentieth-century, middle-class, northern Protestant scholar. Many of his censures seem inspired by an unconfessed desire to see Italy transform herself by magic into a law-abiding, tidy, fair-playing, decorous country. . . . Mack Smith admires Cavour's daring and intelligence but is shocked . . . by Cavour's wheelings and dealings." Luigi Barzini

N Y Rev of Books 19:16 O 5 '72 1700w

"Some [of the chapters] have never before been printed, some of them have only appeared in out-of-the-way places and in Italian; they make a valuable book, whose only demerit is its appalling price. The first essay in the book summarizes the Mack Smith version of the Risorgimento and does so brilliantly in thirty-seven pages; this is a masterpiece of compressed scholarship. For years to come, examiners will curse the name of Mack Smith for it is safe to predict that this essay will become the classic crib for schoolboy and undergraduate who want an authoritative—and, above all, brief—statement of the Truth. Such misuse is the most sincere tribute an historian can receive, and it will be justified."

TLS p673 Je 16 '72 1500w

MCKAY, ERNEST. Henry Wilson: practical radical: a portrait of a politician. (Kennikat press nat. univ. pubs. Ser. in Am. stud) 262p $11 Kennikat

B or 92 Wilson, Henry. U.S.—Politics and government—1815-1865. U.S.—Politics and government—1865-1898
ISBN 0-8046-9010-3 LC 70-139359

This is an account of the life and political career of Henry Wilson who was a "fighter against slavery, a maker and breaker of political parties, . . . a Radical Republican . . . a United States Senator from Massachusetts during the Civil War and Vice President of the United States during Reconstruction." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"McKay respects Wilson for his drive, dexterity, and idealism, and disputes charges against his character. . . . [This work indicates] ways in which the Civil War-Reconstruction situation united ideals and interests in common cause." J. P. Maddex

Ann Am Acad 399:219 Ja '72 350w

"Whether [Wilson] was the 'practical radical' McKay portrays, or did the right things for the wrong reasons, remains arguable. . . . Rather clumsily written, defensive about Wilson, and short on analysis, this biography still fills a gap on any college library bookshelf."

Choice 8:1084 O '71 180w

"McKay has sympathetically traced Wilson's career and sought to revise the common notion that Wilson was simply an unprincipled political opportunist. . . . [This] study, the first scholarly biography of Wilson to appear, is most welcome. Unfortunately it is rather narrow both in its research and approach. Since Wilson left few personal records, McKay has had to rely on official documents, collateral correspondence, reminiscences, and Wilson's public speeches for his evidence. . . . [However, he] has accepted too readily Wilson's public references to his past and the opinions of his friends. McKay presents very little solid evidence to justify his psychological interpretation. . . . These criticisms notwithstanding, McKay has contributed substantially to the political history of the sectional conflict, and while scholars may not agree with [his] evaluation, they will certainly benefit from his detailed reconstruction of the life of this important political figure." K. J. Brauer

J Am Hist 58:999 Mr '72 400w

MCKAY, JOHN P. Pioneers for profit; foreign entrepreneurship and Russian industrialization, 1885-1913. 442p maps $11.50 Univ. of Chicago press

332.67 Investments. Entrepreneurs. Russia—Industries
ISBN 0-266-55990-4 LC 79-103932

This is an "account of the operations and impact of West European entrepreneurs in Russia between 1885 and World War I." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This carefully researched study with its balanced and judicious analyses is a 'must' for students of modern Russian economic history, of the kind on which sound generalizations can stand." R. H. Fisher

Am Hist R 76:1194 O '71 410w

"The major role of foreign investment is well documented. The author has made use of extensive source materials, including material in private business archives in France and Belgium, and his bibliography may be useful to students of the period. The treatment is rather detailed especially in view of the findings, and its most noteworthy feature is the inclusion of an abundance of illustrations drawn from case studies. Readership audience would include students interested in economic development and imperialism."

Choice 7:1104 O '70 130w

"The role of foreign technology in Russia and the Soviet Union has [here] been examined in considerable depth. . . . [McKay] argues persuasively that it was the technological gap between Russian and West European industry which persuaded the Tsarist government to encourage foreign investment and convinced foreign businessmen that fortunes were to be made."

TLS p453 Ap 21 '72 900w

MACKENZIE, SIR ALEXANDER. The journals and letters of Sir Alexander Mackenzie; ed. by W. Kaye Lamb; pub. for the Hakluyt society. 551p maps $25 Cambridge

971 Canada—Description and travel. Indians of North America—Canada. Fur trade
SBN 521-01034-9 LC 79-105499

"Mackenzie's account of his journeys to the Arctic and Pacific . . . edited by William Combe, was published originally in London in 1801 with . . . [an] introduction, the 'General History Of The Fur Trade From Canada To The North-West,' probably written by Alexander's cousin Roderic Mackenzie. . . . [This] latest edition . . . retains the text of Combe's 1801 edition of Mackenzie's Pacific journal but replaces Combe's edited version of Mackenzie's Arctic journal with a new text based on a manuscript copy held by the British Museum. [It] also includes . . . copies of all of Mackenzie's letters. . . . [in the] introduction Lamb sketches Mackenzie's life and reviews the history of the Canadian fur trade." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"The publication in 1801 of his book, Voyages from Montreal on the river St. Laurence, through the continent of North America, to the Frozen and Pacific oceans; in the years 1789 and 1793, fixed [Mackenzie's] fame. . . . This edition is all the more welcome because previous publications of the full Voyages (the last two were in 1922 and 1927) lack editorial annotation. . . . For the account of the first voyage, Lamb has chosen to substitute a copyists' manuscript of Mackenzie's original journal for the polished version of the expedition presented in the published Voyages. Although additional phrases and sentences found in the 1801 edition are indicated, not all small alterations are. . . . For the anthropologist, the index of the Lamb edition is lamentable. I checked the index entries for three Indian groups named by Mackenzie—Hare, Dogrib, and 'Quarrellers'—and found all to be incomplete or in error." June Helm

Am Anthropol 74:996 Ag '72 900w

"Lamb disagrees with some of the conclusions about Mackenzie's explorations and North West Company history reached by E. E. Rich, J. B. Tyrrell, R. Harvey Fleming, and Richard Dillon. The introduction, journals, and letters are footnoted generously; the annotated bibliography is organized carefully; and the six maps are printed clearly." J. E. Sunder

J Am Hist 58:1057 Mr '72 650w

"Handsomely produced, [this] is a book worth having, and this is saying something when one sees the price."

TLS p1278 O 15 '71 410w

MCKERN, SHARON S. Tracking fossil man; an adventure in evolution [by] Sharon S. and Thomas W. McKern. 174p il $6.95 Praeger

573.2 Man—Origin and antiquity. Man, Prehistoric
LC 75-125489

"After discussing the so-called monkey laws, the Scopes trial, and other examples of resistance to evolutionary theory, the authors examine the processes of fossilization and modern methods of determining fossil age, such as fluorine analysis and Carbon-14 dating. . . . [They] explore the characteristics of the nonhuman primates and . . . [present some accounts] of discovery: the uncovering of fossilized Australopithecus . . . South Africa and . . . Tanzania; the discoveries in Java and China of Homo erectus . . . and the emergence of Neanderthal, the first known man to bury his dead. . . . [A] chapter is devoted to the question of race. . . . [The book concludes with] some suggestions of how paleontology can be applied to modern problems of ecology, race, and medicine and some conjecture as to how man will continue to evolve." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Striking a fine balance between humor and scholarly seriousness, the McKerns trace the evolution of homo sapiens from the early days when the first living organism formed in some boiling sea to the appearance of modern man. Their last chapter poses some important questions concerning man's survival and the survival of his environment. A thorough further reading list and a glossary of anthropological terms add to the value of this worthwhile, interesting book." J. L. Ruelna

Library J 96:736 F 15 '71 70w

"The authors' crisp prose is easy reading and they have sound ideas on the dangers of giving new and different taxonomic names to each newly-found fossil. But their twenty-page sketch of the history of evolution is less satisfactory. For those unfamiliar with the subject, it is insufficient. For those who are, it contains pitfalls. . . . [And it is a shock] to find consideration given to the nonsense that Neanderthal Man may be represented by the 'Abominable Snowman.' . . . Some legends take an unconscionable time to die."

TLS p371 Mr 31 '72 600w

MCKERN, THOMAS W., it. auth. Tracking fossil man. See McKern, S.S.

MCKISACK, MAY. Medieval history in the Tudor age. 180p $7.25 Oxford 942.05 Historians, British. Historiography
ISBN 0-19-822341-2 LC 76-24496

This is ■ "study of Tudor historians of medieval England." (TLS)

"[This account begins] with Leland's itineraries with license to salvage books from the dissolved monastic libraries, through the more coordinated efforts of Parker and Cecil to recover and print early British historians both ecclesiastical and secular, to the patriotically oriented topographers Stow and Camden. . . . Miss McKisack gives generous acknowledgment to earlier studies of the movement . . . but she has resurveyed the field with manifest profit, updating the scholarship and making new and extensive use of manuscript materials in the royal, diocesan, and university collections. . . . Her chapter on general histories of Britain is the least satisfying since it is relatively derivative and, as a result, occasionally inaccurate." W. G. Zeeveld

Am Hist R 77:783 Je '72 430w

"[This enlightening study offers] ■ more restricted subject than the title implies. Miss McKisack says little about the attitudes of sixteenth-century Englishmen towards their past. There is nothing about English history as represented in Elizabethan drama or in homiletic tracts. . . . She discusses only incidentally the reasons for the increased interest in history in her period. She provides instead a useful, if at times rather breathless, description of historians, collectors of manuscripts, topographers and so on, interspersed with brief but effective comments on their works. . . . [However her book] has considerable utility as a contribution to the study of the evolution of scholarship."

TLS p698 Je 1 '71 900w

MCLACHLAN, GORDON, ed. Challenges for change; essays on the next decade in the National Health Service. 301p il $11 Oxford
362.1 Great Britain. National Health Service. Medicine, State
ISBN 0-19-721364-2 LC 72-502434

"Sponsored by the Nuffield Provincial Hospital Trust, this symposium seeks to analyze weaknesses in the British National Health Service and to propose changes designed to achieve a more viable program during the next decade. The material covers such aspects as the quality of health care, the consultant surgical services, research, general practice, post-graduate training, uses of information within the health services, decision making, and staffing the NHS." (Choice)

"There are lessons here to be learned by all of us as we take side steps toward our own National Health Service. And the book is heartily recommended to everyone with an interest in our own future health service shape." George Silver

Am J Pub Health 62:1422 O '72 500w

"The general tone of the work is critical but the overall approach is constructive, there being a positive effort to strengthen a system that, in spite of shortcomings, has achieved a credible record. . . . Each essay is followed by a helpful list of authoritative references. Although clearly written, the material is rather technical, being intended primarily for the medical profession and others who are concerned with the future direction of the NHS."

Choice 9:839 S '72 270w

"In the introductory essay . . . Professor Revans emphasizes the need for compromise on many issues if the health service is to continue to be personal and successful. He refers, as an example, to the difficulty that can arise from the administrative severance of medical social work from the medical services, a measure taken against all the evidence that these services are inseparable. . . . These are useful and constructive essays for everyone concerned with the future development of the National Health Service."

TLS p278 Mr 10 '72 220w

MCLACHLAN, GORDON, ed. Medical history and medical care. See Medical history and medical care

MCLAREN, MORAY. Bonnie Prince Charlie. 223p il $6.95 Saturday review press

B or 92 Charles Edward, the Young Pretender
ISBN 0-8415-0195-5 LC 72-79058

This biography of Charles Edward Stuart, the Young Pretender, "begins with the ill-fated prince at age fifteen and carries his story through to his death in 1788, one month past his sixty-seventh birthday." (Best Sell) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[Here] is a good brief account of the prince's life, though concerned more with historical narrative than with character analysis. Mr. McLaren obviously knows the period well, and the work of a Scotsman on Bonnie Prince Charlie is perhaps of special interest. At one point he draws upon his family history for a few facts about his subject. . . . Mr. McLaren has supplied a detailed index and several pictures, the most striking of which, examined in sequence, are those of the handsome, slender prince in his twenties and, by contrast, the bloated, dissipated man of fifty-four ('in old age,' says the caption, somewhat exaggeratedly if the date of 1775 for the painting be correct). . . . A worthwhile and interesting short account of the last Jacobite attempt to regain the throne of England and of its principal figure." J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 32:272 S 15 '72 600w

"[This] is a readable popular biography based on fairly thorough research. However, the book has several significant weaknesses: detailed accounts of military campaigns are unaccompanied by maps; contemporary value judgments, such as 18th-century people 'were not taxed so iniquitously as we are today,' have no place in this type of work; and the author is apparently unaware of the research which went into Rupert C. Jarvis's recent Collected Papers on the Jacobite Risings [BRD 1972]." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:2577 Ag '72 180w

Reviewed by Paul Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 7 '73 490w

"As its title indicates, this book is a standard example of Jacobite hagiography, and may well serve as such for this generation. It does not go deep, offers no fresh material and has nothing new to say. But it is pleasantly and not floridly written and it covers the ground adequately, naturally giving most space to the 1745 rising but not shirking narration of its hero's 'life of trifles' during his later years."

. . . On a few matters the author appears negligent. He gives no attention to the Jacobite army's reception in Dumfries, to the stubborn defence of Fort William, or to naval operations. . . . Inverness, styled 'a strongly Jacobite city', was neither Jacobite nor a city. . . . But this is a posthumous work and such details, like various careless phrases, may be due to the lack of a final revision."

TLS p1247 O 20 '72 350w

MCLAURIN, MELTON ALONZA. Paternalism and protest; Southern cotton mill workers and organized labor, 1875-1905. (A Negro univ. press pub.) 265p $11 Greenwood pub. corp.

331.881 Labor unions. Labor and laboring classes—Southern States—History
ISBN 0-8371-4662-3 LC 70-11261

The author examines the "attempts of the Knights of Labor, beginning in the early 1880s, to organize the Southern textile workers, and later the efforts of the National Union of Textile Workers, and then its successor, the United Textile Workers of America." (Ann Am Acad)

"[This] is a contribution to the history of organized labor. . . . It is interestingly written, with a sympathy for the workers that is well deserved." F. L. Ryan

Ann Am Acad 401:214 My '72 460w

"McLaurin uses the textile industry to demonstrate that unions recruited vigorously in the South, and the Southern workers responded to their appeal. It was not the docility of the worker, according to the author, but rather the rural nature of the South and racism that doomed the organizational efforts of the Knights of Labor and the NUTW-UTWA. Should be purchased for university libraries and read by scholars of the New South."

Choice 8:1618 F '72 150w

Reviewed by G. B. Tindall

J Am Hist 59:167 Je '72 600w

MACLEAN, ALISTAIR. Captain Cook. 192p il col pl maps $9.95 Doubleday

910.9 Cook, James. Voyages and travels
LC 70-180092

An account of Captain Cook's early apprenticeship to the sea, his development as a navigator and cartographer, and his explorations in circumnavigating the globe. Index.

"For a library that already has material on Cook, the addition of this general account of the explorer's life and his three famous voyages to the Pacific would probably be superfluous. It is easily read and nicely illustrated (though lacking in good maps, but it is not as interesting or informative as an annotated selection from the captain's own journals....) Furthermore, the illustrations (many in color) do not match those of Ronald Syme and Werner Forman's The Travels of Captain Cook [BRD 1972]... a more showy but very similar popular treatment." J. H. Whittaker
Library J 97:3144 O 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by Martha Blalock

Library J 97:3822 N 15 '72 90w [YA]

"No book about Captain Cook can be wholly uninteresting, and Mr. MacLean recounts the three great voyages—into the Antarctic, up through the Bering Strait, everywhere in the South Pacific—in a workmanlike fashion. His writing here is characteristically humdrum... but he has the facts at hand. The physical book, however, is magnificent: handsomely printed, handsomely bound, and exquisitely illustrated with drawings, sketches, and paintings (many in fine color) by the several artists who accompanied Cook in his travels."

New Yorker 48:182 O 14 '72 100w

MACLEISH, ARCHIBALD. The human season; selected poems, 1926-1972. 161p $6 Houghton

811
ISBN 0-395-13943-0 LC 72-1107

At eighty, MacLeish, "putting his affairs in order, has produced a selection of his poems consisting of a large sampling of short poems dating back to the '20s plus excerpts from longer works like Conquistador [BRD 1932], J. B. [BRD 1958], and The Hamlet of A. MacLeish [BRD 1929]. He has also done a bit of editing here and there... [eliminating] the last stanza of 'Memorial Rain,' for example—and has devised seven general topic headings to classify his poems by." (New Repub)

"[MacLeish's] poems present a microcosm of 20th-century American verse: Paris in the 1920's, the social protest of the 1930's, and the personal voice of the postwar period. The view it offers is remarkable in its variety and completeness; no other poet is so typical of the movements and changes that have marked our times. MacLeish's achievement is so obvious, in fact, that it is in great danger of being ignored. Hopefully this judicious selection will bring him some of the critical attention he deserves." J. F. Cotter
America 127:297 O 14 '72 500w

"MacLeish was always worrying about the poet's role as a citizen of the world, and so made gestures outward from poetry's private-sensibility cliques and claques that annoyed insiders. The new volume renders nearly invisible all that early fuss, and shows us a MacLeish who like many others of his literary generation... was indeed after all a private sensibility, and therefore obsessed like the rest with finding and perfecting an individual style, a distinctive manner preferably untraditional and spanning new... In his search [however, he] indulged in frequent rhetorical excesses... Much of the excess is eliminated in the new volume, with the happy result that his distinctiveness now appears as genuine, a consistent part of his poetic being." Reed Whitemore

New Repub 167:31 O 21 '72 500w

Reviewed by J. M. Brinnin

N Y Times Bk R p6 N 19 '72 420w

Reviewed by Laurence Lieberman

Yale R 62:267 D '72 1250w

MCLELLAN, DAVID, ed. Early texts. See Marx, K.

MCLELLAN, DAVID. The thought of Karl Marx; an introduction. 237p $6.95 Harper

335.43 Marx, Karl
ISBN 0-06-012904-2 LC 74-181634

"The chapters in the first part consist of McLellan's... commentaries on each of Marx's major works together with biographical material... Bibliography." (Choice)

"McLellan's book will be found more to the liking of many undergraduates than other fine studies such as that by George Lichtheim, Marxism [BRD 1962]. It is extraordinarily encyclopedic... Although some scholars may find [the] format unwieldy, the attention to life and times is to be welcomed... [McLellan's] generalizations are not superficial and reveal a depth of learning... The book is well documented, contains brief up-to-date bibliographies of major works on Marx, and includes selections from Marx' writings which are difficult to find elsewhere. Especially useful for the general student, this inclusive study will also be used to advantage by specialists."

Choice 9:882 S '72 170w

"McLellan's new book is avowedly only an introduction: his own description of it as 'superficial' is, however, grossly unjust, for it is impressive both for the erudition it contains and for the great simplicity with which this erudition is displayed. It is the sort of introductory work which should do a great deal of good; indeed, it ought to make it impossible as well as disgraceful for students of sociology and politics to remain as ill-formed about Marx as they currently are... Dr McLellan's approach is utterly persuasive; he is generous to a great variety of other commentators, and he is refreshingly free from the urge to oversimplify. His Marx is neither a mere Hegelian revisionist nor the Newton of the social sciences. As an introduction, the work is thinner on economic matters than elsewhere, but that is almost its only flaw."

TLS p185 F 18 '72 300w

MCLENNAN, BARBARA N., ed. Crime in urban society [by] Joseph S. Clark [and others]; foreword by Ramsey Clark. 161p $8.95 Dunnellen pub. co.

364 Sociology, Urban. Crime and criminals—U.S.

ISBN 0-8424-0004-4 LC 73-122595

The contributions to this volume of essays "include an application of the basic insights of psychiatry to understanding how crime influences aspects of urban life; a discussion of the desirability of developing crime statistics that will provide more accurate estimates of risks of victimization; application of the principles of cost accounting to assessing the various costs of crime and crime prevention; suggestions for increased state... [and] federal involvement... a review of recent United States Supreme Court decisions extending the intent of the federal Bill of Rights to state law; and an examination of the relationship between the socioeconomic environment and crime." (Library J)

"Unfortunately, no intellectual glue holds the collection together: the essays... are diverse and do not complement one another... The third selection, 'The Social Cost of Crime and Crime Prevention,' by Simon Rottenberg suggests principally that the social costs of crime and crime prevention are somehow related, and that our relatively low investment in crime prevention reflects a form of 'rational' social choice... Although one can quarrel with some of the things in these essays—Professor Rottenberg's analysis, for example, evokes ideological objections—none of them is terribly offensive... The real problem is that they make an ill-assorted group; unfit for the professional because too elementary, unfit for the student because the editor's assumption that they have something in common sets a bad intellectual example." R. C. Jacobs

Am Pol Sci R 65:1189 D '71 600w

"McLennan, associate professor of political science at Temple University, has brought together several articles by eminent authorities... Criminologists will discover little that is new in these articles; nevertheless, the general public should find them both interesting and useful in understanding the current crime problem in the United States." M. A. Forslund
Library J 96:94 Ja 1 '71 160

MAC LIAMMOIR, MICHEAL. W. B. Yeats and his world, by Micheál Mac Liammóir and Eavan Boland. (A Studio bk) 144p il $8.95 Viking

B or 92 Yeats, William Butler
ISBN 0-670-79386-3 LC 79-101788

This book traces Yeats' career, covering "his directorship of the Abbey Theatre and period in the Irish Senate as well as his poetic activities." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by M. S. Cosgrave
Horn Bk 48:394 Ag '72 170w

"In this agreeable picture-book, there are 138 illustrations taken from paintings and photographs which bring to our eyes places and houses associated with W. B. Yeats throughout his career. We have glimpses of Innisfree, Glencar Waterfall and Lissadell; a period photograph of Fleet Street evokes the 1890s, and we are shown the house at Bedford Park and the subsequent houses occupied by the Yeats family. . . . [The authors] in their commentary describe mainly the well-known facts of the poet's life. They deal particularly with his early experiences in Sligo and rightly emphasize the formative influence which, later, Lady Gregory had on his poetry and plays."

TLS p1438 N 19 '71 470w

MCLOUGHLIN, PETER, F. M., ed. African food production systems; cases and theory. 318p il maps $12.50 Johns Hopkins press

338.1 Agriculture—Africa. Agriculture—Economic aspects. Food supply
ISBN 0-8018-1075-2 LC 72-107092

"In his Introduction, Dr. McLoughlin evaluates Africa's food production problem and then reviews various theories of economic development. . . . The food production systems for five tribes are studied in detail: the Haya (Tanzania) . . . the Karimojong (Uganda) . . . the Zande (Sudan, Congo, Central African Republic) . . . the Yalunka (Sierra Leone) . . . and the Diola (Senegal). . . . [Also discussed are] the social and economic impact of Gambia's effort to increase farm productivity by introducing farmers to more sophisticated methods of cultivation—especially the use of mechanical, ox-drawn plows. . . . [Finally the author] discusses the lessons to be learned from [these] case studies." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The 'Systems' in the title was apparently added for stylish effect, as there is no stress on any systematic unity of activities related to food. . . . Judging from the viewpoints and assumptions of these chapters, the gap between economics and anthropology is as wide as ever despite all the attempts at collaboration in recent years. The outlook of the economists seems to be embodied in the phrase, 'constraints on development.' The editor's introduction is an extended essay on this theme, much of it repetitive and banal to an anthropological mind." R. F. Gray

Am Anthropol 74:68 F/Ap '72 1000w

"The fieldwork described in the first three essays was done in the 1950's, the rest in the 1960's. The editor . . . contributes a thoughtful introduction and conclusion. . . . The essays by Jones, Weil, and Donald, together with the editor's contributions, are particularly good because they are analytical, leading one to interesting conclusions about innovation and development based on recent fieldwork. The rest are more descriptive than analytical—what anthropologists call source material, that is, factual information about food production, but not organized around theoretical or policy themes. . . . [This volume] will be welcomed by agricultural economists, economic anthropologists, applied anthropologists, and those development economists concerned with village-level modernization." George Dalton

Ann Am Acad 396:146 Jl '71 600w

MCLUHAN, MARSHALL. Take today: the executive as dropout [by] Marshall McLuhan and Barrington Nevitt. 304p $9.95 Harcourt

301.24 Technology and civilization. Social change. Management
ISBN 0-15-187330-7 LC 76-182330

McLuhan, professor of psychology, and Nevitt, business consultant, maintain that "the world's managers have failed to adapt to 'the age of speed-up.' They . . . are relics of the industrial world of assembly lines and visual space. . . . Their specialized jobs have become casualties, displaced by the electric world of 'software' and programming." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by R. B. Nordberg
Best Sell 32:121 Je 1 '72 420w

"Dumb puns, bright ideas and forgettable aphorisms splinter out from what appears to be a fairly consistent plot: forget everything possible and grasp, grasp, grasp for a tomorrow you can fashion yourself. Most of the comments have implications for vocations and professions."

Christian Century 89:552 My 10 '72 40w

"McLuhan here . . . dips a toe into the cold world of corporate business and shows the OM [Organization Man] awakening to his danger of dropping off the end of the assembly line into the garbage bin and deciding instead to drop out of the line just in time. . . . [The authors stress] the cataclysmic and chronoclastic change in humanity's environment. Yesterday we lived in a hardware world of GNP; today we live in a software envelope of instant electric communication. Sputnik and Telstar have done that to us. . . . A great reward of reading this book is its abundance of memorable quotations. T. S. Eliot's 'Pray for us now and at the hour of our birth.' Or: 'Too hot to handle. Burn before reading. Top secret: when you get this, destroy yourself.' . . . [This book] delights and frustrates, produces insights and oversights, side-views and side-swipes. It stretches the mind." P. J. Henniker-Heaton

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 17 '72 600w

"The quotations—interspersed with text, catchy headings, and clever puns—are from Joyce, Darwin, Marx, Ruth Benedict, Shakespeare, Moynihan, and dozens of other poets, economists, and philosophers. . . . When not exasperating, the book is fascinating; when not confused and disorganized, it is penetrating and revealing; when not frivolous, it is profound. For McLuhan watchers, pro and con, this is an essential addition to his previous works."

Daniel la Rossa

Library J 97:1030 Mr 15 '72 140w

"[The authors do not] favor writing clearly. They are masters of apothegms that don't apothegm, such as: 'Bridges as extensions of man are resonating vortices of power' (their italics) Or: 'POSTURE AND IMPOSTURE AS WAYS OF LIFE NOW MERGE IN THE GLOBAL THEATER' (their caps). And . . . they are extremely disorderly. . . . I confess that I wouldn't be very happy if I were obliged to sail on a sloop steered by these gentlemen. . . . [They are so busy] coining witticisms ('Seven Pillows of Was-dom,' 'War of the Tribal Credit Cards,' 'Cybernetics Loops the Bloop,' and so on forever), that they steer all loose and floppy downwind." Reed Whittemore

New Repub 166:25 Je 10 '72 500w

MCLUHAN, T. C. Touch the earth; a self-portrait of Indian existence. il 185p $6.95 Out-erbridge & Dienstfrey; for sale by Dutton

970.1 Indians of North America—History—Sources. Indians of North America—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-87690-038-4 LC 72-170294

This "is a selection of statements and writings by North American Indians, chosen to illuminate the course of Indian history and the . . . values of Indian life. The passages [are] arranged in four chronological sections." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"For Miss McLuhan, the Indians are the 'early settlers' of America and she lets them explain, in their own words, the quality of their life. . . . [The book reflects] their amusement at the antics of White Man, but most frequently . . . their anger and despair at the destruction of their land and people. . . . In the last few years there has been great interest in the American Indian . . . [and] Miss McLuhan's [book is] . . . certain to find a wide audience." F. A. Lailey

America 125:561 D 25 '71 250w

"Some of [the photographs] are pretty dingy. . . . What emerges most impressively is the Indian view of nature as a friend to live with rather than an enemy to conquer." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 228:135 D '71 60w

"The book is a promised 'self portrait of Indian existence.' Turning the pages beyond this warm promise of the title page . . . I find Miss McLuhan means the reader to bask in the pleasures of that warm promise fulfilled. . . . [She] has not written a vicarious political pamphlet decorated with the appalling scourges of white racism. . . . Her book is at once a genuine moral statement and a supplication to Taku wakan. It is a remembrance and a history and nature's own manifesto for the lives of her children. It is not an analysis of a past culture and contemporary subculture, in the best tradition of anthropological papers, but a refutation of the structure that spawns such papers." Larry Howard

Best Sell 31:487 F 1 '72 600w

Reviewed by Heather Robertson
Canadian Forum 52:54 Ap '72 950w

Choice 9:290 Ap '72 120w

Reviewed by William Kittredge
Harper 245:120 N '72 550w

"A sensitive, moving anthology . . . this is a worthy addition to the growing number of books dealing with American Indians." Colin Clark

Library J 97:295 Ja 15 '72 110w [YA]

Natur Hist 81:95 Ag/S '72 80w

Reviewed by Stefan Loran
Va Q R 48:472 summer '72 650w

MCMAHON, JOSEPH H. Humans being; the world of Jean-Paul Sartre. 404p $14.50 Univ. of Chicago press.

194 Sartre, Jean Paul
ISBN 0-226-56100-3 LC 74-127606

"The author of this . . . study takes The Words [BRD 1965] as his point of departure and develops a thesis about the unity of Sartre's work. It was during his childhood that Sartre came to hate the bourgeoisie, and McMahon shows how this preoccupation has become a major element of Sartre's whole literary and philosophic production. The stress is on his literary development." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The title is half of a pun: Sartre, we are told, is concerned, not with human beings, but with humans be-ing. . . . The themes are derived from the philosophical and especially the political-polemical works, but of these the degree of direct examination is in inverse proportion to their systematic philosophical importance. Being and nothingness [BRD 1956] is constantly (and more often than not rather irrelevantly) quoted, but is never discussed as such. . . . Key philosophical concepts are wholly misunderstood: phenomenological bracketing, freedom, the néant, and the pour-soi, intentionality. Yet this lack of philosophical solidity does not mean that [this] is a book of literary criticism—style and stylistic elements are scarcely even mentioned. The index is better than most, and each chapter ends with a fairly helpful bibliographical essay. Recommended only for collections seeking exhaustiveness."

Choice 8:560 Je '71 290w

"I doubt there is even a minor critical essay or work that McMahon has not analyzed. . . . This is one of the most learned books on Sartre's literary work in English, and it will clearly be at the center of future work on Sartre." R. L. Perkins

Library J 96:1980 Je 1 '71 120w

"Earnest, self-indulgent, thorough, good-willed, pedestrian. A stroll through the groves of academe."

N Y Times Bk R p10 Mr 14 '71 30w

MCMAHON, THOMAS PATRICK. Jink. 192p $4.95 Simon & Schuster

ISBN 671-20903-5 LC 70-161615

"An Air force pilot returns from a tour of duty in Vietnam to find that his family has been kidnapped and that he is suspected of being involved in a smuggling operation. Major McKendrick comes face-to-face with violence; and, in his attempt to get help from various authorities, he discovers that they are more interested in keeping their images clean and in using him as a pawn than they are in helping him find his family." (Library J)

Best Sell 31:236 Ag 15 '71 80w

"The background is good, and the characters are believable. This first novel is a very fine examination of man in today's society." T. R. Bell

Library J 96:2348 Jl '71 100w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 96:4206 D 15 '71 170w [YA]

"'Jink' is an Air Force term meaning violent evasive action. In this book, . . . events move in a predictable pattern until the final scene, an air chase in which a pair of F-4's jockey with one another. This will have you gulping a bit." Newgate Callender

N Y Times Bk R p46 S 26 '71 100w

MCMICHAEL, JAMES. Against the falling evil. 55p $5 Swallow press

811

ISBN 0-8040-0552-4 LC 72-171878

"These poems examine persons, occasions, and memories." (Choice) Some poems appeared in such periodicals as Poetry and The Southern Review.

"Perhaps the best example of [the poet's] indirection through simplicity is the extended elegy, 'The vegetables,' eight poems of 'being,' not 'telling.' The bare patterns achieve a striking effect in most of the poems in this the poet's first volume; a few slip and verge on hardboiled sentimentality, but very few. Good poems worth reading."

Choice 9:815 S '72 100w

"Sections called 'The Vegetables' and the 'Circus Monologues' indicate McMichael's ability to see—where others only look. Both sections are metaphorical. The vegetables are stand-ins for love, the circus, the arena of life. The similes don't always come off, sometimes are a bit too subtle, a trifle too clever, but even where they fail it is an interesting exercise in imagination. And there is an economy of words and action which usually is in harmony with the initial exercise." Bill Katz

Library J 97:2846 S 15 '72 80w

MACMILLAN, HAROLD. Pointing the way, 1959-1961. 504p pl $15 Harper

942.085 Great Britain—Politics and government—1945- . Great Britain—Foreign relations

ISBN 06-012741-4 LC 72-79682

This fifth volume of the former British Prime Minister's memoirs begins with the Conservative victory in the general election of October, 1959, and ends with the Queen's visit to Ghana in November, 1961. For volume one, Winds of Change, see BRD 1966; for volume two, The Blast of War, see BRD 1968; for volume three, Tides of Fortune, see BRD 1969; and for volume four, Riding the Storm, see BRD 1971. Index.

Reviewed by R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 32:378 N 15 '72 700w

Reviewed by Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor pB8 N ■ '72

750w

"We must speculate that while we watch Mr Macmillan adding weighty tome after weighty tome in majestic creation, he is concealing from us a hot and fiery little work somewhere. . . . For what other reason, for example, is the general election of 1959, that high point of the career, dismissed in 16 uninformative pages. . . . Indeed, the sceptics might almost write [this volume] off as a complete miss for life, were it not that the accounts of his courtship of de Gaulle and Kennedy are truly fascinating: the anecdote of de Gaulle's visit to Birch Grove is a bit of the real Macmillan. So it may be best to say this is his Saturn: not very rewarding to travel to, but illuminated by some pleasant effects. And, of course, these were not very rewarding years for Mr Macmillan either."

Economist 243:63 Je 10 '72 600w

Reviewed by Anthony Lejeune

Nat R 24:1309 N 24 '72 1350w

"Arthur Balfour once announced to a friend: 'Winston [Churchill] has written an enormous book about himself and called it The World Crisis' [BRD 1927 and 1931]. Harold Macmillan has written a huge history and called it his memoirs. They are now in their fifth volume. . . . Yet they reveal very little about Macmillan that we did not know already. Indeed, they reveal very little at all; even his diaries, from which he quotes copiously, are discreet, except on trivialities. Moreover, these books are much too long, a fault made more serious by the fact that Macmillan is a dull writer. . . . These strictures must be qualified. Those who trouble to read the book right through will find some excellent nuggets." Paul Johnson

New Statesman 83:828 Je 16 '72 1050w

"There is a sad paradox as one finishes these episodes in Macmillan's career. For the British Prime Minister still believed that 'the fundamental interests of our two countries [Britain and the United States] are identical. This was no longer true by the Suez crisis in 1956; it became less so as America isolated herself from her major allies during the Indochina War. . . . And Britain, by clinging to an already obsolete role as a world power, missed so many opportunities—politically, financially and morally—to build a Europe whose power might have deterred American adventurism. Macmillan, subtle, cynical, worldly, ultimately lacking in vision, chose to play the confidence man. In this volume of his memoirs he at least plays the game brilliantly." James Chace

MACMILLAN, HAROLD—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p2 O 8 '72 1300w

"[Macmillan] is a master of exact language who delights in veiling his meaning behind casual phrases of opaque lucidity. . . . In the present volume he appears to go farther than before in revealing the hitherto unknown background to events, but many of them remain . . . tantalizingly obscure. . . . Mr Macmillan's memoirs will, of course, provide raw material of the most vital importance for future historians. But it will have to be carefully scrutinized in conjunction with other sources. Where it will be of incomparable value will be in assessing the fascinating character of the protagonist himself. Although more prolix than Churchill or Eden, let alone Attlee, Mr Macmillan is both more entertaining and more sensitive than any of them. His wit and irony are all his own."

TLS p648 Je 9 '72 1600w

MACMILLAN, HAROLD. Riding the storm, 1956-1959. 786p pl $15 Harper

B or 92 Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century. Great Britain—Foreign relations—20th century
SBN 06-012774-9 LC 79-156535

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by V. A. Lapomarda
America 126:546 My 20 '72 40w

Reviewed by Trevor Lloyd
Am Hist R 77:1446 D '72 400w
Choice 9:122 Mr '72 200w

Reviewed by P. P. Witonski
Nat R 24:229 Mr 3 '72 1500w

MCMILLEN, HOWARD. The many mansions of Sam Peeples. 299p $7.95 Viking

ISBN 0-670-45423-0 LC 74-172897

"Peeples is a landlord in Kanecka City, Kansas, a 58-year-old con artist who spends all his time promoting cash and squeezing profit from the four lots he owns. He also rents rooms, snoops into his tenants' private lives, goes to remarkable lengths to outwit his competitors and escape his creditors, and has no mercy. . . . We follow Sam . . . as he pays back insults to his pride and pocket with massive retaliation." (Book World)

Reviewed by E. A. Dooley
Best Sell 32:41 Ap 15 '72 490w

"McMillen is clearly a very talented comic writer with a wonderfully evil eye for close observation and satire, but two things are very puzzling about this novel: Why, after a bookful of obvious glee and exhaustive description of Sam's antics, his author has such retribution in store for him at the end; and, more important, why McMillen, a master of timing and proportion in his depiction of Sam, has let his novel go on—disastrously—for about one-third too long." Sara Blackburn
Book World p10 F 20 '72 280w

"Though this first novel depends too much on dialogue, is rather episodic, and does at times strain one's credulity McMillen's character development is exceptional. He offers a rare opportunity to analyze a believable and engagingly eccentric human being." Ed Sayre
Library J 97:516 F 1 '72 130w

"[Sam Peeples'] rotund diction and gaudy misanthropy give him a W. C. Fieldsian cast as he goes about his rounds, exploiting tenants and mistreating neighbors. Unfortunately, this highbinder's involvements are not on a level with his idiosyncrasies. Sam's humorous episodes are connected in parallel circuits, not in series. In the end, they fail to create the voltage needed for a comic novel." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p52 F 27 '72 70w

Reviewed by Joseph Catinella
Sat R 55:68 My 27 '72 220w

MCMILLEN, NEIL R. The citizens' council; organized resistance to the second reconstruction, 1954-64. 397p il maps $10.95 Univ. of Ill. press

323.1 Citizens' Councils of America. Southern States—Race relations. Negroes—Southern States. Southern States—Politics and government
SBN 252-00177-X LC 75-151999

In this "account of the rise and decline of the Citizens' Council and its role in the massive resistance to school integration after 1954, McMillen . . . documents, evaluates, and analyzes the council's racist ideology, legal stance, political power, and lack of unity." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] a valuable contribution to the recent history of race relations in the American South. Well written, tightly organized, and fully documented, with an excellent index and bibliography, this history cum analysis of the Citizens' Councils is presented with candor but also with empathy displayed for all parties involved. . . . Recommended to college and large public libraries."

Choice 9:882 S '72 260w

"The exposition of council statements is straightforward and useful, but one wishes that McMillen had examined and written about the sources of the irrational patterns of thought he describes. In the concluding division he concentrates on the councils' strategy of opposition, beginning with grandiose propaganda campaigns and massive resistance coupled, in some states, with considerable political clout and ending eventually in rather pitiful movements to foster segregated academies as an alternative to the desegregated public school. Throughout one finds an admirable attention to detail, evidence of diligent research, and clear, direct prose." P. M. Gaston
J Am Hist 59:777 D '72 500w

"A fine companion volume to Numan V. Bartley's broad-based study, The Rise of Massive Resistance [BRD 1970], this will be the definitive study of the Citizens' Council until private papers are opened. Highly recommended." J. L. Forsythe

Library J 97:1013 Mr 15 '72 150w

MCMILLIN, LAURENCE. The schoolmaker; Sawney Webb and the Bell Buckle story. 186p il $7.95 Univ. of N.C. press

373.1 Webb School, Bell Buckle, Tennessee. Webb, William Robert
ISBN 0-8078-1163-7 LC 72-144336

Intertwined "with the biography of William R. 'Sawney' Webb is the history of the Webb School at Bell Buckle, Tennessee. . . . Webb was the school's founder, first headmaster, and guiding spirit for over a half century. This is a . . . chronicle of 19th-century American educational history, and a . . . delineation of educational change, reform, and adaptation to an evolving new society and the emergence of new roles for both the public/private school." (Choice) Index.

"This is a superb, educational biography. . . . In a strict sense, McMillin's book is a major source for college preparatory work during a half century following the end of the Civil War, and as such is more than a biography. Faultlessly written, with an excellent index (a guide to the educational history of the period). Recommended."

Choice 8:1069 O '71 180w

"This is an insightful account. . . . McMillin uses his splendid descriptive ability to the fullest. . . . Academic historians may legitimately criticize McMillin for the absence of footnotes and for his seemingly undue reliance on reminiscences. In spite of these obvious shortcomings, the book remains a noteworthy account of the life of a remarkable educator and human being." Emmett Wright

J Am Hist 58:1044 Mr '72 300w

MCMURTRY, LARRY. All my friends are going to be strangers. 286p $7.50 Simon & Schuster

ISBN 671-21160-9 LC 78-179584

The novel is told by "a naive young writer, Danny Deck, on the verge of his first success. . . . [The plot evolves during] an extended trip from Texas to California and back to Texas, covering a year's time in which Danny marries a bad woman, breaks up with her and meets a good one who is incapable of healthy love. . . . [The minor characters range from] janitors, librarians, pimps, cowboys and producers to editors, whores, students, Texas Rangers and [his wife's parents]." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Scott Wood

America 126:410 Ap 15 '72 380w

Reviewed by Ruth Prigozy

Commonweal 97:70 O 20 '72 950w

"As the author of The Last Picture Show (the novel on which the much-praised movie of the same title is based), McMurtry may well be on the verge of a great popular success, especially since his fifth novel again demonstrates his affinity for a very popular sort of corn. . . . Novels like this one seem based on the premise that plot, structure, and characterization are mere niceties. McMurtry's book is good proof, however, that more than sincerity is needed." Peter Dollard

Library J 97:699 F 15 '72 130w

"The story has many good characters; McMurtry comments wittily on the contemporary writing scene; and he displays a masterly ease in handling narrative and dialogue. But he has been told by his muse or his bank of the positive virtues of sexual activism, so that much that he says about the meagerness of Texas small-town life . . . is undercut by his obsession. . . . Yet McMurtry does catch some of the quality of that life, those lives, despite his obsession. . . . And he is so good at being the novelist he is that it may be ungrateful of me to wish he would discover some new country; but I do." Reed Whittemore

New Repub 166:28 Ap 1 '72 1500w

Reviewed by Jim Harrison

N Y Times Bk R p5 Mr 19 '72 1000w

New Yorker 48:106 Ap 1 '72 60w

Newsweek 79:110 Mr 20 '72 400w

"McMurtry is not slick. He tends, in fact, to create indelible people and brilliant set-piece scenes. . . . Unhappily, his books are constructed like tumbleweed . . . with no discernible direction. . . . [This one] is acute, elegiac, funny and dangerously tender, and in tone—if not content—more like a memoir than a novel. . . . Its best sequence concerns Danny's compulsive trip back to the remotest personal past he has. He visits the ruined demesne of Uncle L, who is a mean and misanthropic 92 yoked to an equally mean woman who wants to inherit his land. . . . Uncle L is a living figment—as well as a caricature—of the old, wild American dream." Martha Duffy

Time 99:64 Ap 3 '72 440w

MACNAB, JOHN. The education of a doctor: my first year on the wards. 222p $6.95 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Medicine—Study and teaching. Medicine as a profession
SBN 671-21017-3 LC 71-156158

This is the "journal of a young doctor-to-be in his third year of medical school, the year in which he is a participant in each of the service departments of a large metropolitan hospital. In pediatrics, obstetrics, urology, orthopedics, surgery, neurology, and psychiatry, there are sketches of . . . patients, accounts of trial-and-error medicine, and [personal observations]." (Choice)

"The book is very readable and MacNab . . . turns out to be an engaging personality in his own right. Will find wide readership, especially among undergraduates who may wonder what a profession in the medical arts is really like. Quite suitable for browsing collections; not technical enough for, nor intended for, science or medical libraries." Choice 9:231 Ap '72 120w

"[The author] had decided to go into medicine after three years at college preparing for a career in teaching the 'dead languages.' His classical background pops up occasionally in the form of thoughtful analogies, primarily dealing with social problems, and in flashes of humor. . . . His comments on good and bad teachers, both faculty and residents, are positive and practical. The year ends with MacNab convinced that medicine is the right field for him. Only in a few places does the author become precious or make unnecessary use of jargon. This humanly written account should be in all public, high school, and college libraries." W. K. Beatty

Library J 96:2782 S 15 '71 150w

"MacNab is among the first students to benefit from changes being made in medical education that will give future doctors a more practical education. This personal journal, filled with modest successes and understandable failures, would be excellent for any high-school student considering medicine as a career, or for the medical buff who has outgrown Frank G. Slaughter." Ed Cray

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 23 '72 310w

MCNEAL, ROBERT H. Bride of the revolution: Krupskaya and Lenin. 326p il $10 Univ. of Mich. press

B or 92 Krupskaya, Nadezhda Konstantinova (Mme Lenin)

ISBN 0-472-61600-5 LC 75-185155

The author, "chairman of the department of history at the University of Massachusetts, has written the first biography in English of Lenin's wife. While Lenin lived, Krupskaya's own life was at the unquestioning service of his work and mission; after his death, she became, in the author's words, 'widow-designate' and 'mother of her people.'" (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Denis Dirscherl

Best Sell 32:378 N 15 '72 350w

"One cannot help wondering, in reading about [Krupskaya] if she ever laughed; dull, modest, and deadly earnest, she labored in the cause by leading the witch hunt against 'alien literature' in the Twenties and by guarding her Leninist memories ten years later (while Stalin and his cronies baited and used her). The author has maintained a deft narrative style throughout; his scholarship, based on all accessible Soviet sources, is unobtrusive." R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:2590 Ag '72 170w

MCNEILL, JANET. The other people. 185p $4.50 Little

LC 73-97144

"When her widowed mother remarries and goes abroad for her honeymoon, thirteen-year-old Kate—considerably upset by events—is sent for a three-week holiday to stay with an aunt who owns a hotel at a seaside resort [on the English coast]. Expecting a plush establishment with a manicured hostess to match, Kate is dismayed to find that Aunt Poppy is the harassed, overworked proprietress of a dreary, down-at-the-heels guest house. With everyone in the house crowded together . . . Kate quickly becomes completely entangled in the lives of her aunt and of the fellow guests." (Horn Bk) "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"In a book very different from those of hers previously published in this country the author demonstrates the range of her talent. With its suspense, elegance of writing, and uncanny feeling for teen-age girls, the book in a small way reminds one of Rumer Godden's Greengage Summer [BRD 1958]. . . . The art of the book is not plot invention but the devastatingly subtle characterizations: the mysterious Mr. Smith—dubbed the Mad Hatter—hiding his humiliation behind feeble puns; Richard, the boy mortally afraid of swimming in deep water, living in a constant state of noncommunication with his hearty father. . . . Highly imagistic prose laced with a perceptive ironic wit makes the story a stylistic delight." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 46:482 O '70 300w

"Everything falls short of [Kate's] romantic fantasies, especially the people whom she immediately decides are 'bats, loony, loopy, crazy clucks every one of them.' The author does a good job of portraying this limited view of life which so frustrates the understanding of the typical adolescent. But life to Kate is less obscure than the plot will be to readers. Events happen for which there is no apparent reason (e.g., Rose's tantrum) . . . Too many descriptive adjectives and forced similes mar the prose . . . and frequent use of the British vernacular may well baffle average American teen-agers. All in all, the appeal of this book is too limited for it to be a worthwhile addition." M. L. Canoles

MCNEILL, JANET—Continued

Library J 96:1128 Mr 15 '71 130w

Reviewed by Catherine Storr
New Statesman 83:758 Je 2 '72 80w

"[Kate's] attempts to make friends with two girls of her own age are only partially successful; but teenage girls will enjoy the trivial quarrels and the sessions of making-up and dressing-up to go out and meet boys. There is a muted mystery about the house next door which is solved to reveal a tragedy of long ago. Janet McNeill writes with her usual careful observation of detail and sympathetic understanding of young people's hopes and fears and embarrassments. Kate is a real character who grows in understanding and emerges from her adolescent dreams to take responsible action when her aunt needs her."

TLS p486 Ap 28 '72 140w

MCNEILL, MARY. Vere Foster. (Belfast, Ireland. Queen's Univ. Inst. of Irish studies. Publications). 259p pl $7.50 Univ. of Ala. press

B or 92 Foster, Vere
ISBN 0-8173-4450-0

LC 73-180713

This is an account of the life and career of Vere Foster whose principal concern was the "social and economic condition of the Irish peasant in the desperate years following the Great Famine. . . . He devoted his life to promoting and financing a scheme of emigration from Ireland to America. . . . [The book deals also with the] well-known contemporaries with whom Vere Foster mixed." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book's subtitle, [in the English edition] 'An Irish Benefactor' is somewhat misleading, hinting as it does of pious good works. Instead, Vere Foster's actions were those of a benevolent buccaneer who fought social evils wherever he found them. Several times Foster himself led emigrant bands on the tortuous voyages to the United States. Then in 1858 he turned to matters of popular education—building schools, supplying school requisites, editing an excellent series of copy books, and becoming the president of Ireland's first successful national teachers union. . . . There are a number of minor factual errors in background material. These do not, however, detract from the clarity of the portrait of Foster." D. H. Akenson

Am Hist R 77:153 F '72 350w

"Foster's opinions were liberal, even radical, by mid-Victorian standards; but his papers, which supply the backbone of McNeill's narrative reveal little evidence of a strong emotional commitment to ideas or to any individual or group. Foster's correspondence is often scanty or so reticent that crucial events or decisions must be fleshed out by the author's conjectures. As a result, this record of Foster's life, while it provokes a certain respect and admiration for his good deeds, fails to stir that interest in the man himself that might have made it of interest to readers other than specialists." J. F. Moran

Library J 97:2577 Ag '72 150w

MCNELLY, WILLIS E., jt. ed. Mars, we love you. See Hipolito, J.

MCNICKLE, D'ARCY. Indian man; a life of Oliver La Farge. 242p $7.95 Ind. Univ. press
B or 92 La Farge, Oliver. Indians of North America

ISBN 0-253-14000-5 LC 70-135010

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Max Westbrook

Am Lit 44:170 Mr '72 240w

Choice 8:1652 F '72 200w

Reviewed by H. E. Fey

Christian Century 89:585 My 17 '72 400w

MCNICOLL, GEOFFREY, jt. auth. Trade and growth in the Philippines. See Hicks, G. L.

MCPHEE, JOHN. Wimbledon: a celebration; phot. by Alfred Eisenstaedt. 120p $14.95 Viking

796.34 Tennis
SBN 670-77079-5

LC 71-182266

"McPhee has put together a series of . . . articles on the Wimbledon tournament and its competitors, groundsman, line judges, spectators, and . . . the groups themselves." (Library J)

"A simply marvelous book that college libraries should not buy. For one thing, there is the high price. For another, there is the subject matter: a pictorial and verbal evocation of the atmosphere of the Wimbledon tennis tournament. Libraries do not need it, although creative writing students could turn to the prose as an outstanding example of how to create a mood. For the tennis enthusiast who has been to Wimbledon or who wants to go there, this would be the perfect gift."

Choice 9:840 S '72 100w

"McPhee's approach and style embody both the virtues and the flaws in the New Yorker type of essay. The first two-thirds of the text—which runs well under 100 pages—is devoted to a montage of one particular championship, that of 1970. But there is none of the cumulative drama of a narrowing field. . . . Rather, he gives us a pen portrait, stroke by stroke, of what Wimbledon is like during a typical two weeks when matters of great moment are afoot. . . . There is nothing here for the player looking for tips on style or strategy. McPhee writes by his own excellent ear, not by knowledge of the game. . . . The final third of McPhee's text is something else again. It is called 'Twynam of Wimbledon' and it is a tender profile of one of the world's great experts, the guardian of the grass altars of Wimbledon. Even without the text, the photographs would be a true celebration of Wimbledon." Burke Wilkinson

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 24 '72 700w

"An interesting series of vignettes, both literary and pictorial, that will appeal to tennis buffs everywhere. ([McPhee's] article on Robert Twynam, chief groundskeeper, and the Wimbledon grass is perhaps the best in the book.) Eisenstaedt has admirably backed up McPhee's literary effort with many superior photographs. The off-court shots of spectators and staff are particularly outstanding. The total effect is an interesting portrait of a sporting event which has become something of a social institution. While librarians may well hesitate at the high cost of the book (and the text is a bit thin for the price), it is nevertheless recommended to large public libraries and to any other library where material on tennis is in demand." G. W. Whitbeck

Library J 97:2425 Jl '72 200w

MCPHERSON, GERTRUDE H. Small town teacher. 247p il $9.95 Harvard Univ. press

301.5 Teachers. Educational sociology. Education. Elementary
ISBN 0-674-81100-3 LC 71-188349

The author examines "the role-set of her nine fellow elementary school teachers in a small (2500 pop.) New England town. McPherson charges the schools with teaching competition, orderliness, failure, and routine. She sees the teacher suffering from frustration, tension, and discouragement due to dissatisfaction with the elusiveness, unmeasurability, and unachievability of his or her goals." (Library J)

"[This] is a lucid, revealing description of the way the elementary schoolteachers of one small New England town think of themselves and experience their work. . . . [The author found that] in her need to keep her dignity inviolate, the teacher . . . anxiously warded off scrutiny by her colleagues [thus barring] . . . new teachers from the opportunity of observing experienced teachers at work. Yet it injured the older teachers as well. As Gertrude McPherson explains, the teacher both wants to 'protect her role from too much scrutiny' and is downcast by the isolation that results, for there is no colleague who knows her daily work well enough to give her either meaningful praise or blame." Barbara Breasted

Christian Science Monitor p13 O 18 '72 250w

"A scholarly work based on the author's doctoral studies, an indepth sociological examination, using the method of concealed participant observation. . . . There is perhaps too much extrapolation from McPherson's small study to the system as a whole and certainly too much subjectiveness, but the author's dissection of the teachers' role expectations and realizations is a valuable addition to the study of education. The studious tone will not appeal to general readers, but the book is essential for academic libraries and education collections." S. A. Smith
Library J 97:3582 N 1 '72 130w

MCPHERSON, HARRY. A political education. 467p il $10.95 Little 320.973 U.S.—Politics and government—1961—
U.S.—Politics and government—1953-1961
LC 72-187789

The author gives an account of his political experiences. He "began his career as a legislative assistant to Senator Lyndon Johnson in 1956. During the Kennedy Administration he served in the Pentagon and later became assistant secretary of state and in 1965 counsel to the President." (Library J)

Reviewed by B. D. Williams
Best Sell 32:188 J1 15 '72 350w

"[The author] affords his readers a sensitive insight into the inner reaches of power during the convulsive years 1956-1968. . . . For four years he was counsel, speech writer, and man of all work to President Johnson. . . . McPherson's view of Johnson is a sympathetic one, critical yet fully understanding of the man in all his moods. . . . [He] also gives incisive profiles of the individual senators—seen both from his view and from the President's—and illuminating evaluations of the Presidential staff. . . . Daniel Moynihan calls McPherson's book 'a compound of Rousseau, Henry Adams and East Texas'—a description which at least suggests its intellectual and literary quality. It is also a portrait of a man gifted with extraordinary insight and the capacity to put politics into perspective." L. M. Lyons
Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 21 '72 850w

"Other insiders have written of Johnson and his policies, mostly to disassociate themselves from those policies which have been repudiated by the public, and there is some of that in McPherson's account. Yet he appears to have put his loyalty to Johnson first, and only in the post-Tet period did McPherson join the insider's cabal to halt the bombing and reverse the course of the war. The most striking feature of the book, however, is its contribution to the 'quagmire' school of the 1960's. The thesis of that school is that Vietnam was a product of miscalculation. . . . After a tour of Vietnam in May of 1967, during which McPherson observed events which seemed to vindicate the anti-war movement, he wrote to LBJ 'I came back neither optimistic nor pessimistic. . . . neither more 'hawk' nor more 'dove.' We are simply there and we should be.' Unconvincing then . . . and now." F. A. Burdick
Library J 97:1723 My 1 '72 300w
New Repub 167:32 Ag 5/12 '72 140w

"[This book] has a lot going for it, especially surprise. . . . [The author's] sketch of his drive up from Texas to Washington to join Johnson's staff in 1956 and his paragraphs on himself among military men in the Pentagon have quality one would welcome in a novel. A chapter giving 'brief lives' of the Senators sparkles and flashes with insight and choice detail, descriptions of pettifoggery and vain-glory, a few acute dislikes that are not disguised, and he 'tells tales out of school' on the Senators. . . . McPherson's book is most interesting as an invitation from a sensitive and ambitious man to learn what he says he has learned in his career in government. . . . As writing . . . [it] is a pleasure. As a learning and a teaching, it fails." Ronnie Dugger
N Y Times Bk R p[18] J1 30 '72 1350w

"This exceedingly readable and humane testament . . . is nowhere polemical or self-serving, and it is one of the best books on life in Washington to have been published in this century."
New Yorker 48:75 J1 8 '72 250w

Reviewed by Edwin Warner
Time 100:86 J1 10 '72 550w

MCPHERSON, JAMES M. Blacks in America. See Blacks in America

MACQUARRIE, JOHN. The faith of the people of God; a lay theology. 191p $6.95 Scribner

230 Theology. God
SBN 684-12942-6 LC 72-1224

This book "is a statement of Christian doctrine for laymen. The author has called it a 'lay theology.' . . . In using the expression 'lay theology,' the author refers . . . to theology belonging to the whole people, to clergy and laity alike. . . . The people of God itself is the starting-point of the study. . . . While one may doubt the reality of God or Christ, one cannot deny the historical reality of the Christian community. And it is around this concept of the people that the theology is expounded." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Too often 'lay' implies 'written for people who won't follow if this gets too technical.' Macquarrie has always taken difficult themes and written clearly, so he need not condescend. He writes for 'the people of God,' whoever they may be. Substantively, this work rewrites Christian theology from the point of view of the 'people' concept."
Christian Century 89:1134 N 8 '72 60w

"Most of the rubrics of traditional systematic theology are briefly discussed, but not as speculative or metaphysically abstracted phenomena. . . . Much of the creative thrust of this book consists of an exploration of the identity of [the 'people of God'] and especially of the dialectic of their separation from and solidarity with the rest of humankind. This tension, not always appreciated in the historical development of dogma, is the focal point of the author's review of the Christian faith structure. The layman will have no difficulty handling Macquarrie's style." Robert Dvorak
Library J 97:3168 O 1 '72 150w

"Readers should not be deceived by the subtitle 'a lay theology.' It doesn't mean that this is theology made simple for the layman, i.e., the nonprofessional. . . . [Macquarrie's] discussion of eschatology is sound and lucid, as far as it goes; but the 'faith of the people of God' says much more about the 'four last things'—death, judgment, hell and heaven—than the author takes account of here. Macquarrie is at his best as an interpreter of new religious insights, as for example Dietrich Bonhoeffer's vision of 'God at the center' of human life." C. E. Simcox
N Y Times Bk R p42 O 29 '72 600w

MACQUARRIE, JOHN. Paths in spirituality. 134p $4.95 Harper

248 Spiritual life. Prayer. Worship
SBN 06-065366-3 LC 70-183765

"The author discusses prayer, meditation, and worship in the light of recent theology, taking account of criticisms of these practices." (Publisher's note) Index of names.

"[The author] has put together an excellent set of essays . . . that presents an attractive blend of deep theological insights and practical counsels for a richer spiritual life. This eminently readable book is contemporary spiritual theology at its best." E. S. Stanton
America 126:548 My 20 '72 60w

"Unlike some modern theologians, John Macquarrie writes about God as though he believes in Him. And he has an uncanny knack for making that belief real and meaningful. . . . The author's discussion of prayer as a sort of 'sensitivity training' is fresh and helpful. . . . [and the] chapter on the eucharist is a well-balanced account of how this sacrament sums up all of Christian faith, worship and experience. . . . These wise and lucid essays . . . make clear the creative and liberating resources of the Christian tradition and support his claim that 'our humanity has a religious dimension and cannot be fulfilled where this is denied or neglected.'" N. K. Burger
N Y Times Bk R p22 Ag 27 '72 400w

"Macquarrie's reputation as a theologian will lead many people to expect great things of his latest book. It is, however, disappointing. . . . Most of the material has already been published elsewhere; some of it was originally delivered in the form of talks to specific audiences. This has resulted in repetition and a looseness of terminology (over 'religionless Christianity', for example); too much theological book-making of this kind is going on, and it does not impress."

MACQUARRIE, JOHN—Continued

TLS p1173 S 23 '72 400w

MACRAE, NORMAN. The neurotic trillionaire; a survey of Mr. Nixon's America. 112p $4.95; pa $1.95 Harcourt

309.173 U.S.—Economic conditions—1961-. U.S.—Social conditions
ISBN 0-15-565721-6 LC 72-117929

The author, "a deputy editor of the English business weekly the Economist, . . . examines some of the economic and social issues of our times, the ones currently being discussed both locally and nationally. Macrae's proffered solutions to unemployment, inflation, urban blight, etc. [include] . . . negative income tax and employment of minority groups." (Library J)

"This [is a] very small and rather overpriced essay. . . . I consider Macrae disastrously wrong in many of his judgments. . . . [His] considerable achievement is in ignoring or minimizing the three domestic problems which dominate the social landscape. One is race. . . . [One is] the generational war. . . . [and one is] the environmental issue. . . . I wish I could see America as Macrae does." Robert Lekachman
Book World p4 Ja 24 '71 850w

"Well worth preserving in book form, this survey by a leading British economic journalist should be widely circulated as a potential disturber of the peace."

Christian Century 87:1093 S 16 '70 40w

"A survey of Mr. Nixon's America in 112 pages? It seems like the impossible, and unfortunately Macrae . . . does not conquer the impossible. In fact his superficial look at contemporary America raises only the most obvious and basic [issues. The author's solutions] . . . ring familiar. . . . This is the type of book likely appeal only to the layman looking for fire with which to light backyard discussions."

Paula Kaufman
Library J 95:3467 O 15 '70 110w

MACRAE, R. STUART. Winston Churchill's toyshop. 228p il $10 Verry

940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Great Britain. Military art and science—Research
ISBN 0-900093-22-6 LC 77-596182

This is an account of Winston Churchill's "private research organization, MD1 [during World War II]. . . . The group, eventually numbering some 250 persons, devised and produced some 26 new weapons ranging from booby traps to naval mines. The story of this . . . group is told here by its second in command, Stuart Macrae. He details the exploits, successes, failures, and disappointments of MD1 from its founding in 1939 until its dissolution in 1947." (Library J) "Officially [the organization] was known as MD1 to show it came directly under the Ministry of Defence." (TLS)

"The author writes cheerfully and cockily about this department. He was, and presumably still is, parti pris. But his egotism is, in some ways, endearing and he has a fascinating story to tell not merely of the development of the weapons themselves but of the bureaucratic in-fighting to keep the department alive and kicking. Plainly, it offended more orthodox minds, but, equally clearly, the boys in this particular back room really deserved a drink (or even a toast). Without them, it is doubtful if certain weapons would have been developed and produced quickly enough."

Economist 239:57 Je 5 '71 250w

"[The author's] story of the organization and its contribution to the war effort is intimately personal and filled with detail. The work is valuable as the story of a minor, but no less intriguing, aspect of the war effort; but also because it throws light on some of the great figures like Lord Cherwell (the Professor) and others. Good reading on an exciting subject." R. T. Redden

Library J 97:1809 My 15 '72 140w

TLS p1628 D 31 '71 800w

MCSHANE, PHILIP, ed. Foundations of theology. See International Lonergan congress, 1970

MACSWINEY OF MASHANAGLASS, MAR-QUIS. Six came flying. 270p pl $6.95 Knopf

598 Swans
ISBN 0-394-47282-9 LC 71-171150

This is a story "of human-animal relations—how with patience and affection the author and his family made a lasting friendship with a . . . pair of wild swans, Hans and Leda, and their various broods of cygnets, without constricting their natural independence and free way of life." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[The author's] account of his dealings with the [swans] . . . is an exceptionally charming and amusing record of bird watching." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:129 Ap '72 60w

"MacSwiney's book, while informative, is really one of those friendly tomes you take up to the country house to save for those inspirational autumn evenings when honking, whistling V's of migrating waterfowl cut across the skies." S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p8 My 21 '72 350w

"Though it can hardly be claimed that Marquis MacSwiney does for swans what Joy Adamson does for lions [in born Free BRD 1960], or Farley Mowat does for wolves [in Never Cry Wolf BRD 1963, 1964], many will be reassured to learn that swans—unless their young are in danger—do not attack humans. Should a cob (male swan) raise his wings or ruffle his neck at you in threat-display, the author advises you to raise your arms at your sides in counter-threat-display. The cob will back off embarrassed, pretending indifference." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p8 Ap 27 '72 500w

"The author [had] an excellent opportunity to observe the behavior [of swans]; his book is a record of those observations, plus some random comments on the behavior of other waterfowl, dogs, and people. There is no denying the sincerity of the Marquis' devotion to his subject or the careful accuracy of his observations (though it may be doubted that these semi-domesticated birds have behaved exactly as wild swans would), but his rather pedantic style and limited subject will restrict the book's usefulness." P. B. Cors

Library J 97:890 Mr 1 '72 120w

MACURA, PAUL. Russian-English dictionary of electrotechnology and allied sciences. 707p $32.50 Wiley

621.381 Electronics—Dictionaries. Technology—Dictionaries. Russian language—Dictionaries—English
ISBN 0-471-56314-5 LC 71-134040

"This dictionary contains approximately 60,000 entries covering the fields of radar, radio, television, electronics, electro-technology, and related areas." (Publisher's note)

"Offers very comprehensive and nonrigorous translations from the Russian scientific language. . . . An introductory guide on verb conjugations, alphabet pronunciation and the number system for quick reference is unfortunately missing."

Choice 8:1162 N '71 100w

"Not only does. . . [this dictionary] bring together an extensive array of topically related Russian technical terms, but it also contains many entries (including new ones) absent from other bilingual works; and therefore it has a useful place in appropriate reference collections. Marginal virtues are its inclusion of many abbreviations current in the literature (spelled out as well as translated) and the entering of non-Russian proper names in their Cyrillic mutilation, for those who might not realize that Chetterton is Chatterton, Gamilton is Hamilton, etc. On the negative-side, few people can use the work to maximum advantage, since few people combine a good working knowledge of Russian (which is assumed) with a sophisticated and discriminatory knowledge of English technical vocabulary." R. H. Smeaton

Library J 96:3313 O 15 '71 270w

MCWHINNEY, EDWARD. Aerial piracy and international law. 213p $8.50 Oceana

341.77 Hijacking of airplanes. International law
ISBN 0-379-00038 LC 78-161940

These papers were "presented at a conference . . . held at the Institute of Air and Space Law at McGill University in 1970. The topics discussed include some of the complexities of providing safety to air travelers and justice to air pirates, various proposals for international legislation to deal with aerial piracy, the problem of human rights, and the right to asylum. There is a discussion of international law already in force. . . . Almost half the book consists of appendices of international legislation dealing with aerial piracy, including treaties, I.C.A.O. conventions, U.N. resolutions, and declarations from other international organizations." (Choice)

"[This is] a useful research guide. While not exceptionally substantive, aside from legal journal articles it is the only available book on this particular topic."

Choice 9:1039 O '72 180w

"[This is] a timely and excellent collection. . . . Two relatively minor criticisms, one of the essays is entirely in French, and there is little discussion of the ramifications that public and private efforts to prevent skyjacking may have on international law." J. M. Burger

Library J 97:895 Mr 1 '72 150w

MADDEN, DAVID, ed. American dreams, American nightmares; with a pref. by Harry T. Moore. 229p $6.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

818 American literature—History and criticism
ISBN 0-8093-0446-5 LC 70-93885

Nineteen essays by critics such as Cargill, Fiedler, Geismar and Heilman "all published here for the first time. Ten focus on specific works from Melville to Mailer, and nine discuss general aspects of the central theme, American dreams." (Choice)

Am Lit 44:180 Mr '72 140w

"Excellent critical essays by well known scholars. . . . [The] rather amorphous concept [of American dreams] does not unify the collection particularly well; but perhaps the variety of approaches is suitable to a pluralistic culture, and the individual essays are perceptive and important. Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 8:67 Mr '72 70w

MADDEX, JACK P. The Virginia conservatives, 1867-1879; a study in reconstruction politics, by Jack P. Maddex, Jr. 328p $8.50 Univ. of N.C. press

320.9755 Virginia—Politics and government. Reconstruction
ISBN 0-8078-1140-8 LC 76-109465

This is a study of the efforts of a political party formed to promote the economic regeneration of the state of Virginia on Northern capitalist lines during the period following the Civil War. Bibliography. Index.

"Maddex concludes that Conservatives provided a temperate means of reunification and a pattern that subsequently evolved in the remainder of the South. Blending earlier studies by James Douglas Smith, Robert R. Jones, and Charles C. Pearson, the author and his editors have reduced hundreds of pages of his doctoral dissertation to a graceful and pertinent text. Although Maddex neglects the influence of the pulpit and press, manuscript and secondary sources are so numerous and well integrated that the conceptual framework of [his book] will prove difficult for revisionists to overturn." H. C. Ferrell

Am Hist R 76:1609 D '71 450w

"One of the book's important contributions is a thorough examination of the make-up and policies of Virginia's post Civil War leadership—those Maddex calls the 'conservatives.' The author disputes . . . the idea that the old ante-bellum leadership regained control after Congressional reconstruction and perpetuated traditional policies and institutions. Rather, a new set of leaders called 'redeemers' (mostly businessmen and urban professionals) served as 'agents of adaptation instead of restoration. . . . They brought free public education to Virginia for the first time. They abandoned ante-bellum ideas of states-rights and provided the minimum civil rights required by law, while maintaining white supremacy in politics and society. . . . [Maddex's well-organized] book is a model study of post-Civil War politics." R. A. Mohl

Ann Am Acad 400:172 Mr '72 500w

"Well written and well researched, [this study] should be in every undergraduate and graduate library."

Choice 8:138 Mr '71 160w

MADDICOTT, J. R. Thomas of Lancaster, 1307-1322; a study in the reign of Edward II. 390p $14.50 Oxford

942.03 Thomas, Earl of Lancaster. Great Britain—History—Plantagenets, 1154-1399. Great Britain—Politics and government—Plantagenets, 1154-1399
ISBN 0-19-821837-0 LC [70-550035]

In this study of baronial politics in the reign of Edward II, the author "has approached the history of the period through the career of the king's cousin, Thomas of Lancaster, until the earl's execution in 1322." (Engl Hist R)

"Of the book as a whole I have two criticisms. One is that it is dull reading. It has a patchwork quality: the separate bits are all well done, but the seams are often weak. . . . My other criticism is that the author has been too austere. After several years of work on Earl Thomas he might well have offered us some informed guesses on matters we can never resolve. Much of the hostility between the king and Thomas of Lancaster was personal. Therefore I would welcome Maddicott's views about his principles. . . . [However] his few pages on Thomas as a later day Simon de Montfort are most intriguing. We have here a serious book. Had the manuscript been trimmed and its focus sharpened, we might have had an exciting one as well." J. T. Rosenthal

Am Hist R 77:498 Ap '72 950w

"This is an important book. The author is too scrupulous to seek for sensational novelty; on the contrary he usually gives a judicious and cautious verdict on the matter in hand. He does show that much more is needed for a proper understanding of Thomas and of the reign than an appreciation of the administrative developments and conflicts, important though those were. The book is not an easy one to read, for the argument is close and the wealth of detail is very great. But these constitute some of the work's great merit; for it makes a scholarly use of a very great range of sources, both printed and in manuscript." A. R. Myers

Engl Hist R 87:357 Ap '72 1300w

MADDOX, BRENDA. Beyond Babel; new directions in communications. 288p $6.95 Simon & Schuster

384 Telecommunication
ISBN 671-21436-5 LC 72-83632

A survey of the communications industry—its potential for change and resistance to change. The author discusses worldwide aspects of communication, and the history and problems of satellites, cable television and telephones. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"It would be difficult even to imagine an area more complex and more confused than communications, and to have someone with the obvious abilities of Brenda Maddox of The Economist venturing into this labyrinthian maze is a contribution of no small significance. The theme which pervades her work is simple: 'Communications is a political subject, for it concerns who may say what to whom at what price and in what place.' . . . This reviewer does not know of any work on this subject which is so objective, candid, and succinct. 'Beyond Babel' is a major contribution for the layman who would like to learn something about one of the most fantastic accomplishments of the times." J. M. Hamernick

Best Sell 32:355 N 1 '72 460w

Reviewed by R. C. Bergenheim
Christian Science Monitor p19 N 15 '72 550w

Economist 243:67 Je 10 '72 50w

Reviewed by Carey McWilliams
Nation 216:60 Ja 8 '73 30w

"A fascinating account of the new possibilities in the television and telephone industry. [The author's] tone is enthusiastic when she describes what is already possible: cable television with dozens of stations at the command of your knob, vastly better telephone services, newspapers printed in your own home. However, the moment she contemplates the various political and commercial interests handling these wonders she becomes a traditional chronicler of the follies of mankind. Beyond Babel deserves careful reading and a wide circulation.

MADDOX, BRENDA—Continued

TLS p911 Ag 4 '72 270w

MADDOX, JOHN. The doomsday syndrome. 293p $6.95 McGraw

301.31 Human ecology
ISBN 0-07-039428-8 LC 72-3844

The author examines "the problems of population, of pollution, of the new biology, and of the loss of our once-abundant natural resources, [and] claims . . . that we are not about to starve to death, to asphyxiate ourselves, or . . . to find the world an unbearable place to live . . . [but that] the environment can and will be a safe and sane one—if we devote our energies to solving our problems, rather than . . . scaring people and convincing ourselves that the human race is doomed." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies.

Reviewed by Peter Mayer

Best Sell 32:412 D 1 '72 320w

"It was inevitable that sooner or later someone would feel driven to write a book that took some of the environmentalists' wilder arguments apart. . . . [Maddox] has tried to be fair and draw a distinction between pollution which nobody wants and everyone agrees is an offence to civilised living, and the sort of near-hysteria whose latest outward expression is the mounting campaign among some environmentalists against economic growth as such."

Economist 243:64 Je 3 '72 200w

"[The author] recognizes that real problems do exist; but, he argues, much more has been and can be done than the doomsday prophets admit. The book deserves an attentive, critical, and concerned response. Unfortunately, its value will be lessened by Maddox's annoying polemics. Nevertheless, The Domsday Syndrome will make quite a splash." H. J. Steck

Library J 97:3608 N 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by T. H. Jukes

Nat R 24:1414 D 22 '72 1000w

"[The author] has a very sensible chapter on pollution and an extraordinarily complacent chapter on ecology. There is also an extensive and interesting digression on ethical and other problems of biological research, and an epilogue, with the Leninist title 'What can be done?' . . . By and large [this] is a disappointing book. It deals with problems of awesome complexity in a breathless gallop, with a magnificent and unpardonable disregard for documentation and footnotes, and is occasionally guilty of countering the groundless pessimism of the doom merchants with equally groundless optimism. In place of the scholarly tone that many people expected of him, Mr Maddox has produced a polemic, and not a very good one at that." John Naughton

New Statesman 83:795 Je 9 '72 750w

"Admirable as its argumentative strategy and knowledgeableness are . . . they are by no means the only warrant of merit in The Domsday Syndrome. For some lay readers the credibility of the work is likely to derive less from them than from a subtler ground, namely, the familiarity of the symptoms displayed in the writing of the scientific doom mongers, the remarkable resemblances between these symptoms and the norms of the high literary culture of the past century. . . . [This book] has cleared away great cartloads of cant and attitudinizing about technology, the environment, history, and social change, and for its tone and manner of argument, it ranks among the more intelligently humane volumes on public affairs of recent years." Benjamin DeMott

Sat R 55:77 O 28 '72 1850w

TLS p727 Je 23 '72 1350w

MADISON, CHARLES A. Eminent American Jews, 1776 to the present. 400p $10 Ungar

920 Jews in the United States—Biography
ISBN 0-8044-1576-5 LC 74-125967

"From the areas of business, science and medicine, law, journalism, labor [and] politics, [the author] presents fifteen . . . Americans of Jewish ancestry . . . each one set against a background sketch of the era. These are the . . . men: Haym Salomon, Mordecai Manuel Noah, Judah Philip Benjamin, Jacob H. Schiff, Oscar S. Straus, Felix Adler, Louis D. Brandeis, Adolph S. Ochs, Julius Rosenwald, Abraham Flexner, Stephen S. Wise, Herbert H. Lehman, Felix Frankfurter, Sidney Hillman [and] J. Robert Oppenheimer." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This book is] written with a somewhat filioipietistic tendency. . . . The fine arts are intentionally omitted, and the book is, perhaps, unduly weighted toward the German-Jewish segment and those with business and legal backgrounds. . . . In the absence, thus far, of a first class, college level, one-volume American Jewish history, a library which does not have the specialized studies could certainly usefully add this book."

Choice 8:1507 Ja '72 120w

"Readable though this work is, it does not necessarily 'show the contribution of the Jewish segment to American Civilization,' but rather describes the successes of individuals of Jewish origin. The emphases are on the social and activist scenes with only minor mention of the contribution of individuals to literature, philosophy, etc. As a general, readable biographical collection it is recommended; for those interested in further historical readings, the bibliography will be helpful." William Newman

Library J 96:2489 Ag '71 160w

MADISON, JAMES. The papers of James Madison; ed. by William T. Hutchinson and William M. E. Rachal; editorial staff: Jean Schneider [and] Robert L. Scribner. v5-7 v5. $12.50; v6. $15; v7. $16 Univ. of Chicago press

B or 92 U.S.—Politics and government—1783-1865
LC (62-9114)

These volumes, together with volume four, cover "twenty-six months of Madison's career as a member of the Continental Congress." (J Am Hist) For volumes one through four see BRD 1962 through 1966.

"The editors cope excellently with Madison's constitutional principles, his nationalism, and his concern for diplomatic, financial, and political issues. [But these volumes] tell us nothing of consequence previously unknown. That such impeccable research should be dissipated on a stupefying editorial apparatus without producing anything new of value is appalling. . . . Remorselessly, relentlessly, and rampantly the editorial apparatus surrounds and expounds anything on paper connected with Madison or with which he was concerned. The result is less lustrous than voluminous. No one has ever plunged more deeply than the editors into the primary sources of Madisoniana and come up drier." L. W. Levy

J Am Hist 59:115 Je '72 700w (Review of v5,6,7)

"Madison's notes on debates in Congress are, naturally, a good deal less interesting than his greatest work, the notes on the Constitutional Convention; but they are very interesting, if only for their illumination of the views of that capable but ambiguous Scot, James Wilson, and Madison is seen as defending a high federal doctrine which he never really abandoned."

TLS p1170 O 9 '70 1000w (Review of v6)

TLS p377 Ag 18 '72 1100w (Review of v7)

"This volume will be of considerable value to Madison scholars as well as to anyone with a serious interest in the history of early national America. Chronologically covering the ten months between May 3, 1783, and February 20, 1784, [it] contains correspondence to and from Madison (and including his brief notes on Congressional debates) concerning proposals for the location of a national capital, the difficulties relating to the signing of a definitive treaty of peace with Great Britain, as well as the revenue needs of the Confederation government. . . . Throughout the volume the nationalism that is to pervade Madison's thought at the Federal convention is clearly implied."

Va Q R 48:x winter '72 130w (Review of v7)

MAGUIRE, G. ANDREW. Toward Uhuru in Tanzania: the politics of participation. 403p maps $13.50 Cambridge

320.96 Tanzania—Politics and government
SBN 521-07652-8 LC 75-85727

"This book treats the men and events which shaped the coming of independence in Suku-maland, a tribal region in northwestern Tanzania. It covers the period from 1945 to 1965. . . . The two decades . . . include the heyday of British efforts to direct development in Sukumaland, the emergence of indigenous resistance to these efforts, the achievement of independence, and, finally, the transition from an anti-colonial movement to a party responsible for governing the nation." (Am Pol Sci R) Bibliography.

"Although this book is written by a political scientist, it is of great value to the student of cultural change. It is of special interest because the author used data collection techniques common to the ethnologist and a grassroots level focus for his research. . . . The author's primary concern was what happens in the people's lives rather than only on the highest level in the development of political theories pertaining to African socialism and one-party democracy. This approach provides a wealth of information to the anthropologist. . . . Although Maguire's narrative ends with 1965, he inspires in the reader great admiration for the outstanding efforts of Tanzania's leaders in the peaceful transformation to a modern state still in progress." G. O. Lang
Am Anthropol 74:45 F/Ap '72 1250w

"Maguire shatters the neat, but frayed, traditional-modern formula for studying political change in the developing areas by showing that the anti-colonial politicians included individuals from all ranks of Sukuma society and that traditional political institutions had virtually no influence or impact on the nationalist movement. . . . Of particular interest is the author's conclusion, conflicting with earlier studies, that the cooperative movement played no appreciable political role in the drive to independence. [He] skillfully intermingles data from official records and interviews to create colorful portraits of personalities involved in the move toward Uhuru in Sukumaland. . . . [Some] mild criticisms may be made. . . . [However, this book] is a must for students of African politics and political change."
Am Pol Sci R 64:1336 D '70 1100w

MAH, FENG-HWA. The foreign trade of mainland China. 270p $9.75 Aldine-Atherton

332 China (People's Republic of China)—Commerce
ISBN 0-202-31017-5 LC 72-159597

A "study of the major aspects of Chinese foreign trade for the period 1950-69. The author analyzes China's foreign trade system, price problems in foreign trade, international settlement with trading partners, degree of foreign trade dependence, trends in trade value, direction, commodity structure, and a new estimate of China's balance of international payment. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

"Though this latest monograph in the Committee on the Economy of China series deals with highly technical questions of trade valuation, exchange rates, purchasing power parities, balance of payments, price structure and behavior, and the like, it also provides students of China with a wide array of useful statistical data and generalizations and analyses about the People's Republic of China's economic relations with the rest of the world, communist and non-communist, up to 1967. . . . Drawing upon his carefully constructed data, Professor Mah throws light on several important facets of China's development." Charles Hoffmann
Ann Am Acad 402:147 Jl '72 460w

"Feng-hwa Mah is an expert on the foreign trade of China, and the work is a natural follow-up to his previous Communist China's foreign trade: price structure and behavior, 1955-59 and a number of articles on the subject of trade. It is the first detailed and coherent study of the major aspects of Chinese foreign trade for the period. . . . It has filled in a number of gaps in our knowledge of Chinese foreign trade. Although written in technical language, it is easily understood by both experts and laymen. Will be a useful reference for Sinologists and students and experts interested in comparative economic systems and international trade."
Choice 9:1175 N '72 190w

MAHAJANI, USHA. Philippine nationalism; external challenge and Filipino response, 1665-1946. 530p $13.50 Int. scholarly bk. services 320.5 Nationalism. Philippine Islands—Politics and government. Philippine Islands—History
SBN 7022-0599-0 LC [70-133301]

This is a study of Philippine nationalism through three successive phases of Colonial rule—Spanish, American, and Japanese. Bibliography. Index.

"At best this work provides a useful summary of Philippine nationalist attitudes towards that country's past, as well as a helpful compendium of political-historical information on the years 1898-1945. Narrative and analytical passages are blended together into a readable account. On the other hand, the book has major faults. Mahajani's limited access to important source materials, including those in Spanish, leads to occasional factual errors, a misreading of some events, and a distorted emphasis on the time periods involved. The development of nationalism during the Spanish years receives far too skimpy treatment. And while placing extremely heavy emphasis on political events, Mahajani neglects important aspects of the social and economic background to these happenings. Finally, very little attention is paid to peasant nationalism, a persistent force in modern Philippine history."
Choice 8:1630 F '72 170w

"Neither history nor political science, this work is a 492-page polemic with footnotes. The author suggests that her book is 'an interpretative study of Philippine nationalism as one aspect of Philippine history.' Such a study would have been most welcome, but this one is, rather, a shrill indictment of the iniquities of white colonialism. The material, which could have been the saving grace of the book, is neither comprehensive nor unusual." W. P. Strauss
J Am Hist 59:217 Je '72 370w

"This ambitious work . . . is based on much original research. The author conducted many interviews and did a great deal of field work in the Philippines. Some sections, such as the one on the Japanese period in which she exercises a much tighter editorial control than she does elsewhere, have more merit than others. In her examination of the Spanish and American periods, she repeats much material already ably covered by other scholars, and this adds unnecessarily to the length of the study." M. E. Nunn
Library J 97:69 Ja 1 '72 100w

MAHER, JAMES T., ed. American popular song. See Wilder, A.

MAHLER, RAPHAEL. A history of modern Jewry; v 1, 1780-1815. 742p $15 Schocken

909 Jews—History
ISBN 0-8052-3398-9 LC 74-148838

This is the first of a "four-volume history of modern Jewry (published in Hebrew in 1954). It is a . . . study of Jews at the time of the French Revolution. . . . Mahler stresses the social dynamics of the Jewish people, describing at length the social antagonisms and class struggles in the community. He also delineates the differences, both social and economic, between the various Jewish communities in Europe, the U.S., and Palestine, discussing as well the Jews' relationships to both secular governments and their own ruling organizations." (Library J) Bibliography to volume one in volume one.

Choice 8:1626 F '72 200w

"It is indeed a pleasure to have this abridgment of Mahler's massive [work]. . . . The wealth of primary material used, including legends and folklore, makes this study lively reading. Recommended to all libraries with Judaica collections." Maurice Tuchman
Library J 96:4009 D 1 '71 160w

"The economic life of the Jews and their role in Western and Eastern European countries at different stages of economic development emerge very clearly. . . . Apart from a few deficiencies in the selection and arrangement of the bibliographies, the presentation of the material calls for two comments. The division of general histories into periods of thirty-five years can be distorting.

MAHLER, RAPHAEL—Continued

It may be justifiable for the era of the French Revolution, but it is to be hoped that the further volumes that are planned will show continuity and change over a longer time-span. . . . Secondly, the allocation of space is somewhat idiosyncratic. . . . The three pages assigned to the 20,000 Jews of England are fewer than those accorded to two Swiss villages containing 2,000. . . . For all Professor Mahler's decided opinions, the overriding merits of his indispensable new interpretation are its great readability and the unfolding of the evidence in a way which allows readers to form their own independent judgment."

TLS p46 Ja 14 '72 800w

MAIER, JOAN M., jt. auth. Centralized processing for academic libraries. See Dougherty, R. M.

MAIER, PAUL L. First Christmas; the true and unfamiliar story in words and pictures. 125p $4.95 Harper

232.92 Jesus Christ—Nativity
ISBN 0-06-065396-5 LC 76-163162

The "events surrounding the birth of Jesus . . . [as] told in Matthew and Luke [have] often been obscured by legends and mistletoe, myths and tinsel. . . . [The author] strips away the . . . folklore which [has] obscured its . . . beginning to tell 'how it really was' in the world of the Nativity." (Publisher's note)

"The great merit of this [book] is that it is succinct, careful, accompanied by good photographs, including some of Palestine taken from miles up in the sky, and reverent. . . . Maier does not adhere to the traditional views of most Roman Catholics, nor does he come down firmly for opposing views, but he handles with care practically every traditional circumstance. The book has the merit of being brief, intelligent, pointed and, for all its brevity, rather thorough."

Best Sell 31:447 Ja 1 '72 160w

"This fact-filled book is an interesting and successful attempt to fill in the details of the simple evangelical tale of the first Christmas. . . . Marshalling the resources of history, astronomy, archaeology and geography, Maier in his account gives rich detail and luxuriant background to that simple story. . . . The combination of text and photographs succeeds in making a full, illustrated story out of what is in the New Testament at best a story outline. . . . [The author's] presentation of Herod the Great, his descriptions and pictures of the shrines and churches that now mark the famous holy places, and his comments on the apocryphal expansions of the Christmas story are not in any way vitiated by his limited view of the New Testament text." R. J. Bueter

Christian Century 88:1391 N 24 '71 340w

MAIER, PAULINE. From resistance to revolution; colonial radicals and the development of American opposition to Britain, 1765-1776. 318p $10 Knopf

973.3 U.S.—History—Revolution—Causes
ISBN 0-394-46190-8 LC 74-154904

Maier views the American revolution "as a 'step by step' process of reasoned deliberation in response to British actions. . . . [She] describes how the American Whigs moved 'in definable stages' determined by . . . political formulas from the Stamp Act crisis of 1765 through the non-importation associations of the late 1760's to the ultimate implication of the King in a conspiracy against American liberties and the consequent Declaration of Independence. The Americans never aimed to revolt but were 'seeking always a return to what they considered traditional principles of British rule,' 'to uphold, not overturn the established government.'" (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

Choice 9:1036 O '72 180w

Reviewed by J. H. Hutson

J Am Hist 59:693 D '72 900w

"Thoroughly researched in American and British archives, this scholarly work recounts the remarkable decade-long patience of the Colonies in the face of increasing British economic and political repression. . . . The vital role of the Sons of Liberty and the Committees of Correspondence—and the almost cosmic venality and ineptitude of the Crown government—are covered with authority. As background for the approaching U.S. bicentennial, this is a timely, trenchant work; and many of the quotes from both American and British liberals of the period are as fresh as tomorrow's headlines." Alfred Stern

Library J 97:2392 J1 '72 180w

Reviewed by Richard Buel

New Eng Q 45:599 D '72 950w

"[This] book is essentially, as Maier says, 'a study of political perception,' a superbly detailed account of the ideological escalation of the decade . . . that brought Americans into revolution. Written from the participants' viewpoint, it is the kind of book they would have liked, for it explains the Revolution as they preferred to describe it. . . . But by writing her book through the minds of the Whigs and describing events almost always as they perceived them, [Maier] continually runs the risk of confusing her views with those of the participants. . . . The result of such an exclusive reliance on the public rhetoric of the Whig participants is an overly rational and stylized account of the American Revolution which its victims, the Tories, for one, would scarcely have accepted. Nonetheless, this was the war as the winners saw it, and in the end Maier has tried to remain faithful to their ideological perception." G. S. Wood

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 21 '72 1550w

MAILE, ANNE. Tie-&-dye made easy. 160p $9.95 Taplinger

746.6 Dyes and dyeing
ISBN 0-8008-7701-2 LC 72-148406

The author describes different methods for producing textile designs. He "begins with the simple process of dyeing fabric by placing it in net bags or stockings, then guides the reader on to the use of clothespins, various types of binders, and binding, folding, pleating, rolling, and pin-pivot methods. The finished product will have stripes, stars, ovals, diamonds, or a marbled effect. The final chapters consist of . . . descriptions of dyes and ways of using the textiles. Addresses of suppliers are also provided." (Library J)

"A useful, copiously illustrated compendium reflecting current interest in the art of resist-dyeing. . . . Every aspect of the craft is included. . . . In addition, the variety of projects described makes it possible to select those requiring minimum skills for use with beginners, the handicapped, or young children. Teachers will appreciate the very practical suggestions for programs to include this craft in schools with limited working facilities and/or funds for materials. And the more advanced will find the author's innovations both challenging and stimulating." M. M. B.

Horn Bk 48:282 Je '72 150w

"This book is destined to be the constant companion of tie-and-dye enthusiasts. . . . The techniques vary from very simple ones suitable for children to more involved ones requiring close attention, but all of the projects are very clearly described and illustrated." Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 97:190 Ja 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by Beatrice Parker

Library J 97:2964 S 15 '72 110w [YA]

MAILER, NORMAN. Existential errands. 365p $7.95 Little 813

LC 76-175476

"A potpourri of essays, speeches, letters, interviews, a one-act play, a book review, a translation from Lorca—26 pieces selected by the author from his writings [of the past five years]." (Library J)

"Whether writing about space, fem lib, political protest, or sports, Mailer strides firmly to the aesthetic brink and teeters there spouting pure ontological bop, which nobody does better. . . . [But] in close-up, Mailer is great, tooling his incandescent pensées with Pascalian precision. On any subject here—drugs, booze, God, black power, liberals vs. conservatives, the coming conflict between technology and magic—he is never without a really original analysis, one that fascinates as it penetrates. And besides, Mailer is probably the most entertaining thinker at work today. That alone is worth the price of the fuming and nodding his readers will experience." S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p5 Ap 30 '72 900w

Choice 9:971 O '72 120w

Reviewed by R. W. Haney
Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 26
'72 500w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff
Commonweal 96:361 Je 30 '72 2000w

"Mailer's existential stance, coupled with his conceits of ego, have resulted in some of the finer journalism of recent years. But the weakness of his inner journey to external truth shows strongly in Of a Fire on the Moon [BRD 1971], with its ornate sentences curving upon themselves in near self-parody. The pleasure of Existential errands derives from avoidance of such excesses. Here Mailer's command of the essay reaches a near flawless peak. His essay on Muhammad Ali is the finest bit of sports-writing available. A piece on theater, although prone to wandering afield, offers substantial, if flashy, thoughts on the impact of television on theater. Mailer's analysis of his film Wild 90 is less cohesive, but a following treatise on film theory offers some intriguing ideas." James Heckel

Library J 97:1016 Mr 15 '72 150w

"[This new collection is] a rather weak book. . . . But when even Homer nods, we punish him not for nodding but for being Homer in the first place. . . . In fact there's plenty of strong writing, which in his case also means strong thinking, in the book, and a Professor Lucid could have edited it down into a stunning collection perhaps a third as long." T. R. Edwards

N Y Rev of Books 18:21 Je 15 '72 700w

"[Here Mailer] speaks ex cathedra on the President, Mark Lane, black power, Norman Podhoretz. There is also Mailer's National Book Award acceptance speech. . . . And on like that. The medley runs from the Pulitzer Prize-type brilliant and whimsical to some ragas of pulp prose that promise to thrust one's poor, bored brain into a stupor. . . . With the essays in general, he does not organize quite enough to be persuasive. Simply to flip open the top of his head to expose his frontal lobes throbbing with 'existential' 'entropy' like some misguided gent flashing open his raincoat is not enough. Yet even as he is combing over the bald spots in his theories, his conclusions intrigue." Cynthia Buchanan

N Y Times Bk R p27 Ap 16 '72 1500w
New Yorker 48:103 Je 17 '72 300w

MAILER, NORMAN. The long patrol; 25 years of writing from the work of Norman Mailer; ed. by and with an introd. by Robert F. Lucid. 739p $15 World pub.

818
LC 72-159589

A collection of representative selections from the American writer's work—"both excerpted and complete—from The Naked and the Dead [BRD 1948] through Of a Fire on the Moon [BRD 1971] and is intended . . . to attract readers who may be discovering Mailer for the first time." (Sat R)

"Mailer's friends and admirers needn't worry about the prospect of his becoming a cultural monument. It's one of his best roles. But how should the thing be constructed? From what angle should it be viewed? [This volume] which strikes me as an imaginative and commercial absurdity, shows how not to do it. Who could conceivably want to spend fifteen dollars for a collection of excerpts from Mailer's books, however nicely printed and tastefully chosen, when for an equivalent sum you could buy most of the books, entire, in paperback? To be useful to anyone, such an anthology should have included two or three whole books with briefer selections from the others; if copyright problems precluded this, the project would better have been scrapped." T. R. Edwards

N Y Rev of Books 18:21 Je 15 '72 700w

"An excellent sampling." J. W. Aldridge
Sat R 54:45 N 13 '71 1450w

MAIMONIDES. A Maimonides reader; ed with intros, and notes by Isadore Twersky. (Lib. of Jewish studies) 494p $12.50 Behrman

296.1 Law, Jewish. Ethics, Jewish. Judaism
ISBN 0-87441-200-5 LC 76-160818

The editor "presents an anthology of [Maimonides' writings] together with a general introduction and brief expositions of each of the selections. The principle of selection has [been neither] topical nor chronological; rather, the editor has set the Mishnah Torah, Maimonides' great code of Jewish law, as the central pillar of the book. To the themes—philosophical, legal, and polemical—of the Mishnah Torah, Twersky has related parallel themes found in Maimonides' earlier and later writings." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This superb anthology of Maimonides writings brings together for the first time in a single volume texts until now only available in widely scattered editions. None of the translations is new, but Twersky has drawn the best ones from many different sources. . . . The book will be an admirable aid to those teaching Maimonides in English: the selections will give the student a ready grasp of the extraordinary versatility of the Rambam's mind, and of the subtle interplay of philosophy and theology, realism and spirituality, in his work. . . . The lack of critical and explanatory footnotes is a less serious deficiency than it may at first appear."

Choice 9:308 S '72 210w

"One may wonder about Twersky's principle of selection, yet one must marvel at its didactic efficiency: Maimonides' thought is presented as a unit which will engage the reader. An excellent book." L. S. Kravitz

Library J 97:2108 Je 1 '72 100w

MAIMONIDES. Mishneh Torah. See Maimonides reader

MAISLER, BENJAMIN. See Mazar, B.

MAIZELS, JOAN. Adolescent needs and the transition from school to work. 354p $11.25 Oxford

331.3 Youth—Employment. Dropouts. Youth—Middlesex, England
ISBN 0-485-11113-6 LC 74-18113

This "study is an assessment of the needs and opportunities of youth during the transition from school to work, their working environment, and existing community services. The data, based on interviews in Middlesex with 330 boys and girls of ages fifteen to eighteen and questionnaires from sixty-five firms in which they were employed, is organized in four parts: 'Leaving School,' 'Choosing and Finding Employment,' 'Present Employment,' and 'Other Aspects of the Transitional Years.' In addition there are sections on methodology and conclusions." (Contemp Sociol)

"The sample of young people and firms involved is small. But the work is competent and authoritative, and generalizations of high reliability are set out. . . . Differences between the British and American cultural and institutional settings may limit use for undergraduates. But graduates in education, guidance, social work, manpower and labor economics should have the book available."

Choice 8:877 S '71 160w

"Reading the volume in its entirety is made laborious by the repeated use of fractional numbers without a common base. . . . Individuals engaged in vocational placement and guidance, rather than persons with primarily theoretical concerns, may find the book of greatest value. However, some interpretative statements are of interest in light of data collected in the United States on educational inequality and social class." Pat Keith

Contemp Sociol 1:173 Mr '72 750w

MALAMUD, BERNARD. The tenants. 230p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-27290-5 LC 71-165400

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 9:369 My '72 160w

Reviewed by Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p6 Ja 20 '72 700w

Reviewed by Jacob Korg
Commentary 53:82 My '72 1500w
Economist 243:73 My 13 '72 220w

Reviewed by Marcia Keller
Library J 97:791 F 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by Peter Porter
New Statesman 83:397 Mr 24 '72 700w

TLS p325 Mr 24 '72 800w

Va Q 11 48:xix winter '72 240w

MALANTSCHUK, GREGOR. Kierkegaard's thought; ed. and tr. by Howard V. Hong and Edna H. Hong. 388p $12.50 Princeton Univ. press

198 Kierkegaard, Søren Aabye
ISBN 0-691-07166-7 LC 77-155000

This study is concerned with the "basic premises and principles of the Danish Christian's thought. . . . Malantschuk cuts through the authorship problem to clarify the philosopher's key ideas, see the comprehensive plan of his work, and make intelligible the dialectical coherence of his thought. He follows the procedure Kierkegaard himself recommended for checking an author's work, its truth and general thrust—the procedure being to 'imitate' the process of thought and the dialectical movement undertaken by the author. . . . [He] shows how Kierkegaard turned consciously away from technical subjects to concentrate on the subjective in human life and, in doing so, shaped his dialectical method." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Without any doubt [this is] the best book on Kierkegaard's thought in any language."

Choice 9:516 Je '72 220w

"[As the] excellent translators of this work point out, Malantschuk employs Kierkegaard to interpret Kierkegaard, using the journals as his guide. An ambitious, well crafted book, essential for all students of Kierkegaardiana."

Christian Century 88:1422 D 1 '71 30w

"[This work is] the result of lifelong study of Kierkegaard. . . . [It] surpasses anything that I know of in English in comprehensiveness, careful exposition, and considered detail. Malantschuk always allows Kierkegaard to interpret himself and reveals a phenomenal command of the Kierkegaard corpus." D. W. Dayton

Library J 97:1018 Mr 15 '72 110w

MALE, D. J. Russian peasant organisation before collectivisation: a study of commune and gathering, 1925-1930. 253p $12.50 Cambridge

333.2 Collective settlements. Peasantry
ISBN 0-521-07884-9 LC 70-123662

The author places the "commune (or mir), the old Russian form of land-holding . . . in its agricultural perspective, before tracing the developments, political and social, from 1925 to the onset of mass collectivisation in 1930." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"A noteworthy appendix grapples valiantly, though inconclusively, with the question of the physical relationship between the commune and the succeeding collective farm. In view of regional variations and formidable source problems the author's cautious approach to generalization is well warranted; the use of census data, however, would have permitted more precise quantification. This descriptive skeleton calls for historical and analytical flesh but is a welcome addition to the scant material in an important and long-neglected area." Dorothy Atkinson

Am Hist R 77:179 F '72 170w

"Within extremely narrow limits, Male's book is useful. Despite serious flaws of conception and execution, it must be welcomed as an addition to the exceedingly scant English literature on Russian peasant organization. . . . In many respects, the author is his own enemy. His constant strictures about the quality of data cause the reader to wonder whether the book was worth writing at all. Personally, I would answer this question in the affirmative. . . . There is in my mind a serious question as to the validity of Male's time frame. . . . I am also uneasy with [his] limitation of his task to the analysis of the commune's role in land tenure, even though this limitation is not strictly adhered to in all instances. A useful feature . . . is the detailed discussion of government policy toward the commune and the rural Soviet in Part 2. The author has here collected many sources unfamiliar to the non-specialist reader and has made a creditable first attempt to lay out the conflicting 'vectors' involved." S. P. Dunn

Ann Am Acad 400:188 Mr '72 700w

"The most meticulously researched title yet published on the peasants' way of life in the 1920's. Although Male's scope is from 1925-30 he also brings in the 1861 and Stolypin reforms where appropriate. The study is based primarily upon rare pre-1930 Russian sources (statistical studies of the Peoples' Commissariat of Worker Peasant Inspectorate, regional agricultural statistical handbooks, the journal Na agrarnom fronte); Soviet studies published recently are also cited and discussed. The book is a thorough analysis of many aspects of peasant life. Numerous statistical tables, organizational charts [and] appendices [are included]. . . . No library can afford to pass up this valuable study. Particularly useful to specialists in Soviet studies."

Choice 8:1058 O '71 170w

"As Mr Male shows, hardly anyone shared the hope of Marx and Engels in the 1870s that the commune might become the nucleus for socialism in the countryside. It was seen as a bulwark of traditional economic and political values. . . . [Mr Male] makes insufficient use of the substantial publications by Russian historians between 1956 and 1966. But his monograph as a whole illuminates our understanding of the Russian peasantry and its uneasy relations with the Soviet regime. A careful glossary translates and explains the complex Russian vocabulary in terms comprehensible to the student of English agrarian history."

TLS p1584 D 17 '71 360w

MALIK, YOGENDRA K. East Indians in Trinidad: a study in minority politics; pub. for the Institute of race relations. 199p $9.75 Oxford

301.45 East Indians in Trinidad. Trinidad and Tobago—Politics and government
ISBN 0-19-218198-X LC 73-879735

"A study of the politics of the minority ethnic group in the plural society of Trinidad, where blacks are the dominant majority. Malik . . . investigates the social structure, the background of the social elite, attitudes to politics among the elite, cultural patterns, and the history of party politics within the Indian community." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The study is unique in its comprehensiveness, but rather predictable in its analysis and pedestrian in its presentation. Malik believes that the Indians must transcend their internal religious and cultural splits and the class-based conservatism of their present leadership if they are ever to serve as a government on the island, as distinguished from a permanent opposition. . . . Useful for specialized collections. Helpful index and bibliography."

Choice 9:1204 N '72 190w

"Malik, professor of political science at the University of Akron, presents a detailed picture of the complex structure of East Indian culture transplanted to a foreign environment. Published sources and interviews with Trinidad's ruling elite have been used to prepare, probably for the first time, full portraits of the East Indian's Democratic Labour party and the majority People's National Movement party. . . . For scholarly collections." R. D. Harlan

Library J 97:2408 Jl '72 190w

MALINA, JUDITH. The enormous despair. 249p $6.95 Random house

792 Living Theatre. New York (City)
ISBN 0-394-46961-5 LC 75-37063

"Malina and her husband, Julian Beck, founded the Living Theatre in the 1940's. [This book] is her diary of the Living Theatre's 1968-1969 American tour. The Becks are advocates of nonviolent anarchist revolution, and their productions are polemical. . . . [The diary is a] series of impressions and reactions, partly about the Living Theatre, but mainly about the American scene." (Library J) Index.

"[This book] is poetic in style and intensely personal. Brief sketches of the author's famous friends—Allen Ginsberg, Salvador Dalí, Serge Obolensky, and many others also add interest. Malina paints a very human picture of herself and discusses the directions change should take and her alternating hope and despair that things will change at all. Reading this book forces one to recall the events and tensions of 1968." A. M. Burk

Library J 97:2083 Je 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by Dotson Rader

N Y Times Bk R p49 O 22 '72 1250w

"[The author] is nostalgic for the bad old days, which were in many ways the good old days of revolutionary fervor, busts, and radical outrages. Malina evokes the memory of the hope and excitement of those times. The assassinations, Chicago, the bombs, the burnings—America seemed to be moving toward change. . . . Only very occasionally humorous. . . . Malina's diary is often pretentious. . . . [Judith and Julian's] allegiance to their Jewishness bring a warmth to an otherwise rather cold book. Like the Living Theatre's performances, the journal is a strange amalgam of talk about peace and love and the hostility engendered by many of the company's actions. Malina tries to be both angry and loving but almost loses her humanity in the attempt." Anthea Lahr

Sat R 55:72 Je 24 '72 550w

MALLAN, LLOYD. Suiting up for space: the evolution of the space suit. 262p il $9.95 Day 629.45 Astronauts—Clothing. Life support systems (Space environment) LC 75-89308

An "account of the development of the space suit and the 'blood, sweat, and tears' behind it. The history is traced from earliest times, through Wiley Post's suit (costing $60,000), through Project Mercury $10,000 per suit), to Apollo suits priced at $400,000 each. . . . A chapter is devoted to the monkeys, dogs, rats and other animals which participated in the space program." (Library J) Index.

"Illustration of space suits are unsurpassed, although the reader must search as many as 75 pages to find the discussion which belongs with a given picture. The discussions are lucid, despite an occasional goof. . . . and the reader will need no previous technical training to gain an excellent insight into the problems and the prospects of man's survival in space. There is no bibliography as such. Mallan gathered most of his material from original documents, interviews with the men involved, and personal experience."

Choice 8:1468 Ja '72 190w

"The author gives an interesting, highly readable account. . . . The content is fairly technical, but good writing makes this a book to be enjoyed and understood by average YA readers." Yvette Schmitt

Library J 95:4069 N 15 '70 160w [YA]

"This unusual book is the narrative of the space suit, told in vast detail with many photographs, interviews, citations of Air force and corporate reports, and in a cheerful, if rather excited, style at a nontechnical level." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 225:113 D '71 230w

MALLIS, ARNOLD. American entomologists. 549p il $15 Rutgers univ. press

920 Entomologists—Biography
ISBN 0-8135-0686-7 LC 78-152316

This book presents biographies of 203 entomologists. Bibliography. Index.

"The book is clearly written and free from literary affectations. Quotations from letters and other writings are well chosen. The chapter titles, e.g. 'Pioneer entomologists,' 'Early Federal entomologists,' 'Notable orthopterists,' . . . might make a reader wonder in which chapter a particular biography would be found, but this does not become a major problem."

Choice 9:81 Mr '72 130w

"[This book portrays] the great and near-great upon whose shoulders contemporary entomology rests. Say, Forbes, the Comstocks, Snodgrass—they are all here. Unfortunately, however, Victor Shelford is omitted. The author's style is reminiscent of that seemingly typical for chatty natural historians at the turn of the century and, given the subject matter, is not inappropriate. The book makes an important contribution to the history of American science." J. D. Buffington

Library J 96:1624 My 1 '71 140w

"To a middle-aged entomologist with an interest in the past, like myself, reading this book is like a visit with old friends. . . . A few of the juicier stories are not here, of course (some of them are doubtless apocryphal), and many of the accounts are somewhat too laudatory. . . . But on the whole the author has succeeded in fulfilling his goal of 'fleshing out' these men, so that they appear as 'something more than a list of publications.' . . . The book is well researched and notably free of errors. . . . A few words of warning. . . . To be chronicled in these pages one must have died prior to 1966. 'American,' . . .

is construed to mean America north of Mexico, so you will not find Costa Lima or other important Latin Americans here. Arrangement is by area of interest." H. E. Evans
Science 175:162 Ja 14 '72 750w

MALONEY, RALPH. The Nixon recession caper. 192p $5.95 Norton

SBN 393-08666-6

LC 70-173630

"Four respectable citizens, pillars of a Fairfield County country club, have lost their upper-tax-bracket jobs during the present . . . economic adjustment. . . . Sandy Campbell is an ex-vice president of a mutual fund . . . Jack Carmody is an ex-ad-agency ace . . . Sam Deitsch is a dress manufacturer . . . Harry Price is all the has-beens rolled into one: ex-movie star, ex-producer, ex-director—ex-box office. . . . The four keep up their front all the way to the welfare-check line. . . . The one unforgivable crime is to be broke. To escape this ultimate guilt, the bankrupts band together to commit a lesser crime: hold up a bank." (Time)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 229:11071 Mr '72 650w

Reviewed by C. J. Keffer

Best Sell 32:92 My 15 '72 390w

Reviewed by Alan Hislop

Book World p8 Ap 2 '72 460w

"[This] book rests shakily on three gimmicks. The first is a story taken from today's headlines. . . . [the] 'Nixon recession.' The second gimmick is alcohol. . . . The third gimmick is sex. Even granted the permissive tenor of the times, it is intrusive, ill-handled, and lacking in any discernible literary purpose. . . . This is a Book-of-the-Month Club selection. Nonetheless, it remains, to this reviewer, a 192-page gimmick whose possibilities—cash is indeed in short supply for many of us—sink to the level of a serial in an 'adult' magazine." D. K. W.

Christian Science Monitor p16 Mr 16 '72 230w

"This novel is witty, hard, and entirely too wise; perhaps a little limited in its appeal, a little upper-class Lavender-Hill-Mob-like. However, it is the most amusing and entertaining book of its kind to have appeared for some time." Henry Veit

Library J 97:904 Mr 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar

NY Times Bk ■ p34 Mr 5 '72 70w

"Maloney writes some very good scenes: the heist ('Don't muss a moovle!') and the post-caper skinny-dip. He also may set a few recession-struck readers to wondering if they have a friend—a really good friend—at Chase Manhattan." A. C.

Newsweek 79:79C Mr 6 '72 200w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:104 Mr 25 '72 80w

"Maloney, a light novelist with a heavy hand . . . can write dialogue that gets off the train at Westport. He can compose scenes that seem to come from a camera rather than a typewriter. He makes superb use of his country club to write a short history of the decline and fall of the snob in America. But he shows no faith in his material. Just when he should be putting it all together, he takes it all apart, hurrying on to play a stand-up comedian in print—he becomes an anything-for-a-laugh gagster, spouting Mafia jokes, even a little garment industry humor, too." Melvin Maddocks
Time 99:83 Mr 6 '72 $10w

MALRAUX, ANDRÉ. Felled Oaks: conversation with de Gaulle [tr. by Irene Clephane; rev. by Linda Asher] [Eng title: Fallen Oaks]. 128p $6.95 Holt

B or 92 Gaulle, Charles de, President France

ISBN 0-03-091166-4 LC 72-182758

One "day in December 1969, André Malraux visited Charles de Gaulle in retirement at Colombey-les-deux-Églises. The two men spent the day together talking in De Gaulle's firelit study, over lunch with Mme de Gaulle, and on into the evening. . . . [This book records their talk which] ranged over French and world history, politics, art, great men past and present, life and death itself." (Publisher's note) Portions of this book, which was originally published in French entitled Les Chênes qu'on abat . . . , have appeared in Esquire magazine.

MALRAUX, ANDRÉ—Continued

Reviewed by Edward Gannon
Best Sell 32:172 J1 1 '72 750w

"From a literary point of view this is a Malraux setpiece—romantic, moving and sometimes exasperating. The dark woods at Colombey and the December snow collaborate to provide an emotional background of a kind familiar to the reader of Malraux's novels. The ages are once again ransacked to induce a sense of historic destiny in the reader. . . . We are told that he scribbled notes in the back of the car that drove him away from Colombey, but are we to suppose that all de Gaulle's obiter dicta that appear in this book are entirely accurate? . . . On the other hand, there is a kind of overall truth in Malraux's portrait which must strike all those who have studied de Gaulle's own writings and career. If this is not how the General was, it is, one feels, how he ought to have been." Anthony Hartley

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 31 '72 600w

Reviewed by Edward Grossman
Commentary 54:99 J1 '72 2000w

"To M. Malraux no cliché uttered in his presence, far less one by himself, is devoid of philosophical importance. So he is a trifle high-falutin'; but since not many people got to hear de Gaulle's last table talk his recollections . . . are entertaining."

Economist 242:67 Mr 18 '72 200w

Reviewed by Max Beloff
Encounter 39:50 J1 '72 270w

"Something terminal can be felt in these conversations; but it is not the death of Europe; it is the dying of Europe's last great mythic figure in the arms of her last grand mythomaniac. . . . To read de Gaulle and Malraux . . . here together when everything had passed them by is to understand the command that fantasy will forever be able to place upon us: both of them are so much more wonderful than anyone real." Murray Kempton

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ap 23 '72 2650w

"[This book] is not, M. Malraux tells us, a mechanical record. His account is drawn from memory—from memory revised, heightened, and polished to an appropriate epigrammatic lustre. It is stirring, heroic, quintessentially de Gaullist."

New Yorker 48:115 My 27 '72 230w

"It is notoriously difficult to translate French conversation into English. It is also well known that the very particular style of General de Gaulle, and the often obscure eloquence of André Malraux, have presented many difficulties to their translators. It is therefore with sympathy that one turns to Irene Clephane's translation of [this book]. . . . But the more one compares the French text with her translation, the more one regrets that she has allowed so much awkwardness to remain."

TLS p395 Ap 7 '72 240w

MALTBY, ARTHUR, ed. Classification in the 1970's; a discussion of development and prospects for the major schemes. 269p $12 Linnet bks.

025.4 Classification—Books
ISBN 0-208-01170-6 LC 72-176601

Each of the five essays following the editor's introduction "describes and defends one major scheme: Bliss, Colon, Dewey, Library of Congress, and the Universal Decimal Classification. Modifications and development are outlined, together with a forecast of the possible future of each scheme. The four remaining essays discuss such topics as classification in alphabetical indexing; the testing and evaluation of systems of classification; research into the feasibility of a new, general classification scheme; and classification in computer-based systems." (Choice)

"[The opening essay] provides an admirable overview of the 'logic,' 'limits,' and 'levels' of classification, making a fitting introduction to the whole work. . . . The work provides interesting reading, and is essential for students of library science; it will also cause mature librarians to reflect [on] . . . the problems of users of classification, or the implications of the growing gulf between classification as an information retrieval system and classification needed purely for shelf arrangement."

Choice 9:1116 N '72 200w

"[Sarah Vann] examines the factors which bear on [the continuity of the Dewey Decimal Classification]; . . . highlights the differences between the 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th editions; and stresses the problems of internationalizing Dewey. 'Dewey 18: a preview and a report to the profession,' by W. B. Matthews, reprinted from the Wilson Library Bulletin, is appended. J. P. Immroth demonstrates that, despite frequent criticism to the contrary, the Library of Congress Classification's theoretical base is valid. . . . B. C. Vickery's article on the value of classificatory techniques in otherwise alphabetically based retrieval systems is nicely balanced by E. M. Keen's conflicting observations regarding the results of evaluation tests of indexing systems. . . . R. Freeman reviews the role to date of classification in computer-based systems." J. F. Madden

Library J 97:2361 J1 '72 750w

MALTBY, WILLIAM S. The black legend in England; the development of anti-Spanish sentiment, 1558-1660. 180p il $7.50 Duke Univ. press

327.42 Spain—Foreign opinion. Spain—Foreign relations—Great Britain. Great Britain—Foreign relations—Spain
ISBN 0-8223-0250-0 LC 78-161356

"Maltby traces the evolution of antihispanism in England between 1558 and 1660, documenting the . . . efforts of English propagandists to arouse public sentiment by exaggerating cases of Spanish duplicity, immorality, and cruelty. He demonstrates that hatred of Spain developed in close relation with historical events and succeeded in taking root because of religious, economic, political, and even racial antagonisms between the two nations. The result was the development of a 'black legend.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Black Legend is a loaded term; and Maltby's decision to adopt not only the term but also Juderías's thesis that there has been some sort of virulent anti-Hispanism present in the last four centuries of Western thought was an unfortunate one. It led him to oversimplify Tudor-Stuart conceptions about the Spaniard and to ignore the real ambivalence in the Englishman's attitude toward his enemy. . . . [It] also impels him to devote an inordinate amount of space to exposing the biases and inaccuracies of Tudor-Stuart writers without bothering to develop in any systematic or meaningful way the nature of the relationship he admits exists between these biases on the one hand and the Reformation and incipient nationalism on the other. . . . As a result, his study adds little to what is already known about the ideology behind the Protestant nationalism of England in this period." Carole Shammas

Am Hist R 77:785 Je '72 400w

"[The author] suggests that his study might provide a general understanding of how a villainous legend can develop. While these may be reasonable aims, Maltby's assumptions are often questionable. Anti-hispanic feeling in Britain today may owe more to Franco and less to Philip II than Maltby suggests. In his comparisons of Tudor and Stuart England with 16th- and 17-century Spain, Maltby makes doubtful judgments."

Choice 9:122 Mr '72 190w

"This [is a] penetrating study. . . . The myth of Spanish barbarism became part of the intellectual baggage of Western man. Though a product of history, the myth had no basis in fact; and though patently absurd, it is still a powerful force in the indictment of an entire culture. Well-written and authoritative, [this account] is highly recommended for large collections." W. W. MacDonald

Library J 96:4092 D 15 '71 150w

MALTZ, ALBERT. Afternoon in the jungle: the selected short stories of Albert Maltz. 218p $6.95 Liveright

SBN 87140-525-3 LC 74-131272

"One of the 'Hollywood Ten' sentenced to prison in 1947 and blacklisted by the film industry, Maltz signals here his return to the arena of the American short story. . . . 'Three of these nine stories were written in the last decade." (Library J)

"Maltz' stories are sentimental melodramas all. . . . [His] characters are the deprived, the downtrodden, the naïfs desperate for work. . . . Laying automatic claim to our sympathy, such victims of man's inhumanity to man make for Maltz easy work, work that, television-fashion, bears but a single reading, work that smacks of a Depression-age sensibility, work that evokes no better than what it gives, a stereotyped response: (sch) Maltz."

Choice 8:1330 D '71 180w

"On the basis of [his most recent stories] 'With Laughter' (1969), 'The Farmer's Dog' (1968), and 'The Cop' (1970) Maltz might better bask in the glory of his fine stories of the 1930's and 1940's, such gems as 'Man on a Road' (1935), 'The Happiest Man on Earth' (1938), and 'Afternoon in the Jungle' (1941). The title piece, worthy of wide anthologizing, is a brutal and powerful account of urban poverty in which a 13-year-old and a middle-aged bum struggle viciously to retrieve a coin lodged in a subway grille; it is a story of which any author could be proud. For most serious short fiction collections." C. R. Andrews

Library J 96:501 F 1 '71 130w

"Not one of these stories 'makes it new' or gives us more than a sense of somebody with good liberal feelings from the 'thirties. And don't knock them; we could use more. But they do not take the place of the 'shaping spirit of imagination.' They have nothing to do with the fate that gives to a writer 'the vision and the voice.' . . . Mr. Maltz has no personal view, no vision, only opinions and ideas, some of them good and they do him credit but they cannot give us that sense of 'felt life' which the art demands and which we demand of the art."

Louis Cox

New Repub 164:26 Ja 30 '71 300w

Reviewed by R. E. Lang

Sat R 54:43 My 1 '71 60w

MANCALL, MARK. Russia and China: their diplomatic relations to 1728. (Harvard Univ. East Asian res. center. Harvard East Asian ser, 61) 396p $12 Harvard univ. press

327.47 Russia—Foreign relations—China. China—Foreign relations—Russia. Siberia—Discovery and exploration
ISBN 0-674-78115-5 LC 71-85077

This study of the relations between the two countries ends in the first part of the 18th century. An epilogue seeks to "place later Russian and, indeed, Western relations in a new historical perspective. Mancall posits an explanation of why Sino-Western relations led to conflict in the 19th century, based on his belief that the West altered its basic assumptions regarding international relations." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This book has two merits. It is a superb, detailed study of Russo-Chinese relations in this early, more reasonable stage ending with the Treaty of Kiakhta, 1728. As such [it] stands alone and will remain the standard work on the period for a long time. Its second merit is the thoughtful epilogue. . . . This contribution and the bibliography alone are worth the price of the book. Highly recommended for all academic libraries."

Choice 8:1370 D '71 110w

Reviewed by C. M. Foust

Pacific Affairs 45:109 spring '72 800w

"There are a few debatable matters in this book. . . . [which is otherwise of] exceptional merit. . . . Mancall should be credited with a rich citation from contemporary documents. . . . Colorful personal details . . . embroider [his] main theme, which he sustains well. It is that when Muscovite and Manchu came into touch with each other along the Amur, what developed was a process of feeling-out. Each side . . . held back from head-on confrontation. . . . Mancall does us a service in reminding us today . . . that Russo-Chinese relations have a long history, in which change by gradual adaptation has been more important than eyeball-to-eyeball confrontation." Owen Lattimore

Pol Sci Q 87:145 Mr '72 700w

MANDEL, ERNEST. The formation of the economic thought of Karl Marx, 1843 to Capital; tr. by Brian Pearce. 223p $7.95 Monthly review 335.4 Economics. Marx, Karl
LC 71-142990

Mandel, a founder and editor of the left socialist weekly, La Gauche, provides a "study of the genesis and development of Marx's ideas on economics from the Economic and Philosophic Manuscripts of 1844 to the Grundrisse, a work, recently discovered, that preceded the publication of Das Kapital. . . . According to Mandel, Marx's revolutionism resided in his economic theories. . . . His ideas emerged as a synthesis of the English experience with Chartism and trade unionism, the revolutionary struggle for power in France, and the German contributions on the theory." (Library J) Bibliography. Originally published in France in 1967.

"A remarkable compression of both an exploration of the maturation of ideas on the part of Karl Marx himself and a survey of current theoretical revaluations of Marxian concepts: alienation; the labor theory of value; functionalism versus production relations; the periodicity of crisis; surplus value and monetary theory; wage theory and income distribution. Mandel . . . has produced in this slim volume the best possible introduction to advanced study in Marxist economic thought. . . . Pearce's translation does justice to the reputation of Mandel for lucidity of style, capacity for logical argumentation, and ability to comprehend the intellectual quality of the thought of other scholars. . . . Indispensable for library acquisition."

Choice 8:1486 Ja '72 190w

Reviewed by George Charney

Library J 96:2765 S 15 '71 290w

MANDEL, JEROME, ed. Medieval literature and folklore studies. See Medieval literature and folklore studies

MANDELBAUM, ALLEN, tr. The Aeneid of Virgil. See Virgil

MANDINO, OG. Cycles: the mysterious forces that trigger events. See Dewey, E. R.

MANE, ROBERT. Henry Adams on the road to Chartres. 288p $10 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

914.4 Adams, Henry—Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres
ISBN 0-674-38770-8 LC 74-154502

This "examination of Henry Adams' Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres [BRD 1914] embodies a . . . treatment of Adams' influences (both literary and biographical), scope, intention, and limitations. . . . [Mane presents an] analysis of Adams' chapters on architecture and literature and establishes . . . the irrelevance (in terms of the author's intention) of the charge that Adams' scholarship and metaphysics were flawed. Mane argues that the book's power 'comes from its imaginative and emotional unity.' . . . [He isolates] the influences (e.g. Harvard, the New England milieu, John La Farge and Brooks Adams, personal events, attachment to the South Seas) . . . that molded the emotions behind Adams' attraction to the Gothic." (Library J)

Reviewed by R. E. Spiller

Am Lit 44:496 N '72 850w

"Mane delicately balances and mixes his knowledge of medieval history, art, and literature with his awareness of American history and culture. . . . [His] style is quick and absorbing but not hasty."

Choice 9:370 My '72 160w

Reviewed by P. F. Boller

J Am Hist 59:163 Je '72 700w

"[Mandel] concludes that the [Adams'] book is more poetry than treatise or guidebook. Highly recommended." B. C. Bach
Library J 96:4014 D 1 '71 140w

"This book is a solid achievement. Mr. Mane . . . ranges easily from Adams to the Middle Ages and seems to have experienced firsthand every step of Adams' pilgrimage. His scholarship is thorough without being ponderous; the book is highly readable. . . . The lack of illustrations or diagrams in this book . . . is one of its few faults." J. W. Crowley

New Eng Q 45:292 Je '72 750w

"Adams is generally praised for his imaginative mastery of the period 1150-1250, but he simply did not see all there was to see in the buildings and the society of the French Middle Ages, and what he did see he often misinterpreted (or, as Professor Mane generously puts it, Adams freely rendered into

MANE, ROBERT—Continued

'poetry' and 'symbolism' any information that he did not particularly understand or desire). . . . [Adams] is not subjected to a debunking in Mane's lucid and fascinating narrative. Rather, he emerges as a man of literary skill and sensitivity, a bold American pathfinder in the new world that in the late nineteenth century was the Old."

Va Q R 48:lxii spring '72 130w

MANELI, MIECZYSLAW. War of the vanquished; tr. from the Polish by Maria de Gorgey. 228p $6.95 Harper 959.7 Vietnam—Politics and government.

Vietnamese Conflict, 1961-

SBN 06-012781-3 LC 77-123952

In his role of Polish diplomat in Vietnam from 1953-1954 and from 1963-1964, the author was sent to observe and relax the complex power struggle in that divided nation. He comments upon his experiences, political and sociological conditions, political leaders, and his personal hope for peace. Index.

"In chapter eleven, 'Prospects for a Peaceful Settlement,' [the author] delineates what he knows about various attempts to bring about peace that have surfaced during the conflict.

. . . The final chapter, 'The War of the Vanquished' is an excellent summary. The principal thesis of the book is presented here. Everyone involved has lost something. There may be some small gains for the Chinese, for socialism, and for communism, but there will be no winners. . . . [Maneli's] book contains much that is widely known, but, because of his unique involvement, there are many insights and many personal experiences that give an added dimension to his account. . . . The book is factual, but not dull. . . . [It] has been well translated." Edward Bartley

Best Sell 32:84 My 15 '72 500w

"Maneli's recollections of the North Vietnamese leadership contribute little information not available . . . elsewhere. Power implications of the war have been analyzed by Honey, D. S. Zagoria, and others. Maneli's treatment of the subject about which he is perhaps best qualified to report, the operations of the International Control Commission, is disappointingly sketchy."

Choice 9:562 Je '72 140w

"Maneli is a liberal, urbane gentleman who fought in the Polish underground during World War II, built a career as a jurist and teacher, and was recently exiled from Poland. . . . [His] book offers no great secrets or new analysis and consists mostly of reconstructed conversations with the likes of Pham Van Dong and Ngo Dinh Nhu. However, it successfully captures the ebb and flow of diplomatic discourse and the art of not saying anything at great length. Here are Russian stubbornness, American naiveté, Chinese didacticism, and Vietnamese guileful simplicity set out like dialogue in a Shaw play for an audience of students of international diplomacy." Collin Clark

Library J 96:3755 N 15 '71 170w

MANETTI, ANTONIO DI TUCCIO. The life of Brunelleschi; introd. notes, and critical text ed. by Howard Saalman; English tr. of the Italian text by Catherine Enggass. 176p il $12.50 Pa. state univ. press

B or 92 Brunelleschi, Filippo

ISBN 0-271-00075-9 LC 68-8183

This volume begins with an "analysis of the manuscript sources for the biography, a . . . presentation of the arguments regarding its authorship and date, and a . . . discussion of other problems related to the biography. The text follows, with an . . . English translation facing an . . . annotated edition of the Italian text based on the manuscript sources." (Choice) Translation of Vita di Filippo Ser Brunelleschi.

"[This edition] is a model of distinguished scholarship in each of its three major aspects, the establishment of a correct text, the translation and the introduction and notes. It is thus welcome not only for bringing the important life to readers unable to penetrate its difficult, casual Italian, but for offering the standard edition of the original, collating, as no previous version has, the principal, autograph ms Magliabecchiana II, II, 325 in the Biblioteca Nazionale in Florence with the ms originating in Pistoia and one not previously recorded in the Biblioteca Corsiniana in Rome.

. . . The excellent translation . . . follows the text closely, but manages to produce a decent flow of English in spite of the idiosyncrasies of the original. . . . I shouldn't be surprised to find Italian scholars consulting the English rendering to see what really was meant."

J. S. Ackerman

Art Bul 51:208 Je '72 750w

"This first biography of Brunelleschi edited by a leading American scholar of Italian Renaissance architecture deserves a place on the shelves of all public and university libraries. . . . A good index concludes this useful presentation of one of the most interesting and important documents in the history of Renaissance architecture. This edition not only makes the Italian text available to scholars and advanced students, but through the English translation [the work] has now been made available to the beginning student and general public."

Choice 7:1502 Ja '71 130w

MANGIONE, JERRE. The dream and the deal; the Federal Writers' project, 1935-1943. 416p il $12.50 Little

917.3 Federal Writers' Project

ISBN 0-316-54500-7 LC 75-187787

The former National Coordinating Editor of the Federal Writers' Project tells the story of its organization, politics, publications, and the people involved in its rise and fall. Bibliography.

"[Mangione] has made fascinating reading out of the mountainous material on this unique government project. . . . Those who remember the Great Depression will read [the book] with innumerable flashbacks; those who do not can read it for its penetrating insight into a period which still colors much of what Americans do and think. And women libbers can read it to see how, more than three decades ago, women played a uniquely major role in one of America's greatest public intellectual accomplishments. All of us can read of it as a warm and outstanding human achievement, whose worth has not lessened with time." J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 30 '72 750w

"Author of Reunion in Sicily [BRD 1950] and other works of nonfiction and fiction, Mangione here provides the first comprehensive treatment of the Federal Writers' Project—the initial attempt in this country at widespread federal sponsorship of the arts. . . . [He] details in depth the activities of the various state and city programs, especially those located in metropolitan areas such as New York, Chicago, Boston, and San Francisco, and treats, among other topics, the considerable contribution of the project to the development of black writers and its probing of the black's role in American history. Mangione captures the turbulence of the Thirties and provides a mine of anecdotes. For all libraries." L. W. Griffin

Library J 97:2734 S 1 '72 370w

"A defect of the book, though not a fatal one, is that Mangione hesitates to pronounce forthright opinions. He never gets angry when recounting the follies of the project or the malice of its enemies. Instead he adduces evidence in a scholar's fashion and quotes at length what other people have said. There are conclusions to be drawn from the story he tells and Mangione, though he suggests them all, does not lay enough stress on them. . . . It is an easy book to read, and the facts it presents are important to everyone even faintly interested in the relation between government and the arts." Malcolm Cowley

New Repub 167:23 O 21 '72 3100w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 80:119A S 25 '72 550w

MANGO, ANDREW. Discovering Turkey. 272p pl $7.95 Hastings house

915.61 Turkey

ISBN 8038-7111-2 LC 75-165460

After a "survey of the country's past, Dr Mango looks at the Turks today, their way of life, customs and traditions, religion, their culture and art and crafts. He then explores the various regions—European Turkey, Istanbul, the . . . coasts of Asia Minor, and the central heartland." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] is something more than a guide-book. . . . A very good specialized bibliography of recent publications on Turkey is geared to individual needs: introductions, histories, official booklets, or books on treasures, monuments, classical archaeology, etc. . . . [Mangol] writes with style and authority, having lived a great part of his life in Turkey. Recommended." Neva White

Library J 97:2094 Je 1 '72 100w

"The author knows his Turkey. He has already written a great deal on the subject. Excluding works of encyclopedic erudition, his latest book is among the best informed to have appeared in recent years. Most accounts of the country include as much 'picturesque material' as possible; but Mr Mango goes deeper, and for that reason his book is likely to prove of greater interest to the tourist. He is providing a guide, as the title indicates, and the book is arranged to assist the visitor throughout almost the entire country. . . . This is indeed a rich, useful compendium . . . [but] in a book which depends so much upon itineraries, there is no map."

TLS p455 Ap 21 '72 450w

MANIFOLD, LAURIE FRASER. The Christmas window; written and il. by Laurie Fraser Manifold. 44p $3.95; lib bdg $3.57 Houghton

Christmas stories
ISBN 0-395-12574-X; 0-395-12575-8 (lib bdg)
LC 72-155555

"When the stained glass window in the village church was broken in a windstorm just two days before Christmas, the [inhabitants of the medieval town] believed it an evil omen and their joy in the festival season was dissipated. . . . How the little monk clumsily repaired and then accidentally destroyed the window, and how a miracle was granted the village because he had tried so faithfully, climax the story." (Horn Bk) "Ages five to eight." (Publisher's note)

"The three-color line drawings . . . are pleasant accompaniments to an agreeable yuletide tale." S. B. A.

Horn Bk 47:599 D '71 170w

"[This book] combines a dull, wordy story with attractively drawn, clean-looking but static pictures in opaque, pink, green, brown and black. . . . All the villagers agree that no window could ever equal this one—an exceedingly unconvincing tribute." D. G. Starn

Library J 96:3486 O 15 '71 200w

Reviewed by Jane O'Reilly

N Y Times Bk R p90 D 5 '71 70w

"A flat story." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:45 D 11 '71 40w

MANKIEWICZ, HERBERT JACOB. The shooting script. See The Citizen Kane book

MANN, JIMMY. The hole truth. See Bolt, T.

MANNERS, ANDE. Poor cousins. 318p il $8.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

301.451 Jews in the U.S.
LC 74-166595

A "history of the 'other Jews' who streamed from Russian and Polish shtetls into America—to the consternation of their . . . co-religionists (the Yahudim), who had come over years before and were trying to be staunchly 'American.' . . . Mrs. Manners follows the mass migrations of, mainly, Orthodox non-German Jews from 'the Pale' to the . . . ghettos of the 'Promised Land.'" (Newsweek) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by V. J. Wathen

Best Sell 31:556 Mr 15 '72 360w

Reviewed by Robert Lasson

Book World p6 Ja 23 '72 550w

"What Stephen Birmingham started with Our crowd [BRD 1963], Manners carries on here with attention to Russian Jewish immigration and its impact on an already established American Jewry. . . . Birmingham's act is a hard one to follow but Manners has written an enjoyable and valuable work of popular social history. She writes well, in a clear and purposeful style salted—and only occasionally oversalted—with Yiddish humor. She makes no pretense at original scholarship but is familiar with the major titles in the field and includes a good, brief bibliography. This book will not replace such works as M. Rischin's The promised city (BRD 1962) and [Ronald] Sanders' The downtown Jews [BRD 1970] but it will be a serviceable introduction to the field."

Choice 9:573 Je '72 150w

Christian Century 89:150 F 2 '72 50w

Reviewed by H. M. Kapenstein

Library J 97:680 F 15 '72 100w

"By no means a work of heavy scholarship, [Mrs. Manners'] book is an engrossing chronicle of survival that became more than survival for these 'poor cousins' who enriched a new culture." S. K. Oberbeck

Newsweek 79:70 F 7 '72 700w

"Some of [the author's] most interesting chapters treat matters that the majority of readers will find new and intriguing—the Jewish agricultural colonies in the West and Southwest, for instance—but, unfortunately, Mrs. Manners tends to offer more in the way of flavor than of detail. Her breezy, frequently coy narrative suffers from a vagueness of focus, haphazardly jumping from theme to theme and often losing sight of the immigrants who are its ostensible subject. . . . Ande Manners is no historian and does not profess to be one. She is a storyteller, and Poor Cousins, for all its lack of intellectual depths, is a collection of lively stories, rich in uncomplicated incident, authentic background, and colorful personalities. Though hardly a complete or even a coherent account of the great immigration, it makes very good reading." R. J. Milch

Sat R 55:73 Ja 22 '72 600w

MANNES, MARYA, jt. auth. Uncoupling. See Sheresky, N.

MANNHEIM, KARL. From Karl Mannheim; ed. with an introd. by Kurt H. Wolff. 393p $12.50; pa $3.95 Oxford

301 Sociology

ISBN 0-19-501395-6 LC 74-139735

Following his flight from Germany "Mannheim contributed to the development of sociology as a field of university instruction in England. . . . The present selection from his writings covers both periods. . . . In his introduction of more than one hundred thirty pages . . . on Mannheim . . . [the editor] explains the origin, intention, and significance of each of Mannheim's major writings, including many not contained in this selection." (Am Pol Sci R) Bibliography. Index.

"The Introduction is the really new feature of the book. The author discusses Mannheim's major writings in chronological order, inserting in some instances long passages from papers not included in the Reader. The arrangement may seem rather dull at first glance, but it is not, for Wolff uses it to demonstrate the development of Mannheim's thinking. . . . [Mannheim's] essays on 'Conservative Thought' and on 'Democratization of Culture,' are likely to be of major interest to political scientists, as would also be the essay on 'The Problem of Generations' which is not included in the readings but is summarized in the Introduction. . . . Wolff's Introduction is a profound . . . critical piece of what may be called intellectual biography. It [is] . . . not for readers who are unfamiliar with the problems of epistemology and sociology of knowledge." Rudolf Heberle

Am Pol Sci R 66:1022 S '72 600w

Va Q R 48:lxvii spring '72 80w

MANNING, MAURICE. The blueshirts. 276p il Can$8.50 Univ. of Toronto press

941.5 Ireland—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8020-1787-8 LC 71-163832

"The blue shirt first appeared in Irish politics in April, 1933, when it was adopted as the official uniform of the already existing Army Comrades Association. . . . Mr Manning considers whether the Blueshirts could be called fascists, and [seeks to] show that for many people the movement was in no sense a fascist as by their quality. . . . But he has left out whatever it is that translates little losers like Harry Goth into great fictional characters." Geoffrey Wolff

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 23 '72 800w
New Yorker 48:180 Ap 8 '72 70w

"Mano is one of our most exciting younger writers. His talent is kinetic, striking light in unlikely darkneses, but still undisciplined. In this novel, for the first time, Mano makes a major mistake; the Christianity presents neither a compelling alternative to, nor an interesting redemption of, the hideousness of the graceless lives that Mano has always described so well. The vectors in this story do not converge. I think Mano allows himself to be distracted by his own skill: he exults in setting himself technical problems that he solves with a flourish . . . but the solutions are not efficiently incorporated into a strong over-all design. . . . A miss for Mano this time, but like most misses by really good authors, it makes better reading than most bland successes." P. S. P.

Newsweek 79:112 Mr 27 '72 300w

Reviewed by B. H. Leeds

Sat R 55:58 Jl 15 '72 490w

MAN'S impact on the global environment; assessment and recommendations for action; report of the Study of critical environmental problems. 319p $12.50; pa $2.95 MIT press

301.31 Ecology. Man—Influence on nature
ISBN 0-262-63027-6 (pa) LC 74-139447

A report of a conference sponsored by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which was held to make preliminary studies for the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment. "The reports and recommendations of seven working groups are presented, on climatic effects, ecological effects, monitoring, implications of change, industrial products and pollutants, domestic and agricultural wastes, and . . . energy products." (TLS) Bibliographies.

"In July, 1970, a distinguished group of American academics, industrialists, scientists and politicians got together to discuss critical global environmental problems. . . . The M.I.T. Press has now, in some haste, produced a volume summarizing their discussions and conclusions. The conference was intended to lead to action, hence the haste, but the resultant book, while packed with valuable material, shows a certain disregard for the reader. . . . [The] varying format and depth [of the reports] make it difficult to use this as a source-book. . . . Many clear recommendations are proposed, and on the evidence presented we must hope that they are put into effect soon, in particular those concerning monitoring."

TLS p673 Je 11 '71 250w

Va Q R 48:126 winter '72 310w

MANSFIELD, PETER. The British in Egypt. 351p il $8.95 Holt

962 Egypt—History. British in Egypt
ISBN 0-03-066435-7 LC 73-155523

This is an account of how the "British forces landed in Egypt in 1882 to put down an armed rebellion against the then-ruling Tewfik Pasha, maintain order and . . . ensure contact with the rest of the Empire via the Suez Canal. The British stayed for three-quarters of a century. . . . [This is] the story of their rule. . . . Lord Cromer, 'Chinese' Gordon, Kitchener, the Mahdi, Farouk, Nasser, and Eden are among the many . . . men [discussed in this work]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"As imperialists go, the British in Egypt were neither brutal nor greedy. But they were often fantastically arrogant. The contempt some displayed for Egyptians and its embittering effect at the time on Anglo-Egyptian relations is a recurring theme in Mr Mansfield's book. . . . [He] describes with great clarity the three-cornered struggle between the nationalist movement, the British raj and the would-be autocratic but going-to-seed Egyptian monarchy. His comments are always fair-minded and his knowledge of the country and language give depth and authority to both the historical narrative and the descriptions of Cairo life. But he has perhaps overfished the pool of contemporary memoirs that reflect the more wounding side of British behaviour."

Economist 241:64 D 4 '71 380w

"This popular account, although based on a rather narrow range of printed sources, provides useful insight into the seeds of Egyptian nationalism and into an important chapter in the history of the British imperial experience." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:1432 Ap 15 '72 90w

"[The author tells his] extraordinary story well; if the style is inclined to be flat, it points up the eccentricities and irregularities of the characters and events involved. In the last chapter, which he has called 'Two Nations,' he fairly lashes out." Geoffrey McDermott

New Statesman 82:931 D 31 '71 650w

"About half of The British in Egypt is devoted to the Cromer era, and rightly so, for it was during the twenty-five years of his authority that British attitudes to the economics, the politics, and the people of Egypt were forged so effectively that they survived into the 1950s. . . . The history of the British in Egypt is so well documented that no one can now add much to the story, but Mr Mansfield has extracted from it threads of meaning that are valuable to the expert and the general reader. His account finishes with the Suez invasion of 1956."

TLS p56 Ja 21 '72 800w

MANSO, PETER, jt. auth. Faster! See Stewart, J.

MANUSHKIN, FRAN. Baby; pictures by Ronald Himler. unp $3.50; lib bdg $3.27 Harper

ISBN 06-024061-X; 06-024062-8 (lib bdg)
LC 78-183159

"'I don't want to be born. . . . and I won't come out,' said the baby. . . . Mrs. Tracy, who was 'growing a baby,' fed it; talked to it; painted pictures for it; was, in fact, so good to it that her baby saw no advantages in leaving. Baby was talked to, entreated, and cajoled by every member of her family but she refused to budge from her vantage place . . . until Daddy came home with a kiss for everyone—and Baby couldn't feel hers. 'I don't feel anything,' said Baby. 'No, not yet,' said Daddy. 'But you will when you come out.' 'HERE I COME!' yelled Baby." (Horn Bk) "Ages five to eight." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Sidney Long

Book World p6 (children's issue) My 7 '72 120w

"[This story] is derived from the not-so-ridiculous premise that—if given a choice—a baby might refuse to be born. . . . The pen-and-ink drawings . . . have an old-fashioned delicate air just right for the funny-tender mood of the story. A special book for mothers-to-be to share with their other children." S. D. L.

Horn Bk 48:261 Je '72 160w

Reviewed by Janet French

Library J 97:2478 Jl '72 210w

"[The unborn child is] a kind of updated, sophisticated version of the Kewpie that used to delight readers of ladies magazines in the 1920's. . . . [Baby] is visible in utero striking various mischievous poses as mother goes about her daily affairs. . . . This interesting Freudian variation on Prince Charming-Siegfried awakening Sleeping Beauty-Brunhilde ends happily, with Baby growing up in the midst of a family where everybody from grandparents down do nothing but kiss, because they all love each other so much." Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk ■ pt 2, p32 My 7 '72 160w

"No children will ever learn the facts of life from this story, nor will it assuage the de-thronement pangs of a child who just acquired a baby brother or sister. But Baby just may amuse the lap-sitter who can appreciate the silliness and tenderness of a fanciful tale in which an unborn child is capriciously resisting the blandishments of the entire family." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:110 Mr 25 '72 110w

MANVELL, ROGER, jt. auth. Art in movement: new directions in animation. See Halas, J.

MANVELL, ROGER, ed. The international encyclopedia of film. See The international encyclopedia of film

MANVELL, ROGER. Shakespeare and the film. 172p pl $10 Praeger

822.3 Shakespeare, William. Moving pictures
LC 70-159966

A former director of the British Film Academy "examines the major films adapted from Shakespeare's plays during the period of the sound-film. These range from earliest attempts at adaptation—such as the Douglas Fairbanks-Mary Pickford The Taming of the Shrew, the Reinhardt-Dieterle production of A Midsummer Night's Dream, and the pioneer work of Laurence Olivier—to the . . . recent achievements of Orson Welles, Sergei Yutkevitch and Grigori Kozintsev in the Soviet Union, Akira Kurosawa in Japan, and Peter Brook in Britain. . . . Manvell discusses the degree to which Shakespeare's original intentions can be conveyed, as in the work of Kozintsev and Kurosawa, by substituting the heightened atmosphere of film and its visual imagery for the poetic imagery of the verse." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has assembled some interesting information of a very heterogeneous nature: reminiscences by the film-makers themselves, financial details of production, studio gossip, references to specialist books and articles, and cast-lists for the 25 film versions of Shakespeare made since the advent of sound. . . . Where the book is weak is in its critical commentary. . . . The dearth of close analysis and of stringent evaluative comment makes for an unsatisfactory book. . . . The difficulties of writing a genuinely critical study of filmed Shakespeare are considerable. The author needs to be a good Shakespearean as well as a technically well-informed film man, Dr. Manvell is certainly the second, but the innocence of his comments on Shakespeare suggest that he does not hold the first qualification."

Economist 241:67 O 16 '71 400w

"[This book] makes no pretense to scholarship, but is a lucid and entertaining discussion. . . . Incorporating in his text interviews with directors and parts of various shooting scripts, the author describes the difficulties of making Shakespeare's poetic language and his sometimes cumbersome plots work effectively on the screen. . . . If I must find fault with this otherwise distinguished book, I wish Manvell had added more material to the rather inadequate chapter on Castellani and Zeffirelli." Henry Halpern

Library J 97:1824 My 15 '72 210w

Reviewed by Richmond Crinkley

Nat R 24:649 Je 9 '72 1200w

Va Q R 48:clvi autumn '72 190w

"[The] book is a laudable compendium of hard information, telling analysis, and memorable anecdote, extensively illustrated with photographs and designs from the production cited. . . . [It] is a volume which can be read with equal profit by film buffs, Shakespearean scholars, and tyros of both persuasions."

Yale R 62:XX O '72 1550w

MAO, TSE-TUNG. The poems of Mao Tse-tung; tr, introd, notes by Willis Barnstone; in collaboration with Ko Ching-Po. 149p il $4.95 Harper

895.1

SBN 06-010219-5

LC 72-75623

A bilingual collection of thirty-five poems, written in the period 1925-1963. Selected from the 1963 Peking edition, these poems "are expressions of the decades of struggle, of the . . . loss of [Mao's] first wife, of the hope for a new China, the organization of the Red Army, the 6,000-mile Long March, the ultimate victory over the Nationalist forces." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Mao's poems are not of the introspective, emotional, private and obscure type that characterizes modern Western poetry. They are public poems, cool and clear. They arise from particular events in Mao's professional life. And though they may include a personal element, that element is always subordinated to the public concerns involved. . . . Many of his poems deal with his quarter-century of military struggle against the old warlords, the Kuomintang, and the Japanese. These military poems are full of heroic optimism and fortitude, noble soldiers and waving red banners; they send chills down the spine. . . . They provide interesting insights into Mao for us and—surely unnerving reading for President Nixon." J. D. O'Hara

Book World p9 My 7 '72 650w

"The man who, almost single-handed, dragged China into the twentieth century, is a poet. Respectable. Traditional. Allusive. A student of the 'Four Classics.' Steadfastly conventional. The Chairman's poems possess the kind of interest we suspect Hannibal's poems would have if he had chosen to versify his crossing of the Alps. . . . Mao Tse-tung's poems have been translated as nearly word-for-word as possible. . . . Mr. Barnstone's introduction and notes are especially interesting for their sidelong looks at the Chairman-Poet." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ap 13 '72 330w

Reviewed by M. S. Cosgrave

Horn Bk 48:494 O '72 400w

Reviewed by B. W. Fuson

Library J 97:2189 Je 15 '72 160w

"This volume has a distinctly entrepreneurial air about it, but it is well done, with the Chinese ideographs on the left and their wholly dissimilar English equivalents on the right. Presumably we must look to the root differences between these languages for explanation of that fascinating mystery for the Western mind: how a political revolutionary can combine business with peach blossoms. . . . We have no near precedents to help us to an understanding of Mao when he plays poet. Is it, as it would be with us, an after-hours diversion?—clearly not, for the revolutionary message is continuous and strong. Yet the message is like no message the Western political mind, of any stripe, would imagine issuing as political message."

New Repub 166:29 Ap 15 '72 400w

"[This] literate, annotated, and handsomely printed version by Barnstone, a poet, translator of Spanish and Greek verse, and professor of comparative literature at Indiana University [has flaws]. . . . The apparatus of the book contains multiple errors. . . . And to his countless minor mistakes, [Barnstone] adds a penchant for the forcible-feeble divagation. . . . For the devotee of poetry, Barnstone gives an inadequate picture of the stripped-down intensity of Mao's imagic thought; nor is he accurate enough to help those studious readers for whom the footnotes must be meant." David Lattimore

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ag 13 '72 2100w

Va Q R 48:cxxv autumn '72 100w

MARAINI, FOSCO. Japan: patterns of continuity. 240p col il $15 Kodansha

915.2 Japan—Civilization

ISBN 0-87011-106-X LC 76-107610

The author seeks to show that beneath the chaotic surface of modern Japan lies a "continuity that is the source of Japan's vitality. . . . As he explores the origins of the Japanese people and traces the influences of the . . . religions of Japan, the . . . sinews of the civilization are exposed, and it is through this deeper comprehension that the contradictions of twentieth-century Japan become . . . reasonable. . . . The parallels and correspondences that are suggested in the text are substantiated in . . . photographs that the author has taken in all parts of Japan over the last fifteen years." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Maraini first came to Japan some 30 years ago as a student from his native Florence. The style will not satisfy those who want a careful, systematic treatment of Japanese culture. [The author], primarily through brilliant photography, attempts to construct a collage of themes which pictorially illustrate the admittedly indescribable flavor and spirit of a uniquely Japanese life-style."

Choice 9:264 Ap '72 80w

"The author of the excellent Meeting with Japan [BRD 1960] interprets modern Japan in terms of its religion, art, people, etc. in a book containing over 300 splendid color plates. . . . [Maraini] believes that the modern Japanese are deeply rooted in their history and that historical forces, including the victory of Shintoism over Buddhism, have permitted the Japanese to adapt themselves to the circumstances of the crowded, communal, materialistic civilization of today better than Westerners have. A beautiful and scholarly work in which the thesis is supported by admirably selected and lovely photographs." Muriel Weins

Library J 97:895 Mr 1 '72 90w

MARAMBAUD, PIERRE. William Byrd of Westover, 1674-1744. 297p il $12.50 Univ. press of Va.

B or 92 Byrd, William
ISBN 0-8139-0346-7 LC 70-151251

This is a "study of Byrd and his times. Following a brief biographical part . . . [which deals with] Byrd's personality, Part II aims at an assessment of the man of letters in his various activities. . . . Part III treats the picture of colonial Virginia in the early eighteenth century that emerges from Byrd's works." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"Richmond C. Beatty's William Byrd of Westover [BRD 1932] was published almost forty years ago, and since then three volumes of Byrd's diary, his commonplace book, and many letterbooks and individual epistles have come to light. A new study of the colonial South's most distinguished men of letters has been long overdue. Now we are fortunate in having a comprehensive survey employing most of the new materials by an able scholar who has written with a certain interested detachment. . . . The list of published Byrd letters and the location of their originals given in the bibliographical appendix is most useful, for the printed versions are garbled and fragmentary. . . . Never before has so much material and commonsense, understanding appraisal of available materials on William Byrd been brought together in one book." R. B. Davis

Am Lit 43:655 Ja '72 900w

"The third part [of this book] is the longest and the most important for anyone interested in American colonial history. . . . Most studies of 18th-century Virginia aristocracy deal with the Revolutionary generation, such as those of Clifford Dowdey, Jack Greene, and Louis Morton, which makes this study of an earlier transitional period all the more important. . . . Highly recommended for college and general libraries."

Choice 8:1638 F '72 160w

"Were [this book] but half as good as it is, one would still call it a major contribution to Early American literary scholarship. . . . What struck me as most significant . . . is its point of view: the author sees his subject with the fresh and unprejudiced perspectives of an outsider, a European whose 'aesthetic distance' from American writing gives him unique vantage points. . . . He has painstakingly assembled all of the pertinent information about Byrd, although he has added very little that has been unavailable in his myriad printed sources. In effect, he presents us with a new and marvelous enumerative compilation rather than with a new synthesis of his information. There is, in a word, less critical interpretation here than many readers will desire." C. R. Dolmetsch

Va Q R 48:145 winter '72 1350w

MARBUT, F. B. News from the capital; the story of Washington reporting; foreword by Howard Rusk Long. (New horizons in journalism) 304p pl $12.50 Southern Ill. univ. press

070.4 Journalism. Government and the press
ISBN 0-8093-0495-3 LC 76-132484

"This book traces the evolution of press-governmental relations in the national capital from their earliest days to the present." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The Washington press corps has been analyzed from many standpoints. . . . Professor Marbut has added a new dimension to the analysis by providing a history of the formation of the corps and its functioning in relationship to the federal government. . . . [He] is most effective in dealing with . . . the first half [of the nineteenth century] in Washington, D.C. Here he demonstrates able research and clear understanding of the roll of a press closely tied to the political parties of the nation. . . . The period after 1850 is not at all approached with the same thoroughness of research and understanding. Most of it . . . resorts to anecdotal description. . . . [Yet] Professor Marbut has added important information for both the study of communications and of government." W. E. Ames

Ann Am Acad 403:202 S '72 330w

"[This book] is almost exclusively a descriptive rather than an analytical history, and the topic demands both approaches. . . . Marbut refers to the issues generated by such current controversies as 'The Selling of the Pentagon, and the publishing of the Pentagon Papers. He discusses earlier cases of a similar kind, but he makes no effort to connect them. . . . The book is not without value. There is a good deal of interesting information contained in it." G. L. Seligmann

J Am Hist 59:485 S '72 310w

MARCHAM, FREDERICK GEORGE, ed. Louis Agassiz Fuertes & the singular beauty of birds. See Fuertes, L. A.

MARCHANT, LESLIE RONALD, ed. Siege of the Peking legations. See Giles, L.

MARCUS, JACOB R. The colonial American Jew, 1492-1776. 3v 1650p $45 Wayne state univ. press

917.3 Jews in the U.S.—History. Jews in Latin America—History
SBN 8143-1403-1 LC 69-15467

In this survey of Jews and Jewish life the author, a professor of Jewish history, "studies their settlements, their legal and political status, their varied economic endeavors, their religious and communal organizations, their social and intellectual life, and their participation in the larger American community. Proceeding this study is a lengthy survey of the Jews in the West Indies and the crypto-Jews on the Spanish and Portuguese American mainland during the period." (Library J) Annotated bibliography and Index in volume three.

Reviewed by S. V. James

Am Hist R 76:1585 D '71 480w

Choice 8:469 My '71 160w

Reviewed by Robert Middlekauff

J Am Hist 58:712 D '71 1400w

"This monumental work, based on painstaking research in the vast stores of manuscript material in numerous American and European archives, as well as on nearly all printed material available, gives detailed consideration to every facet of the life of Colonial American Jews from their first arrival until the birth of the new nation. . . . Following the narrative is a review of the published works dealing with the subject and nearly 200 pages of scholarly notes. By far the most authoritative study on the subject to date, the work . . . is no less important for the general American historian than it is for the student of American Jewry. Written with urbanity and verve, [it] is highly recommended for college classes and for the enjoyment of the layman interested in America's colonial past." M. A. Cohen

Library J 96:1363 Ap 15 '71 210w

"[The author] is possibly the most distinguished scholar of Judaica in the United States today, and his new three-volume work represents a distillation of all his previous studies. It is a massive and massively informative book, and is much more than its title [suggests]. . . . This is a book not so much to be read as to be consulted. Which is not to say that Dr. Marcus does not write gracefully or readably; his history is delightfully undusty . . . and so inspiring that it is never boring. But its encyclopedic nature makes this a work to dip about in, and fortunately Dr. Marcus has organized his material under chapter, subchapter, and topic headings in such a fashion as to make this easy to do. . . . There is a fascinating section on Jewish life in Spain and Portugal in the Middle Ages, which ~~will~~ something of a golden age for Jews. . . . [The] work is copiously illustrated, properly annotated and keyed, and splendidly indexed." Stephen Birmingham

Sat R 54:30 Mr 6 '71 650w

MARCUS, ROBERT D. Grand old party; political structure in the gilded age, 1880-1896. 323p $7.95 Oxford

329.6 Republican party—History
LC 70-127175

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by H. J. Bass

Am Hist R 77:213 F '72 650w

Reviewed by H. D. Price

Am Pol Sci R 66:210 Mr '72 240w

TLS p410 Ap 14 '72 750w

MARCUSE, HERBERT. Counterrevolution and revolt. 138p $7.50 Beacon press

301.6 Revolutions. Radicals and radicalism. Power (Social sciences) LC 79-179150
ISBN 0-8070-1532-6

"Marcuse brings together aesthetics, the study of nature, and the prospects of world revolution." (Christian Century)

Reviewed by R. P. Burns
America 126:638 Je 17 '72 800w

"In this work, Marcuse . . . has indicated victory for the counter-revolutionary force, the Establishment. But his analysis rightly leads him to the conclusion that this victory is at best temporary. . . . Marcuse's analysis is very careful, and if one agrees with his presuppositions . . . then he should certainly comply with his argumentation and conclusions. Either there is radical disagreement, or no disagreement at all. This work is of great current interest for philosophers, historians, and political scientists. It is in part rather technical." R. C. Morlino

Best Sell 32:136 Je 15 '72 650w

Choice 9:1355 D '72 120w

"Not quite in the middle of things as he was three or four years ago, Marcuse still merits reading as the doughty old man of the New Left."

Christian Century 89:523 My 3 '72 50w

"Not only is there no revolution in the offing, [the author] says, but 'the final crisis of capitalism' may be a century away. . . . It is always difficult to fault Dr. Marcuse's arguments because he usually controls the definitions of the words he uses. Thus when he talks about socialism, he ignores the anti-Soviet revolutions in East Germany, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland, the imperialist seizure of Tibet, the suppression of Cuban and Russian intellectuals. Evil is absolute and total on one side only. On the 'socialist' side, evil is merely a rather unfortunate aberration from the true path. . . . Civil liberties do not strengthen a country's defenses against totalitarianism, according to Dr. Marcuse, they only succeed in bringing fascism about. Let's not worry, however, it's all a century away." Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 31 '72 500w

"Marcuse's new book treats both sides of the New Left—its politics and its culture. Politically, Marcuse revamps his earlier pessimism by drafting French theories of the new working class (Gorz and Mallet) as a potentially revolutionary force onto his analysis in One Dimensional Man [BRD 1964]. More interesting is his reconsideration of the cultural revolution: it still presents needs that are radical, but it does so in a one-dimensional, desublimated form. . . . [His] new aesthetic diverges from his Marxist past." Mark Poster

Library J 97:1441 Ap 15 '72 220w

Reviewed by Anthony Arblaster
New Statesman 84:948 D 22 '72 850w

Reviewed by B. M. Berger
N Y Times Bk R p3 J1 9 '72 1500w

"While Marcuse asserts that capitalism will be destroyed by the needs it has created but cannot satisfy, he offers little to explain how the revolution is to come about. . . . [Moreover,] American capitalist society . . . is more resilient and absorbent than [he] admits. . . . Finally, I would like to comment briefly on Marcuse's style. Too often, the relation between his thought and his written English is like that between a horse and a hurdle. Sentences such as the following betray a mind irremediably circumscribed for German syntax: 'Regressive are, not the emotions of the working class family, but the idea to make them into a standard for authentic radical and socialist literature.' [This book] consists mainly of lectures delivered at Princeton and the New School for Social Research." Sanche de Gramont

Sat R 55:58 Je 3 '72 1300w

Reviewed by Daniel Yergin
Yale R 62:147 O '72 550w

MARDER, ARTHUR J. From the dreadnought to Scapa Flow; the Royal navy in the Fisher era, 1904-1919; 5v; v5. Victory and aftermath (January 1918-June 1919). 416p il pl maps col maps $12 Oxford

359.0942 Great Britain. Royal Navy—History. Fisher, John Arbuthnot Fisher, 1st Baron. European War, 1914-1918—Naval operations
SBN 19-215187-8 LC (61-19563)

"In this concluding volume of his . . . series the Royal Navy in the Fisher era, Professor Marder has to handle three different themes: the triumphant conclusion of the war at sea; the readjustment of the navy from war to peace; and a summary . . . of the five volumes of this series." (Am Hist R) Bibliography to all five volumes. For volumes two, three and four see BRD 1966, 1967 and 1970, respectively.

"[In the last] of his magisterial series . . . [Professor Marder provides not only a summary of the series] but of a scholarly lifetime devoted to the senior service. All [his themes] are handled with the precision, clarity, and careful analysis that have marked the preceding volumes. . . . Marder's conclusions about the Royal Navy in the Fisher era lead the reader to reflect on Marder's achievement. It is not very likely to be bettered or supplanted for a long time to come." Raymond Callahan

Am Hist R 77:794 Je '72 1150w

"There is not a single important naval document or comment of this period, one suspects, that Professor Marder has failed to examine and to fix its relationship to all the other pieces of evidence. To his inquisitiveness, Professor Marder adds a love of his subject, an analytical turn of mind and a firm but easy-flowing power of narration. . . . [He] is never sparing of judgment on men and events. He appears, indeed, to live on the most intimate terms with them and is able to communicate that fair-minded but critical intimacy to his readers. He has produced a rarity—an indispensable piece of naval history that will influence all those that come after it. In historical, but not conceptual, terms Marder may well loom, like some Dreadnought in the grey mists of the North Sea, as large as Mahan."

Economist 235:53 Je 20 '70 400w

"[In this five-volume work Marder] has written a definitive account of the policies which governed the Navy's development from the conception of the Dreadnought to the formation of the Grand Fleet in 1914. To this he has added an exhaustive analysis of the naval war, and judgments on men and events which combine sympathetic understanding with intellectual rigour. . . . In this volume, after narrating the closing stages of the war, he gives his considered reflections on the whole subject, as well as a guide to the copious sources he has used, which is a model of sound scholarship. It seems unlikely that any new material will emerge to challenge his major facts or conclusions. . . . With the same high standard of charts and illustrations as its predecessors, this volume offers a full and critical guide to the vast array of published and unpublished sources for the whole period. Future students of the Royal Navy of the Fisher era will find it indispensable."

TLS p905 Ag 14 '70 1200w

MARDOCK, ROBERT WINSTON. The reformers and the American Indian. 245p $5 Univ. of Mo. press

970.5 Indians of North America—Government relations. Indians of North America—Economic conditions. Indians of North America—Social conditions
ISBN 0-8262-0090-7 LC 79-113815

The author "writes of the Grant era and the 'peace policy' favored by Grant and the reformers, including many former abolitionists whose emphasis had shifted to the native American." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The Indian policy of the Grant era is treated objectively. . . . Recommended for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 8:1243 N '71 220w

"This volume does not change the interpretation of how Indian policy was reformed in the post-Civil War period, but it does modify generalizations, supplement knowledge, and provide new dimensions of understanding. . . . An important contribution to knowledge is made by elucidating reform activity in Congress and by presenting the positions taken on critical issues by members of committees on Indian affairs and by important newspapers and periodicals. . . . [Still Mardock] is likely too generous in depicting Grant as being independently zealous for the reform of Indian administration." H. E. Fritz

J Am Hist 58:1023 Mr '72 750w

"Building on the work of Loring Benson Priest and Henry E. Fritz, Mardock concentrates on the role of the reformer in the post-Civil War years. Working the newspaper files more thoroughly than did his predecessors, but paying less attention to the voluminous materials in the National Archives and failing completely to consult the files of the Indian Rights Association, he substantiates their conclusion that reformers like John Beeson, Thomas H. Tibbles, and Herbert Welsh did make a contribution to the improvement of Indian policy. Libraries having works by both Priest and Fritz could dispense with this volume." W. T. Hagan

Library J 96:2314 J1 '71 150w

MAREK, GEORGE R. Gentle genius; the story of Felix Mendelssohn. 365p il $10 Funk B or 92 Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, Felix
LC 72-184003

The author of Beethoven: Biography of a Genius (BRD 1969) "explores Mendelssohn's little-known private side, which in his lifetime was well-concealed by his public mask of contained amiability. Marek shows him to be a . . . complex person, substantiating this view by drawing on facts overlooked or lightly regarded by earlier biographers. He analyzes Mendelssohn in terms of his family heritage, his talent, the cultural milieu to which he responded with behavior often calculated to mask his true individuality." (Publishers' Weekly) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"While [Herbert] Kupferberg gives [in The Mendelssohns (BRD 1972)] almost equal weight to Mendelssohn's grandfather and father, Marek digs rather deeper into Felix's own character and times. Neither biography is so well-written as single-handedly to create an interest in Mendelssohn where none existed before. Marek is capable of such mixed clichés as 'But paying the piper—there was the rub,' and of some pretty soggy generalizations about Victorian culture, but his is marginally the more informative treatment of a rare but somehow limited musical genius." Richard Freedman

Book World p10 Ap 16 '72 400w

"An excellent sociological document about the Mendelssohn family . . . [and its relation] to the times and a picture of the hostilities and difficulties which faced Jews then. We do not actually meet Felix until chapter 5. The high spots of his life and career are covered, and there are also chapters on Mendelssohn as traveler, conductor, etc. Throughout, the text is illuminated by a good selection from his letters. The author writes interestingly and provides a stimulating appreciation of Mendelssohn and his times. But Mendelssohn's music is scarcely discussed, except in passing, and then only in the most superficial way. The final four-page survey of the composer's music is a distinct letdown." William Shank
Library J 97:1017 Mr 15 '72 130w

MARETT, ROBERT. Mexico. 208p il $7.50
Walker & co.

917.2 Mexico
ISBN 0-8027-2124-9 LC 72-142855

A survey "of the social, economic, political, and cultural environment in modern Mexico with an emphasis on historical development in these areas." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[Marett has written] a compact synthesis for the tourist, businessman, undergraduate studying Mexican history and civilization, or anyone interested in a concise yet fully integrated work based on solid factual data. Faults center around some important points omitted. The sections dealing with student rebellions (quickly dismissed as 'youthful energy,' leftist, or right-wing military opposition to the dominant P.R.I.) do not explain the nature of the differences nor the alternative programs advocated. . . . However, the book is more than adequate in giving essential facts about circumstances in contemporary Mexico. The 'Who's who' section is helpful as is the bibliography which cites standard and recent scholarship in the field."

Choice 8:1634 F '72 180w

"[This book] is written in a lively personal style and breathes Sir Robert's own love for the country where he has spent a good part of his life (including a time when he had an interest in an almost inaccessible silver mine). His account of modern Mexican life is particularly interesting, and based on wide reading, knowledge and personal experience. It is sad that he should subscribe to facile modern dogmas about economic development, and should have written of poor Indian peasants on the land, however picturesque, as 'a national liability from any progressive point of view'."

TLS p62 Ja 21 '72 100w

MARIAS, JULIAN. America in the fifties and sixties: Julián Marias on the United States; tr. from the Spanish by Blanche De Puy and Harold C. Raley; ed. and with an introd. by Michael Aaron Rockland. 444p $12.50 Pa. state univ. press

917.3 U.S.—Civilization
ISBN 0-271-00556-4 LC 77-157770

To this volume consisting of two of his previously published works, the author has added a third part, Epilogue: The United States in 1970. The fifties originally was published as Los Estados Unidos en escorzo (1956) and The sixties as Analisis de Los Estados Unidos (1968).

"Some 85 journalistic pieces written for Spanish readers by the philosopher Julián Marias during several tours as visiting professor at Wellesley, Harvard, Berkeley, and Yale. The themes are broad, the treatment general. Specific events or individuals rarely appear. Aside from the major categories 'The Fifties' and 'The Sixties,' the essays are undated. From the American perspective, Marias at times belabors the obvious, at times generalizes erroneously from a few affluent suburbs and a few elite schools, and at times simply indulges his own preconceptions. . . . (Marias) seems driven to combat the menace of 'anti-Americanism' wherever it rears its head."

Choice 9:1168 N '72 180w

"This book can be read with considerable pleasure and recommended with a few important reservations. . . . What interests [Marias is] . . . not politics and social problems, but the texture of American life. On this he is very good. . . . There are certain aspects of life in the United States that completely elude him. Marias cannot take American poverty seriously, though he tries. Similarly, his view of blacks is good natured but about fifty years out of date. . . . His remarks on American women are incomprehensible. . . . What he offers is the classical vision of this country as opulent, generous, and well intentioned. . . . [In the end] the book fails to give a balanced view of our complex civilization. Yet it fails so pleasingly and is so gracefully written that it should be widely read all the same." W. L. O'Neill

J Am Hist 59:774 D '72 500w

"Marias presents insights comparable with Tocqueville's. The titles of his essays are appetizing, and one is not disappointed on reading them: 'Things, Death, and the Devil'; 'From Robinson Crusoe to Henry Ford and Back Again'; 'The Ballad of the Drugstore.' . . . Witty, meditative, and cheerful, [the author] is a humane philosopher a world apart from the logical positivists. His book holds so much for the common reader that it might exert a healthy popular influence for many readers—should many common readers learn of its existence and acquire copies. Published by a university press at a high price, however, it will be purchased chiefly by institutional libraries and lost in their stacks. . . . Of Europeans' recent surveys of American character and society, perhaps only Marias' book may be found truly interesting a century from now." Russell Kirk

Yale R 62:142 O '72 2250w

MARIAS, JULIAN. Philosophy as dramatic theory; tr. from the Spanish by James Parsons. 307p $9.95 Pa. state univ. press

196 Philosophy
ISBN 0-271-00100-3 LC 72-84669

These philosophical essays by the Spanish contemporary philosopher "were selected by him to illustrate for the English reading world his characteristic approach to philosophical issues. . . . [He] suggests that the collection as a whole represents a central thesis developed in the second essay which gives the book its name, Philosophy. [he says] betrays a dramatic structure. It is something that happens, that has a subject, that happens to somebody . . . [and] has its argumento or plot." (Choice)

"Each of the essays is a complete work in and of itself, and the topics covered range widely from physics to psychiatry, and from epistemology to religion. . . . Parsons' smooth translation is enhanced by footnotes in which the translator illuminates passages where a knowledge of Spanish nuances is essential for adequately understanding the text. The book can serve as a good introduction to Marias' work as well as to an important intellectual tradition which characterizes much of contemporary Continental thought."

MARIAS, JULIÁN—Continued

Choice 8:1336 D '71 200w

"Marias is not bound by contemporary intellectual fashions. For example, he takes Sartre to task for exaggeration in suggesting that man is nothing, has no essence, is only what he chooses to be—when the realities are simply that man is not a thing and has no essence in the sense that things do, that man chooses, but not everything, not his circumstances or his limits. Especially strong on the history of philosophy and rich with insights into the human condition, [this book] should appeal to both specialists and laymen." A. G. Mojtabal

Library J 96:2648 S 1 '71 150w

MARIAS AGUILERA, JULIAN. See Marias, J.

MARIATEGUI, JOSÉ CARLOS. Seven interpretive essays on Peruvian reality; tr. by Marjory Urquidí; introd. by Jorge Basadre. 301p $8.50 Univ. of Tex. press

918.5 Peru—Civilization

ISBN 0-292-70115-2

LC 73-156346

These essays were originally published in Spanish in 1928. In them, the author "analyzed the problems of the Indian, of land tenure, of public education, of the role of the Catholic Church, of regionalism vs. centralism, and added a critique of Peruvian literature." (Choice) Glossary. Index.

"[This] is one of the most important books in Peruvian letters, constituting a basic point of reference for historians, political scientists, sociologists, anthropologists, and all persons interested in Peruvian history and development. [It utilizes] a neo-Marxian approach. . . . [Mariategui's] conclusions have been adopted, rejected, or modified by almost every subsequent student of Peruvian affairs, thereby attesting to the work's importance. . . . Though lacking a bibliography, the work contains a useful glossary of Peruvian terms and a good index. Of inestimable value to undergraduates, graduates, and scholars alike."

Choice 8:1376 D '71 160w

"Mariategui was one of the most important Latin American social thinkers of the interwar period. When he died at age 35 in 1930 he left more than a dozen books, of which this is the most systematic and important. . . . He forced many Peruvians to reexamine the status quo. . . . Today many Peruvians—not all of the extreme Left—look upon him as their chief intellectual inspiration. This translation is acceptable, and carries an excellent biographical introduction by the eminent Peruvian historian Jorge Basadre." Mark Falcoff

Library J 96:3619 N 1 '71 260w

MARIJNISSEN, R. H., Jr. auth. Bruegel. See Seidel, M.

MARINE, GENE. Food pollution: the violation of our inner ecology; by Gene Marine, and Judith Van Allen. 385p $8.95 Holt

614 Food adulteration and inspection. Food industry and trade
ISBN 0-03-085070-3

LC 73-117266

The authors "describe the human body as a delicate ecosystem that has evolved over thousands of years in a precise relationship with its foods. They argue that our inner ecological balance is now being disturbed by the food industry and its 'mad scientists,' who put a multitude of additives into our foods. They allege that the Food and Drug Administration permits the use of these chemical additives (some of which may have carcinogenic, mutagenic, and/or teratogenic properties) because it is concerned with protecting food industry profits rather than the health of Americans, at least when the two are in conflict." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by M. K. Brush

J Home Econ 64:84 S '72 260w

"The authors have supplied numerous references to newspaper articles, books, and other sources to substantiate their timely arguments." M. S. Feider

Library J 97:510 F 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by Diane Rynne

Library J 97:1183 Mr 15 '72 170w [YA]

"[This] is a wild-swinging, muckraking job on the food industry, the F.D.A., and food that contains one or another kind of poison—which, according to the authors, is just about everything we eat. Rather sloppily put together."

N Y Times Bk ■ p16 F 13 '72 30w

MARIO, THOMAS. The midnight cookbook. 252p $6.95 Cowles

641.5 Cookery

SBN 402-50061-X

LC 76-142115

The recipes in this book may "be made well in advance, then prepared for serving in about 20 minutes. The author, food editor for Playboy magazine, [presents recipes for a variety of dishes] . . . from tongue and ham lasagna to black cherry rum cake. . . . [He includes various] types of food: soups, sandwiches, seafood, eggs, meat, cold dishes, pasta, and beverages." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 31:471 Ja 15 '72 90w

"Midnight cookery is for adults only, is served late in the evening after the theater, after a skating party, or for its own sake as a midnight supper. . . . Mario's recipes are truly romances, vibrant and exciting. . . . The cook will find the dishes simple but imaginative . . . [and] any number of the recipes will fit into an evening meal at home or an afternoon social. For someone looking for an entertainment cookbook, this is highly recommended." Berkeley Laite

Library J 96:1712 My 15 '71 160w

Reviewed by Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p36 D 12 '71 20w

MARION, FRANCES. Off with their heads! a serio-comic tale of Hollywood. 356p il $8.95 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92 Hollywood, California. Moving pictures—Biography

LC 78-182021

The author of this autobiography "came to Hollywood with Mary Pickford and became [an] MGM screenwriter. (Among her . . . credits: The Scarlet Letter, The Wind, Anna Christie, Camille)." (Library J)

"This story is personal but it is very much the saga of Hollywood, touching on the studios, the movies, the stars, and the legends. With credits for 137 movies, Frances Marion was part of Hollywood and the Fairyland that it was." I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 32:259 S 1 '72 380w

"[This book] contains fresh approaches to an amazing conglomeration of Hollywood lore of the 1920's and 1930's. Still [it] is embarrassing, frequently self-righteous, written in schlocky prose, filled with exasperating hindsight. There are reasons to suspect the accuracy of Marion's recollections (e.g., her account of the first Oscar ceremony doesn't jive with other movie histories); and the book is set up like a soapy 1930's screenplay, with lots of big, fake scenes: supposedly, before leaving Owen Moore for Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford consoled her worried mother by saying, 'Mama darling. . . you mustn't forget that I'm also a woman . . . a woman in love.' Despite its almost overwhelming flaws, the book is written with affection from the inside; and it's densely detailed, good enough to make one wish that it were better." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:2181 Je 15 '72 200w

MARKEL, LESTER. What you don't know can hurt you; a study of public opinion and public emotion. 288p $7.50 Public Affairs press

301.15 Public opinion. Mass media. Politics, Practical

LC 70-186518

This book inventories the forces that mold public opinion and assesses its impact on political events and public policy. Bibliography. Index.

"This presentation by a former New York times editor . . . lacks the analytical depth and concern for subtle intricacies associated with many factors that influence opinion formation and expression. . . . [It] may appeal to the interested layman concerned with such questions as: Are Americans adequately informed by the new media? Should elected officials lead or follow opinion?"

Choice 9:1042 O '72 120w

"Markel points out that the management of news, most dangerously by the government, but also by the media, has resulted in a crisis for democracy. . . . While there is not much new in the book, it is an able synthesis of the complicated problem of informing the people in a complex, pluralistic society. Its informal, almost conversational style makes it appropriate reading for a wide audience." R. L. Filippelli

Library J 97:3608 N 1 '72 140w

"[The book's] message is simple and direct: Public opinion controls the country and the media largely control public opinion so to improve public opinion, and therefore the country, improve the media. The political world is more complicated than that, but in the process of pursuing his thesis, Markel has written a clear primer on public opinion, polls, the state of popular knowledge, how government responds to pressures, and where the press fits into it all. . . . It is an extraordinarily useful and sensible book for our times. [However] Markel makes what seems to this writer an analytical error . . . he tends to see politics as a decision-making process involving the manipulation of abstractions, with the dominant problem the application of maximum logic and reason among the high-level decision-makers." B. H. Bagdikian

N Y Times Bk R p2 Ja 12 '72 550w

MARKER, FREDERICK J. Hans Christian Andersen and the romantic theatre; a study of stage practices in the prenaturalistic Scandinavian theatre. 225p il Can$10 Univ. of Toronto press

792.09 Andersen, Hans Christian. Theater—Denmark

ISBN 0-8020-5242-8 LC 74-151377

This "study of the stylistic and theatrical context in which Andersen worked as a playwright . . . [gives an] account of the stage practices (scene design and staging, costuming, rehearsal and performance practices) of the Danish theatre in the four decades immediately preceding the naturalistic theatre of Ibsen and Strindberg. . . . The purpose of Professor Marker's book is . . . to illuminate the dramatic forms and theatrical styles of the period. . . . Many of the theatrical conventions which were important for the emergence of the naturalistic theatre are [also discussed]." (TLS) Bibliography. Chronology of H. C. Andersen's dramatic works. Index.

"Fact-clotted and tedious, this book offers English readers their first close look at the 19th-century Danish theatre, revealing it as very similar to that in other European countries. Andersen is focused on as a typical, not exceptional or dominant, dramatist of the age. . . . Numerous illustrations, including ground plans from the stage managers' journals and a handsome set of costume designs for an 1865 revival of Andersen and Hartmann's opera, The Raven, are included. The author has also unearthed a short manuscript of 1837 which spells out the prerequisites for good acting expected at the Royal Theatre. . . . [The book's appeal, however] is not likely to extend far beyond the serious theater historian."

Choice 9:666 J1/Ag '72 180w

"[This is] a highly original scholarly work, based on a study of primary source material in the Danish Royal Theatre, the Danish State Archives and the Danish Theatre Museum. . . . [The] book will . . . be of interest to many who know nothing about Andersen the playwright but take a general interest in the European theatre of the nineteenth century. [Marker] demonstrates that some of the technical innovations generally linked with the theatre of Ibsen were already to be found embryonically in the pre-naturalistic period."

TLS p946 Ag 11 '72 250w

MARKS, GEOFFREY. The medical garden [by] Geoffrey Marks and William K. Beatty. 178p il $6.95 Scribner

615 Drugs

SBN 684-12383-5 LC 74-67777

This book traces the history of seven drugs—opium, cocaine, quinine, aspirin, colchicine, digitalis, and penicillin. It describes the way the plant from which the drug derives was originally used, the growth of knowledge about the drug's effectiveness, and the scientific work that established its use in modern medicine. Bibliography. Index.

"The folklore surrounding the drugs treated by the book is interesting, especially to the lay reader. A number of errors tend to compromise the book from the standpoint of the medicinal chemist or pharmacologist."

Choice 9:392 My '72 120w

Reviewed by M. S. Cosgrave
Horn Bk 48:79 F '72 110w

"The actual history of drugs is full of suspense and human interest. The present book . . . [shows] evidence of a great deal of research, and the results are richly informative and make for enjoyable reading. The only cavil is that the subject is so interesting and the data so extensive that one wishes for a much longer, less compressed treatment. Recommended for public, academic, and medical libraries." M. L. Garvey

Library J 96:2333 J1 '71 100w

MARQUARDT, D. A., jt. auth. Authors of books for young people. See Ward, M. E.

MARQUESS, HARLAN E., jt. comp. Soviet prison camp speech. See Galler, M.

MARQUEZ, GABRIEL GARCÍA. See García Marquez, G.

MARR, DAVID G. Vietnamese anticolonialism, 1885-1925; sponsored by the Center for South and Southeast Asia studies. 322p il maps $12.50 Univ. of Calif. press

959.7 Nationalism. Vietnam—History. French in Vietnam

ISBN 0-520-01813-3 LC 75-129611

"This study centers on certain political events at the turn of the century in Vietnam, a time when France had seized the . . . country and was consolidating her rule. . . . My attention here is almost entirely devoted to those Vietnamese who resisted, to one degree or another, French colonial actions." (Pref) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Revised version of a 1968 doctoral thesis, dealing with a rather esoteric matter for most Americans. It is for those who seriously want to study pre-1950 Vietnamese political development. The choppyness of style, a convoluted narrative, and the heavy use of the pronoun 'I' cut into readability. Except for colleges offering special programs in Asian studies, this book would not be useful for undergraduate libraries. Scholarship is meticulous, insofar as the thesis is concerned. . . . Vietnamese spelling is impressively correct."

Choice 8:1499 Ja '72 110w

"Marr, currently visiting assistant professor of Vietnamese studies at Cornell University, has done extensive research in Vietnamese sources as well as in French archives. The heart of his work is a fairly detailed study of the lives and works of several key resistance leaders. These chapters contain a considerable amount of human interest material which should make the book appeal to a wider audience than the pitifully few Vietnamese specialists this country has produced. The author demonstrates that the Vietminh and Vietcong movements have deep historical roots which must be considered if the modern movements are to be understood. Highly recommended for large libraries." C. R. Bryant

Library J 96:2082 Jc 15 '71 120w

Reviewed by Frances FitzGerald
N Y Rev of Books 19:21 O 19 '72 1600w

Reviewed by D. J. Duncanson
Pacific Affairs 44:591 winter '71-'72 310w

MARR, D. G.—Continued

"Anyone interested in the deeper causes of Vietnam's tragic fate over the last quarter of a century, be he teacher, journalist, politician, or merely concerned citizen, could not but profit greatly from a work whose new and relevant background information is not to be found in any other book on Vietnam." Joseph Buttinger

Pol Sci Q 87:482 S '72 950w

MARRIAGE: for and against; introd. by Harold H. Hart. 285p il $7.50 Hart

301.42 Marriage
ISBN 0-8055-0122-3 LC 78-151631

A collection of original essays. Among the contributors are Max Lerner, Judith Christ, John Eichenlaub and Ira Reiss.

"When fifteen 'experts' and journalists write brief popular-magazine-type articles from the top of their minds, 'For and Against' what they do not define in any consistent manner, the result is simply a mess. . . . It is simply nonsense to suggest that divorce is 'not a threat to marriage but a bolstering of it'. . . . It is simply dishonest to quote 'Whosoever does not hate mother and father . . . is not worthy of me' as against monogamous marriage and ignore the statements of Christ on adultery and lust, and those of Paul on the 'great mystery' of the marriage union. . . . The book illustrates one thing perfectly. When you separate sex from love, love from sex, and procreation from both, you disintegrate thought, persons, marital unions, and society." H. V. Sattler

Best Sell 32:62 My 1 '72 300w

"Another in the Hart 'For and against' series. These books consist of a collection of original, brief essays on a variety of controversial topics written in a nontechnical manner by experts and public figures. The group assembled this time is rather interesting and diverse, despite a heavy sprinkling of sociologists. . . . The essays tend to weigh in the direction of the 'liberal' point of view, i.e. marriage will at the very least have to undergo change if it is to survive, though more 'conservative' positions are also present. This is a very definite shortcoming; since those who would seek out such a book will probably want a more balanced treatment. Given its unique format, this book cannot be compared with other works, and the decision to purchase will have to be made in terms of an appraisal of users' needs."

Choice 9:586 Je '72 140w

MARRIC, J. J. Gideon's art. 217p $5.95 Harper

SBN 06-012781-3 LC 79-156578

"Three men plot to steal a Velazquez from the National Gallery in London; they succeed, but all three are murdered. So Commander George Gideon of Scotland Yard is involved in a major art theft." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 31:434 D 15 '71 50w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 96:4033 D 1 '71 70w

"Why are the Gideon detective stories so readable? Not because their author takes time. Out they come, one after another, and simultaneously J. J. Marric is writing other books under other names. Does he have elves in the attic cutting, sewing, patching? No matter. Gideon's Scotland Yard adventurers are unfailingly enjoyable; in this latest, as in the others, each piece has its place, nothing is lost, the puzzle is complete, and a compassionate justice triumphs."

New Repub 165:31 D 25 '71 80w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 55:73 Ja 29 '72 50w
TLS p1340 O 22 '71 20w

MARRIOTT, OLIVER, jr. auth. Anatomy of a merger: a history of G.E.C., A.E.I. and English Electric. See Jones, R.*MARRUS, MICHAEL R. The politics of assimilation; a study of the French Jewish community at the time of the Dreyfus affair. 300p il pl $12 Oxford

301.451 Jews in France. Dreyfus, Alfred
ISBN 0-19-821482-0 LC 75-563429

This is "an analysis of the attitudes and political aspirations of [the] leading personalities and official spokesmen of the French Jewish community at the close of the 19th century. . . . The Dreyfus Affair, argues Marrus, little disturbed the Jewish community, and there was no significant change in its outlook, although some of its members were attracted to Zionism as a consequence of the proceedings. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

"[The] persistent loyalty of the Jewish community is the theme of this volume. . . . Relying chiefly on Jewish journals and contemporary reports, Professor Marrus reconstructs a narrative of Jewish reaction to the crisis that adds substantially to our knowledge of the Dreyfus affair." J. N. Moody

Am Hist R 76:1558 D '71 290w

"Based on the thorough study of available sources and presented in a meaningful and readable fashion, Marrus has made a significant contribution to the understanding of French Jews in the later part of the nineteenth century. . . . Marrus ably analyzes the problems of these Jews among themselves and with respect to public policy and anti-Semitism. . . . [He] is to be congratulated for this intensely interesting study." Henry Blumenthal

Ann Am Acad 400:189 Mr '72 500w

"A subject of absorbing interest and compelling importance. . . . Marrus' work fills a gap that had been bridged rather precariously by H. Arendt's extravagant generalizations in Origins of totalitarianism [BRD 1951]. . . . Although Marrus' research has been restricted basically to Jewish periodicals and memoir materials, he offers substantial documentation for his view that French Jews eagerly embraced 'assimilation' into French society and culture, and placed their confidence in the unfolding of the revolutionary and republican promise. . . . This substantial and persuasive monograph should be added to collections in modern European history."

Choice 8:600 Je '71 180w

TLS p498 Ap 23 '72 1000w

MARSDEN, E. W. Greek and Roman artillery; technical treatises. 278p il col il pl $16 Oxford

623.4 Artillery. Greece—Antiquities. Rome—Antiquities
ISBN 0-19-814269-2 LC 74-595763

"After a general introduction on dates, sources, and manuscript tradition, Marsden gives us text, translation and explanatory notes (with . . . drawings) for Heron, Biton, Philon, and the relevant chapter of Vitruvius, followed by 'Heron's Cheiroballistra,' 'the arrow-shooting ballista of the fourth century A.D.,' and 'the onager.'" (Class World) The text is in Greek or Latin and English.

"Marsden has curbed a whole stable of uninviting and refractory texts. His book is serviceable, ingenious, and persuasive." W. McLeod

Am Hist R 77:751 Je '72 450w

"Dr. Marsden's admirable book on Greek and Roman Artillery: Historical Development [BRD 1970] prepared us for this edition and translation of the technical treatises. Everyone interested in ancient warfare, or the history of technology in its wider aspects, should possess both books. . . . [Marsden] has himself built machines to the ancient specifications, and ratio et res ipsa are often and properly his guides. . . . In the translation Marsden prefers English coinages to transliteration of Greek and Latin technical terms. These sometimes read strangely. . . . but certainly help to make these very difficult texts intelligible. . . . [The] two volumes surpass the work of [Marsden's] great predecessors in this fascinating field." J. K. Anderson

Class World 65:133 D '71 250w

MARSH, NGAIO. Tied up in tinsel. 259p $6.95 Little

LC 77-183854

The action takes place at Halberds Manor "a great, isolated house owned by [Hilary Bill-Tasman] an eccentric millionaire, and one of his whimsies is to staff it entirely with convicted murderers. There is a Christmas pageant, and a missing man." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 32:126 Je 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by J. G. Harrison
Christian Science Monitor p10 Jl 12 '72 30w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit

Library J 97:2440 J1 '72 50w

"The celebrated veteran brings back Roderick Alleyn in one of her delightfully old-fashioned inventions, when an absolutely artificial situation is handled with charm and urbanity." New-gate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p30 Je 25 '72 70w

"This English novel shows quite plainly that if you write of murder you must either shimmer or dig deep. Dame Ngaio chooses to shimmer, and because she is a talented woman, possessed of good sense and sharp wit, her book turns out to be a vigorously entertaining Christmas tale, with old and new murders all decked out in holly and mistletoe, and all events revolving around a truly gorgeous golden Christmas tree. . . . Besides the convicts and Hilary, there are present five house guests and six policemen. The policemen include Superintendent Roderick Alleyn, of The C.I.D., and the guests include Alleyn's celebrated wife, Troy."

New Yorker 48:116 My 27 '72 200w

"By Ngaio Marsh's high standards not one of her best; an over-contrived Christmas scene in an improbable country house with extraordinary staff; but the murder-solution by Alleyn is well up to standard."

TLS p500 Ap 28 '72 30w

MARSHACK, ALEXANDER. The roots of civilization: the cognitive beginnings of man's first art, symbol and notation. 413p il $17.50 McGraw

913 Art, Primitive. Stone age. Man, Prehistoric
SBN 07-040535-2 LC 70-140958

"Research begun in the early '60s convinced Marshack that a thread of continuity was evident from the mammoth hunters to the astronauts: 'There was no essential difference between the first fully modern man of some 40,000 years ago and ourselves, either in brain size or general skeletal measurement,' he notes. . . . [Through a] study of ice-age artifacts and cave drawings [Marshack developed a theory that] such 'writings' [included] the recording of a complex system of calendric notation based on lunar phases on a small scratched bone. [He records here now he came to his conclusions]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] richly illustrated book provides evidence that Ice Age man kept calendrical records, possibly even to chart cycles of fertility among animals and the growth seasons of plants. This revolutionary contention will obviously be challenged, and in fact already has been, by an English pre-historian writing in the journal Antiquity. But Marshack has also got formidable support, notably from Professor Hallam L. Movius Jr., a Harvard prehistorian known for his cautious and meticulous research. Moreover, Marshack's findings are consistent with other recent discoveries which upgrade our notion of the intellectual capacity of pre-literate man." K. E. Meyer

Book World p5 My 7 '72 650w

"Few readers will accept without demur the totality of Marshack's formulation, but the book is a document of major significance for three reasons: (1) techniques of photography and microscopy developed by Marshack permit investigations heretofore impossible; (2) the book summarizes a decade of seminal and already controversial research; (3) most important, Marshack has given us our first documented look at the Palaeolithic roots of science and symbol. Magnificently illustrated; lists of collections, sites, illustrations."

Choice 9:701 J1/Ag '72 150w

Reviewed by Maureen Duffy

New Statesman 84:362 S 15 '72 950w

New Yorker 48:74 J1 1 '72 350w

"A general reader comes easily to a verdict: There is abstract symbolism in the Old Stone Age. It may well be—but it is not clearly—lunar counts made night after night. Notation is as old as the caves, and so perhaps, is astronomy. The book is beautifully, almost lavishly, presented. For that we can thank the publisher and the editors. But the overblown title and the entire ambience of the book suggest a somewhat unkind effort to place the volume in the hands of many readers anxious to see art and to read drama. Although the personal adventures of the author are winning enough, much of the text is given to counts and trials that are more tedious than the narrative of the usual archaeological best sellers. . . . Those who have the patience to follow Marshack's argument will find his book a pioneer, a beauty and a new door ajar."

Philip Morrison

Sci Am 227:117 J1 '72 1000w

MARSHALL, A. J. Darwin and Huxley in Australia. 142p il $10 Verry

919.4 Australia—Description and travel.
Darwin, Charles Robert. Huxley, Thomas Henry

ISBN 0-340-12639-6 LC 72-590319

This is a "commentary on the travels in Australia of . . . Darwin and Huxley . . . and the places which they visited . . . [Included is an] account of Huxley's early life." (TLS) "Bibliography." (Choice)

"There is little to quarrel with in this book, yet there is not much to recommend it. . . . The work is in essence merely a piece of Australiana swelled to twice its proper size by adding routine biographies of Huxley and Darwin including a discussion of Darwin's Origin of species. No index and a trivial bibliography. Only the largest university libraries should consider this."

Choice 8:1342 D '71 110w

"[The author was] not only a distinguished zoologist, but a writer of rare charm whose prose is a pleasure to read. . . . [He] supplies interesting information on [Darwin and Huxley] previously unknown in Britain. . . . [He] is warm in his praise of the astuteness of Darwin's conclusions on the economic future of Australia. He is also quick to notice the differences between Darwin's original Diary, written during the voyage, and his Journal of Research, written after his return to England, when the glimmerings of the solution to the problem of evolution had begun to form in his mind. . . . The book is illustrated with pencil sketches by Huxley himself taken from his diary."

TLS p787 J1 2 '71 700w

MARSHALL, DALE ROGERS. The politics of participation in poverty; a case study of the board of the Economic and youth opportunities agency of greater Los Angeles. $7.95 Univ of Calif. press

323.3 Los Angeles—Poor. Economic and Youth Opportunity Agency. Poor—Political activity. Youth—Political activity
ISBN 0-520-01741-2 LC 71-109973

"This is a description of the board that ran the War on Poverty program in Los Angeles in 1968. On the basis of her observations of board meetings and interviews with board members, Marshall discusses how the board functioned, how much influence the representatives of the poor had on the board, the characteristics of board members, how they were recruited, and the influence of membership on their attitudes. She indicates that community representatives did not have very much influence over decisions made by the board." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. R. Hudson

Am J Soc 78:441 S '72 330w

"The book contains a great deal of information on the Los Angeles poverty program, but the author's attempt to relate the findings of the study to theories of political participation and adult socialization is unsuccessful because the available data about 32 board members were insufficient to yield insights into political processes. Buried within this work are one or two good journal articles. These have been padded with marginally relevant information, making this a pretentious near-book." William Silverman

Library J 96:2326 J1 '71 280w

MARSHALL, KIM. Law and order in grade 6-E; chaos and innovation in a ghetto school; with phot. by the author. 239p $7.95 Little

371.3 Martin Luther King Middle School, Boston. Education—Experimental methods
ISBN 0-316-54690-9 LC 72-1814

The author "got a job teaching sixth grade at Martin Luther King Middle School in Boston. King is the public school for sixth through eighth grades in a tough district of Roxbury, a mainly black area. . . . [Kim] discovered how inadequately prepared he was to teach in a ghetto school. His first year was a series of crises which forced him to rethink . . . his concepts about teaching. Through use of learning stations and a variant of the 'open classroom' technique, he found ways to teach his pupils [in a way he considered effective]. This book is a . . . diary of his voyage of discovery and a . . . description of his classroom methods and materials." (Best Sell)

MARSHALL, KIM—Continued

"The author is a skilled photographer. The book presents twenty of his pictures of the pupils and the environment, as well as thirty lesson plans. Parts of the volume appeared previously in different form in the Harvard Bulletin. Most books on radical school reform content themselves with revolutionary rhetoric to shock the complacent and a few general hints about what needs to be done. This one is much more specific. . . . [Marshall's] lesson plans and suggestions would need adaptation to individual schools and situations, but they are presented in the spirit of 'for example.' Kim Marshall is that rarity, an interesting and imaginative writer on education. His prose has freshness of perception on a subject much explored before by less gifted expositors." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 32:233 Ag 15 '72 600w

"Marshall has written a readable, inspiring antidote to Kozol's Death at an Early Age [BRD 1967]. In a similar ghetto school in Boston, Marshall transforms a hopeless, chaotic teaching situation into a meaningful learning situation by employing his creative adaptation of learning stations (a modified open classroom technique). . . . This unusual book [is] a milestone in current educational rethinking. Must reading and a first purchase." S. A. Smith

Library J 97:2836 S 15 '72 160w

MARSHALL, NEAL, jt. auth. Garden of innocents. See Fisher, A.

MARSHALL, RICHARD H., ed. Aspects of religion in the Soviet Union, 1917-1967. See Aspects of religion in the Soviet Union, 1917-1967

MARSHALL-CORNWALL, SIR JAMES. Foch military commander. 268p $13.50 Crane, Russak & co.

940.4 Foch, Ferdinand. European War, 1914-1918
ISBN 0-8448-0022-8 LC 72-80115

In this "assessment of Foch's career . . . [the author describes] the battles and campaigns in which Foch took part, [as well as] . . . the politics of the time. . . . [Included also is an] account of pre-war diplomacy, where Foch was an . . . element in the development of Anglo-French military cooperation." (Choice)

"Although he was the Allies' great hero of 1918, Ferdinand Foch soon came under strong criticism for the role he played in the bloody offensives of the Western front and his reputation has remained under the haze of controversy ever since. This latest appraisal will do little to put the matter to rest. . . . While the author's . . . accounts are basically sound, they add nothing to what is already known. . . . His discussion of Foch's tenure as Supreme Commander of Allied Forces is largely a superficial account of the war's closing campaign. Useful for undergraduates but can in no way replace B. H. Liddell Hart's classic Foch, the man of Orleans [BRD 1932]." Choice 9:1191 N '72 180w

"[This] is a rather conventional biography. The nuances of personality elude Marshall-Cornwall, who is more comfortable when discussing tactics and campaigns. He writes agreeably and authoritatively, although his documentation is somewhat scanty. . . . For libraries with a strong military-history readership, this acquisition would not be an embarrassment." M. H. Ridgeway

Library J 97:2832 S 15 '72 100w

MARTIN, ALBRO. Enterprise denied; origins of the decline of American railroads, 1897-1917. 402p $10.95 Columbia univ. press

385 Railroads and state. Railroads
ISBN 0-231-03508-X LC 71-159673

"Martin argues that during 1906-17 'archaic Progressives' and an incompetent (in some measure malicious) Interstate Commerce Commission destroyed the vitality of the American railroad industry. The principal villains of the piece are Senators Cummins and LaFollette [and] . . . a parade of ICC commissioners who were incompetent as economists and who repeatedly rejected well founded railroad rate-increase demands in order to survive Congressional scrutiny; and sundry others . . . including Louis Brandeis (portrayed as slick, self-serving), [in addition to] three White House residents." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[Martin's] heroes are the frustrated managers of such roads as the Pennsylvania, the Illinois Central, and the Santa Fe; his devils are the misguided initiators and inept administrators of public policy during the Roosevelt, Taft, and Wilson administrations. . . . He argues his plea with gusto and conviction. To this member of the audience his evidence still remains circumstantial and inferential. But one must admire the diligence and skill with which Professor Martin builds his case. He is certainly the most able advocate the railroads have had, then or since." J. P. Baughman

Am Hist R 77:1516 D '72 600w

"At times Dr. Martin's book reads almost like a novel with the characters having distinct personalities. Yet it is scholarly in every regard. He relies considerably on ICC and congressional hearings. A statistical appendix explains what he thinks the railroads needed for expansion purposes. This refreshing treatment of the railroad side of things in the era of Progressivism is long overdue." D. L. Kemmerer

Ann Am Acad 401:219 My '72 460w

"The much debated thesis of Kolko, Railroads and regulation, 1877-1916 [BRD 1965, 1966]—that the railroads themselves were chief proponents of regulation—is rejected outright. Lively phrase-making allows for sometimes highly readable, but more often tiresome, prose style; poor organization of material, especially statistical, and some enormous logical gaps make for interpretive confusions. Despite the polemics, there is material here on management problems and the major ICC hearings and decisions not easily found elsewhere in the secondary literature."

Choice 9:106 Mr '72 200w

Reviewed by K. A. Kerr
J Am Hist 59:182 Je '72 400w

"[This study is] the first winner of the Columbia University Prize in American Economic History in Honor of Allan Nevins. . . . Martin, a former advertising executive and currently assistant professor of history at American University, makes a strong case for [his views]. . . . [His book will be] chiefly of interest to the specialist." W. E. Parrish

Library J 96:2498 Ag '71 120w

MARTIN, J. P. The social consequences of conviction, by J. P. Martin and D. Webster. 384p il $15 Humanities press

364.8 Crime and criminals—Rehabilitation. Social adjustment

This is a "study of the social effects of conviction on men sentenced for careless and reckless driving, breaking and entering, stealing, fraud, and crimes of sex and violence. The book investigates the 'social' impact of conviction by analyzing such variables as the amount of publicity generated, type of family background, the degree of support from friends and associates, employment patterns and involvement with social services." (Choice)

"Although this is essentially an empirical work with little theoretical content it does suggest excellent patterns of response to conviction as propositions for future research. The authors, however, tend to dwell on their development of the problem and the characteristics of the sample. Over one-third of the book is filled with five appendices of questionable value. Furthermore, much of the data presented deal with the conditions of offenders that existed prior to the sentencing rather than with conditions that developed as a result of the conviction. The book is readable, includes no tests of statistical significance which would be helpful for the uninitiated, but has a small bibliography. Would be of interest primarily as reference work in university libraries."

Choice 9:1051 O '72 170w

"Based upon a sample of offenders in Reading, [England] which appears to have some of the characteristics of an English Middle-town, the production of this work is evidence of long and patient analysis. . . . The conclusions, as distinct from the substantial volume of data, are somewhat tentative. Re-conviction [for example] is more related to a man's social position than to the treatment prescribed by the courts, and the social consequences of conviction as they affect the quality of the offender's life tend to be marginal, but cumulative with each conviction. . . . [This study] contains, apart from its statistics, some interesting observations, including some on press reporting, and some valuable appendixes on research methodology. It is not without wry humour."

TLS p779 J1 2 '71 400w

MARTIN, JAMES. Future developments in telecommunications. 413p il maps $14 Prentice-Hall

621.38 Telecommunication
SBN 13-345868-7 LC 74-156767

"The intent of this book is to take all the facts that seem relevant to telecommunications, explain them to the reader, and piece by piece build a picture of where we are going and what is likely to be achieved." (p.9) Glossary. Index.

"Martin displays a good grasp of the dozen or so essential elements contributing to the future impact of telecommunications in society. He weaves an enormous variety of relevant subject matter in a quite authoritative and readable text. The scope is very wide—and as such perhaps a bit uneven in places, e.g. somewhat greater emphasis might have been placed on the use of home terminals for educationally related activities rather than for the purposes described. The style is quite crisp and clear, making the contents suitable for both nontechnical as well as technically oriented audiences. . . . Of particular value is the fairly complete glossary of terms, using CCITT definitions wherever possible."

Choice 8:1351 D '71 130w

"The author of this book, behind his hardware exterior, is something of an artist. . . . He has chosen many excellent photographs and helpful diagrams. Like any good artist, he suits form to content. . . . No one who is intrigued by telecommunications, and no one who wants to look squarely at what that technology can do (whether it will or not is less clear) will be disappointed in this book." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 225:116 O '71 700w

MARTIN, JOHN HENRY. Free to learn; unlocking and ungrading American education [by] John Henry Martin & Charles H. Harrison. (A Spectrum bk) 185p $5.95; pa $2.45
Prentice-Hall

370 Education—U.S.
ISBN 0-13-331066-3; 0-13-331058-2 (pa)
LC 72-672

"In an attempt to improve education . . . [the authors propose] an open, year-round, ungraded school in which children progress at individual rates and where interaction and cooperation are emphasized through multi-age grouping and student-tutoring programs. [They consider that] . . . library services, physical education programs, vocational guidance, counseling services, and education in the arts . . . would be more effective if run by the community. The authors would establish community centers where all would be encouraged to participate in taking care of these tasks." (Library J) Index.

"[Two] responsible authors who have valuable experience in the educational domain regard our actual institutions as inadequate. . . . [Their book] substantiates their arguments. . . . Laymen as well as professional educators and legislators should take a serious look at [this study]." M. S. Lienert
America 127:182 S 10 '72 350w

"It is good to find a book which offers practical suggestions for restructuring our educational institutions. Provocative and well written, this will be one of the more discussed books of the year." R. W. Barber

Library J 97:2071 Je 1 '72 280w

MARTIN, JOHN STUART, Jr. auth. A picture history of Eastern Europe. See Raymond, E.

MARTIN, JUDITH. The name on the White House floor, and other anxieties of our times.
223p $5.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

817 Wit and humor. Washington, D.C.—
Social life and customs
SBN 698-10465-X LC 72-76681

A substantial portion of this book appeared originally in the Washington Post in somewhat different form. One of the author's "newspaper pieces described Tricia Nixon as dressed 'like an ice cream cone'; this . . .
earned [the author's] name a place 'on the White House floor' [hence the title]." (Christian Science Monitor)

"The most humorous of these 70-odd pieces are about the author's childhood, her ruminations at college, her marriage, and her pregnancies. (She refers often to 'my husband,' as if to reassure the reader that so witty and independent a woman can still need and relish a husband.)" Barbara Breasted

Christian Science Monitor p9 S 27 '72
350w

"This collection . . . will probably appeal to the unliberated woman. Most of the articles deal with minute domestic problems, child rearing, the diplomatic cocktail scene, and middle age. Taken one by one, these items might be palatable; but offered in book form, they end up like Southern cooking—lots of bulk and no spice." H. E. Hutchinson
Library J 97:3159 O 1 '72 60w

"A society reporter and columnist . . . chatters away cheerfully about White House weddings, diplomatic functions. . . . the overuse of sex as a beauty aid, etc. It's all rather madcap and free association—just as she's making some point about Washington society, she veers off into fantasy. More giddy than funny."

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 8 '72 60w

MARTIN, MALACHI. Three popes and the cardinal. 300p $7.95 Farrar, Straus

282 Papacy. Catholic Church—History.
Civilization, Modern
ISBN 0-374-27675-7 LC 78-181756

This book contains "pen portraits of the title subjects (Popes Pius XII, John XXIII, and Paul VI, and Cardinal Bea, the late head of the Secretariat for the Promotion of Christian Unity), as well as . . . analyses of current Church crises. . . . [The book also] seeks to illuminate the present human situation through an interpretation of the whole of modern Western history in its relation to the upheavals in the Catholic Church." (Sat R) Index.

"There is probably no single section of this book with which I can completely disagree.
But it so patently bristles with intuition, genius insights, and utter chaos as a whole that I could not imagine any reader concentrating on what is said, except as a means of understanding an intriguing writer. . . . I recommend this dazzling book to a) All who like to find the Roman Catholic structure sagging and about to collapse; b) All who like Irish writers; c) All who would like one man's opinion on practically everything that is talked about today; and d) All who are interested in the equivocal nature of man.
. . . . A fascinating, terrible, enlightening, and crashingly equivocal book." Edward Gannon

Best Sell 32:17 Ap 1 '72 600w

Choice 9:662 J1/Ag '72 190w

Reviewed by Edward Wing
Christian Century 89:1078 O 25 '72 700w

Reviewed by J. G. Harrison
Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 9 '72
550w

Reviewed by F. X. Murphy
Commonweal 96:289 My 26 '72 1300w

"Equally hard on the Roman curia and the Berrigan brothers, Martin is sympathetic towards Pope Paul, who he believes is caught in an insoluble dilemma. Though its 'good and bad guys' approach sometimes borders on caricature, this analysis will leave no one indifferent." W. C. Heiser

MARTIN, MALACHI—Continued

Library J 97:1693 My 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by Ernest Van Den Haag

Nat R 24:593 My 26 '72 850w

"[The author] nails up this thesis: 'Well before the year 2000, there will no longer be a religious institution recognizable as the Roman Catholic and Apostolic Church of today . . . there will be, instead of the Church we know, a series of 'independent' churches . . . there will be no central authority for teaching and jurisdiction.' . . . If Martin had adopted the plain style instead of the flamboyant, if he did not draw the long bow of the superlative so often, the book might have been more persuasive. . . . There is a good book and an arguable thesis lost somewhere in the sheaves of allusion and obiter dicta." Francis Sweeney

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ap 2 '72 440w

"No writer on the Council and the Church in relation to contemporary society has adopted so sweeping a field of view as has Dr. Martin. . . . [His] essay is also the most perceptive and stimulating personal statement on the people and events leading up to and following the Council that I have read. But, since it would be profoundly discouraging if the book's main points were convincing, I am happy to report that, to me, they are not. To say that and let the book go, however, would be unfair. The work fails—ironically, since so much of it is about the 'failure' of the Church—but it fails instructively. . . . Dr. Martin's prose is usually lively, sometimes brilliant, but too often facile. He is addicted to projective historical scenarios—imaginative conceptions of possible futures—both more and less based on history." Walter Arnold

Sat R 55:57 Ap 8 '72 2500w

MARTIN, MICHAEL RHETA. The concise encyclopedic guide to Shakespeare, by Michael Rheta Martin and Richard C. Harrier. 450p pl $14.95 Horizon press

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Dictionaries
ISBN 0-8180-1159-9 LC 70-171017

This volume seeks to relate the background, significance and synopses of Shakespeare's plays and characters, along with quotations and explanations of words and phrases from the plays. Appended are biographical sketches of critics, scholars, actors and others associated with the playwright's work, and charts of historical characters. Discography. Bibliography.

"Martin is author of reference works in history and the arts; Harrier has written in the Shakespearean field. This work is for general readers rather than students."

Choice 9:492 Je '72 150w

"Every page and picture is useful, but the explanations are of necessity limited in detail and coverage and the long summaries unbalance the entries while remaining desperately brief. Some eight useful appendixes review Shakespeare's life and theater with sense and clarity; list leading critics, famous actors, productions since 1900 in and near New York, music based on the plays, and recordings of them; and provide a reading list and a genealogical chart for the history plays." W. H. Magee

Library J 97:1305 Ap 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:70 My 6 '72 80w

MARTIN, RALPH G. Jennie: the life of Lady Randolph Churchill; v2. The dramatic years 1895-1921. $8.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Churchill, Jennie (Jerome) Lady Randolph Churchill
LC 63-54197

This "second part of [Martin's] two-volume biography of Lady Randolph Churchill . . . [portrays] Jennie's relationship with her family and her . . . influence on the course of history." (Best Sell) For volume one see BRD 1969.

Reviewed by F. X. J. Homer

America 126:550 My 20 '72 120w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 228:148 N 1 '71 650w

"[This is] a most readable account of a most vibrant woman. As in the first volume, the photographs, the notes and the critical references, and the bibliography are as enthralling as the biography and are invaluable reading.

. . . Martin is a master craftsman, adroit in bringing alive various pieces of information and letters and interweaving the sources of facts and anecdotes with compassion, humor, and discernment. He has sifted and weighed all of his data and used those relevant comments and quotations which give perceptivity to the mood and foibles of the time and which are most revealing. . . . There is a deeper awareness of history which [he] successfully brings to this volume while he retains the aliveness of popular reading." C. P. Collier

Best Sell 31:400 D 1 '71 650w

"What makes this such a bad book? First, there is the author's determination to be sensational. . . . We are [also] assailed with a procession of overblown incidents, inflated by the remorseless inclusion of irrelevant anecdotes, character sketches, and supposed historical background. Martin commits all of the sins that any self-respecting instructor in 'creative writing' would condemn in a first term paper. . . . As a monument to slovenly writing and scholarship, Jennie, Volume Two, may have a long life. As a work to be read and enjoyed, its only hope is the kindly editorial compression that could transform it into a Readers' Digest condensed book." Cameron Hazlehurst

Book World p13 Ja 2 '72 750w

Christian Century 88:1298 N 3 '71 40w

Reviewed by Aram Bakshian

Nat R 23:1472 D 31 '71 1000w

"Martin completely succeeds in conveying the beauty and warmth of Sir Winston's mother. Indeed, to understand England's savior, one must read the story of Jennie Jerome. For it was from her that there flowed into him 'the passion and the life.' . . . [Martin] includes many—perhaps too many—of Jennie's letters to this colonel or that politician, to this editor or that publisher, asking, begging, pleading, for jobs, commissions, positions for one or other of her two sons. What is amazing is how often she got exactly what each boy wanted." Anne Fremantle

N Y Times Bk R p40 N 28 '71 1250w

"Although much of Jennie's life was wrapped up in romps between the sheets with the titled and the untitled, Mr Martin is too clever a biographer to have presented us with an aristocratic Fanny Hill. Indeed, such a picture would have done a grave injustice to his subject. . . . What emerges—and superbly—is a totally candid picture of upper-class British society over a quarter century. . . . [Martin] makes a heavy book light, no small feat in these days of ponderous, vacuum cleaner biographies." Alden Whitman

Sat R 54:44 N 6 '71 500w

MARTIN, RALPH P., jt. ed. Apostolic history and the gospel. See Gasque, W. W.

MARTIN, WALTER T., jt. auth. Social stress and chronic illness. See Dodge, D. L.

MARTINDALE, DON. The social dimensions of mental illness, alcoholism [sic] and drug dependence [by] Don Martindale and Edith Martindale. 330p $12.50 Greenwood pub.

362.2 Social psychiatry. Mental illness. Alcoholism. Drug abuse
ISBN 0-8371-5175-9 LC 72-133499

"The Martindales begin with the assumption that mental illness, alcoholism, and drug dependence represent failures in the socialization process . . . [and] concentrate on descriptions of disorders and their treatments [as well as] individual-community relationships before, during, and after treatment. Index." (Choice)

"The authors' treatment of the phenomenon of mental illness consumes two thirds of their book. . . . The reader, at least those directly involved in research or applied work in social pathology, however, will find little information that could be considered new in this section constituting the bulk of the volume. . . . In my opinion, sociologists and psychologists will not receive what the book promises. There is, however, considerable value to the work. The authors' clarity of style, their obvious scholarly orientation and the wealth of materials presented in this eclectic synthesis of existing research findings, should provide the general reader with a rather educational and informative book on the problems of mental illness, alcoholism, and drug dependence." G. P. Piperopoulos

Ann Am Acad 402:187 J1 '72 650w

"Although clearly written, this blend of abnormal psychology, descriptive sociology, and practical social work is extremely thin (e.g. the etiology of mental illness is covered in six pages). The possibly unjustified separation of alcoholism and drug dependence creates much redundancy, and the attempt to develop an integrative theory in the final chapter is, for the most part, disappointing. Might be of some interest to beginning students, but with few exceptions, a more complete and satisfactory treatment of the subjects covered can be found in many standard abnormal psychology textbooks."

Choice 9:580 Je '72 150w

MARTINDALE, EDITH, Jr. auth. The social dimensions of mental illness, alcoholism [sic] and drug dependence. See Martindale, D.

MARTINEAU, GILBERT. Napoleon surrenders; tr. from the French by Frances Partridge. 231p il $10 St Martins

940.2 Napoleon I, Emperor of the French LC 71-157522

In this account "of Napoleon's second downfall, his journey to the Ile d'Aix, and his surrender to the British, . . . [the author] describes the misery of defeat after Waterloo, the desertion of those who had only recently rejoined Napoleon upon his return from Elba, and the deputies' determination to dethrone the Emperor. The latter was given an opportunity to escape, but due to his indecision at the Ile d'Aix, he missed an excellent chance to go to America." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Martineau tells his story well and the translation is very good. Although he attempts to be objective his sympathies are with the fallen hero, which is understandable. A worthy addition to Napoleonic literature."

Choice 9:566 Je '72 160w

"The book is worth reading for its fascinatingly detailed account of all the changes and chances, hopes and fears, vacillations and illusions of the weeks between Napoleon's return to Paris after Waterloo and his departure on HMS Northumberland for St Helena on August 8, 1815. It is a pity that M. Martineau's ideas of the contemporary English background are sketchy and sometimes inaccurate. And he has been rather poorly served by his translator—although in view of its bias it may not be altogether inappropriate to be constantly reminded that the book was originally written in French."

Economist 239:63 Je 26 '71 200w

"There may still be a few interesting facts to be unearthed relating to how the Saint Helena decision was reached. . . . If there are, M Martineau does not pursue them but travels with Napoleon and his suite along a well-worn path unlikely to yield anything new of value. That he does not mention any of his immediate precursors is no great matter. Napoleon Surrenders covers the same ground in much the same way with almost identical documentation at least as well as any of them. . . . [and] it is better written than most."

TLS p1626 D 31 '71 300w

MARTÍNEZ-ALIER, JUAN. Labourers and landowners in southern Spain. (Oxford. Univ. St. Anthony's college pub. no 4) 352p maps $15 Rowman & Littlefield

338.1 Agriculture—Economic aspects. Agriculture—Spain. Land tenure. Agricultural laborers

ISBN 0-87471-035-9 LC 79-29379

"The time is 1964-65. The location is the southern third of Cordoba province in Spain—the intensely cultivated valley of the Guadalquivir River. The subject of inquiry: labor-management relations on the latifundia." (Choice)

"Subject matter is obscured by technical jargon, use of Spanish terms (though explained the first time used), and references to pesetas, pounds, hectares, kilometers, and brief passages in Spanish and French—though the latter is not a major problem. The text is repetitive and uneven. Extensive quotation, often without clear purpose, breaks the continuity. Some, certainly, would question the author's methodology and conclusions, although his chapters on the mentality of the agricultural worker are fascinating. This technical study will appeal to students of comparative agrarian reform and of agricultural labor—as well as to Iberianists in general. While probably not of interest to the general public, it is recommended for college and university libraries."

Choice 9:546 Je '72 140w

"[This] is the English version of La estabilidad del latifundismo (reviewed in the TLS, December 26, 1968). The author has improved the overall quality of the book by a tighter presentation. This edition also includes a conclusion discussing recent work on related problems of landownership, the peasantry and the political system. The author does not restrict himself to Andalusia here, as he draws on evidence carried out by other researchers in other latifundio areas."

TLS p1584 D 17 '71 60w

MARTINS, WILSON. The modernist idea; a critical survey of Brazilian writing in the twentieth century; tr. by Jack E. Tomlins. 345p $9.50 N.Y. univ. press

869 Brazilian literature—History and criticism

ISBN 0-8147-0293-7 LC 79-124529

This work "is divided into three general subdivisions: I—'Perspectives,' II—'Representative Works,' and III—'Basic Authors.' The first section, comprising fully half of the text, aims at a definition of Modernism in its multiple manifestations, both European and Brazilian. . . . Part II treats several works in poetry, fiction, and essay which, in the author's estimation, are most representative of one or more aspects of the Brazilian Modernist idea. . . . Part III offers a brief presentation and evaluation of the contribution of [various] writers to the Modernist movement in both its São Paulo and Northeast Brazilian manifestations." (Mod Lang J) Bibliography. Name index.

"[This is a] definitive survey of 20th-century Brazilian literature. . . . [Tomlins] outdid himself with this translation. The resulting combination of a work by an outstanding and internationally recognized Brazilian literary critic, and a sensitive translation of it, makes for a reference work that has no rival in readability as well as in coverage. Footnotes . . . add to the usefulness of this work. There is no comparable work in English. . . . This volume should be in the library of any college that offers courses in either Brazilian or comparative world literature. It opens new dimensions of thought in dealing with a very vital period of Brazilian literature."

Choice 8:1457 Ja '72 130w

"This book is an omnibus of information and opinion on Brazilian Modernism and related movements and antecedents. It is subjective by intent and encyclopedic in scope, perhaps raising as many questions (through unelaborated references, etc.) as it answers. . . . [It] is primarily . . . for 'insiders,' those already initiated in the study of modern Brazilian literature. Nevertheless, it should lend itself as a valuable reference work for English-language readers interested in comparative literature who desire detailed background information and personal glimpses of Brazilian writers of the 1920's and 1930's, for the work effectively communicates the atmosphere and unrestrained experimentation of that period. Professor Tomlins has generally shown considerable fidelity to the original Portuguese in his translation." M. L. Daniel

Mod Lang J 56:97 F '72 900w

MARTY, MARTIN E. Protestantism. (History of religion ser) 368p $8.95 Holt

289 Protestantism

ISBN 0-03-091353-5 LC 76-182759

"The author accents a variety of conceptual and existential foci to show how a pluralistic Protestantism . . . adheres internally. Protestants are identified by geographic, cultural, and ethnic distribution; by description of what they do at worship; and finally through survey of the manifestations which the Protestant ethos has exhibited vis-a-vis economics, society, the arts, and family life." (Library J) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

MARTY, M. E.—Continued

Reviewed by J. W. O'Malley
America 127:43 J1 22 '72 460w

"[This] survey covers the churches, culture, rituals and doctrines of Protestantism both in historical perspective and contemporary detail. As always, [Marty's] prose is lucid and his manner serene. . . . [There are] chapters on urban life . . . and sexual developments. From the Puritan to modern permissiveness is a long journey. How much ecumenism is possible, even with the Protestant community, is another major discussion. One hundred pages of footnotes and bibliographical information are inconveniently gathered at the back of the book, but they contain invaluable material for the scholar. A good index is also provided. Dr. Marty's book should be welcomed by serious students, but it is popular enough to be in demand in public libraries as well." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 32:172 J1 1 '72 250w

Reviewed by Gabriel Fackre
Christian Century 89:1167 N 15 '72 700w

Economist 245:80 N 25 '72 300w

"While doing full justice to the diversities existing within the great families of Protestantism, Marty, winner of the 1972 National Book Award in philosophy and religion for his Righteous Empire [BRD 1971], demonstrates several patterns of orientation which provide a discernable consistency to the Protestant phenomenon. Most libraries should omit very little that [he] writes; this book, too is essential for religion collections." Robert Dvorak

Library J 97:2107 Je 1 '72 100w

MARVELL, ANDREW. The rehearsal transpros'd, and The rehearsal transpros'd, the second part; ed. by D. I. B. Smith. 411p $17.75 Oxford

261.7 Dissenters. Church and state in Great Britain. Satire, English
ISBN 0-19-812422-8 LC [71-28589]

The first "critical edition of Marvell's . . . prose satire. . . . [deals with the] 'war' between Marvell and Samuel Parker, whom [Marvell] answers ostensibly on behalf of 'liberty of conscience' and, as most students assume, in defense of the Declaration of Indulgence of 1672." (Choice)

"[This book is] beautiful as to format and substantial as to critical apparatus. Students of Marvell will perhaps regret only the brevity of the introductory material; which . . . does, however, briefly recapitulate the circumstances and the issues of the prose pamphlet 'war.' . . . One is inclined to agree with John M. Wallace that Marvell did not really think of his tract so much as a defense of the Declaration but as 'an attack on Parker's Hobbesian absolutism.' . . . Whatever the political motivation behind the 'Rehearsal' tracts, however, the truth is that most of us who read Marvell's prose at all probably read it as much for sheer delight in his lively satirical style as for any insight into his political views. For either purpose this new edition makes the . . . tracts readily accessible and a pleasure to read. Extensive annotation; index."

Choice 8:1453 Ja '72 220w

"This is very far from being Marvell's most important work, either to the historian or the student of literature, and it is already available in the Ann Arbor microtext series to which most university libraries subscribe. True, the first part is reprinted here from the rare first edition, but Mr. Smith does not explain in his preface the important differences between this and the second impression put out from Ann Arbor, and a careful examination of the text strongly suggests that they are few. Moreover, the preface is brief, it does nothing to set the work in the context of Marvell's other writings, and those not perfectly at home in Charles II's reign will find it unhelpful." J. P. Kenyon

Engl Hist R 87:425 Ap '72 140w

"Marvell routed his adversary less by reason than by banter, the style of which so caught the taste of the town, it seems, that argument was drowned in laughter. Inevitably, however, these girding and jeering parts of The Rehearsal Transpros'd are the ones which wear least well, and are the most difficult to reconcile with the defter and more delicate Marvell of the lyric poems. Fortunately, there are other passages where he lifts himself out of the dated swamp of quotation from Parker, followed by bantering refutation, to reveal something (though never indiscreetly too much) of his own reasonable and realistic mind. . . . In both parts Marvell joins a shrewd sense of political expediency, or skill in exercising the art of the possible, with an overall impression of reasonableness and humane forbearance, except towards the particular follies of Parker."

TLS p1120 S 17 '71 460w

MARX, CLAUDE ROGER. See Roger-Marx, C.

MARX, KARL. Birth of the Communist manifesto; with full text of the Manifesto, all prefaces by Marx and Engels, early drafts by Engels and other supplementary material; ed. and annot. with an introd. by Dirk J. Struik. 224p il $7.50; pa $3.25 Int. pubs.

335.42 Marx, Karl—Communist manifesto
ISBN 0-7178-0288-4 LC 77-148513

This is an "analysis of the intellectual and socio-political origins of the Communist manifesto. . . . Struik places the document into the . . . milieu of post-French Revolutionary Europe and the industrial revolution . . . [and portrays] the relations among various radical socialist trends as conditioning factors on the Marx-Engels document." (Choice)

"The introduction Struik has provided for this useful volume has virtues and faults. First, his Marxist method has led him to write a splendid survey of the historical background; but the same ideological commitment also makes his discussion of Hegel arid and abstract. Indeed, it is such mumbo-jumbo that I dare any reader, even the most intelligent, to summarize it in his own words. . . . Finally, like many adherents, he diminishes the greatness of Marx and Engels by over praising them or trying to explain away some of their many and inevitable mistakes in judgment." A. G. Meyer

Am Pol Sci 66:606 Je '72 400w

"What makes this study particularly important is that Struik weaves his tapestry with the aid of recently discovered materials concerning these historical influences on the authors of the Manifesto. Some material is printed in this book for the first time, such as 'Confessions of faith.' . . . Struik provides the reader with extensive notes which are highly perceptive and serve as a bibliography for further contextual research. The volume meets the highest scholarly standards and will serve all students of the Communist movement. Highly recommended for all libraries as a superior research tool."

Choice 8:1510 Ja '72 180w

"College students will especially appreciate the editor's references to Balzac, Dickens, Stendhal, and Shelley and his discussion of how they viewed the struggles of the period. . . . This volume is the most interesting presentation of the Manifesto known to this reviewer." George Charney

Library J 96:2484 15 '71 130w

MARX, KARL. The Civil War in France. See Marx, K. Writings on the Paris Commune

MARX, KARL. The Cologne Communist trial; [by] Karl Marx and Frederick Engels; tr. with an introd. and notes by Rodney Livingstone. 298p $8.50 Int. pubs.

943 Communist Trial, Cologne, 1852. Communism
ISBN 0-7178-0240-X LC 75-168986

Included here are "Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne by Karl Marx, Heroes of the Exile by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, together with other writings by Marx and Engels on the Cologne Trial." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index and glossary of names.

Choice 9:566 Je '72 180w

"Contains material available for the first time in English. . . . Marx, who wrote his pieces during the heat of the conflict, at times seems harsh in his judgments. Engels wrote about the trial in 1885, and the passage of 30 years contributed to a more balanced appraisal. A reader interested in the history of Communism, in the specific problems of a revolution in defeat and the repression that followed, or in the personalities of Marx and Engels and the role these men played in this period will find this volume valuable and fascinating." George Charney

Library J 97:497 F 1 '72 100w
 TLS p151 F 11 '72 450w

MARX, KARL. Early texts; tr. and ed. by David McLellan. 223p $8 Barnes & Noble 335.42 Communism
 SBN 389-04056-8 LC 73-21149

The author's aim is "to include in one volume all the texts that are relevant to the discussion of Marx's early thought and to accompany them with enough commentary for the student of Marx to be able to see when and why they were written and to situate them in Marx's intellectual development." (Pref) Bibliography.

"The translations are clear and careful, although dropping indications of stressed words in Marx' manuscripts does not increase clarity. Most of the selections are in Writings of the young Marx on philosophy and society [K. Marx, BRD 1968]. . . . McLellan's introductory essay argues cogently that the connection between the early and late Marx lies in the continuing influence of Hegel on his thought. Each selection is introduced by a brief commentary." Choice 8:1461 Ja '72 160w

"This selection of Marx's writing . . . is well edited. . . . The writings of the pre-1848 period include extended treatments of the concept of alienation and are thus necessary for a proper understanding of Marx." Mark Poster
 Library J 96:1372 Ap 15 '71 140w

"The omission of some pre-1848 writings of Marx aside, McLellan's selection of Marx's early writings and brief introduction fulfills a definite need." A. D. Low
 Social Studies 63:337 D '72 550w
 TLS p55 Ja 15 '71 90w

MARX, KARL. On revolution; arr. and ed. with an introd. and new trs. by Saul K. Padover. (The Karl Marx lib. v 1) 682p $17.50 McGraw

322.4 Revolutions
 SBN 07-048079-6 LC 78-172260

A "collection of Marx's writings that are primarily concerned with his ideas on revolutionary undertakings in the Europe of his times. The many items are grouped chronologically under such main headings as revolutionary theory, France, Germany, and Spain. In addition to his . . . books and brochures. Marx's letters, journalistic pieces, and scattered articles on the subject of revolution are included, many of them translated into English for the first time." (Library J) Bibliography. Biographical index. Subject index.

"Some of the translations are by the editor, others from Moscow. The selections are quite extensive with editorial comments at a minimum. Nowhere does the editor indicate the original source for his translation. A good biographical and subject index. Suitable for purchase by public libraries; but not really adequate for scholarly research purposes." Choice 9:1204 N '72 130w

"The other great theologians have been reprinted in colossal series; now Karl Marx gets his turn. . . . [These are] epochal works on revolution by the man who is most frequently misread and misquoted on the subject. For all libraries." Christian Century 89:672 Je 7 '72 50w

"The volume permits one to acquire a broad grasp of Marx's views on revolution, which to be sure cannot be adequately understood without some knowledge of his economic theories. It may be presumed that Padover will present copious materials, printed and otherwise, relating to economic matters in subsequent volumes of the 'Karl Marx Library' series." Hyman Kublin

Library J 97:881 Mr 1 '72 130w

"[The editor] is to be complimented for his diligence in distilling Marx's writings on the subject of revolution. . . . With the exception of his brief introduction and sketches of the histories of the three countries, Padover does not interfere with the reader's drawing of his own conclusions. . . . [This] is the first volume of a thirteen volume series (including one of personal and family letters) that will take many years to complete. Mr. Padover, says his publisher, is also writing a two-volume biography of Marx." S. M. Lipset
 Sat R 55:53 Je 3 '72 1850w

MARX, KARL. The unknown Karl Marx; documents concerning Karl Marx; ed. with an introd. by Robert Payne. 339p il $8.75 N.Y. univ. press

308.88
 ISBN 8147-6554-8 LC 78-179986

This is a "collection of writings by or related to Karl Marx. . . . Payne writes three short essays as a general introduction and prefaces each piece with background comment. Marx' writings include three essays written when he was 17 on topics ranging from the search of a young man for a profession to the relation between Christ and the faithful. Also included are early poetic works by Marx as well as two later essays related to the 'Palmerston affair.' This collection also includes writings about Marx by his wife and by police agents, as well as some letters by his youngest daughter." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Most of [these writings] . . . have not appeared before in English. . . . Payne's essays are written in simplistic, cold-war fashion, contain falsehoods and misinterpretations, and are more harmful than helpful to understanding Marx's life and works. The collected writings do not speak to the core of Marx' career either, but they will be of interest to people who wish to experience some lesser known aspects of Marx' works and to those with interest in the more personal side of his life." Choice 9:658 Jl/Ag '72 120w

"There is still something to be got out of reading the Secret Diplomatic History of the Eighteenth Century and the Story of the Life of Lord Palmerston. The same cannot be said of Oulanem and the rest of the romantic stuff Marx composed at the age of nineteen for the benefit of his father and his fiancée. As he himself recognized, he lacked the gift to turn his emotions into satisfactory lyric poetry. What has induced Mr. Payne to assemble all this heterogeneous material in a volume mysteriously entitled The Unknown Karl Marx, heaven alone knows." TLS p578 My 19 '72 300w

MARX, KARL. Writings on the Paris Commune [by] Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels; ed. by Hal Draper. 248p $7.95 Monthly review

335.401 Paris—History
 SBN 85345-173-7 LC 70-142987

"For the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the Paris Commune founded by the workers of France in the wake of the Franco-Prussian War, Draper . . . has prepared this collection. . . . Included are . . . 'The Civil War in France,' . . . Marx's first and second drafts of this work [and] Engels' . . . introduction to it written in 1891 . . . [as well as] many of their unpublished views." (Library J) Glossary. Name index.

"[This is an] excellent collection of . . . documents. . . . Draper has assembled [his] material very well. He has chosen judiciously from the countless casual references and picked significant ones. He has rendered a great service by making available to the English-language reader the hitherto untranslated early drafts by Marx. But he is so blinded by the dogma accepted in the Leninist movement that he sticks to its tired interpretation despite all the evidence to the contrary he himself has gathered." A. G. Meyer
 Am Pol Sci R 66:606 Je '72 400w

Reviewed by Hyman Kublin
 Library J 96:2314 Jl '71 100w

MARX, ROBERT F. Shipwrecks of the Western hemisphere, 1492-1925. 482p il $15 World pub.

910.4 Shipwrecks. Salvage
 LC 73-149422

The author "first deals with the history of shipwrecks, salvage operations, the identification and preservation of finds, etc., and in the second part, provides a numbered listing of the shipwrecks along the east coasts of North, Central, and South America and the island groups off these shores. (A separate chapter is devoted to the wrecks off the coast of Florida.) The arrangement is chronological, and each entry is annotated." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

MARX, R. F.—Continued

"The fruit of eleven years of original research . . . this is certain to become the Bible of all wreck hunters and archaeologists. . . . [Marx's] approach to his subject is Herodotean in scope. . . . It is however with shipwrecks in the western hemisphere that he is here concerned. . . . [He] is meticulous in describing the navigational methods of the time, as well as the types of ships used in the Atlantic crossings, their design, construction, and even such details as exactly where the timber for their masts came from, their canvas and rope, and where their guns were founded. All this of course provides helpful evidence in the dating of wrecks. . . . Marx comes right up to the present day with detailed explanations of . . . many new devices—from sonar and fathometers to magnetometers." Ernle Bradford
Book World p14 O 24 '71 800w

"[There are] 64 pages of photographs, including four pages in color. This book will be much sought after by divers and treasure hunters, but it is also of importance for the great amount of history it provides." F. J. Anderson
Library J 97:497 F 1 '72 130w

MASLOW, ABRAHAM H. The farther reaches of human nature. 423p $12.50 Viking

155.2 Personality
ISBN 0-670-30853-6 LC 75-158417

Maslow's contribution to psychology focussed "on the inner sources of human health as opposed to the Freudian and post-Freudian emphasis on neurosis and pathology. The new dimension Maslow has added to his earlier work is a philosophic overview which embraces all the manifestations of human awareness along with their contradictions and vagaries and the irrationalism in the far reaches of human nature. Typically his book arranges itself around biology, creativeness, values, education, society, cognition and transcendence." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography.

"The following concepts covered in this clearly written, inspiring text just skim the surface of [the author's] crucial contributions; self-actualization; peak experiences; synergy; intrinsic education; being- and deficiency-motivation; sacralizing attitudes; primary and secondary creativeness. The papers in this book . . . do indeed reach toward the 'farther reaches of human behavior.'" Choice 9:723 J1/Ag '72 100w

"This work is essentially a revision and highly readable expansion of Dr. Maslow's earlier Toward a Psychology of Being. As a well-established intrapsychic theorist in clinical psychology, Maslow draws heavily on the theories of phenomenological psychopathology to 'prove' that we can deal intelligently with the admittedly slippery issues of human motivation and values. . . . The casual, easy theorizing concerning the inherent goodness strivings of man smacks of sentimentality; but there are solid suggestions for happy living which make this work . . . worthy of inclusion in most libraries." W. P. Knievel
Library J 96:3139 O 1 '71 110w

"Maslow's first posthumous work is not easy to assess, partly because of his personalized and polarizing style of writing, but also because of a nagging suspicion that many of his speculations contain ideas we recognize as valid. . . . I think it is this pervasive humanistic philosophy of the author that commends the book to the reader. . . . When you lay the book down, you feel a little more sure that human nature has depths and dimensions unreachable by analogies extended from pecking orders and mazes. . . . [However] the pretentious title promises more than the pages provide. . . . Nevertheless it is clear that Maslow was a man of vision and courage, a thinker whose reflections virtually amount to a world view that is articulated by way of some pretty unique principles." Rudolph Muska
Sat R 54:56 N 6 '71 800w

"There is so much in [this book] that it is hard to do justice to it, or even, for that matter, to the challenge of Maslow's amazingly fertile mind; his combining of teacher, seer, reporter, physician, visionary, social planner, critic; his ambition in tying together all varieties of apparently unrelated phenomena; his unstoppable optimism. . . . [The volume] includes a useful general introduction to Maslow's work by Henry Geiger. Papers are included on such subjects as 'Health and Pathology,' 'Transcendence and the Psychology of Being' . . . and the 'Fantasies of Patients in Psychotherapy'—the last-named being worth the price of the entire book." J. C. Oates
Sat R 55:53 Ag 26 '72 2100w

MASON, B. J. The physics of clouds. 2d ed 671p il $38.50 Oxford

551.5 Clouds. Physics. Meteorology
ISBN 0-19-851603-7 LC 70-27326

"The second edition of this [work] . . . is over a third longer than the first version. . . . [Mason] discusses macro- and micro-physics of clouds, as well as the physical and dynamic processes leading to rain, snow, and hail. . . . [A] chapter is also devoted to the . . . subject of electrification of clouds." (Choice)

"[The book's expansion] reflects the rapid growth of this important subfield of meteorology, spurred by the quest for more water and less hail from the sky and the vision of diverting hurricanes. . . . This excellent book . . . addresses itself to upper division undergraduates [and] can serve graduate students, research workers, and be used as a reference work. The coverage is such that in most cases one can obtain a reliable level of understanding on the state of knowledge to about the end of 1969. Only a few of the latest developments are included." Choice 8:1476 Ja '72 150w

"This new book will not disappoint scientists familiar with Mason and his work. It represents a thorough distillation of the literature, is written in an excellent style, and is well illustrated with drawings and photographs. . . . For the most part [Mason] has succeeded admirably in achieving the purpose of this extensive revision, that is, 'to provide a fairly complete and critical account of all important developments up to the end of 1969.' One distinct shortcoming in this book is the relatively inadequate treatment given the artificial modification of clouds and precipitation. . . . The book is an outstanding one which should be at the disposal of everyone seriously interested in the physics of clouds and precipitation." L. J. Battan
Science 174:1120 D 10 '71 400w

MASON, HERBERT. Gilgamesh: a verse narrative. 104p $4.95 Houghton

811
LC 71-125646

Mason has translated in free verse the ancient Babylonian epic of death and friendship. . . . [The book contains] an essay on the Gilgamesh as history and epic, a list of names and places, and an autobiographical postscript." (Va Q R)

"The legend of Gilgamesh is at once the oldest and the newest of our epics. Its date of composition has been set at about 2000 B.C. or even earlier. It is unquestionably older than either the Bible or the Homeric epics, and yet our knowledge of it dates from the 19th century. . . . Literary versions for the general reader have been slow in coming. Now by a curious coincidence, an Englishman, Nigel Dennis [in Exotics; poems of the Mediterranean and Middle East, BRD 1971.] and an American, Herbert Mason, have both brought out solid, imaginative renderings of the Gilgamesh epic. . . . Both scholar Mason and novelist Dennis make substantial additions to the fragmentary original materials. . . . As the more connected, lyrical and evocative 'imitation,' Mr. Mason's version is the one I would recommend to the first-time reader." Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p13 F 13 '71 260w

"A sensitive and readable narrative, faithfully capturing the spirit of the original. Needed and welcome, it is highly recommended." A. R. Schulman
Library J 96:1987 Je 1 '71 140w

"With a fine sense of language, [Mason] maintains the myth's simplicity without making it rudimentary or stylized, and renders the experiences, particularly Gilgamesh's search, in natural and even personal idiom." Va Q ■ 47:lxii spring '71 80w

MASON, HERBERT MOLLOY. Death from the sea; our greatest natural disaster, the Galveston hurricane of 1900. 260p il $7.95 Dial press

551.5 Galveston, Texas—Hurricane, 1900 LC 70-37445

This "account of the Galveston hurricane in 1900 begins with a brief history of Galveston, including earlier damaging hurricanes and the persistent rebuilding without attention to storm-proofing. The approach of the storm, its fury, its aftermath are viewed through the eyes of victims who lived to tell or write of their experiences." (Library J)

"Mason's book is an illustrated account, hair-raising and inspiring by turns." Christian Century 89:634 My 31 '72 40w

"This [is a] carefully researched, detailed [account]. . . . Mason's narrative of this great natural disaster in which more than 7000 persons perished vividly captures a frightening conflict between man and nature." Yvette Schmitt Library J 97:2248 Je 15 '72 100w [YA]

MASON, I. L. The origin of the domestic animals in Africa. See Epstein, H.

MASON, J. F. A., jr. auth. Christ Church and reform, 1850-1867. See Bill, E. G. W.

MASSAR, PHYLLIS DEARBORN. Presenting Stefano della Bella. See Bella, S. della

MASTERMAN, J. C. The double-cross system in the war of 1939 to 1945. 203p $6.95 Yale univ. press

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Secret service. Espionage, British ISBN 0-300-01496-1 LC 77-158140

This is "an internal memorandum, written in 1945, for the benefit of a British Government department, by one who had been personally involved in the running of 'double agents,' i.e., in using German spies against their German employers. . . . The British authorities have now agreed to the publication of this [document. It explains how] . . . every spy who came to Britain during the war, and who remained in touch with his German 'controller,' was not only controlled by the British but played his part in a systematic and . . . successful strategy of deception." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by P. R. Schratz America 126:436 Ap 22 '72 200w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks Atlantic 229:108 F '72 420w

Reviewed by B. D. Williams Best Sell 31:556 Mr 15 '72 320w

Reviewed by Malcolm Muggeridge Book World p1 F 13 '72 1150w Choice 9:1343 D '72 160w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh Christian Science Monitor p11 My 24 '72 160w

Reviewed by G. C. Zahn Commonweal 97:229 D 8 '72 500w Economist 242:51 F 19 '72 410w

"This is an interesting story, but it is only fair to point out that it is a solid, workmanlike official report, with a few additional comments on the theory and rationale of this type of operation. The main appeal will be to the serious student of espionage activities." Norman Horrocks Library J 97:680 F 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by W. D. Jacobs Nat R 24:806 J1 21 '72 290w

Reviewed by Geoffrey McDermott New Statesman 83:279 Mr 3 '72 700w

Reviewed by A. J. P. Taylor N Y Rev of Books 18:14 F 10 '72 900w

"Masterman's book . . . was not written for publication, and there is no attempt in it to go out and woo the public. . . . But this bureaucratic document is not at all bureaucratic in style. The author is a historian by profession, a novelist on occasion and his style is fresh and clear, enlivened by happy metaphors and a pleasant irony. [He] brings us right into the work of the Twenty Committee and puts that work in its proper context. Reading his book—in outward form so cool and official, in substance so immediate—we can share the delight in ingenuity, as the system grew, [and] the agony of the long suspense in 1943, when it seemed that so elaborate a construction could never be kept in operation, and in credit, long enough to reap the benefit when we should turn from defense to attack." Hugh Trevor-Roper N Y Times Bk R p1 Ja 30 '72 1150w

New Yorker 48:155 Mr 18 '72 160w

"Maintaining this elaborate double-cross system for four and a half years, without ever arousing the enemy's suspicion . . . was a phenomenal accomplishment that required unusual management. Sir John appropriately devotes a portion of his report to the organization that was developed to accomplish this task. . . . [His] book fills a vacant spot on the bookshelf of World War II history. He has described in detail the development and implementation of a double-agent and deception operation that cannot be paralleled." L. B. Kirkpatrick Sat R 55:68 F 19 '72 2650w

"A summary can do only scant justice to a book so full of wisdom on a subject about which so much nonsense has been written. . . . Masterman scores because he is a skilled writer. But he has the advantage over his rivals that he is writing about things that really happened with all the vivid actuality of contemporary experience. There is no better book than The Double-Cross System on wartime intelligence." TLS p171 F 18 '72 1700w

Va Q R 48:xcvi summer '72 110w

MASTERS, ANTHONY. The natural history of the vampire. 258p il $7.95 Putnam

133.4 Vampires

ISBN 0-399-10931-5 LC 70-175268

A "study of the psychological and physical phenomena of vampirism. . . . The author traces the vampire from tribal cultures to Mayan rituals to medieval Europe to modern literature and the screen. The traditional recognition signs are detailed, as well as a variety of ways to ensure the vampire's permanent death. Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"Mr Masters has sorted through anthropology, psychiatry, mythology, and even idle gossip, and packratted a mass of information on the vampire superstition. As to the reasons for the belief, the reader can take his pick of a dozen guesses, educated and otherwise." Phoebe Adams Atlantic 230:131 N '72 50w

"[This] will certainly appeal to devotees of the occult, but the general reader will also be pleased by the documentation and the lack of sensationalism. Indeed, the very calm and the control of the writing make the story all the more chilling. [The author places] special reliance on the work of the late Montague Summers. . . . Some vampires were mythical and some were (and are) real. Here the reader will find all he could ever want to know about both." M. K. Smith Library J 97:2741 S 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by Dale Thompson Library J 97:3822 N 5 '72 90w [YA]

MASTERS, DEXTER. The cloud chamber; il. by Joan Brady. 302p $6.95 Little LC 70-135436

In this novel "life exists underground somewhere near the great gorges of the far western United States. . . . [The chief character is] a dead but once brilliant physicist named Will Kessler whose pure science had degenerated into our age's number one monster: applied science. Shoring up his memory are a terrified mistress, a desperate general, a business executive, a cynical writer-administrator, a broken priest. They all float around the chamber, mostly talking. . . . An asteroid called Hecuba is approaching the world and the 'enemy' gets closer and closer. Things are falling apart and the center cannot hold." (Best Sell)

MASTERS, DEXTER—Continued

"In this story, [a cloud chamber] has become a metaphor exploring a functional society gliding through its last efficiencies. . . . Four or five characters carry the plot. . . . [They talk] with despair and lucidity like those wonderfully bright people in Huxley whose discourse flashes with fin de siècle wit, yet occasionally groaning like the inmates of Charenton. . . . [Their] apocalyptic visions fuse the book's assorted energies and promote the admonishing moral tone so familiar to us now. . . . Read this Entertainment; the pace is good and the technique has traces of Joyce and Robbe-Grillet." T. O'Hara

Best Sell 31:72 My 1 '71 460w

"[The author has] written a dull novel ■ a vehicle for his . . . ideas on such matters as the necessity for the nuclear bombing of Japan, the propriety of scientists' working on military weapons, and the imperialistic tendencies of America. He uses a style which is a mélange of Kafka, Aldous Huxley, and Vonnegut, but neither individual, nor memorable, nor really communicative. The novel is hardly worth purchase for any type of library, except one wishing novelized didacticism, minus plot and characterization."

Choice 8:1454 Ja '72 100w

Christian Century 88:326 Mr 10 '71 20w

"This strange novel . . . is largely unsuccessful, for as his narrator forewarns readers in the first chapter, the book is random, cold, remote, and confused. It was apparently written this way to simulate the randomness of particles seen in a cloud chamber, which Masters seems to see as a metaphor for the whole story. Although parts not only make sense but are written in clear, thoughtful prose, the novel as a whole is a difficult book to read and unravel, requiring a great deal of patience and some inclination to read a philosophical novel. Limited appeal, but large public libraries and college and university libraries should consider where they feel there is reader interest." Jack Forman

Library J 96:657 F 15 '71 150w

MASTERSON, PATRICK. Atheism and alienation; a study of the philosophical sources of contemporary atheism. 188p $7.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press

211 Atheism. Philosophy. Modern. God
ISBN 0-268-00452-8 LC 76-160424

"This book traces the philosophical . . . development of contemporary atheism from its origin in the rise of modern science and Cartesian philosophy to the present day. The underlying theme is the progressive transformation of the notion of human alienation. The author shows the stages whereby the traditional conviction that the alienated man is the man who does not believe in God has given way in modern thought to the view that belief in God is a profound source of human alienation." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Not as broad in coverage of views, especially contemporary ones, as S. Paul Schilling's God in an age of atheism [BRD 1970] nor as closely reasoned as William Lulipen's Phenomenology and atheism, this [study] will nevertheless be useful for those with little philosophical background and its organization around the theme of alienation provides a rather unique perspective. Worth having, but not a substitute for the above books which are more thorough-going. Includes notes."

Choice 9:662 JI/Ag '72 140w

"Masterson stares the atheist giants of modernity in the eye, never once blinks, and then looks past them to an affirmation of God. Here are bypaths and main roads in the history of alienation—and a first sign-post toward a way beyond it."

Christian Century 88:1333 N 10 '71 40w

"Masterson covers the well-trodden path from Descartes to Sartre and says nothing essentially new here. His exposition of the major thinkers in this period is clear and sound although rather brief. What attracted me most about his book was the final chapter in which he sketches the basis of a natural theology in an existential perspective. . . . Among other things, our existential response to reality points to a redefinition of rationality that could accommodate a rational basis for an affirmation of God. Masterson deals with this possibility in a suggestive, although admittedly succinct, manner." B. G. Murchland

Commonweal 95:453 F 11 '72 600w

MATHER, COTTON. Selected letters of Cotton Mather; comp. with commentary by Kenneth Silverman. 446p $15 La. state univ. press

B or 92

ISBN 0-8071-0920-7

LC 78-142338

This "selection of letters [is] accompanied by almost 100 pages of interspersed explanation and commentary. . . . Index." (Choice)

Am Lit 44:176 Mr '72 150w

"The book does not match the claim in the introduction that four-fifths of the 569 extant letters are included. . . . This sort of careless discrepancy mars also the useful background information from time to time: at one point Silverman records the deaths of six members of the Mather family in a two-week period, but fails to recognize, from the very Diary he cites, that the four persons named are all that died—enough, to be sure—and that the twins he adds are among those named. Correspondents and others not identified in the running commentary are identified in a glossary."

Choice 9:573 Je '72 200w

"Only a few 'runs' of correspondence with particular men have survived; the majority of letters are isolated pieces. And the editor implicitly admits the drawback through his constant use of the Mather diaries to put individual letters into an explicable context. Few debatable facts of Mather's career are resolved in the letters. No new levels of complexity are added to this most complex man. But in reading his correspondence ■ a piece, his personality (and through him, one facet of New England's personality) gains depth. . . . The editorial apparatus . . . is faulty. The letters are organized in a rough chronological/thematic scheme, hence cannot be read either chronologically or thematically." D. B. Rutman

New Eng Q 45:305 Je '72 1150w

MATHIS, SHARON BELL. Sidewalk story; il. by Leo Carty. 71p $3.95; lib bdg $3.77 Viking
SBN 670-64377-7; 670-64378-5 (lib bdg)
LC 71-136830

"Lilly Etta Allen watches helplessly as her best friend's family—a mother and seven fatherless children—is evicted from their apartment; she is appalled that her mother, as well as the other neighbors, seems stolidly to accept the situation. So when the moving men leave a mound of possessions piled high on the sidewalk, Lilly Etta, risking her mother's wrath, takes desperate and daring steps to publicize the plight of her friends." (Horn Bk) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

Reviewed by E. M. Graves

Commonweal 94:265 My 21 '71 120w

"[This] story of black poverty was the 1970 winner in its age category of the Council on Interracial Books for Children contest for manuscripts by black writers. But little of the black experience is revealed in the book. The specter of eviction has always haunted the urban poor—black or white. Moreover, expediency—even in times of crisis—can scarcely be substituted for literary depth and quality. The writing is reportorial; characterizations hover on the surface; and the traumatic occurrences fail to leave their mark on the reader's emotion or sensibilities." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 47:385 Ag '71 180w

"[The ending] is expected but the three-dimensional characters keep this from being pat or trite. The author has succeeded in portraying warm and realistic relationships among friends, families and neighbors." Merrilee Anderson

Library J 97:283 Ja 15 '72 160w

"Obviously Miss Mathis knows what she is about. . . . Her inner-city story . . . avoids the quivering-lip-amid-dirty-old-slum syndrome as well as the hooray-I-found-a-lovely-nest-of-magic-roaches-in-my-dirty-old-slum virus. Her Lilly is a real little girl and, confronting real problems, she behaves like a child, bull-headed, pro-life and charming. It is a lovely book, warm but not sticky, serious but not relentlessly grim and it certainly deserves better than its 'honest' (read oppressive) illustrations." Toni Morrison

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p43 My 2 '71 180w

MATT, LEONARD VON. The art of the Etruscans; phot. by Leonard von Matt; text by Mario Moretti and Guglielmo Maetzke; foreword by Donald Strong [tr. by Peggy Martin]. 252p il col il $35 Abrams

709.37 Art, Etruscan. Etruria
ISBN 0-8109-0021-1 LC 70-125781

In this study "eleven major Etruscan centers, including Latium, are . . . discussed in regard to their societies and histories. Each center, in turn, is . . . illustrated (in color and black and white) with examples of . . . Etruscan art objects." (Choice)

"The notes to each plate are brief but thorough. A clear map with an index of sites greatly aids the reader. This volume will interest the art connoisseur, the student of European art and the student of Etruscology. The book does not investigate the knotty problems of Etruscan studies nor the intricacies of academic Etruscan studies, as most books of this nature do, but presents the more outstanding artistic features of that mysterious ancient society. The authors also avoid the decline and unhappiness of the Etruscans. General and academic libraries would benefit by owning this volume."

Choice 8:1066 O '71 150w

"Matt's truly magnificent photos (including unusual views of some old friends among Etruscan artifacts), will strongly appeal to the general reader. . . . The study is divided into sections on a regional basis, thereby taking into account the recently accepted importance of regional differences." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 96:3999 D 1 '71 120w

Reviewed by Nathaniel Tarn

N Y Times Bk R p7 D 12 '71 250w

"A picture book, and of its sort an exceptionally good one. Leonard von Matt is a photographer who combines outstanding technical competence with a rare sensitivity for the works of classical antiquity. . . . Many of the pieces are shown in greater detail than ever their makers can have seen, and far greater than most museum visitors can ever hope to see. . . . [The text] is little more than a series of extended captions: the find-spot, size, present location and date of each object, together with a brief assessment of its historical and artistic significance. . . . The content is as nearly definitive as one could hope for from so brief a commentary on what is often very controversial material."

TLS p129 Ja 29 '71 440w

MATTHAEI, RUPPRECHT, ed. Goethe's color theory. See Goethe, J. W. von

MATTHEWS, G. M., ed. Keats: the critical heritage. 430p $17.50 Barnes & Noble

821 Keats, John
ISBN 0-389-04440-7

This "anthology of early criticism documents the poet's mixed reception by his contemporaries and the establishment of his posthumous reputation. All the reviews which appear in Keats' lifetime are reproduced with only minor abridgments, beginning with an . . . 1816 accolade by Keats' friend G. F. Matthews and Leigh Hunt's . . . Examiner essay. Of the criticism written during the 40 years after his death, the selections include extracts from Elizabeth Barrett's letters and end with Joseph Severn's moving tribute of 1863." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Each entry is dated and identified in terse, well informed headnotes, and a long introductory essay provides an overview of the bitter controversy engendered by the 'Cockney School' and the slow rise of Keats' fame. Selected bibliographies of early editions of Keats' works and books on Keats' critical reception . . . complete this well made book. . . . Matthews' text makes accessible to students of criticism as well as Keats' scholars a collection of primary materials, almost complete, which is not available otherwise without considerable research."

Choice 9:815 S '72 250w

"[This] carefully edited selection includes a generous gathering of critiques. . . . The critical comments are admirably judicious. . . . In an interesting paragraph, Mr Matthews identifies a 'socio-sexual revulsion' that is 'an oddly persistent feature of Keats criticism.' Understandably, Mr Matthews does not make high claims for the critical acumen of the early reviewers."

TLS p573 My 19 '72 380w

MATTHEWS, HERBERT L. A world in revolution; a newspaperman's memoir. 462p $12.50 Scribner

B or 92 World politics. History. Modern—20th century. Journalism
ISBN 684-12536-6 LC 70-162729

"With The New York Times from 1922 to 1967, the author served as reporter, correspondent, bureau chief, editorial writer and member of the editorial board. [In this book he describes and evaluates events he reported. They range] . . . from Mussolini's invasion of Ethiopia to the Spanish Civil War to Fidel Castro's Cuban revolution." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The real scholarly value of this book is for historians of American journalism. Matthews . . . reports at last on his two great struggles (the Spanish Civil War and Castro) with 'his' newspaper with complete candor. He . . . accuses the paper of failing to live up to its own credo when it suppressed his reports on Castro. Yet this is clearly criticism from a member of the family. Equally intriguing is the insight this provides into the relationship between the reporter . . . and the publisher-editor. . . . There is no doubt that much of this book is an attempt at self-justification by Matthews, particularly regarding his relationship to Castro, and on that subject Matthews' arguments are persuasive." W. F. Kimball

Am Hist R 77:1526 D '72 1100w

"[This] book cannot pass entirely as an historical document as Matthews is more opinionated than his journalistic predecessors [C. L. Sulzberger and A. Krock] in assessing personalities and policy decisions in the Spanish Civil War, Castro's Cuba, and Viet-Nam. . . . He provides . . . valuable insights into a number of global issues, past and present, and [his book] . . . is recommended for all academic and public libraries."

Choice 9:416 My '72 200w

"Of greatest interest in this controversial account of Matthews' reportorial career and the views he has drawn from it are the chapters on his coverage of the Spanish civil war and the Cuban revolution."

Christian Century 89:176 F ■ '72 30w

"[This] is an interesting book, if only for the light it throws on the impact of U.S. foreign policy in many places over many years, and for its revelations of the quirks and chinks in the policies of one of the world's great newspapers. But it is by no means the book it should have been; it is marred badly by Matthews' pedantic, unctuous, preachy tone and his almost morbid defensiveness. If he could only have shown us the world without inflicting on us the agonies of his ego, this might have been a great book. As it is, it is merely an important one whose annoyances must be overcome in order to appreciate its insights."

Eric Moon

Library J 97:676 F 15 '72 160w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

Nat R 24:288 Mr 17 '72 2400w

Reviewed by G. A. Craig

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ap 9 '72 850w

MATTHEWS, J. H. Surrealism and film. 198p il $8.50 Univ. of Mich. press

791.43 Surrealism. Moving pictures
ISBN 0-472-64135-2 LC 75-163624

This book discusses how the surrealists handled the problems of the cinema. It examines a "variety of surrealist pronouncements, scripts, and films—from movies made within the framework of commercialism by Luis Buñuel and Robert Benayoun, through materials like Buñuel's Un Chien andalou . . . to ephemeral short subjects. . . . [It also includes] statements made by surrealists in books, magazines, and film reviews as well as remarks made in private correspondence or conversation." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Professor Matthews, whose field is French, is more interested in presenting a collection of statements about film by critics associated with the surrealist movement . . . than in explaining his terms . . . for lightweight film buffs. With a dogged consistency of purpose, he has presented an invaluable and well-indexed guide to recondite sources. . . . The chapter on the films of Luis Buñuel, the only widely known director discussed in the book, is more respectful of the films and less concerned with statements about them. The analysis is clear and illuminating. . . . For film historians." R. A. Blake

MATTHEWS, J. H.—Continued

America 126:158 F 12 '72 400w

"I haven't read a better history of Surrealism's involvement with the movies than this one. . . . Matthews explains in lucid detail what the early French Surrealists, creative men like Breton, Desnos, and Brunius, seriously thought about film. . . . The blue-tinted illustrations have been carefully chosen for the eerie dramatic aura they lend to the rest of the book. Although I was disappointed that the author did not include any discussion of the Surrealistic aspects of the animated cartoon and the works of Jean Cocteau and Andy Warhol, I found his work to be an excellent introduction to a much misunderstood and controversial subject." Henry Halpern

Library J 97:1344 Ap 1 '72 190w

"Professor Matthews has written two previous books on Surrealism, both highly sympathetic and theory-prone. This one is an improvement, partially because of the inherent interest of the subject. Even so, he makes much of it sound humdrum. . . . As information the book is generally dependable and useful, especially for those of us who lack the opportunities to see these films. A few quibbles. There should be a bibliography. . . . The focus on what is strictly Surrealist has serious side effects. . . . As a critic Matthews turns away from some of the thornier theoretical problems."

N Y Rev of Books 18:24 Je 1 '72 370w

MATTHEWS, JACK. The charisma campaign.

181p $5.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-116800-8

LC 71-174511

This novel covers "six weeks in the life of Rex McCoy, successful used-car dealer in a small Ohio town. His wife is on vacation in Spain and business needs jacking up. During this stretch, he has ■ not very successful . . . affair with a young woman, dives headlong into two new promotion schemes for selling cars, is analyzed by ■ professor who wants to understand the secrets of his extraordinary influence on the people to whom he sells cars, and learns some painful truths about himself." (Publisher's note)

"Matthews has written ■ skillful, amusing, unpretentious novel about self-discovery in middle age, a subject that has floored more than one writer. Here it comes off very well." Alan Hislop

Book World p8 Ap 2 '72 350w

"Though the prose is workmanlike and the tone sure, Matthews is content with obvious surface impressions of the contradictions which at once characterize and generate our lives. And it will require less effort to grasp the easy (and false) generality than to measure the craft." Robert Buckeye

Library J 97:1034 Mr 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p41 Mr 19 '72 120w

"In forthright and captivating fashion the author tells a simple tale about ordinary people: ■ used car dealer with apparently hypnotic powers over prospective buyers, an academic figure of dubious authenticity, and a few foils of recognizable incompetence in the persons having nominal capacities as salesmen. From such commonplace, out-of-hand materials the author unfolds a yarn of compulsive interest. This is a 'fun' book of no pretensions and considerable charm."

Va Q R 48:c summer '72 70w

MATTHEWS, NOEL, comp. A guide to manuscripts and documents in the British Isles relating to Africa: comp. by Noel Matthews and M. Doreen Wainwright; ed. by J. D. Pearson. 321p $29 Oxford

016.916 Africa, Sub-Saharan—History—Bibliography. Archives—Great Britain

ISBN 0-19-713567-6 LC [72-300744]

"The area covered is Africa south of the Sahara and its scope includes all major collections of original papers of explorers and other individuals, business firms, missionary societies, British Army regiments, government departments and other official agencies, records of meetings of learned societies concerned with Africa, and many other categories. The arrangement is by institution grouped under city or town, with separate sequences for England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland. In the sections allotted to individual libraries, archives, museums, firms, societies, etc., there is a brief description of records and private papers relating in any way to sub-Saharan Africa." (Choice) Index.

"[This is a] companion volume to [M.] Wainwright and [N.] Matthews' Guide to Western manuscripts and documents on the British Isles relating to South and South East Asia [BRD 1967]. . . . Some of the information is duplicated elsewhere. Papers in private ownership are listed at the end. Index to places, persons, and institutions. . . . No significant omissions can be detected. Conditions of access are not always stated and this is probably by design as in many cases access may not be granted according to published regulation but depending on the status of the inquirer. Should be in all university and research libraries with African studies and British history programs or departments; a few smaller university and college libraries may also need it if they have relevant graduate programs."

Choice 9:1114 N '72 230w

"This [is an] exemplary piece of bibliographic craftsmanship. . . . Often the entries, which range from detailed listings of individual items to general descriptions of uncataloged documents, are as comprehensive as those of the catalogs of the various collections. Institutions with single items are not ignored, and the lengthy index of places, peoples, and authors is exhaustive. This volume is indispensable for anyone concerned with research on Africa." R. K. Rasmussen

Library J 97:1419 Ap 15 '72 130w

MATTHEWS, P. T. The nuclear apple; recent discoveries in fundamental physics. 150p pl $6.95 St Martins

539.7 Nuclear physics

LC 75-173566

This book "traces developments in fundamental physics essentially since 1900. Following an introductory chapter on the historical background, the author, professor of theoretical physics at Imperial College of Science and Technology, London, describes the major discoveries concerning the atomic nuclear reactions, time reversal, parity, and elementary particles." (Library J) Index.

"[The author] illuminates the crucial role which subnuclear forces play on earth and in the universe as a whole. He discusses the philosophical implications of subnuclear research which has given physicists 'a more confident understanding of the ideas . . . first proposed by Einstein, Heisenberg and Schrödinger.' The book will appeal to those with a physics background, even if they cannot agree with Matthews that work in high-energy physics 'must rank as one of the greatest achievements of human endeavor' since 1945."

Choice 9:670 JI/Ag '72 160w

"Intended for the reader who has a background in science without an extensive knowledge of nuclear physics . . . this carefully planned, well-executed presentation is suitable for the layman and should be useful as supplementary reading for beginning physics students at the undergraduate level." J. K. Lucke

Library J 97:887 Mr 1 '72 100w

MATTHEWS, WILLIAM H., ed. Man's impact on the climate; ed. by William H. Matthews [and others]. 594p $25 MIT press 551.6 Climate. Man—Influence on nature.

Air—Pollution. Ecology

ISBN 0-262-13075-0 LC 75-153295

"This volume is divided into eleven parts, each preceded by an introduction to the papers in that section. . . . Part I reproduces the SCEP [Study of Critical Environmental Problems] Work Group reports dealing with climate and with atmospheric monitoring and also the summary of those reports. . . . Part II provides a . . . semitechnical view of the factors that are involved in determining climate and in changing climate, and also outlines how man might affect these processes through the introduction of pollutants. The understanding of these processes and interactions can be achieved only through mathematical modeling and through monitoring. The reader is introduced to the concepts of these two areas in Parts III and IV, respectively. Parts V through IX are devoted to discussions of specific pollutants that may affect the climate. . . . Some monitoring techniques which are applicable to most of these problems are discussed in detail in Part X. The final section . . . contains several papers which illustrate the . . . social and political issues which must be addressed if decisions which could avert potential disasters are ever to be made and implemented." (Pref) Chapter bibliographies. Name index. Subject index.

"Most, but not all, of the papers offer lists of references; however, variation in style of citation is an annoyance that the editors might have corrected. A 'should buy' for advanced undergraduates."

Choice 9:394 My '72 170w

"This volume is one of two (the other is Man's Impact on Terrestrial and Oceanic Ecosystems) which report the scientific details of the one-month Study of Critical Environmental Problems held in July 1970 and sponsored by M.I.T. Participating were several dozen academic, governmental, and industrial experts in meteorology, environmental pollution, and related fields. . . . There has clearly been some effort on the part of the authors and editors to make the contents accessible to the general public, but most readers will probably read only selected items in this large and detailed volume." J. W. Wiegel

Library J 97:894 Mr 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by A. L. Hammond
Science 176:38 Ap 7 '72 290w

MATTHIAS, ERICH, jt. ed. German democracy and the triumph of Hitler. See Nicholls, A.

MATTHIESSEN, PETER. The tree where man was born, the African experience [by] Peter Matthiessen [and] Eliot Porter. 247p maps il col pl $17.50 Dutton

916.7 Africa, East—Description and travel—Views
SBN 0-525-22265-0 LC 75-153598

The author of Blue Meridian, the Search for the Great White Shark (BRD 1971) describes his experiences in East Africa during several visits in 1960-1970. He journeyed from the upper Nile in Sudan, south through Tanzania, and Northwest to Lake Rudolf on the Kenyan frontier. He visited the White Highlands, the Masai herdsman, the Elephant kingdom, Serengeti game reserve, the Great Caldron Mountains of Tanzania and the aborigines of Gidabembe. Portions of this book originally appeared in the New Yorker. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Peter Matthiessen, who began as a fiction writer, has become through his travels and study of anthropology a walking book of knowledge. But his speculation about human prehistory tends to clot his prose, leaving the reader behind. However, if one does not fuss over his technical terms and reads with a skipping eye, the firm truths are there. . . . Entwined with this curiosity about the dim past is Mr. Matthiessen's second and to me more engrossing theme: his observations of the natives, the landscape, the wildlife he encountered. . . . [Eliot Porter's] sense of composition is flawless. . . . Taken together these two artists have discovered for me an Africa I have never seen or properly appreciated before." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 230:125 N '72 850w

Best Sell 32:355 N 1 '72 250w

"This book is visually very attractive, but of little intrinsic importance. The text is no more than a lengthy impressionistic survey of man and nature in East Africa by the very literate novelist, Peter Matthiessen, whose limited knowledge of things African shows badly." R. K. Rasmussen

Library J 97:3923 D 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by Eliot Elisofon
Natur Hist 81:92 D '72 2150w

"[Matthiessen's] account is a tapestry of . . . travel fragments woven together with great skill, but nonetheless disparate and more or less unrelated to Eliot Porter's pictures. . . . It is a plethora of information in The New Yorker fashion—damn near more than we can stand. . . . Throughout, the narration of his trip affirms the singleness of man and nature. . . . There are points of contact [between the photographs and the text, but] . . . none suggests Matthiessen's keen and troubled wanderlust. . . . I hope the future holds a paperback of the text . . . so that others than the most jaded and satiated members of our society can read it. No less may be wished for the photographs, but, however their technical mastery suits or departs from the Matthiessen reportage, the pictures never come home to Africa as he does." Paul Shepard
N Y Times Bk R p31 N 26 '72 1450w

"[Matthiessen recounts his experiences with a Stone Age tribe and describes the baobab tree] the tree where man was born . . . which may live 2,500 years. . . . [He] is a fine writer; searching for 'this glimpse of the earth's morning, he skillfully blends history and anthropology with precise observations of animals and landscapes. He tells us exactly what he sees and hears and feels. . . . Eliot Porter's photographs of the African landscape, of the textures of bark and granite . . . and the details of flower, moss and plants, are superbly reproduced in color plates. His portraits of animals convey a formality and dignity that I have seen in no others. Porter's special genius is for seizing the essence of the beasts.'" P. S. P.

Newsweek 80:103 O 30 '72 130w

Sat R 55:78 O 28 '72 400w

MAUD, RALPH. Dylan Thomas in print; a bibliographical history [by] Ralph Maud, assisted by Albert Glover. 261p $11.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

016 Thomas, Dylan—Bibliography
SBN 8229-3201-6 LC 78-101190

"Section 1 of this volume, arranged chronologically from 1934 to 1968, first lists works by Thomas, then anthologies in which his work has appeared, and finally, books of criticism. Section 2 lists Welsh periodicals and newspapers in which Thomas material, including book reviews, has appeared; Section 3, English periodicals; Section 4, American and Canadian. . . . Section 5 consists of foreign language material, arranged . . . by language." (Library J)

"The subtitle is a euphemism for a list of works by and about Dylan Thomas that will prove . . . difficult to use. . . . There are omissions in any such undertaking; listing them is fatuous. But one cannot forbear commenting, in respect to the preface, that 'lively and readable' bibliographies are not. The book is badly and cheaply bound. Until someone constructs a similar collection or rearranges the present one, this volume ought to be on all college and research library shelves."

Choice 8:1319 D '71 130w

"Since the arrangement in the . . . sections is by title of newspaper or periodical, it would have been more useful, it seems, to have had the titles arranged alphabetically; here there is apparently no systematic arrangement except by chronological date or article under each title. . . . [However] this will be a helpful tool for research on the development of Thomas criticism." L. E. Bone

Library J 95:2450 J1 '70 150w

TLS p254 Mr 3 '72 340w

MAULDIN, BILL. The brass ring. 275p il $7.95 Norton

B or 92 World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives
SBN 393-07463-3 LC 78-152671

Mauldin describes his life and army experiences up to the end of World War II when he won a Pulitzer Prize at age 23 for his book of cartoons entitled Up Front (BRD 1945).

"Mauldin's 'sort of memoir' contains much information on how to publish an army newspaper while the army is on campaign, and a clutch of anecdotes, some grim, others comic, on which the author has presumably been sitting until everyone concerned was safely dead or retired. Readers who recall 'that other war' should find the book highly readable; the younger crowd may find it both incomprehensible and barbarous. [The] illustrations, include a number of the mordant Joe and Willie cartoons." Phoebe Adams

MAULDIN, BILL—Continued

Atlantic 228:152 N 1 '71 80w

"[This] is Bill Mauldin's twelfth book. It is autobiographical . . . from scrawny, uncertain kid to . . . prize-winning cartoonist. . . . Mauldin uses the tools of his trade with superb skill. A favorite is exaggeration. . . . The exigencies of his service in World War II transformed him from a clever gag cartoonist to an internationally known satirist of depth and stature, and possibly the best of all war cartoonists." R. E. O'Brien
Best Sell 31:401 D 1 '71 370w

Reviewed by Michael Olmert
Book World p12 Ja 16 '72 600w

"While the book is deeply absorbing the reader must endure ■ seasoning of straightforward army talk, some of which is unnecessary. But even his use of four-letter words is accompanied by ■ surprising, innate innocence. Mauldin, in words or pictures, comes out ■ likable winner. In ■ profession where public charm and popularity are rare coin he is rich to overflowing. From his early life in near poverty to an army life of a comparative luxury, success dogged his footsteps. He deals with the war in purely human terms, without politics or passion, and his remarkable achievements are described laconically." Guernsey Le Pelley

Christian Science Monitor p29 D ■ '71 150w

Reviewed by G. A. Harrison
New Repub 165:26 D 25 '71 1250w
■ Y Times Bk R p24 F 20 '72 120w
Newsweek 79:111A F 21 '72 550w

Reviewed by Gerald Clarke
Time 99:70 Ja 31 '72 500w

MAULE, HAMILTON. See Maule, T.

MAULE, TEX. Running scarred; the odyssey of a heart-attack victim's jogging back to health. 215p $6.95 Saturday review press

616.1 Heart—Diseases. Jogging
ISBN 0-8415-0151-3 LC 70-182480

"In this book the author, a noted sportswriter, relates his recovery from a massive coronary attack. The great majority of the book is devoted to the sport of jogging." (Library J)

"[The book] should be of interest to the many practitioners of the 'Aerobics' physical fitness program. From a medical viewpoint, the book is interesting in that it convincingly offers evidence against the idea 'that a post-cardiac patient should spend the rest of his life as a semi-invalid.'" R. P. Steensland
Library J 97:1452 Ap 15 '72 80w

"How [Maule] entered the [Boston Marathon] race (against his doctor's advice) is the conclusion to a book that should interest heart patients and joggers everywhere."

N Y Times Bk R p128] My 21 '72 80w

"This is a genial, laconic account of [the author's] road back from disaster. . . . Though the book may be read as a guide for the late-blooming runner, it is far more entertaining as testimony to the gray area between sickness and health, which many people inhabit but few write about." Martha Duffy Time 99:90 Je 12 '72 270w

MAURER, CHARLES B. Call to revolution; the mystical anarchism of Gustav Landauer. 218p $9.50 Wayne state univ. press

335 Landauer, Gustav. Anarchism and anarchists
ISBN 0-8143-1441-4 LC 75-148270

A biography of the German anarcho-socialist who sought to create "a revolution of the human spirit, a rediscovery of the natural bonds among men. . . . This community of feeling would have its immediate expression in small cooperatives. By regrouping men into communes, a more pristine social order would be restored, one that would no longer require the state. . . . [This book] attempts to restore [Landauer's] memory and to study anarcho-socialist ideas both ■ they relate to one personality and in their historical context." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This first biography in English of one of the more interesting intellectual figures of imperial Germany does justice to its complex subjects."

Choice 9:567 Je '72 180w

"Landauer was a not unimportant figure in the middle echelons of Germany's radical life in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Typically, he was a philosopher, a novelist, a literary critic, and a man of action. Maurer's biographical effort here, while trying heroically to apotheosize his subject, is, regrettably, hardly more than a thin gloss on each of these aspects of Landauer's life and works, and seems to miss that holistic grasp on the man and his time that would make him come to life for us." L. S. Kaplan
Library J 97:1441 Ap 15 '72 120w

MAXIMUM security: letters from California's prisons; ed. by Eve Pell and members of the Prison Law Project; introd. by Fay Stender. 250p $6.95 Dutton

365 Prisons—U.S.
SBN 0-525-15428-0 LC 77-165596

In this book, which consists mainly of letters written by inmates in California prisons, the "first part . . . chronicles the horror and brutalization of prison life; the second part captures the . . . rhetoric of articulate inmate-victims who regard their revolutionary liberation as imminent." (Library J)

"The writing of the inmates is stark and striking, but it is also dishonest. For although the authors . . . condemn the sadism and brutality of prison employees, at no time do they examine their own brutality. The inmates never speak of the offenses which brought them to prison, only of the forces which keep them there. Justifiable anger is reduced to pitiable political rhetoric as the inmates attempt self-righteously to place blame on others while avoiding their own culpability. . . . Despite the hypocrisy of the inmate-authors and the drivel in the book's introduction, the thesis of Maximum Security is valid: Our prisons must be changed." B. N. Odell
America 126:243 Mr 4 '72 380w

"This book is awful. No sane person can possibly read it at one sitting. After every few letters, I had to put it down and do something, anything, to distract myself. This is what the counter-culture means by 'Amerika.' We went to war with Nazi Germany because of this sort of thing and yet it flourishes, repeat, flourishes, in our land in the 1970's. [This] is a volume that should start a crusade for judicial and penal reform. It is the 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' of our decade, and as such, it deserves to be in every public library. It should also be popular on college campuses." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 31:509 F 15 '72 280w

Choice 9:586 Je '72 150w

"During ■ period when the California Department of Corrections permitted prisoners to send sealed and uncensored letters to their attorneys, a virtual flood of mail resulted which detailed life 'inside.' The Prison Law Project selected from among thousands of such letters those that best conveyed the experience of convicted felons who spend long periods in adjustment centers, rather than that of 'the average inmate who adjusts to the system, does his time and gets out.' . . . If viewed from the limited perspective of political advocacy, the book accomplishes its purpose. There is no effort to suggest alternatives to imprisonment that transcend cultures and political systems. Letters from Prison explicitly characterizes this nation, rather than the principle of imprisonment, as the fundamental evil." Morton Bard
Library J 97:483 F 1 '72 190w

Reviewed by Anita Iceman

Library J 97:1183 Mr 15 '72 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Jessica Mitford

N Y Rev of Books 18:31 Mr 9 '72 700w

"What life is like [in American prisons] . . . is the subject of this sickening, powerful book. . . . It pricks and bites and makes your skin crawl. Some of the writers, despite their lack of education (maybe because of it) possess great natural eloquence. . . . Many of the selections are also very unbalanced and over-emotional, but the book is meant to be that way. You don't stir people up with 'on the other hands.' As 'Maximum Security' makes clear, 'rehabilitation' is a cruel joke, one of those catch phrases we keep repeating until we really think it is true, like 'pacification' or 'protective reaction.'" S. V. Roberts

N Y Times Bk R p5 F 6 '72 1250w

MAXWELL, ARTHUR E., ed. The sea: ideas and observations on progress in the study of the seas; v. 4, New concepts of sea floor evolution; special advisory ed: Sir Edward Bullard [and] J. Lamar Worzel. 2pts 791/664p il maps ea $32.50 Interscience

551.4 Ocean. Oceanography—Research
ISBN 0-471-57910-6 (pt 1); 0-471-57911-4 (pt 2) LC 62-18366

This volume is "the continuation of the series published in 1963 under the editorship of Maurice N. Hill. . . . The first section contains 20 original, previously unpublished articles that treat the knowledge of the sea floor by scientific discipline on a worldwide basis. . . . [The second section] includes sixteen articles. Fourteen of them present a . . . treatment of certain regional areas and integrate geological and geophysical data. . . . Two concluding contributions . . . draw concepts from the preceding discussions that help explain how the ocean floor has evolved to its present state." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Author index. Subject index. For volume one see BRD 1963.

"This fourth volume printed in separate parts is simply overwhelming. No other single source contains all the presented information on sea floor evolution. The coverage of the Arctic Basin is superb and the Pacific information is most complete. There is no other single chapter on the Atlantic which provides the same scope. Volume four is a magnificent addition to the series and should be an important addition to every library."
Choice 8:1608 F '72 60w

"I must confess to a certain amount of disappointment in looking at part 1. . . . Most of the chapters were written some time ago, many bearing date in 1968. In such a rapidly moving field many of the articles have become out of date, through no fault of the authors. I also found that some of the chapters in this part are very similar to articles previously published. . . . The second part I found much more satisfying. . . . Many of the chapters . . . combine different techniques that have been used and observations that have been made in the study of a particular area and attempt to arrive at a conclusion based on all the available data. The geology and geophysics of the areas discussed are given in a more complete manner than is usual, and this part hence proves a useful compendium of information."
C. G. A. Harrison
Science 175:52 Ja 7 '72 490w

MAY, JULIAN. Blue River; il. by Robert Quackenbush. unsp $4.95 Holiday

614 Water—Pollution—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8234-0191-X LC 79-151756

"Inspired by the fate of an actual river, this picture book describes the slow pollution of that river as it changed from a source of food for Indians to a garbage dump for modern man. When hundreds of dead fish were washed ashore, the people living in a city along its banks realized that something had to be done to rid the water of pollutants. They built a garbage disposal system and planted trees along the shore as first steps in their campaign. . . . Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"Using simple language, some ecological concepts are identified, but few are clearly explained. The artistic three-color pen-and-wash paintings are often jarring when compared with the harsh realities of the text. (Ironically, one illustration shows a billboard stating, 'Help Save Blue River.' But billboards themselves deface the landscape). Though taken from a true story, Blue River reads like an ecological fairy tale." Nancy Schildt
Library J 97:1599 Ap 15 '72 140w

"In spite of saying that turtles eat the 'smelly' algae and showing an incinerator ■ a better way of garbage disposal, [this book] generally succeeds. [The] drawings fill the pages behind a surprisingly brief text and harmonize with its didactic style." Paul Shepard
N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja ■ '72 80w

MAY, JULIAN. The land beneath the sea; il. by Leonard Everett Fisher. unsp $4.25 Holiday

551.4 Oceanography—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8234-0183-9 LC 72-141405

This book describes the irregular surface of the sea bottom with its "mountains, cracks, chasms, landslides, and occasional volcanoes. [The author] explains what this 'second land on earth' is like, how it is being discovered, the processes that formed it, and how various sea animals and plants live in its many environments." (Publisher's note) "Grades three to four." (Library J)

"The book is descriptive in presentation, relating facts without giving any detailed explanation of how they were deduced. There are, of course, general references to trawls, echo sounders, and deep-sea exploring craft; but the author very sensibly avoids discussing abstract physics. The book should remain useful in any primary-school library without becoming dated for a good many years." H. C. Stubbs
Horn Bk 48:289 Je '72 120w

"With three or four concise sentences per page, the author presents a wealth of information to beginners about the bottom of the ocean. More than half the information is presented in blue type on blue background and is difficult to read. . . . Fisher's schematic engravings are the book's weak point. They seldom appeal to readers at this age level who prefer 'real' pictures. And while the clearly labelled drawings reinforce the parallel text in explaining echo sounders and coral reefs, they are inadequate for interpreting ocean depths and coral structures. . . . However, this book could be useful for its text if librarians take into account the fact that prior knowledge is needed to interpret many of the drawings." T. S. Austin

Library J 96:2132 Je 15 '71 220w
TLS p815 Jl 14 '72 60w

MAY, JULIAN. Plankton; drifting life of the waters; il. by Jean Zallinger. unsp lib bdg $4.95 Holiday

574.92 Plankton—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8234-0199-5 LC 75-179097

The author describes the microscopic plants and animals moving about in fresh and salt bodies of water, and stresses their importance to other sea life and to man. "Ages nine to fourteen." (Book World)

"[This is] an absorbing little book that gives the invisible life teeming in our waters the attention it deserves. Not only is plankton one of our most important but overlooked natural resources, it is among the most beautiful ■ well. Aided by Jean Zallinger's vivid sketches, Miss May shows us 'tiny animals that look as if they were made of glass, darting, swimming, drifting, wriggling. . . . The reader also learns that while the algae strangling mighty Lake Erie are one variety of plankton, the gas that runs the family car may derive from another. A modest book, its implications are cosmic.' Richard Curtis

Book World p12 (children's issue) My 7 '72 130w

Reviewed by C. P. Haro
Library J 97:2939 S 15 '72 190w

Reviewed by E. F. Porter
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p8 My 7 '72 60w

MAYER, ARNO J. Dynamics of counterrevolution in Europe, 1870-1956: an analytic framework. 173p $1.95 Harper

323.2 Government, Resistance to. Revolutions
ISBN 0-06-131579-6 LC 77-145684

The author "seeks to develop an analytical framework for the study of counterrevolution. . . . [His] thesis is that the United States, in opposing 'monolithic totalitarianism,' was unable to distinguish the fundamental contrasts which allegedly differentiate fascism and communism." (Ann Am Acad)

Reviewed by F. H. Hinsley
Am Hist R 77:1440 D '72 550w

"According to Professor Mayer, the Soviet Union, unlike major fascist regimes, was never dependent on external war and conquest for internal political stability and survival. Like Mayer's other efforts to distinguish between communism and fascism, this assertion presents problems. It is by no means evident that the major fascist regimes were dependent on external war for their survival. . . . Professor Mayer sees the need for research which relates the internal instability of governing elites to the formulation and conduct of foreign policy, and especially the linkage between internal instability and international conflict. Quite properly, he draws a balance between quantitative and qualitative research, both of which have potential for the study of counterrevolution. . . . [He] raises important questions of a theoretical nature." R. L. Pfaltzgraff

MAYER, A. J.—Continued

Ann Am Acad 399:201 Ja '72 850w

"The author writes that he is a 'confirmed leftist critic of those Allied and American policies . . . that condoned or advanced . . . of the counterrevolutionary side in the era of the communist revolution.' For him the communist revolution in Russia and China is 'the central event of this era', and counter-revolution 'symbiotically related' to it. Revolution 'can be conceived as a coherent idea and utopian vision that have found bayonets,' while counter-revolution 'is in the nature of bayonets in search of a fabricated idea and a millenarian charge'. To Professor Mayer the difference may seem both lucid and illuminating; others may think . . . that really revolution and counter-revolution are six of the one and half-a-dozen of the other." Elie Kedourie

Encounter 39:45 Jl '72 470w

"[Mayer's] 'analytic framework' turns out to be a mélange of Old and New 'Left homiletics about 'seven varieties of counterrevolution,' and pejorative obiter dicta about Establishment 'action intellectuals' and their tendentious frames of reference. What he has failed to notice, content aside . . . is how closely his own mode of analysis hews to the empty schematics, jargon, and clichés of the conservative social science orientation he criticizes. . . . Inadvertently, then, the book proves to be a kind of testimonial to the power of the methodological and conceptual 'ideology' of this very social science to absorb even its intended critics and make them speak its language. . . . There is, regrettably, relatively little in this work to excite the interest of students of historical social movements." L. S. Kaplan

Library J 96:2315 Jl '71 300w

"While this abstruse book, with its highly complex language and its lack of adaptability to real situations, does not adequately represent historical or for that matter political theory as judged from any political angle, it does not lack distinct values. In the first place—and this is not meant facetiously at all—Professor Mayer's honest and tightly reasoned attempt demonstrates to others how not to tackle the difficult problems of historical typology. Therewith he has rendered an important service to future students in the field. Secondly, the study does not lack keen logical observation and perception of political and social, though not psychological, phenomena. It does not descend to the Marxian oversimplification of old, and it rarely resorts to glib clichés. This is no mean achievement."

R. A. Kann

Pol Sci Q 87:469 S '72 900w

MAYER, HANS. Steppenwolf and Everyman: tr. and with an introd. by Jack D. Zipes. 325p $6.95 Crowell

809 Literature

ISBN 0-690-77440-0 LC 79-146285

"These 11 essays vary in length from the rather short (13-26 pages) essays on Hesse, Ionesco, Musil and Sartre to the long (128p.) essay on Bertolt Brecht. They vary in emphasis from the elucidation of particular works (like Dr. Zhivago) to comparisons of the novelistic conceptions of two writers (like Mann and Grass), observations on a writer's views (like Gombrowicz) or on his situation (like Sartre's), and to analyses of the state of literature in Russia and the U.S." (Choice)

"This exciting, readable collection of essays should appeal to college students, graduate or undergraduate. . . . Unlike the stereotype of the Marxist critic, who advocates turning literature into propaganda, Mayer, in the tradition of 'para-Marxists' like George Lukacs, respects first of all the integrity of the work of art. . . . [The] excitement stems from Mayer's firm grasp of the key issues of our time, a fact which, as the translator-editor Jack Zipes points out, paradoxically puts him ahead of it. Mayer's work is grounded in an incisive dialectical method designed to bring the reader to his own syntheses."

Choice 8:1170 N '71 230w

"An important German Marxist critic . . . Mayer discusses Musil . . . Dürrenmatt . . . Mann, and Pasternak in dense, often provocative terms. One-third of the volume is an excellent long essay on Brecht's highly conscious response to traditional literature in which Mayer shows how Brecht's negation of tradition 'is in itself understood . . . as a new tradition which is to be established.' The title essay was written especially for this volume; [some of] the others are from Mayer's many German publications of the 1960's. Zipes in his useful introduction discusses Marxist criticism and Mayer's place within it. For academic collections of literary criticisms and comparative literature." J. W. Charles

Library J 96:1930 Je 1 '71 130w

MAYER, MARTIN. About television. 433p $10 Harper

384.55 Television broadcasting

SBN 06-012879-8 LC 70-181633

Combining history, criticism and anecdote Mayer traces the development of the industry from the 1930's to the present. He discusses "the politics of the networks and the FCC, the competition for profits and the impact of local and public broadcasting. . . . [He] also investigates rating systems, audience reaction research, documentaries, news shows and cable television." (Best Sell) Index.

"[Mayer] presents a very readable, very popular history of television, centering on the United States and the English speaking world, but also taking a world view as well. If he mixes in a little gossip, in the style of TV Guide, it's because some of the book appeared in that magazine in the past few years. After paying homage to the pioneers of the industry, the book quickly becomes a friendly critique of the current TV scene. . . . Television buffs will really enjoy [the book] and public libraries will want to have more than one copy. Serious scholars however, will have to wait for a better history of this young industry." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 32:137 Je 15 '72 250w

Choice 9:1145 N '72 120w

"For those with a stake in the field—even an intellectual one—[Mayer's] book is a treasure-trove of memories, facts and ideas, sifted for relevance, then shaped with unflagging intelligence into a journalistic whole. It is history, criticism, and sometimes good storytelling. . . . [This is] a book that swallows the universe of television whole and digests it before your eyes. And its international perspective richly fills the vacuum within which the American side of the business is so often viewed. Best of all for many will be the final chapter. All the facts in and the story largely finished, Mr. Mayer turns to some delightful uncluttered conclusions, including a no-nonsense rejection of McLuhan's thesis about the medium and the message." Alan Bunce

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 28 '72 450w

Reviewed by M. S. Lasky

Library J 97:2383 Jl '72 200w

Reviewed by Foster Hirsch

Nation 215:570 D 4 '72 2100w

"While he writes entertainingly and well, [Mayer] has not done justice to the medium. No one else has either, to be sure, and Mayer brings to television a better, more discerning mind, a sharper wit, and surely a more delightful style than have characterized other efforts.

But it is television that is, or at least should be, the subject of this book—not television-and-news in one chapter-article, television-and-sports in another, television-and-children in a third, and so on. There is an episodic quality to the book that belies a real sense for the continuity of the medium itself. . . . But it at least begins the discussion of this vital medium that must now take place if we are to deal effectively with its strengths and weaknesses. And it begins it well." R. D. Heffner

Sat R 55:62 Ag 26 '72 1350w

MAYFIELD, SARA. Exiles from paradise; Zelda and Scott Fitzgerald. 309p $8.95
Delacorte press

B or 92 Fitzgerald, Francis Scott Key.
Fitzgerald, Zelda (Sayre)
LC 76-137744

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by H. D. Piper
Am Lit 44:512 N '72 250w

Reviewed by Aaron Latham
Book World p4 D 19 '71 650w

Reviewed by R. M. Adams
N Y Rev of Books 18:26 Ja 27 '72
600w

Reviewed by Daniel Aaron
Va Q R 48:157 winter '72 420w

MAYNARD, JAMES. Some microeconomics of higher education; economies of scale. 186p $7.95 Univ. of Neb. press

378.73 Education, Higher
ISBN 0-8032-0792-1 LC 76-139371

"This study is an attempt to derive a meaningful relationship between the size of institutions of higher learning and cost per student (largely educational and general cost) in those institutions." (J Higher Ed) Bibliography. Index.

"Economists have wrestled some time with the problem of trying to apply the conventional tools of microeconomics to education. Maynard presents no great contribution to the effort. . . . There are substantial quarrels that can be raised concerning the [author's] statistical procedure, but the critical reader is not likely to read beyond the chapters discussing . . . [his] theory. Finally, the book is not well written, leaning heavily on quotations which usually lend little to the argument. If one were to cite a positive aspect it would be the extensive bibliography."

Choice 8:1618 F '72 130w

"We should award Mr. Maynard A for effort, for serious cost analysis of higher education is badly needed and it is good that competent economists are turning their attention in this direction. This book does not resolve all the issues, as its author is the first to admit, but it makes a good try. . . . [It] brings many interesting insights to the problem and deserves careful reading. I hope, among other things, that it will stimulate additional analysis." J. A. Kershaw

J Higher Ed 43:310 Ap '72 750w

MAYNE, RICHARD. The Europeans. 206p $6.95 Lib. press

914 Europe—Description and travel. Europe—Social life and customs. Europe—Civilization. National characteristics
ISBN 0-912050-22-5 LC 70-39632

The author of The recovery of Europe, BRD 1970 and The community of Europe, BRD 1963, examines the geography and cultural characteristics of the peoples of Western Europe. Bibliography. Index.

"Mayne is not in the league of the greats who have tried to define homo Europaeus—Valery, Ortega and the like; his is more in the line of fun and games about identities and intentions. Worth an hour or two, especially if you plan to travel."

Christian Century 89:928 S 20 '72 50w

Christian Science Monitor p13 O 18 '72
100w

Economist 243[i.e.234]:65 Je 17 '72
230w

"[Mayne's] book is a short, light-hearted journey in quest of the European character, investigating its history, languages and rivalries with a mass of odd information and perceptions. His style is literary [and] sometimes rather mannered. . . . But he provides a scholarly and well-informed tour, and does not try to minimize the differences: he gives special attention to other countries' stereotypes of the Germans, Italians, French and English. The chapter on the English as seen by others is full of warnings. . . . Mayne perseveres patiently with his search, but in the end he tacitly admits defeat. Like other authors he quotes, he writes better about national differences and prejudices than he does about European-ness or Eurocrats; and this may be significant. . . . No one should be better qualified to uncover the European identity than Mayne; if he has not found it, one suspects that no one has." Anthony Samson

New Statesman 83:796 Je 11 '72 900w

"Having already written, in the past, some of the most readable books on the [European] community, Mayne [believes] . . . that the most important thing for most British people now will . . . [be] to get to know their new partners. He brings to the task of helping them his characteristic skill in using a mass of varied—and at times almost ludicrous—detail in illustrating more general points. He is able to write about all the Common Market countries with the same wealth of observed detail that a skillful novelist will use to set the scene in his own country, and adds to this a broad knowledge of the languages of the area."

TLS p861 J1 28 '72 260w

MAYNE, WILLIAM. Royal Harry. 158p $4.95 Dutton

SBN 0-525-38690-4 LC 74-154013

"When Harriet inherited a house and mountain, both called Hartacre, Dad and Mum moved her there. But she was more interested in her complaints. She didn't say good-bye to Gran. She didn't like moving without knowing about it first. And she didn't like her new home set in desolate countryside. She forgot about complaining as she discovered the irresistible mysteries of the mountain: missus who lived in a smoky cave, old mole always digging for something, stars showing through the mountain halfway up, four Frenchmen with a map, a secret passageway, an ancient trunk, and . . . Royal Harry." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to seven." (Library J)

"[Mayne] handles a rather preposterous story with delightful agility; his dialogue sparkles; and . . . his somewhat cryptic, offhand style forces the reader's imagination to do some of the work and fill in the gaps." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 48:377 Ag '72 300w

"[This is] a good mystery/adventure [story]. . . . The story is somewhat disorganized and far-fetched and the writing is uneven; however, the characterization of Harriet and her parents is realistic and the girl's feelings are successfully presented." Glenda Heaberlin

Library J 97:2485 J1 '72 150w

Reviewed by Catherine Storr

New Statesman 81:778 Je 4 '71 90w

"Royal Harry is good characteristic Mayne: a child or two at the centre, determinedly individual in the context of parents and other adults; an enigma that has its roots in some matter of local history, and is linked with, and solved by, some outrageous piece of mechanical expertise. Yet the result is once again fresh and surprising, within the formula."

TLS p766 J1 2 '71 350w

MAYOR, A. HYATT. Prints & people; a social history of printed pictures. unop il $20 Metropolitan mus; for sale by N.Y. graphic

769 Prints. Art and society
ISBN 0-87099-108-6 LC 73-162341

In this survey of prints, "750 illustrations demonstrate process, taste, skill, epoch; also, interdependent strains of precedent and influence from carving, carpentry, weaponry, fabrics, within a matrix of social, economic, geographical and metaphysical diffusion." (Nation)

"An excellent if somewhat idiosyncratic and unorthodox history . . . written with wit, charm, and erudition. . . . Not written as a continuous chronological history, the book is composed of over 150 essays of varying length, some dedicated to individual artists, some to historical movements, others to specific genres. Occasionally, Mayor strains to turn a cute phrase, but usually his brilliant use of language serves to communicate otherwise intangible visual perceptions."

Choice 9:500 Je '72 200w

"This is an absolutely remarkable book. Remarkable for its universal scope, for its wealth of insights and connections, for its original and clear judgments, for its integration of so much well-written material with so many fine illustrations. Using published and unpublished scholarship, and guided throughout by his own wonderful intuition, freshness of vision, and wit, Mayor has produced his summa. . . . The book is not intended for the scholastics so much as for the broadly educated humanists with an ability to respond not only to aesthetic quality and to new ways of viewing, but also to the broader vision of printed pictures in their multiple effects on human society."

MAYOR, A. H.—Continued

Andrew Robison

Library J 97:2177 Je 15 '72 130w

"It is rare for a general survey to cover more than one aspect of its purview in any depth. This one is—and equally—an incomparable record of a great art and a complex craft, a radical estimate of images on paper, an illustration of how a huge, ever-growing collection serves printmakers as well as industrial designers, and the anatomy of an expert's mind employing an artist's eye and a poet's words. The reader gains a vivid, by no means cursory view of paper pictures (including photographs) in their extravagant technical variety, while he is guided as seldom before through the mechanism of connoisseurship."

Lincoln Kirstein

Nation 214:219 F 14 '72 1400w

MAZAR, BENJAMIN, ed. Patriarchs. (The world hist. of the Jewish people, first series: Ancient times, v2) 306p il maps $20 Rutgers univ. press

933 Jews—History

SBN 8135-0615-8

LC 64-15907

This is volume two, part one of a projected series of 21 volumes. "The origins of the Hebrews, the formation and crystallization of the nation, its history, and the growth of its spiritual culture and social organization are discussed . . . against the backdrop of historico-cultural developments in the lands of the Bible in the second millennium B.C.E." (Pref) Chapter bibliographies. Index of names and places. For volume one, At the Dawn of Civilization, by E. A. Speiser, see BRD 1965.

"All eminent authorities, the authors write clearly and for a lay audience about fields of study which, in several instances, they themselves have created. While collective efforts in historical research normally exhibit lamentable traits—incoherence, pointlessness, even incompetence,—this one is first-rate and belongs in every collection for Biblical and ancient Near Eastern studies."

Choice 8:1626 F '72 120w

"[This series] would seem to be aimed at the intelligent general reader, especially of course the Jewish reader. Such books often show a gap between technical skill and suitably popular presentation, and this is certainly so [in this volume]. Several of the contributors have written what is more or less a learned article for their fellow scholars; when occasionally they remember the common man, they tend to fall into foolish vaguenesses or statements of the obvious. Little editorial control seems to have been exercised over the quality and balance of the essays. . . . The volume is full of valuable information and should prove a stimulating companion to the reading of Genesis. Some unclarity in the English are presumably the result of errors in translation, but it is not clear which articles have in fact been translated."

TLS p46 Ja 14 '72 850w

MAZLISH, BRUCE. In search of Nixon; a psychohistorical inquiry. 187p il $6.95 Basic bks.

B or 92 Nixon, Richard Milhous, President U.S.

SBN 465-03219-2

LC 71-189669

The author, a professor of history, says "what I am offering is primarily a brief psychological sketch of Richard Nixon. . . . [Some of the themes] were first explored in a paper presented to The Group for Applied Psychoanalysis (GAP) at a meeting in Boston on January 19, 1970. . . . The Journal of Interdisciplinary History, in its Autumn 1970 issue, published substantially the paper presented to GAP." (Pref) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This book] wears a certain coat of scholarly detachment, not to say unctuousness. But to my mind, at least, it is a book of almost fathomless silliness. There is, to begin with, a great scarcity of evidence. . . . Detailed biographical fact about Nixon—especially in the childhood years . . . is limited. And what there is, . . . lends itself to random potshotting.

As psychology [this book] is unsystematic; as history, superficial. . . . Mr. Nixon is indeed complex; too complex to be trapped in a grab-bag of Freudian clichés." E. M. Yoder

Book World p6 Ap 23 '72 1000w

Choice 9:1168 N '72 190w

Reviewed by Donald Capps

Christian Century 89:926 S 20 '72 1050w

Reviewed by C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 97:2405 Jl '72 120w

"The book has distinct limitations in psychohistory. The evidence is probably more spotty than it would be for a leader whose career has ended. . . . In some respects, however, Mazlish has given his fellow psychohistorians a valuable model. He is extremely astute in treating the interplay between 'the personal' and 'the political,' between Nixon as private man and Nixon as public figure. Every event in Nixon's later life shows input from both sources, and it is quite an achievement to gauge correctly their relative strength. [This study] also rates compliments for its basic fair-mindedness. The tone is restrained, modest and suitably dispassionate. Occasional ironic phrases in the later sections do imply antipathy to Nixon the President, but on the whole the approach is one of almost clinical detachment." John Demos

N Y Times Bk R p37 Je 4 '72 1650w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:84 My 29 '72 440w

Reviewed by A. A. Rogow

Pol Sci Q 87:675 D '72 1000w

"Dr. Mazlish's analysis is neither sensationalistic nor partisan and, unless it is quoted out of context, will give little comfort to either the Republican or Democratic National Committees. Nevertheless, I do feel that even the President of the United States has some right to privacy, and this analysis . . . often struck me as more clinical than is appropriate. . . . The selectivity of material is probably most distorting in dismissing as unimportant much of Nixon's political in-fighting, which certainly indicates his manner of handling aggressive impulses. Mazlish also has a tendency to regard the President's public image of self-confidence as reflective of his private self-image. That ignores considerable evidence concerning Nixon's need for love and reassurance. . . . [The President's] motivation remains cloudy. . . . Up to now, the search for Nixon has not been rewarding." George Stricker

Sat R 55:68 Ap 29 '72 1200w

"Mazlish's sources are confined almost exclusively to Nixon's writings and public statements, as well as to several journalistic biographies. . . . One wonders whether to take it seriously. The book . . . may be little more than a work of fiction—exciting, but unverifiably. Mazlish raises a host of important and provocative questions. But without personal interviews with the President, his family, his colleagues, and his associates—and such intimacy is not likely to be forthcoming—these questions will remain unanswered."

Va Q R 48:cxxxvii autumn '72 140w

MAZOUR, ANATOLE G. The writing of history in the Soviet Union. (Stanford univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution and peace. Publications, 87) 383p $17.50 Hoover inst. press

947 Russia—Historiography

SBN 8179-1871-X

LC 76-99084

"For fifty years Soviet historians have been writing about and interpreting Russian history. . . . [This book is an] evaluation of this Soviet historiography—its strength and weaknesses, its visible and covert restraints of freedom. . . . Dr. Mazour discusses the various problems that have beset Soviet historians and the issues they have debated. One of the issues examined is Stalin's influence on Soviet historiography. After Stalin's death N. S. Khrushchev destroyed Stalin's image and with it the 'cult of the individual.' This was replaced by renewed emphasis on the 'cult of the party.'" (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This is] an important book by a well-known scholar of Russian history. . . . It is important to . . . [those] who are less aware how one-party rule and a leader's egomania can affect the writing and cause the rewriting of a country's history. Specialists may differ occasionally with the selection of topics or works cited, and they may be disappointed in how little space is devoted to World War II and the postwar period, including the absence of comment regarding the controversy among Soviet historians over Stalin's failure to prepare Russian defenses against Hitler's attack in June 1941. Nevertheless, this is an exceptional book about a significant topic and should be in all academic libraries."

Choice 9:122 Mr '72 150w

"This logical sequel and extension of the author's Modern Russian Historiography [BRD 1960] will be welcomed by specialists and students of Russian history. Mazour writes skillfully and with full mastery of the subject, analyzing and assessing the work of Soviet historians in all aspects (economic, political, military, etc.) of Russian history. He also shows the cyclic impact and effects of party policy on historians and their interpretation of the past. His footnotes form an extensive bibliography. In view of the book's poor typographical design, the price is steep. However, it is a superlative work and could serve as a text in graduate historiography seminars." A. S. Birkos

Library J 97:1013 Mr 15 '72 120w

"Much of the information provided will be useful to scholars. But one wonders whether it would not have been more handily presented in the form of an encyclopedia. A running text does not transform what is essentially and solely a work of reference into a readable book; and the reiteration to introduce a host of more or less obscure names, of the tell-tale phrases 'economist like' or 'such writers as' is a source of irritation. Nor has the policy of selection and arrangement been at all consistent. . . . Sometimes bibliographical information is relegated to long footnotes occupying the greater part of the page, sometimes it is worked into the text with long descriptions of the works involved. The whole project gives an impression of having been insufficiently thought out at the start."

TLS p453 Ap 21 '72 450w

MAZRUI, ALI A. The trial of Christopher Okigbo. 145p $5.95 Third press; for sale by Viking

Okigbo, Christopher—Fiction
SBN 89388-024-8 LC 78-180662

This "is the story of Hamisi, a Kenyan Muslim, who is killed in an automobile accident and finds himself in a place called After-Africa, a world beyond the grave that combines the best of Christian, Muslim and traditional African versions of heaven. . . . Hamisi is assigned to act as Counsel for Salvation for the Nigerian poet, Christopher Okigbo (a real person) killed fighting for Biafra in the Nigerian Civil War. Okigbo is to stand trial for subordinating the vision of a unified Nigeria to the interest of his own Ibo tribesman, but more importantly for betraying his art by acting as an Ibo first and a poet last." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The mechanics of the plot move along at a nice clip, but the novel finally fails because it doesn't know what it wants to be. The somewhat comedic convention of a heavenly setting sorts ill with the tension of a courtroom drama; there is a love-interest thrown in as well, and a good deal of posthumous sex. Running through the whole are quotations from Okigbo's lush poetry, and it would take a master novelist to carry off this kind of pastiche, Mazrui is not." M. M. Reik

Library J 97:2646 Ag '72 200w

"It is doubtful whether any English novelist since Wells would have attempted such a subject, and certainly the book is full of pomposities and nonsense. Much play is made of statements such as 'Death is an exercise in Pan-Africanism!' On the evidence here adduced Okigbo's own verse seems to have been pretty bad. . . . Notwithstanding all this, I would rather read a book like [this] than any amount of current Western fiction. The author is obviously a man who is concerned with moral issues in a way that few European or American authors are any more, and who expects, moreover, to have an influence." Peter Dreyer

Nation 215:120 Ag 21 '72 400w

Reviewed by Angus Calder

New Statesman 83:565 Ap 28 '72 130w

"[The setting of After-Africa] remains the most memorable feature of this fine little novel. . . . [The accusations against Okigbo] are the bones on which the story hangs; and big bones they are, but they set well within the slight flesh of Ali A. Mazrui's prose. They are not at all obtrusive, which is surprising in light of the seriousness with which many Africans view the political implications of the Nigerian Civil War. . . . Despite the seriousness of these questions there is something detached and playful about the novel. The story never gets bogged down in its arguments. It becomes its own best proof that important political questioning and art are not mutually exclusive. . . . [It] is a fine and unusual piece of fiction." George Davis

N Y Times Bk ■ p48 S 17 '72 450w

MBITI, JOHN S. New Testament eschatology in an African background; a study of the encounter between New Testament theology and African traditional concepts. 216p $7.25 Oxford

299.6 Eschatology. Kenya—Religion. Kamba (Tribe)
ISBN 0-19-821659-9 LC 78-583304

"Is it possible for African languages to sustain theological concepts from the New Testament? How can the Christian doctrine of eschatology, which presupposes an understanding of time as progressing linearly towards a distant future, become a part of African theology when African traditional cultures conceive of history as moving 'backwards' from the 'now period' to an increasingly distant past? Mbiti . . . considers these questions in [his book which] is a . . . theological case study of the impact of Christianity on his own people, the Akamba of Kenya." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This] is the most impressive African contribution to an African theology yet to be published and also contains much of interest to the student of religious change in Africa." Choice 8:[1337] D '71 170w

"Although he presents the scriptural material in all its conflicting complexity, Professor Mbiti, like many biblical theologians, behaves at times as if his own highly sophisticated, synthetic picture of New Testament eschatology was shared by the ordinary Christian of apostolic times. Moreover, his own attempts to figure out the nature of fellowship in heaven, his reflections on a possible progress after death, his speculations about an ultimate surrender of individuality and qualms over the eternity of punishment, are not really much more than a refined form of fundamentalism. . . . With this well-written work . . . Professor Mbiti bids fair to become one of those Fathers of African theology whose puzzling absence he laments."

TLS p1555 D 10 '71 850w

MEACOCK, NORMA. Thinking girl; a novel. 234p $5.95 Dial press

LC 70-163581

Lindy, an English girl, "has been kicked out by her first lover, a girl who wants to take up with a man. Lindy is crushed, but her sexuality is not basically lesbian. . . . She would [however], like to talk to men, about politics and philosophy, about art or her medical problems—and the result is always the same: 'I just seem to end up in a position where only one thing is required. I'm seduced all the time.' Lindy marries, finally, a [male chauvinist] . . . who collects graffiti and dithers over a monograph on sex. She works at loving him and keeps a notebook of her 'thoughts.'" (Newsweek)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

Best Sell 31:530 Mr 1 '72 250w

"Klaus [her husband] soon loses interest in Lindy and so does the reader, as Lindy launches into mournful soliloquies about the dreary cul-de-sac she has found herself parked in. In places there is just enough bawdiness to sustain interest in Lindy's fine-featured distress, but then each encounter becomes a large illustration of life's dilemmas. Lindy . . . begins as an individual, but degenerates to a type as soon as she is dominated, and eventually ('his happiness, I reflected, justifies me') she becomes simply an undramatized idea. . . . What saves [the] novel from being a total disaster is [the author's] ability to make her character sound cheerfully innocent, able to rescue something out of the most damaging relationship. But more often it sounds like vulgarity disguised as philosophy rather than the other way around." Paul Theroux

MEACOCK, NORMA—Continued

Book World p2 Ja 23 '72 300w

Reviewed by S. A. Haffner
Library J 96:3159 O 1 '71 100w

"'Thinking Girl' is, in abstract, the study of a disease notoriously afflicting the intelligentsia. Its cause is fear of change. . . . Lindy's commitment to unchangingness outranks her commitment to thinking, and it is due deference to the unchanging that, she has made 'pure thought, nothing applied' her special province. And yet the intelligence, candor and passion with which Miss Meacock invests her narrator evokes so irresistible an impression of the authenticity and appropriateness of Lindy's (albeit abused) vocation for thinking that we feel its obligatory forfeiture as the grimmest of the manifold ironies of this rich, troubling, troubled novel." Deirdre Levinson

N Y Times Bk R p4 F 13 '72 650w

"[The book] is weak in its links and its transitions—one can almost see the holes where hunks must have been torn from a previous draft. In fact, an English edition of this novel appeared four years ago without some of the explicit sex scenes that Miss Meacock handles so expertly (and which are now included). All writers today are self-conscious about representing sex in fiction, but Miss Meacock writes her sex scenes with wit and élan; they work, and we must be grateful for that. More important, she writes tightly and with precision; each scene emerges sharply in focus. Hers is a tense story, erudite and witty as well; the sadness she achieves at the end is honestly arrived at." P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:32 F 14 '72 320w

MEAD, MARGARET. Blackberry winter; my earlier years. 305p il $8.95 Morrow

B or 92
ISBN 0-688-00051-7 LC 72-7187

"Blackberry Winter" is the name given to the post-seasonal frost that lies on blackberry blossoms. This frost is necessary for the berries to set, and is the portent of a rich harvest. . . . [In these memoirs, the anthropologist relates how] "she set a course for herself when young and has followed through in a life that has yielded a rich harvest." (Publisher's note) Included are accounts of her family life, college years, marriages, early field trips to Samoa, New Guinea and Bali, and her experiences on being a mother and grandmother. Index.

Reviewed by Charles Dollen
Best Sell 32:379 N 15 '72 120w
Christian Science Monitor p19 D 6 '72 240w

Reviewed by Anne Fremantle
Commonweal 97:255 D 15 '72 480w

"Mead, one of our best-known anthropologists, of late has turned to writing about the contemporary scene (i.e., her and James Baldwin's Rap on Race [BRD 1971], and her Culture and Commitment [BRD 1970]). Now she has given us her autobiography. Despite her subtitle, Mead includes much current material, especially as she tries to relate her childhood experiences to present-day problems and social concerns. . . . [The section] on her anthropological expeditions to the South Seas . . . is the most interesting; Mead has a tendency to be a bit 'preachy' in her chapter on childraising. On balance, this is good, candid stuff; and it will appeal to many readers, whether or not they share Mead's scientific bent. An interesting self-portrait by a prominent woman." E. G. Detlefsen

Library J 97:3307 O 15 '72 140w

"More than an account of her professional beginnings, this book presumably the first half of Dr. Mead's autobiography—is a hymn to her own family in particular and the idea of families in general. Although none of her own three marriages endured, she takes enormous pleasure in having finally become a mother herself, at age 38 . . . and in time a grandmother. . . . What one misses most in this lucid, witty record hearteningly free of jargon, is more candor about the author's three husbands. . . . We are offered few marital vignettes of the sort that lend charm to Dr. Mead's sketches of her forebears. . . . 'Blackberry Winter,' an agreeable rummaging through a crowded but tidy attic, makes some instructive points. It argues eloquently for the continuity of generations, and the gift of complete and sustained attention between parents and children." Jane Howard

N Y Times Bk R p49 N 12 '72 1200w
New Yorker 48:200 N 25 '72 170w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper
Newsweek 80:105 N 13 '72 650w

"Margaret Mead won't approve of this, but to be as candid as she is, I'll have to confess that I would rather be Margaret Mead than me. . . . [In this book] Mead tells how she built on the role she learned from her own grandmother and writes as if she were talking to her granddaughter. Anthropologist and woman are one, and she never flinches from telling us what we've always wanted to know about her. . . . Her strong sense of family (and there is even a family tree provided at the end of her book) seems to have reinforced, not swamped, her even stronger sense of person. . . . Blackberry Winter arrives with Margaret Mead's perfect timing. It is a grandmother's tale for a time that needs grandmothers very badly." Caroline Bird
Sat R 55:64 N 25 '72 1250w

MEAD, SHEPHERD. Free the male man! the manifesto of the men's liberation movement, examining the urgent need to free mankind and re-establish the equality, both economic and sexual, of the two sexes, containing explicit sexual instructions, diagrams and battle plans for the coming masculist revolution; il. by John Huehnergath. 154p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

817 Wit and humor. Women's Liberation Movement. Sex instruction
SBN 671-21123-4 LC 79-179579

In exposing the persecutions to which men are subject "Mr. Mead observes that boys are born weaker than girls, more subject to inherited defects, more susceptible to disease, and with a shorter life-span, but are nevertheless put to hard labor and kept at it until they die of ulcers. The poor enslaved creatures need help and should welcome it from any source, which at present seems to be the women's liberation group." (Atlantic)

"Not as funny as it ought to be, but this deadpan protest scores some comic points." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:129 Ap '72 100w

"[This is the] kind of shallow prose that . . . will appeal to a certain type of reading audience because of its brevity and slapstick style. . . . [The accompanying illustrations] are arresting to the eye and the book would be much duller without them, but they are tasteless almost to the extent of vulgarity. . . . It is conceivable that the book will be more widely received than it deserves to be. There [are] . . . certain sections [which] verge on true satire, e.g., 'Rat's Dairy.'" Edward Bartley

Best Sell 32:65 My 1 '72 250w

"Mead begins with a rather amusing idea—the need for masculine unity to resist the rising tide of femlib—but unfortunately he flails the theme to death, and what could have been a good essay has been extended into a weak, rambling, and overpriced book." H. E. Hutchinson

Library J 97:501 F 1 '72 50w

MEDICAL history and medical care: a symposium of perspectives arranged by the Nuffield provincial hospitals trust and the Josiah Macy Jr. foundation; with a pref. by Lord Cohen of Birkenhead; ed. by Gordon McLachlan and Thomas McKeown. 244p $11 Oxford

610 Medicine—History. Medical care
ISBN 0-19-721362-6 LC 72-29302

"The purpose of this symposium was to determine whether historical perspectives could contribute to the solution of contemporary problems in medicine. The papers . . . cover a wide range of topics including the social history of medicine, past views of the task of medicine, trends in public health and medical practice, relations between technology and practice, economic benefits of health programs, and the historical influences on medicine." (Choice)

"Most of the papers are concerned with the last century. The presentations are generally clear and not excessively technical. Each is followed by brief notes and a discussion. Recommended for specialized collections only."

Choice 9:670 J1/Ag '72 170w

"The lectures and the discussion that followed them make interesting reading, but sometimes there is a note of dogmatism which makes one wonder how true the underlying supposition is."

TLS p1284 O 15 '71 160w

MEDIEVAL literature and folklore studies; essays in honor of Francis Lee Utley; ed. by Jerome Mandel and Bruce A. Rosenberg. 408p il $17.50 Rutgers univ. press

809 Literature, Medieval—History and criticism. Utley, Francis Lee
SBN 8135-0676-X LC 70-127053

In these essays, "the contributors examine both major and ancillary figures and works of the Middle Ages in terms of the . . . problems in medieval studies at the present time: point of view (the problem of the narrator), aesthetic form (the problem of structure) and sources (the problem of influences)." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Essays by 25 scholars, among them some of the most eminent names in medieval and folklore studies, comprise this volume. . . . Although there are some few rather lightweight essays, the level of scholarship and writing is on the whole quite high. The topics . . . range as far as 20th-century American ethnic jokes. Essays such as R. M. Kaske's note on the green chapel in Gawain and the Green Knight represent significant contributions to important areas of scholarship. The book is not indispensable, but it is nevertheless a solidly respectable piece of work. It honors well the man who inspired it."

Choice 8:1170 N '71 110w

"As is the case with so many anthologies . . . not many will find all the essays to be of interest. But those who wish to range all over the map—from Canterbury tale-telling to Nordic lore—will find informed discussions here."

Christian Century 88:135 Ja 27 '71 50w

MEDSKER, LELAND L. Breaking the access barriers; a profile of two-year colleges, by Leland L. Medsker and Dale Tillery; with a commentary by Joseph P. Cosand. 183p maps $5.95 McGraw

378.1 Junior colleges

ISBN 0-07-010023-3 LC 74-141305

This book provides a "profile of America's two-year colleges which examines their contribution to society, identifies their major problems, comments on their probable future, and makes . . . recommendations for their improvement." (Teach Col Rec) Bibliography.

"Should be required reading for anyone actively engaged in college and university work. . . . The last sections—the final chapter, 'Summary, Issues, and Recommendations,' and the special 'Commentary' by Joseph P. Cosand, director of the Center for the Study of Higher Education at the University of Michigan and chairman of the American Council on Education—merit special release and publication for general public information."

S. V. Martorana

J Higher Ed 42:783 D '71 500w

"The research reported is plentiful, specific . . . clear, concise, and readable. . . . The authors have been thoroughly competent and have shown keen insight. Indeed, they have provided for all concerned with two-year colleges a basic research document of enormous value. If there are any faults with the publication, they most certainly lie in the fact that perhaps the authors too narrowly delineated the parameters of the issues about which they wrote." Michael Brick

Teach Col Rec 73:460 F '72 800w

MEDVEDEV, ROY A. Let history judge; the origins and consequences of Stalinism; tr. by Colleen Taylor; ed. by David Joravsky, and by Georges Haupt. 566p $12.50 Knopf

947.084 Russia—History—1917- . Stalin, Joseph

ISBN 0-394-44645-3 LC 72-136336

The co-author of A Question of Madness (BRD 1971) has written an analysis of Stalinism based on unpublished memoirs, "private interviews with men and women who were . . . involved in the events recounted; reminiscences, periodicals, pamphlets, and other published materials unavailable in the West. Stalin's gradual rise to absolute rule is . . . chronicled—from his earliest emergence during Lenin's lifetime—and interpreted. . . . The mass terror of the thirties . . . [is seen in the] context of its meaning to Russian lives. . . . [Medvedev] tells how the Stalin 'personality cult' was propagated." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by John Karch

America 126:211 F 26 '72 250w

Reviewed by R. M. Slusser

Am Hist R 77:1389 D '72 1150w
(Review article)

Reviewed by Denis Dirscherl

Best Sell 31:485 F 1 '72 330w

"[This] is a slightly abridged edition of the original Russian manuscript. . . . Even when he is analyzing the conditions which facilitated Stalin's rise to power, the main thrust of [Medvedev's] presentation is to exculpate the Leninist legacy and to blame all the sins of Stalinism on Stalin himself. . . . His argument is least convincing when he undertakes to absolve Soviet political arrangements of responsibility for Stalinist misdeeds. He is caught up in the tensions of squaring his faith in communism with the consequences that it helped produce. Yet it would do less than justice to Medvedev's magnificent study . . . to put exclusive emphasis on the analytical weaknesses which it reveals. His primary purpose in writing the book was to contribute to erasing the consequences of Stalinism from Soviet life." Merle Fainsod

Book World p4 Ja 2 '72 800w

Choice 9:270 Ap '72 200w

Christian Century 89:21 Ja 5 '72 60w

"Some of the best informed Western and Russian emigre scholars did not have an inkling of the many significant facts discovered by Dr. Medvedev, with the result that many of their hypotheses will now have to be scrapped. Seen from this angle the book is sensational. . . . [The contents] are so lively that the layman as well as the specialist will read many chapters with bated breath. In one respect, however, the author lets the reader down. He does not explain Stalin the man. . . . In addition, Dr. Medvedev's treatment of Stalin is contradictory. . . . In an excellent introduction, Professor David Joravsky, the chief editor of the book, gives six possible explanations for the phenomenon of Stalinism. . . . These are not sufficiently developed, however." Paul Wohl

Christian Science Monitor p12 Ja 6 '72 1150w

Reviewed by Robert Conquest

Commentary 53:80 Je '72 3000w

Economist 242:57 Mr 25 '72 800w

Reviewed by R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:195 Ja 15 '72 220w

Reviewed by Desmond Smith

Nation 214:346 Mr 13 '72 700w

Reviewed by Tibor Szamuely

Nat R 24:530 My 12 '72 700w

New Statesman 83:495 Ap 14 '72 300w

"[Medvedev's book] fills in enormous gaps—particularly Stalin's record in the late 1920's and early 1930's. . . . It has the assured detail of an 'insider's story.' . . . What is most exciting about it is that Medvedev is doing all this as a Russian, as a Marxist, and that he is giving us Stalin and Russia from the inside. We have never quite seen it like that before. . . . [He] is at his best in his meticulous tracing of the rise of Stalin and the origins of his power drive. . . . He has amplified the known evidence of the conflicts between Stalin and Lenin. . . . Medvedev is equally good in the task of trying to estimate the total number of Stalin's victims. . . . [but he is weakest on Stalin's motivations]." H. E. Salisbury

N Y Times Bk R p1 D 26 '71 2500w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck

Newsweek 79:55 Ja 3 '72 350w

"[Medvedev] dismisses the 'foreign bourgeois literature' on Stalin and Soviet history as of little value—a judgment that a foreign bourgeois contributor to it may be forgiven for viewing as unduly harsh. On the other hand, it is not clear how much of this literature Medvedev knows. . . . Stalin emerges in this work as a consciously demonic figure, hypocritically pretending to be the Marxist and communist that he knew himself not to be. Such a picture of him is not, I believe, a true description of Stalin's sense of identity. . . . But, whatever its limitations, this work is a monumental achievement." R. C. Tucker

Sat R 55:25 Ja 8 '72 2350w

MEDVEDEV, R. A.—Continued

Reviewed by Strobe Talbott

Time 99:66 Ja 17 '72 950w

TLS p589 My 26 '72 800w

Reviewed by Ian Stevenson

Va Q R 48:280 spring '72 650w

MEDVEDEV, ROY A., jt. auth. A question of madness. See Medvedev, Z. A.

MEDVEDEV, ZHOES A. The Medvedev papers; Fruitful meetings between scientists of the world; Secrecy of correspondence is guaranteed by law; tr. from the Russian by Vera Rich; with a foreword by John Ziman. 470p $11.95 St Martins

509.47 Science—Russia. Censorship. Russia—Intellectual life
SBN 333-12520-7 LC 73-139219

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Eugene Rabinowitch
Bul Atomic Sci 28:39 My '72 800w
Choice 9:231 Ap '72 170w

Reviewed by Anthony Astrachan
Commentary 53:86 Ja '72 1500w

Reviewed by R. H. Johnston
Library J 97:881 Mr 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by T. H. Jukes
Sat R 24:227 Mr 3 '72 950w
TLS p15 Ja 7 '72 700w

Reviewed by Ian Stevenson
Va Q R 48:280 spring '72 650w

MEDVEDEV, ZHOES A. A question of madness [by] Zhores A. [and] Roy A. Medvedev; tr. from the Russian by Ellen de Kadt. 223p $5.95 Knopf

323.4 Russia—Politics and government. Liberty
ISBN 0-394-47900-9 LC 75-179062

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by P. J. Earl
Best Sell 31:540 Mr 1 '72 340w
Choice 9:832 S '72 240w

Reviewed by Anthony Astrachan
Commentary 53:86 Ja '72 1500w
Library J 97:881 Mr 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by Desmond Smith
Nation 214:346 Mr 13 '72 700w

Reviewed by Tibor Szamuely
Nat R 24:530 My 12 '72 700w

Reviewed by Nigel Dennis
N Y Rev of Books 18:7 F 10 '72 700w
TLS p15 Ja 7 '72 700w

Reviewed by Ian Stevenson
Va Q R 48:280 spring '72 650w

MEE, CHARLES L. White robe, black robe [by] Charles L. Mee, Jr. 316p $7.95 Putnam
B or 92 Luther, Martin. Leo X (Giovanni de' Medici) Pope. Reformation
LC 76-183547

This is an account of the Reformation presented through the lives, careers, and ideas of the two chief protagonists, Martin Luther and Pope Leo X.

Reviewed by J. M. Vereb
America 127:103 Ag 19 '72 500w

Reviewed by F. J. Gallagher
Best Sell 32:137 Je 15 '72 370w

"The 95 theses, the flabby reaction of Rome, the meeting between Luther and Leo's saintly representative, Cajetan, the bull of excommunication, and Luther's burning of the bull—in Mee's dramatic version the familiar events take on a vividness I have found in no other book on the struggle. . . . I admire the honest and consistent tension of this dual biography, soundly researched but never dry. As exciting as a thriller, it is shot through with flashes of humor which both Leo and Luther would have appreciated. White Robe, Black Robe is compulsory and compulsive reading for anyone interested in the biggest heavyweight contest of all time. And because the struggle continues unabated everywhere between the individual and complacent authority, this history is as relevant as tomorrow's headlines."

Vincent Cronin

Book World p6 My 28 '72 1000w

"Even by the standards of mass journalism [this book] is for the most part a repetitive rehash of material from the better books which were its sources. . . . There are some amusing scenes of Vatican debauchery; the pageants and poisonings are equally entertaining. . . . Occasionally the descriptions of Luther are striking, and the grim life of rural Germany is movingly portrayed. But only toward the end of the book does the story become interesting. The fateful clashes between Luther and the pope and his cardinals are outlined with fair accuracy. Mee successfully blends the political background to the Reformation with its theological significance." Peter Rowley

Christian Century 89:853 Ag 30 '72 500w

"There is nothing in Mee's presentation of Luther that has not been repeated ad infinitum in the voluminous literature on the Reformation leader. The author takes up, however, for Leo X (Giovanni de' Medici, a neglected biographee most of this century) with sympathetic flourish. . . . The book's early chapters focus alternately on comparable stages of the two protagonists' early development, and the contrast is vivid. However, the latter half of the book slips into a less imaginative chronicle of the escalating conflict. Evidenced throughout is a hearty appreciation for Renaissance tastes. The book ends with Leo's death in 1521." Robert Dvorak

Library J 97:1705 My 1 '72 130w

"In the early pages of [this book], the author describes the conflict between Luther and Leo as a 'confrontation between the classic, the archetypal establishmentarian and the archetypal revolutionary.' That sounds like a good script, and a timely one, but the terms are nowhere defined and no effort is made to prove the point. The author's prime concern is to sustain a narrative, not to establish a thesis. The story, however, turns out to be more complex than the author's description of it would suggest. . . . What this book does not do . . . is to explore adequately the characters of its major figures; it makes no attempt to break new ground and it relies for information on familiar and readily available sources." R. W. French

Nation 214:791 Je 19 '72 900w

MEERLOO, JOOST A. M. Along the fourth dimension; man's sense of time and history; il. by Carl Smith. 278p $8.95 Day 115 Time
LC 72-79715

"An account of various time senses in man written by a . . . psychiatrist. Included are discussions of biological clocks, as well as of objective, clinical, gnostic, and other kinds of time, and a . . . presentation of time symbolization. Emphasis is on time perceptions of normal humans, with some attention given to emotionally disturbed individuals, in which instance anonymous references to cases from Meerloo's own practice provide . . . illustrative examples." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[Meerloo's] approach throughout is highly speculative and much too restricted by his own psychoanalytic framework."

Choice 8:1383 D '71 120w

"This is Meerloo's 'subjective' approach to the concept of time and its mysteries, developed without laboratory experimentation or the other orthodox methods of the scientist. . . . According to him, the sense of time differs in primitive man, in the child, and in the adult. Civilized man 'gropes around in time like a drunkard,' and even that trackless wilderness varies with man's varying experiences. . . . Meerloo's penetrating observations also extend to such phenomena as jet plane travel . . . precognition, and parapsychology. As in his earlier works . . . this psychiatrist turned philosopher writes with an uncommon lucidity that will provoke and hold the interest of lay readers." Allan Angoff

Library J 95:2809 S 1 '70 140w

MEETH, LOUIS R., jt. ed. Power and authority. See Hodgkinson, H. L.

MEETING OF THE MONASTIC SUPERIORS IN THE FAR EAST, BANGKOK, 1968. A new charter for monasticism; proceedings December 9 to 15, 1968; ed. and with an intro. by John Moffitt; foreword by George N. Shuster. 335p $12 Univ. of Notre Dame press 248.8 Monasticism and religious orders
SBN 268-00425-0 LC 70-122049

These proceedings include "not only the papers delivered at the conference over a seven-day period, but also syntheses of the discussions that followed each presentation. In addition, between chapters are to be found various prayers and readings, ranging from St. Bernard and St. John of the Cross to the Upanishads and the Bhagavad-Gita." (Christian Century)

"A new level of spiritual awareness is manifested in this collection of papers. . . . One of the striking things about these reflections is the absence of extensive consideration of liturgy. . . . If the traditional emphasis on liturgy is lessened . . . [it] may be the most essential change indicated if there is to be a spiritual meeting of westerner and oriental within a monastic setting. . . . [The author] has given us a work of high significance in any discussion of the religious-spiritual meeting of Asia and the West. For the benefit of Christian development in both East and West this book should be read and deeply pondered."

Thomas Berry

America 124:210 F 27 '71 380w

"Any book with the word 'charter' in its title would seem to indicate a dry-as-dust enumeration of statutes and statements, far removed from living dialogue. In this instance, however—thanks to the ability and vision of John Moffitt—the complete [proceedings] are brought together in a coherent and readable fashion. . . . [The] selection of readings and prayers is indicative of the ecumenical and pancultural tone that marked the entire conference. The papers, delivered by an international team of well known writers and scholars, require serious study for a full understanding of their perceptiveness and scholarship. . . . The wealth of ideas and experiences presented here make this a work certain to be of lasting value as well as of contemporary interest." Richard Weber and Edward Samanns

Christian Century 88:808 Je 30 '71 500w

MEGGERS, BETTY J. Amazonia: man and culture in a counterfeit paradise. 182p il maps $7.50; pa $2.95 Aldine-Atherton

301.29 Indians of South America—Amazon Valley. Anthropogeography
ISBN 0-202-01016-3; 0-202-010449 (pa)
LC 74-141427

The author describes the "ecologic balance of the area as a network based upon great species diversity, low frequencies, and scattered distributions. She presents vignettes of seven native tribes as cultural patterns which were 'molded' by the environment into successful adaptations which reflect the same characteristics as the fauna and flora. She believes the future of the Amazon basin must be built upon the basic patterns practiced successfully by the Indians: cooperative exploitation, cultivation of indigenous plants and animals (fish, turtles, manatees, etc.)." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[Meggers'] pessimistic view of the prospects for wealth and increased production and population in the immediate future gives a one-sided view, probably because the book is short and cannot be expected to cover all aspects of this immense region. Recommended as a well presented summary, a concerned statement, and an interesting use of ethnological data which should interest students and possibly excite them. . . . Glossary; index, adequate maps; a few illustrations."

Choice 9:290 Ap '72 210w

"The aims of the book are to specify variables influencing cultural adaptation in the Amazon basin and to present a set of general principles constituting a theory of cultural evolution. Meggers [presents] . . . extensive descriptions and provocative hypotheses about the constraints and requirements imposed upon human society by particular features of the habitat. For this reason, the book should be read by all who wish to understand, modify, or preserve the tropical forest environment. . . . Despite [some] shortcomings, Amazonia provides the most comprehensive anthropological discussion so far of the Amazon basin as a human habitat." E. B. Basso

Science 175:1100 Mr 10 '72 480w

MEHLINGER, HOWARD D. Count Witte and the Tsarist government in the 1905 revolution [by] Howard D. Mehlinger and John M. Thompson. 434p $17.50 Ind. univ. press
947.08 Witte, Sergei Yulievich, Count. Russia—Politics and government. Russia—History—Revolution of 1905
ISBN 0-253-31470-4 LC 77-165048

"This study of government policy in the revolution of 1905 is . . . [an] examination of the premiership of Count S. Iu. Witte. . . . [It presents an] account of Witte, diplomat, bureaucrat, and reformer, trying to manage peacefully Russia's transition from agrarianism to industrialization, struggling with the Western influences of liberalism and Marxism, and reluctantly leading the government toward constitutionalism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This study] fills an important gap in the literature on the reign of the last Romanov. The joint authors have utilized a great range of published materials and even some manuscript sources from the archives at Columbia University and in Leningrad and Moscow. Their book, however, is marred by a pedestrian and tedious literary style, by several minor but nonetheless glaring errors (e.g. Courland is said to be in Estonia) and, most seriously, by a failure to convey any clear conclusions. . . . The authors have difficulty analyzing and explaining Witte's admittedly confused political philosophy, but when they themselves use autocracy interchangeably with monarchy or strong government and distinguish it from 'absolute autocracy' they further compound the confusion. Despite these flaws, the book is a mine of information and deserves a place in every strong undergraduate collection."

Choice 9:869 S '72 170w

"The authors focus on Witte's efforts to lead the regime out of the chaos of 1905; they do a very fine job. Though the general outline is familiar, the details are not; and what comes through very strongly is Witte's far-from-certain reaction to what he had wrought in October. One metaphor in the book sums up his greatest dilemma which ultimately defeated him and other would-be reformers: 'as he tried to set about . . . renovating the old structure, arsonists of various hues were busy trying to raze the whole building.' The documentation is impressive, the style clear, but the price excessive." R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:2092 Je 1 '72 150w

"[This is] a monograph in which the strictly limited focus does not help to illuminate the surrounding darkness. It is not even a biography of Witte or a study of his career or his achievement. . . . On particular episodes the book is informative and valuable. One of these is the negotiation of the French loan, which was necessary to restore Russia's shattered finances after the defeat by Japan. . . . But perhaps the most interesting chapter of all relates to Witte's views on the peasant question—a fundamental issue of Russian politics."

TLS p972 Ag 18 '72 1300w

MEHNERT, KLAUS. China returns; tr. from the German. 322p $10 Dutton

915.1 China (People's Republic of China)—Description and travel
ISBN 0-525-080007 LC 71-188050

The first section of this book records what the author saw and heard in 1971, on his fourth visit to China. The second section offers some conclusions on his observations. The third section fills in the background with information on the Cultural Revolution. Mehnert describes flood control systems, rice growing, model villages, silk factories, cadre schools, people's communes, factory-universities and theatrical productions . . . [as well as] the Mao cult and the changes wrought by the revolution. Originally published in 1971 under the title, China nach dem Sturm. Index

"[The book] starts like a travelogue but . . . ends with fifty-odd pages of . . . documents that give strength and depth of understanding. It is a first-hand survey of events and people, principles and practices in present-day China, done by an obviously competent scholar, who has set prejudices aside and mostly favors facts. . . . The identity of the translator is not given, although the text has the ease and pertinency of original writing in fluent modern American language. . . . If there had been eighty copies of this book on the plane taking to China the eighty journalists in the presidential party, I venture that the reporting from across the Pacific would have been more realistic." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 31:557 Mr 15 '72 650w

Reviewed by Ronald Steel

Book World pl Ap 9 '72 160w

"Mehnert presents his conclusions . . . in his usual intelligent, reasoned, and highly readable style. Although much impressed with the material progress made by the Chinese Communists, he is skeptical of the prevailing cult of Maoism, the manipulability of the people, and the broad-scale practice of eliminating elites. In regard to this last point, Mehnert believes China can not continue such a practice indefinitely and still become a major industrial power. Definitely recommended." E. A. Engelinger

MEHNERT, KLAUS—Continued

Library J 97:1724 My 1 '72 210w

Reviewed by Francis Hope

New Statesman 83:607 My 5 '72 650w

"[Mehnert] spent a month traveling through fourteen provinces early in the year before the ping-pong breakthrough. As a solitary West German visitor who was afforded special opportunities [he] traveled some 3,000 miles. . . . He pursued some questions, like the incentive system, relentlessly, and since his reports are not restricted like those of the [New York] Times [Report from Red China, BRD 1972] to a few hundred words, his account is fuller and more penetrating. If the American journalists seem to outshine the State Department, they in turn are outdistanced by Klaus Mehnert. This is principally because his close familiarity with the Soviet system adds to his perspective on China. He is more versed in the ideological issues between the two communisms and can more readily see China in both Soviet and Maoist terms." J. K. Fairbank

N Y Rev of Books 18:3 F 24 '72 1350w

"Klaus Mehnert's mistake (curious on the part of one who prides himself on his grasp of historical perspective) consists in confusing Mao's long-term utopian goal with the reality of China today. . . . The most interesting items in [his] report are perhaps his accounts of visits to a May 7th cadre school for the re-education of former leading personnel afflicted with bureaucratic spirit, and to the Shanghai Machine Tools plant No. 1, where he spent several hours at the university set up in 1968 within the plant to train workers as technicians." S. R. Schram

N Y Times Bk R p2 My '72 500w

MEHTA, RAMA, jt. auth. India: now and through time. See Galbraith, C. A.

MEHTA, VED. Daddyji. 195p il $6.95 Farrar, Straus

B or 92 Mehta, Amolak Ram
ISBN 0-374-13438-3 LC 78-179793

A biographical portrait of Amolak Ram Mehta, an Indian public health officer. Seventy-five years ago, when Daddyji was born in the Punjab, "his horoscope was cast: he would grow up to ride on the backs of elephants and sail the sea. . . . [He studied medicine in Lahore] sailed for London to take degrees in Public Health and Tropical Medicine, returned to India to do . . . work in cholera and bubonic plague, later journeyed to America, Sardinia, and, again, England, to work in malaria and tuberculosis, and finally returned to India to succeed his father as head of the Mehta family . . . and raise a large . . . family of his own." (Publisher's note) Glossary.

Reviewed by I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 32:121 Je 1 '72 440w

"Beyond the personal, Ved Mehta manages to dramatize the desire of a modern Indian to control destiny, while discovering and passing on to his son the difficult lessons of his limitation. . . . In Face to Face (BRD 1957), the young Ved had given us an account of his personal adjustment to blindness. . . . In this work, the blindness of Ved . . . becomes a focal point in understanding the character of Amolak Ram and the Indian social structure. The child becomes the victim of a series of mistakes or wrong decisions. . . . [This is the author's] attempt to explore his personal history by understanding his father's. . . . Informal, yet containing passages of great formal beauty; episodic, yet gracefully arranged. Intensely personal; yet light, lucid, and unselfish. Daddyji is the most moving biography I have read in a very long time." Bharati Mukherjee

Book World p4 My 7 '72 550w

"The Mehta clan emerges as a sampler of Hindu family life in North India from the turn of the century to just before partition. What might have been a familiar tale of rags to riches is enlivened by the many details of Hindu rites and customs and a description of the impact of Western ways on a traditional family. . . . The tales of [Dr. Mehta's] encounters with what passed for High Society in the days of the British Raj are told with tongue-in-cheek gusto. And the considerable charm of this book is enhanced by the illustrations. Thus transformed into a family portrait album, it enables us to see what the leading characters look like. They look lovable, all of them." Eric Britter

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 21 '72 350w

"Totally blind since recovery from spinal meningitis at the age of three, Mehta, brilliant young Indian author and critic (see his A Portrait of India [BRD 1970]), presents a warm but sharply limned memoir of his father, Amolak Ram (born 1895), up to the day in 1939 when Mehta was put on the Bombay train to attend a mission school for the blind. The oddly appealing nickname 'Daddyji' (with suffix indicating respect and reverence) symbolizes the ambivalent interrelations between the rich Hindu heritage of Mehta's Brahman Punjabi clan and the Westernizing elements in Amolak Ram's background. . . . An entertaining and informative window into 20th-Century Indian life, this memoir deserves wide reading." B. W. Fuson

Library J 97:1705 My 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:106 My 8 '72 750w

"Daddyji tells the familiar story of the Indian joint family of the 1930s, in which the oldest grandparent presided over the destinies of . . . generations. . . . In his descriptions of [his grandfather] Lalaji and Daddyji, Ved Mehta brings out beautifully the seldom-evident but ever-present tension between the Hindu father and his eldest son. . . . [The book] remains the chronicle of an obscure Hindu family, and its central character moves in the happy realms of anonymity, of total immersion in the world of Lalaji, of Indian summers and English winters, which the author lyrically describes. The book's value lies in the fact that Ved Mehta transforms an individual experience into one that is universal." P. K. Sundara Rajan

Sat R 55:72 My 20 '72 600w

MEI, KO-WANG, jt. auth. Theory and practice of modern guerrilla warfare. See Singh, B.

MEIER, MATT S. The Chicanos; a history of Mexican Americans [by] Matt S. Meier and Feliciano Rivera. (Ann. century ser) 302p maps $8.95; pa $2.45 Hill & Wang

301.45 Mexicans in the U.S.
ISBN 0-8090-3416-6; 0-8090-1365-7 (pa)
LC 72-187151

"The narration starts with the Indo-Hispanic period and concludes with the happenings of the last few years. [The authors describe] three basically Hispanic-Mexican subcultures (Californios, Nuevo Mexicanos, and the Tejanos) [which] developed in what is now the American Southwest. [The last chapter focuses on the efforts of four leaders of the Chicano movement in the 1960's]. (Library J) Glossary. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"For late starters in seeking to understand this minority group, here is a general history of more than passing interest. Wide, not deep." Christian Century 89:807 Ag 2 '72 20w

"The authors, in researching their subject, bring to the forefront information which places Mexican-Americans in a better perspective than has previously been the case. Readers should be able to understand better the conflict which has led to the social, economic, and political problems which have given rise to the Chicano movement of today. Especially recommended for public and college libraries." A. D. Trejo

Library J 97:2591 Ag '72 200w

"[This history] is bland and uninteresting. Such dramatic events as Mexico's war for independence, revolutions, and zootsuit riots and Tijerina's courthouse raid are presented matter-of-factly, and controversial figures like Santa Ana, Zapata and Chavez appear one-dimensional. Very little coverage is accorded to the current movement—one short chapter treats Chavez, Tijerina, Gonzales and Gutierrez. This won't instill pride in la raza in young Chicanos, and to others it will be just another history text." J. G. Daly

Library J 97:3824 N 15 '72 90w

Reviewed by Carey McWilliams

Nation 214:830 Je 26 '72 50w

New Repub 167:23 Ag 19/26 '72 550w

"[This] book is welcome—at last a professionally informed summary of the alienation and integration [of Mexican Americans], coherent and readable. Its principal virtue is momentous, to focus historical controversies on the Southwest as a borderland unique in America. . . . [But there are] major defects in the book. . . . Meier and Rivera imagine that 'Mexican' American history begins with the early story of man in the western hemisphere, which is a stunning anachronism. They refloat the myth of the 'Aztecs,' which is eighteenth-century Mexican creole propaganda. . . . They fancy that Mexican immigration into the Southwest is 'the return of the Indian Mexican to the land of his origins,' which is the daffiest current Chicano propaganda. And they put Chavez into the same league with Tijerina and Corky, which is a misrepresentation of the United Farmworkers and the Chicano movement." John Womack

N Y Rev of Books 19:15 Ag 31 '72 200w

MEIGS, A. JAMES. Money matters; economics, markets, politics. 410p $12.50 Harper

332.4 Currency question. U.S.—Economic policy

SBN 06-012932-8 LC 74-123954

The author "states the monetarist position on the causes of and desirable policies toward the problems of recession, unemployment, and inflation. Meigs, a vice president of Argus Research Corporation, and the author of Free Reserves and the Money Supply [BRD 1963] argues that the mistaken discretionary policies of the Federal Reserve System adversely reinforce the wild swings in our economy. He then suggests alternative domestic and international policies." (Library J) Index.

"Much of [this book] . . . is taken up with ■ plea to central bankers to take the money supply as their principal target. Full marks, anyway, for deploring the use of controls to deal with the Eurodollar problem and believing in floating exchange rates."

Economist 244:83 Jl 1 '72 50w

"Even though the controversy, sparked by Milton Friedman, over the role of money in economic growth and stabilization is now diminishing, this readable study, accessible to the layman, is useful." R. E. Will

Library J 97:1009 Mr 15 '72 100w

MEIJER, M. J. Marriage law and policy in the Chinese People's Republic. 369p $16.75 Oxford

346.1 Law—China (People's Republic of China). Marriage

LC 79-30351

After a "summary of the traditional system and the efforts of pre-Communist governments to modify it, [the author] analyzes the relevant Communist legislation under the Kiangsi Republic and the subsequent border governments. Part II . . . discusses the 1950 Marriage Law, its political and social functions and the measures taken to fulfill them. The final portion of the book describes applications of the law to concrete cases, revealing the increasing predominance of considerations of Communist morality over conventional legal prescriptions." (Pacific Affairs) Bibliography. Index.

"Meijer has produced the most comprehensive study to date of contemporary Chinese family law and policy. . . . The analysis of family policy trends since about 1953 is, however, spotty, and the book includes occasional factual errors and misprints. The work seems intended for either serious students of the family and family law or of contemporary China, but not for beginners in either field. . . . Glossary."

Choice 8:1653 F '72 150w

"In tracing the varying emphases that the Communist Party has placed upon family law during the stages of its political, economic and social transformation of China, Meijer proves himself a shrewd, if somewhat jaded, observer of how the Party manipulates the legal system as an instrument of revolutionary change. He acknowledges the CCP's debt to Soviet law in certain periods [and] carefully notes the profound differences between the contemporary and traditional Chinese uses of law." Jerome Cohen

Pacific Affairs 45:283 summer '72 550w

MEISEL, PERRY. Thomas Hardy; the return of the repressed; a study of the major fiction. 175p $6.95 Yale univ. press

823 Hardy, Thomas

ISBN 0-300-01440-6 LC 77-182211

"This study attempts to 'define a movement through the entire development of Hardy's major fiction' based primarily on a reading of late Victorian intellectual history. The author, who believes that Hardy's best novels are generated by the working out of conflict, [attempts to show] how the fiction changed as the terms of the central conflict altered and developed. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"The book is largely a patchwork of quotations stitched together by commentary marked to a considerable degree by arid obfuscation. Meisel's book offers a few interesting insights but on the whole it does not add much to our understanding of Hardy's fiction. Only for larger libraries."

Choice 9:815 S '72 160w

"Meisel's analysis of the impact of Darwinism on Hardy, which goes far beyond the usual clichés, is the mainspring of the entire argument. Although the book leans a great deal on intellectual history, the author is careful to keep his central focus on art rather than ideas. Anyone slightly nervous about the title should rest assured that it is the only cranky aspect of the study. If Thomas Hardy sometimes seems too much an exercise in pouring old wine into new bottles, it is still quite a performance, especially for a young man who was a Yale undergraduate when he wrote it." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:2606 Ag '72 200w

"[Meisel] sees Hardy's first novels as portraits of a settled community, attacked from without by individuals alien to its ways, and inflicting wounds upon it. . . . Though the community takes its toll of these non-adaptable aliens, . . . the old society is never again the same. . . . There is certainly something in the argument. . . . There is also much in Mr Meisel's view that Hardy's human sympathies with these intruders develops until, from The Woodlanders on, he begins to reverse the process, stating the case for the self-alienated individual against the society. . . . It seems here to be argued that [Hardy's] sense of futility, waste and pity broke the bounds of his prose narrative style and construction, and could only be contained and continued in [his] poetry. . . . There is a good deal in this theory, but it needs to be tested against the known facts of Hardy's life as a writer and artist. . . . Mr. Meisel makes his points well, if in a somewhat academic style."

TLS p687 Je 16 '72 700w

MEISS, MILLARD. The great age of fresco: discoveries, recoveries and survivals. 251p il col il $30 Braziller

751.7 Mural painting and decoration

LC [72-591489]

This work "grew out of the catalogue bearing the same title, [BRD 1969] for which Meiss wrote the preface, of the exhibition of 70 Florentine frescoes from Giotto to Pontormo held at New York's Metropolitan Museum in 1968. For this . . . larger volume, Meiss has selected 25 of the best examples from the exhibition to which he has added 75 frescoes in Italy, thus providing a [survey] . . . extending mainly from the late 13th to the early 18th century." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 227:128 F '71 60w

Reviewed by R. F. Grady

Best Sell 30:249 O 1 '70 550w

"The book begins with a short Informative Introduction, discussing mostly the techniques of fresco painting, followed by a discussion of each fresco and a good color reproduction. . . . Meiss, undoubtedly the foremost contemporary scholar studying Italian fresco painting, and his publishers have produced the best and most useful survey, certainly for students, on this subject to date."

Choice 7:1367 D '70 180w

Economist 237:xix N 21 '70 60w

Reviewed by Julia Sabine

Library J 95:3462 O 15 '70 190w

"Meiss [is] a noted authority on medieval and Renaissance painting [and] professor of art history at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton. . . . [He] wears his erudition lightly since the book is intended for the general audience. But it is, I think, chiefly when he gets down to the thorny issues of art history—attributions, the condition of the works, their subtle symbolism, their historic precedents and background, the wealth of life and history that informs them—that his account becomes exciting." J. R. Mellow

MEISS, MILLARD—Continued

N Y Times BK R p8 O 11 '70 1100w

"[This is] one of the few picture books which claims attention by virtue of its text, not of its illustrations. Millard Meiss's manner, both in the short introduction and in the notes on individual works, is modest, almost casual; but the letterpress, if read attentively, proves to contain a remarkable amount of new thinking and fresh observation. Again and again Professor Meiss redeems the book. . . . The rather undistinguished plate of Giotto's 'Christ driving the Moneychangers from the Temple' at Padua is the occasion for an excellent note on the technique of the fresco, and a bad plate of the Taddeo Gaddi 'Annunciation to the Shepherds' in the Baroncelli Chapel is likewise the subject of a model commentary."

TLS p1324 N 13 '70 500w

MEISSNER, WILLIAM W. The assault on authority; dialogue or dilemma? 320p $7.95 Orbis bks.

301.15 Authority
LC 70-152878

"The study takes its stand at the 'interface' of individual and social structures, and analyzes authority relationships in that context. Concern is originally with the inner psychic mechanisms and the patterns by which they interact with and respond to the social systems at work in the community." (Critic)

"The author of this substantial book, an M.D. as well as a theologian, is convinced that today's crisis of obedience cannot be resolved by a simple reaffirmation of old formulae. Analysing the concepts and practices of freedom, responsibility, initiative, personal development, authority and obedience from a socio-psychological point of view, he shows how one can achieve identity and maturity, whether exercising authority or living in subjectship." E. S. Stanton

America 125:437 N 20 '71 70w

"This is a sober study of authority from a sociopsychological perspective, with strong emphasis on problems in the religious community." John Deedy

Critic 30:89 Ja '72 100w

MELBIN, MURRAY. Alone and with others; a grammar of interpersonal behavior. 333p $12.95 Harper

301.11 Human relations. Social psychology
SBN 06-012927-1 LC 73-83613

The author discusses "a methodology for social research in psychiatric, state, and general hospitals. For basic ideas, he draws upon D. O. Hebb's The Organization of Behavior for a neuro-physiological explanation of sensations, 'mind,' and the structure and meaning of acts. He then goes on to discuss methods of sampling, classifying, and estimating a population of acts; and from this point on [the book] becomes an introspective study on the difficulty of setting up nonoverlapping behavior categories for the applied researcher to use." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A technical and almost eccentric study of sensations and situations in which people find themselves and through which they interact. Don't pick it up unless you are prepared for a strenuous exercise as you set out to gain access to a rather private world."

Christian Century 89:290 Mr ■ '72 40w

"Melbin [is] an experienced sociologist. . . . An important book for college and graduate school libraries." W. R. Knievel

Library J 96:3771 N 15 '71 90w

MELCHER, DANIEL. Melcher on acquisition; with Margaret Saul. 169p $8 A.L.A.

025.2 Acquisitions (Libraries)
ISBN 0-8389-0108-5 LC 77-158719

This book contains suggestions for "handling such perennial problems as dealing with jobbers, coping with the bid process, speeding cataloging, and buying serials. Melcher [criticizes] . . . computers [and] . . . Library of Congress cataloging systems. He dislikes unnecessary forms and central ordering and processing. He has . . . suggestions for circumventing bureaucracy. . . . He spent twenty-one years with the R. R. Bowker Company, first as publisher of the Library Journal, later as chief executive, and president. . . . Margaret Saul, his wife and coauthor, was editor of School Library Journal for seven years." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The author] offers information with the tacit assumption that a knowledgeable librarian is more capable of shrugging off the dead hand of conventional practice and of fulfilling his purpose than one who remains wholly ignorant or poorly informed. In this respect Melcher's book may appeal less to the neophyte than to the scarred veteran. . . . Again and again the point is made, reinforced by examples, that no situation or procedure has to be accepted or continued just because it is hallowed by tradition. . . . And always Melcher advocates grass roots solutions, which he defines as ' . . . solutions which grow out of the problems . . . as opposed to . . . pre-packaged solutions imported from elsewhere.' . . . If some of the author's confidence in an individual's ability to dominate the institutional system he is a part of is absorbed by the reader, librarianship in general and acquisitions work in particular cannot help but benefit." H. A. Sullivan

Col & Res Lib 33:154 Mr '72 800w

"[Melcher's] opinions, strong though they may be, will command respect among librarians and bookmen at home and abroad. He zeroes in with his biggest guns on two targets—LC and computers. . . . 'If I seem to be somewhat anticompputer,' he confesses, '—well, the impression is accurate . . . the computer is probably the most oversold piece of hardware in the history of technology.' Publishers who are automated take twice as long to supply a book as those who are not, he advises the acquisitions librarian. . . . There are helpful chapters on buying serials and reprints, and a brief look at valuing old and rare books. . . . Recommended for any library with acquisition problems—that is to say, all libraries." C. L. Wallis

Library J 96:2747 S 15 '71 650w

"This is no scholarly work and makes no pretenses of being one. Instead it is a compilation of the highly personal comments of one publisher. . . . [For each topic] the discussion—and it tends to be argumentative rather than descriptive—is presented with conviction, even if it is not convincing. Unfortunately the facts [the author] presents as evidence are never documented, and the overall effect tends to be somewhat rambling. . . . Some of [Melcher's] criticism of LC seems quite valid . . . but others seem based on misinformation or misunderstanding. . . . [The book] seems intended primarily for school and public librarians. At least that is the audience that will most enjoy and profit from the book, for most of the discussion centers on problems of school and public libraries." R. C. Miller

Library Q 41:332 O '71 1000w

MELLANDER, G. A. The United States in Panamanian politics; the intriguing formative years. 215p $7.95 Interstate 327.73 Panama—Politics and government.

Panama—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—
Foreign relations—Panama
LC 76-141903

"Mellander has probed the roots and evaluated the early relationships between the United States, an emerging naval power recently victorious in the Spanish-American War of 1898, and Panama's political leaders and their parties in the early twentieth century." (Foreword) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The author's many years of residence in Panama and his opportunity for thorough investigation of Panamanian source materials provide another perspective for subject matter that has heretofore been examined mainly in terms of United States foreign policy. His interpretation presents the United States as reacting to events rather than calculating a strategy." Maury Baker

Am Hist R 77:1188 O '72 350w

"[This study] deals concisely but not superficially with the first five years of the small country's existence. Its balance and thorough documentation make it valuable for students of Latin American affairs and of U.S. diplomatic history. . . . While the general outline of . . . [Mellander's] account does not differ from the conventional textbook version, his wealth of detail adds new depths and shadings to take one far beyond a simplistic saga of big-stick imperialism. The style is trim clear enough for the beginner; the documentation valuable for the advanced scholar. Businesslike notes, a thorough annotated bibliography of both primary and secondary sources add to its usefulness." Choice 8:884 S '71 130w

MELLEN, PETER. Jean Clouet; complete edition of the drawings, miniatures and paintings. 262p il $30 Phaidon; for sale by Praeger 759.4 Clouet, Jean.

ISBN 0-7148-1431-8

LC 70-112620

This volume provides an analysis of the life and work of Jean Clouet, court painter to King Francis I of France. The author has traced documents relating to Clouet, "outlined his life, and . . . drawn up a catalogue raisonné of the drawings, the miniatures (basically manuscript illuminations), and . . . paintings." (Library J) Bibliography. Indexes of names and of locations.

"The text is remarkable for the thoroughness of its art-historical analysis and for its lucid exposition. It should reach a wide audience of students and specialists alike."

Choice 8:1578 F '72 100w

"An interesting and scholarly book with many highly satisfactory illustrations." J. L. Dewton

Library J 97:673 F 15 '72 150w

"The great virtue of [Mr Mellen's] book is in bringing together the results of the researches of previous scholars and analysing them and Jean's style convincingly so as to leave us with a clearer picture of the artist's personality than we had before. . . . It seems a pity that he has not dealt more fully with the younger Clouet. . . . [especially in regard to the year of his birth]. . . . The point is of some importance for the question of collaboration with his father and for his participation in the series of portrait drawings at Chantilly. Errors, however, are rare. . . . This book is admirably produced; the reproductions both in colour and in monochrome are faithful."

TLS p124 F 4 '72 1250w

MELLINKOFF, RUTH. The horned Moses in medieval art and thought. 210p 130il $16.50 Univ. of Calif. press

246 Horns (in religion, folklore, etc.). Moses —Art
ISBN 0-520-01705-6 LC 77-85450

The author takes into consideration the cultural concepts in which the image of a Judeo-Christian prophet with horns on his head was created. "Mrs. Mellinkoff explores, among other topics, how horns figure in ancient and barbarian, Anglo-Saxon, arts; the commentaries of theologians; the possible relevance of the bishop's horned mitre; and the confusion that may have arisen from a belief widespread in the Middle Ages that horns were a demonic attribute of Jews." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Karla Langedijk

Art Bul 54:544 D '72 2950w

"The reasons for the depiction of Moses with horns . . . are sought in contemporary vernacular texts and liturgical dramas, even on pagan helmets, with some of the most difficult texts of medieval theologians and philosophers sampled and used as sources. Because of its specialty, only institutions with active departments of art history and medieval history will feel compelled to add it."

Choice 8:667 J1 '71 170w

Reviewed by Edouard Roditi

Commentary 52:92 N '71 1000w

"A beautifully produced, lavishly illustrated and extremely well-written book that is a pleasure to see and read, its topic will be of the greatest interest to students of folklore, history, religion, drama, art, and archaeology. Due in no small measure to Michelangelo's famous statue, many people are inclined to associate horns with Moses, but Mellinkoff clearly demonstrates that this was not always the case. . . . [She] is to be congratulated for writing a provocative and fascinating book;

although meeting high scholarly standards, her study rises above the dreary mustiness too often associated with such research. . . . [However, there are some omissions in the bibliography]." D. M. Friedenberg

J Aesthetics 30:275 winter '71 400w

"[The author] finds that the image is more recent than one would suppose (eleventh century, A.D.) though this image is based on a fourth-century translation which is a deliberate mistake. She also finds that the horns have a different meaning at different times ranging from victory, strength, power, divinity, kingship, and salvation at the time of the translation to horns of light to the present-day mark of dishonor (cuckoldry, et cetera). . . . All this may seem like a tempest in a teapot, but it is, actually, a fascinatingly thorough study of one bit of iconography."

Va Q R 47:clxxxv autumn '71 130w

MELSON, ROBERT. Nigeria: modernization and the politics of communalism; ed. by Robert Melson and Howard Wolpe. 680p $12.50 Mich. state univ. press

309.1 Nigeria—Social conditions. Nigeria—Economic conditions. Nigeria—Politics and government
SBN 87013-161-3 LC 72-168377

These 25 "papers, eight of which are original contributions, are organized into five sections. The first . . . develops a theoretical perspective for the analysis of communal conflict and offers an historical over-view of the Nigerian/Biafran struggle. . . . The next three sections . . . develop more fully, by detailed reference to the Nigerian experience . . . three major factors underpinning communal conflict: the competition for scarce goods, the institutional framework within which this competition occurs, and the changing nature of cultural identity. The concluding section addresses itself to certain of the policy implications of the Nigerian/Biafran conflict." (Publisher's note)

"Students of tribalism/communalism within the African, Asian, or American setting will find this reasonably priced volume a valuable point of departure. Students of Nigeria will find the wealth of information and insights provided . . . indispensable as they assess Nigeria, its past, present, and future." C. R. Ingle

Ann Am Acad 401:161 My '72 360w

"The most comprehensive book available on inter-ethnic relations in Nigeria, particularly the background to the tragic events leading up to the Nigerian civil war. While many of the chapters (17 out of 25) have been published elsewhere, their inclusion here will be very useful to the student of African politics. The editors, in an introductory chapter, put forward some generalizations about inter-ethnic relations based on the Nigerian experience. Their purpose is to suggest the circumstances leading to communal violence. . . . [This collection] will be most meaningful to those already familiar with the history of Nigeria. (It does not even contain a map of Nigeria)."

Choice 9:132 Mr '72 160w

"[The contributors] are acknowledged experts, though curiously none is a Nigerian. Since most of the pieces were not written especially for this volume, it is to the credit of the editors that, despite some inevitable repetition, a coherent analysis is sustained throughout. Some of the papers were updated for republication, but it is unfortunate that some of the original contributions stop short of the most recent events. Unfortunate too is the omission of a bibliography and an index. Nevertheless, this is an important contribution to Nigerian studies and to the study of cultural pluralism and political development in general." David Northrup

Library J 97:75 Ja 1 '72 170w

MELTON, DAVID. When children need help: an up-to-date handbook of guidance for parents of children who have been diagnosed as brain-injured, mentally retarded, cerebral palsied, learning disabled, or as slow learners. 257p $6.95 Crowell

155.4 Exceptional children
ISBN 0-690-88108-8 LC 72-78271

The author "discusses such topics as the pros and cons of special education classes, the importance of early stimulation and learning experiences, the attitudes of teachers, doctors, and psychologists. He explores the institutionalization of children, new legalities that will be beneficial to them, and innovations in treatment, specifically the Doman-Delacato programs of therapy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, Index.

MELTON, DAVID—Continued

"A sympathetic guidebook."

Christian Century 89:990 O 4 '72 40w

"Melton has long been concerned with the problems implicit in being the father of a brain-injured child; and he wrote an account of the early years of his son's life entitled Todd. Here, in a readable style, he persuasively argues that the most effective course of action is a positive approach. . . . The author sees the differentness created by the handicap to be the most detrimental factor. The use of his suggestions at all levels, including the preschool years, would permit the fullest possible communication between parents and brain-injured children and could avert the possibility of alienation of the child from the family and peer group." B. J. Kalisch

Library J 97:2618 Ag '72 150w

MELTZER, MILTON. Freedom comes to Mississippi; the story of reconstruction. 192p il $4.95; Titan ed $4.98 Follett

976.2 Reconstruction—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-695-80138-4; 0-695-40133-6 (Titan ed)
LC 78-118922

The author "offers a 'close-up of what [Reconstruction] was like in Mississippi,' believing that 'certain developments were basic to all 11 states of the Confederacy. He details the frustration, struggles, feelings and gains of the blacks and points up the similarity of Reconstruction ideals to those expressed today. [Bibliography, Index.] Grade seven and up." (Library J)

"The style is brisk, typical Meltzer, interesting and readable, and there's an unusually good bibliography (designating availability in paperback) of biographies, novels, histories and accounts of modern Mississippi." E. M. Porteus

Library J 96:4191 D 15 '71 100w [YA]

"[Meltzer] handles the Reconstruction story . . . with the spit and polish of a man with a message and the craftsmanship to get it told with dramatic impact. Instead of relating the story in the entire South, he concentrates upon what happened 'when freedom came to Mississippi'. . . . The reader is introduced to a minimum number of people and events—but the point emerges, loud and clear: a century ago, freedom came to the black man, who experienced it for a few years—until the political bargain of 1877 between Republicans and Democrats left the whole business to be done over again a century later." J. K. Bettersworth

N Y Times Bk R p8 J1 25 '71 160w

MELVILLE, HERMAN. Mardi and a voyage thither. 729p $10; pa $2.50 Northwestern Univ. press

818

ISBN 0-8101-0015-0 LC 67-21602

"This edition of Mardi is the third volume in the Northwestern-Newberry Writings of Herman Melville. . . . [The editors point out] that the American edition (published April 14, 1849) was set directly from the manuscript Melville supplied; that, in the absence of that manuscript, the first impression of the American edition has been used as the copy-text for the present edition. . . . [This edition contains an] 'Historical Note' contributed by Elizabeth S. Foster [which] reviews . . . what is known about the writing, publication, reception, and later critical history of Mardi, including a . . . summary of what scholars have discovered concerning [its] sources." (Am Lit) For volume one, Typee, volume two, Omoo see BRD 1969; for volume four, Redburn and volume five, White Jacket see BRD 1971.

"Because Mardi is, in an important sense, Melville's matrix volume—and therefore so important to an understanding of all his later major work—this edition should be gratefully received and used by all seriously committed Melville students and scholars." Lawrence Thompson

Am Lit 43:450 N '71 340w

"The Northwestern-Newberry edition of Melville's writings is a must for any academic library. . . . The proportion of text to editorial matter (654p./74p.) is unusually and admirably high. . . . [Included also are] variations between the American and English editions and a listing of emendations by the present editors."

Choice 7:1376 D '70 80w

TLS p53 Ja 21 '72 450w

MELVILLE, KEITH. Communes in the counter culture; origins, theories, styles of life. 256p $7.95; pa $2.45 Morrow

335 Collective settlements. U.S.—Social conditions
LC 77-151927

"It is the argument of this . . . book that the post-1965 commune is the epitome of the American counterculture. The task of today is the creation of a 'new community' which will serve human needs—needs that American culture now neglects or denies. . . . [Melville also provides a] discussion of communes both in history and in idea . . . [as well as] an explanation of the clash between technology and what he describes as 'voluntary primitivism.'" (Library J)

"A wonderfully well written exposition on the youth counterculture, very free of pedantic devices and pretentious statistics. . . . The discussion of the relationship between political and cultural revolution is especially excellent. Melville's resistance to facile categorization or generalization about the complex forms and underlying motives of the commune movement is admirable in its close accord with empirical reality. The dialectical spirit of the development in the 1960's of a youth counterculture is subtly captured. He succeeds in balancing a critical account of his subject matter with a deep empathy for its participants. Only readers expecting to find much 'hard' data on communes will be somewhat disappointed."

Choice 9:586 Je '72 140w

"[This book] is a well-reasoned, definitive statement that is an able extension of Theodore Roszak's The Making of a Counter Culture (BRD 1969) and the works of Kenneth Keniston. . . . [Melville] does not view revolution as inevitable and feels in many ways that it is unnecessary. Instead, the most important function serving the counter-culture is the commune—a place of recruitment, a greenhouse for a new sensibility. The commune is an important agent for social change. So is this book." Andy Armitage

Library J 97:1416 Ap 15 '72 200w

Reviewed by Janet Prince

Library J 97:3522 N 15 '72 180w [YA]

MELVILLE, MARJORIE, jt. auth. Guatemala: the politics of land ownership. See Melville, T.

MELVILLE, SAMUEL. Letters from Attica. 181p $5.95; pa $1.95 Morrow

B or 92 Melville, Samuel. Prisons—U.S.
LC 71-187806

This study of Attica prisoner Samuel Melville, rebellion leader killed in the police assault in 1971 contains letters written by Melville from his Federal detention cell in New York, from the Tombs, from Sing Sing and from Attica. Also included are profiles of the author by Jane Alpert, his lover, and John Cohen, a friend from the Movement.

"[Melville] was nicknamed the 'Mad Bomber' because of his propensity for using dynamite as a means of social protest, but Melville does not seem to have been mad. . . . His letters tell of the now well known brutality of the prison system. . . . He is a study not in mental aberrancy of any radical kind, but rather in that ominous fanaticism of the people who do resemble mono-maniacs, those who educate themselves and limit their education to an ever more articulate hatred of the thing that provokes their ire. . . . For some readers, there is nothing new here; for others, the book may be informative. But the stridency of Mr. Melville leaves him a not very apt defender of his positions; he will not posthumously win converts through this book." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 31:541 Mr 1 '72 600w

"In his letters . . . Melville reveals himself to be not the particularly extraordinary man his biographers portray, but a rather ordinary man reacting to prison with despair, frustration, rage, sullenness, finally with open resentment and rebellion. His progression from the frightened man, newly imprisoned . . . to the tactician who urges 'we must always be certain our demands will exceed what the pigs are able to grant' is the message of these letters." Fred Ferretti

Book World p8 F 27 '72 1300w

"[The letters] were not intended for publication and probably should not have been published. Their sparse comments on political philosophy lack the depth of analysis found in G. Jackson's Soledad brother: the prison letters of George Jackson [BRD 1971]. . . . The style and content of the book are illustrated by one of Melville's sentences: 'I'm sorry if some of this is illegible. I wrote it off the top and I don't really have much to say, evidently.' . . . Not recommended."

Choice 9:442 My '72 120w

"The book devotes only one-fourth of its pages to Mr. Melville's letters from Attica and only half its space to any of his writings. Ironically, the most readable and insightful section is made up of two profiles written by friends. Half-biography, half-autobiography, it is more of a character study of 'Madbomber' Melville, civil engineer, musician, poet, choir singer, father and of course, revolutionary than an account of the uprising or even of prison conditions beyond the personal inconveniences."

Robin Wright

Christian Science Monitor p11 Mr 2 '72 430w

MELVILLE, THOMAS, Guatemala: the politics of land ownership, by Thomas and Marjorie Melville. 320p $9 Free press

333.3 Land tenure—Guatemala. Guatemala—Politics and government
LC 70-143523

The thesis of this "book is that land tenure or land ownership is presently the basic social problem of Guatemala and will remain as such until some 'sort of revolution' completely reverses the patterns of ownership." (Choice) Index.

"[This book gives] a gloomy picture of what to the tourist is one of the most fascinating countries in the Americas. . . . In part of the book there are masses of data without very much discussion of their significance and rather dull catalogues of organizations of various types. Other chapters, like those on the army, the Church, and the 'problem of access,' are very interesting. It would probably be difficult to find so much detailed, useful information about Guatemala in any other one place."

D. G. Munro

Ann Am Acad 400:202 Mr '72 200w

"The Melvilles fulfilled their aims in presenting [a] new and valuable approach to Guatemalan history. Yet there were several shortcomings. Grammatical errors were numerous; the authors clearly indicated their involvement in Guatemala and were definitely biased throughout; some documentation was poor, and frequently there was no documentation when greatly needed. . . . The authors indicated that land reform, breaking up the large estates and creating small plots of land, would be the panacea for all political, social, and economic difficulties in Guatemala. It is difficult to believe that the solution may be so simple. Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 8:1382 D '71 150w

"This book is for the most part a straightforward report on Guatemalan history since World War II as seen against a background of peasant disenfranchisement from the land coupled with the view that the U.S. is largely to blame since it is a supporter of the status quo. . . . [The authors] err (emotionally rather than intellectually) in relating the U.S. role in Guatemalan politics. As non-Communist liberals, politically naïve or inexperienced, they fail to see international politics for what it is and fail to credit the U.S. with doing any good at all. . . . To be read for insight, not for answers." R. F. Delaney

Library J 96:3767 N 15 '71 140w

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS FOR PEACE THROUGH LAW. Military spending committee. The economics of defense; a bipartisan review of military spending; introd. by Mark O. Hatfield. 256p $15 Praeger

355.6 Disarmament—Economic aspects. U.S.—Defense. U.S.—Military policy
LC 76-153393

This "review of selected United States military programs . . . examines 'the utility and the necessity of requested defense funding' and concludes that 'significant military reductions can be made without weakening our national security.' It calls for 'a reordering of national priorities' that would 'help stabilize the economy on which all our federal programs are based and would release funds for the education and basic research on which our future security depends.' Specific areas considered include weapon systems, overseas troop deployments, threat projections, and the impact of defense spending on the economy." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The central thesis of the report is that United States economic growth has nearly halted in the last five years, and the principal culprit is massive defense spending. In order to curb inflation and to restore the economy generally, it contends that the defense budget should be cut sharply. The resulting 'peace dividend' could then be applied to desirable social welfare programs, especially to education and health-care services." M. S. Stedman

Ann Am Acad 402:155 J1 '72 200w

"[This] is a comprehensive, well documented study of the U.S. defense budget. The introduction explains the goals and methodology of this research effort. . . . Although relatively brief, each chapter provides a fair statement of the Department of Defense case for the weapons system followed by an analysis that brings to bear the weight of authority both inside and outside DOD. . . . This study is unique among works concerning the defense establishment . . . [and] should be of interest to undergraduate students in the social sciences."

Choice 9:882 S '72 170w

"[In this work] recommendations are offered, and problem areas highlighted." H. M. Burns
Library J 97:181 Ja 15 '72 140w

MENANDER. The plays of Menander; ed. and tr. by Lionel Casson. 154p $7.95 N.Y. univ. press

882

ISBN 8147-1353-X LC 76-171347

This volume provides 'English translations of all of Menander's plays, including the most recently found. It contains versions of The Grouch (complete), The Woman of Samos (nearly complete), The Shield (about half of the original), The Arbitration (about half), and She Who Was Shorn (about a third). These plays are the only surviving examples of 'New Comedy.' . . . [Casson has edited the plays] for the contemporary reader. He has translated them into current colloquial English. . . . [and] has also included specific complete stage directions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[Casson] offers delightfully free versions in a contemporary idiom, and supplies . . . background to recapture the spirit of the originals and living theater." R. J. Lemardon

Library J 97:2114 Je 1 '72 130w

"Menander canonized the comic form. It is Menandrian comedy that we still see throughout the Western world. His themes have had Molièresque and Shakespearean variation, but they remain his themes. In the best sense of the word, Menander is a classic. . . . [Casson's] dialogue is good English, not translationese, and he provides a very amusing rendering of the Dorian dialect assumed by a fake doctor in 'The Shield.' . . . [These plays are a] fascinating opportunity to discover that comedy has hardly changed in 2,000 years." Erich Segal

N Y Times Bk R p2 D 19 '71 800w

MENARD, HENRY W. Science: growth and change. 215p il $10 Harvard univ. press

506 Science as a profession. Science and civilization
ISBN 0-674-79280-7 LC 77-156138

Menard "surveys and analyzes the growth pattern in particular sciences and considers the role of population, locus and type of employment, and the significance of paper citation and scientific fame. In a chapter on the education of scientists, he looks into the question of supply and demand and discusses trends and changes in the production of baccalaureates and doctoral candidates, as well as the capacities of the universities to provide graduate education. . . . [He] suggests 'recycling'—a new education for every scientist every 15 years. . . . [and] the establishment of a federal department of science and technology." (Library J) Index.

"Could be useful as reading matter in one of the proliferating 'science and society' courses. It is written . . . in a generally interesting and lively style, though with frequent, disconcerting stylistic and logical discontinuities. . . . [The attractive style] will make it popular with undergraduate science majors who constitute the audience most in need of it. The sociological data on which the author's arguments are based are well documented, and there is an excellent index. Not a necessity, but a useful addition to the library."

MENARD, HENRY—Continued

Choice 9:232 Ap '72 130w

"Within the sciences different growth rates are evident, and Menard is concerned here with the ways in which these differences affect the careers and lives of scientists. . . . A well-written and carefully developed work." J. C. Shipman

Library J 97:1335 Ap 1 '72 190w

"The illustrations, and the spirited text in which they are set, tell much about those aspects of science that can be reduced to numbers. The one aspect that is neglected is the attribute of quality, whether of the lives of scientists or of their works. . . . The premise on which the call for [a General Union of Technologists and scientists] is based is that scientists and technologists are exploited workers rather than members of an elite. Does this view reflect the self-image of scientists and technologists? . . . [Assuming] that the Union is a reality, could it accomplish the objectives Menard envisions?" Claude Albritton

Science 176:639 My 12 '72 2400w

"[This book] by an oceanographer who writes and thinks as tight as a ship and yet as wide as the sea . . . is all empirical and tentative, matching one reflective, blunt and cheerful man's experience against the data: 55 graphs and nine tables crowd a brief, quite personal book. With dollar figures, age distributions, lists of names, counts of citations and papers, it is a contribution to the sociology of science as it functions in the U.S. today. . . . With typical activism, Menard proposes a national Industrial General Union of Technologists and Scientists. . . . This group would run innovation in the entire economy. . . . Only our smug elitist self-image, he holds, stands in the way. Perhaps he is right; one is certainly inclined to sign up. But even broader questions surface, which lie athwart the entire future of man in society." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 226:130 My '72 800w

MENASHE, SAMUEL. No Jerusalem but this; poems. 88p $4.95; pa $1.95 October house

811
SEN 8079-0 69-5; 8079-0170-9 (pa)
LC 70-113419

These are poems of the "Jewish consciousness . . . [and are] a witness to the sacredness of the nation in all circumstances—in life or in death." (N Y Rev of Books) Some of these poems have been previously published in various periodicals.

"Menashe's poems are like line drawings. One reads them quickly and apprehends their meaning with apparent ease. But above and below their literalness ring the connotations. . . . Philosophically, Menashe leads the reader into himself. Everyone has seen what the poet saw; recognition is instantaneous yet thought-provoking. In his own way Menashe becomes a new voice, a gentle voice among the breast-beaters. He is good to read and to remember."

Choice 9:370 My '72 160w

"Apart from a smaller volume, The Many Named Beloved, which appeared in London in 1961, this is the only collection we have of Samuel Menashe's astonishing poetry. . . . Sparse, almost gnomic in their simplicity, the poems are structured in sentences but unpunctuated for the sake of a free conversational flow and images that are not contained. That enables the poet to avoid the monotony such simplicity might otherwise threaten, for the images, unenclosed, seem to explode from the narrow lines. The poet's great risk, though, is gambling on the dead-rightness of the exact word in compositions that may extend no longer than two to four lines. . . . As indicated by the title, Menashe's vision, engendered by Blake's, is of Jerusalem as a divine liberty acquired by the human imagination." Grace Schulman

Nation 214:314 Mr 6 '72 1050w

"[Menashe's] poetry constantly reminds me of some kind of Biblical instrument—tabor or jubal—and the note it strikes is always positive and even joyous. His scale is . . . very small, but he can compress an attitude to life that has an immense history into three lines. . . . Nothing seems more remarkable about . . . [Menashe] than that his poetry goes so little remarked. Here is a poet who compresses thoughts and sensations into language intense and clear as diamonds." Stephen Spender

N Y Rev of Books 17:3 Jl 22 '71 500w

MENDELSON, EVERETT, ed. Human aspects of biomedical innovation; Everett Mendelsohn, Judith P. Swazey, and Irene Taviss, editors. 234p $9.95 Harvard univ. press

610 Medical care. Medicine—Practice
ISBN 0-674-41331-8 LC 74-160027

"An attempt is made in eight essays to discuss some of the . . . issues involved in the social control of the . . . medical care industry. The range of topics . . . [includes] organ transplants, behavior control technologies, human experimentation, the organization of medical care delivery." (Choice) Index.

"The most interesting essays are by Bessman and Swazey, who present a case study in premature biomedical legislation (the laws requiring testing of newborns for a rare and poorly understood hereditary defect, phenylketonuria), and by Mark Field, a medical sociologist who writes on health care in industrial society. The other articles are a rehash of material presented elsewhere in a more lively form, e.g. [G.] Leach's The Bureaucrats [BRD 1970], except for the article by John Knowles on medical manpower shortages, which is somewhat silly in any event. . . . Although this book concerns an area of vital interest, it is neither fresh enough nor meaty enough to warrant placing it at the top of a library's purchase list."

Choice 9:236 Ap '72 140w

"All of the authors make it exceedingly clear that medicine, at this time, is a social as well as a biological science. . . . There are no attempts on the part of the contributors at definitive and conclusive statements; the uncertainties attached to the complex issues involved in social control of biomedical science and technology would make these appear foolish. Discussion of these problems is vital, and the essays in this volume deal with issues of ever increasing consequence to all men." Lelde Gilman

Library J 97:1336 Ap 1 '72 160w

MENDELSON, JACK. Channing, the reluctant radical; a biography. 308p il $8.95 Little

B or 92 Channing, William Ellery
LC 75-161863

This work portrays "Channing in the society and culture of which he was a part as a minister of religion, a prophet, and a reformer of the moral life." (Choice)

"Inconveniently without a table of contents, the book is solidly based on primary sources, particularly Wm. H. Channing's Memoir (1848) and the 1901 edition of Wm. E. Channing's Works. . . . The book is clearly written and should appeal to a wide range of interest in Channing."

Choice 9:828 S '72 170w

"This volume is a historical and sociological study with minimal theological discussion. This is a valuable approach since it is Channing's theology that usually is emphasized even though it is necessary to understand that it was against the background of Brahmin New England that Channing's character developed. . . . For subject collections." S. W. Wojtowicz

Library J 96:3318 O 15 '71 150w

MENDOZA, GEORGE. Moonfish and owl scratchings; il by Peter Farnall. unp $3.95 Grosset

811
ISBN 0-448-02585-X LC 71-145732

The author attempts to show that a poem may be viewed in picturesque terms. "Grades two to six." (Library J)

"In this slight volume of one-liners on the nature of poetry, one-time adman George Mendoza is selling an empty cellophane wrapper. The poems are meager and inaccessible, and Mendoza's attempted sensitively fragile style breaks under the weight of its own pretensions. . . . Parnall's cold, acidly sharp line drawings with occasional splashes of color are, if possible, even more abstruse than the words, whose import they fail to make even remotely visual." Daisy Kouzel

Library J 97:2232 Je 15 '72 140w

"I wonder, where does one go to explain to a child the concept of over-reaching? Perhaps to [this place] and Mendoza's definition of a poem. 'A poem is a pond for the moon to bloom.' If children's books are really for children and—as first books—are giving some primary lessons in poetry, then I think the above is an inadequate example of a poem. The same is true of the allegories, which are simultaneously obscure, too full of 'shoulds' and of the author's notions of good and bad and of punishment as social reinforcement."

Jane O'Reilly

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p40 My 2 '71 130w

MENDRAS, HENRI. The vanishing peasant; innovation and change in French agriculture; tr. by Jean Lerner. (M.I.T. Studies in comparative politics) 289p $8.95 MIT press 309.144 Agriculture—France. Peasantry. Agriculture—Economic aspects. Sociology, Rural ISBN 0-262-13065-3 LC 79-118349

"It is Mendras's view that when a peasantry is transmuted into a stratum of modern capitalist farmers, whose new social and economic structures are patterned on those of industry, an entire civilization disappears. . . . It is the sociologist's task, he says, to point out other possible alternatives, better suited to the special characteristics of agriculture. . . . As the key institution he hypothesizes the small 'workshop' of up to ten farmers, specializing in one product, either artisanal or cooperative in structure, and meshed with hundreds of other workshops in either horizontal or vertical fashion. Along with this structural change, Mendras foresees a new set of rural social relationships." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"Mendras is France's leading rural sociologist. . . . His book, he warns, is . . . merely a pause in research to permit some tentative conclusions before striking out anew. Tentative or not, it is rich in insights, and its usefulness will not be confined to sociologists or to students of contemporary France alone. . . . Mendras [is] sure that 'the last vestiges of the peasantry in France' will not survive the present younger generation, and he hopes that 'the farmers' capacity for social invention, their 'courage, imagination, spirit of enterprise,' will find sustenance and sympathy from the nation's policy makers. Interspersed with these broad speculations, Mendras provides us with some fascinating glimpses into the processes and mechanisms of rural change in the France of our time." Gordon Wright

Am Hist R 77:160 F '72 470w

"This is an important synthesis of critical works since 1945 as well as a substantial guide to the formidable problems of French agriculture, with emphasis upon the collision between demands for innovation and entrenched resistance to change. Especially instructive is the analysis of the unique yet ambiguous place of the peasant in modern society and the peasant's defensive mechanisms against its demands; equally instructive is the substantial discussion of the formidable diversity of the French countryside and the barrier it represents to modernization. . . . Unfortunately the translation is not always smooth, and the very small and almost unreadable print, plus the absence of justified right-hand margins, make reading the book very difficult. . . . Good bibliography."

Choice 8:872 S '71 160w

MENSCHING, GUSTAV. Tolerance and truth in religion; tr. by H.-J. Klimkeit; augmented in collaboration with the author. 207p $8 Univ. of Ala. press

241 Tolerance

ISBN 0-8173-6701-2

LC 79-169495

This "study attempts to develop a typology of the forms that both tolerance and intolerance have taken in religious history. Mensching catalogs various motives for intolerance and marshals a . . . case for 'the postulate of tolerance,' built on a view of 'an ultimate unity of all living religions'." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Klimkeit has done a great service to English readers in translating this outstanding work in the phenomenology of religion. This type of study has been needed for quite some time. To the specialists Mensching's careful historical treatment of the issue of tolerance and intolerance in the major world religions is very useful as a broad introduction; and his notes and bibliography are especially helpful. . . . This book offers some very interesting insights into the sources of both tolerance and intolerance as well as suggesting ways of establishing better understanding among the religions of the world."

Choice 9:518 Je '72 100w

"[The author] depends heavily on the thought of his teacher, Rudolf Otto, in emphasizing the experiential rather than the intellectual content of religious truth. The result is a religious subjectivism that seems remote from the German theological revolution of the 20th Century." D. W. Dayton

Library J 96:3622 N 1 '71 110w

MENUHIN, YEHUDI. Theme and variations. 192p il $6.95 Stein & Day

780.1 Music—Analysis, appreciation

ISBN 0-8128-1463-0 LC 70-186294

"The essays and articles gathered together here represent glimpses of Menuhin's thought in many areas—music, education, the environment, and politics. Some have previously appeared in journals or as introductions to other books; several were lectures or speeches; others appear in print here for the first time." (Library J) Index.

"[These] occasional pieces reflecting Menuhin's opinions on all manner of subjects, from architecture to the British Empire, and from the prevention of cancer to the settlement of the problem of Berlin . . . are of very uneven quality. . . . Menuhin does not hesitate to give us his views upon the future of Europe, upon the way to peace, upon world citizenship in the year 5000, and so on. Being an intelligent man, I am sure he realizes that his political views are naive. . . . On music, however, he is, as one might expect, far more illuminating and interesting. . . . [It is] refreshing to discover that he recognizes that music can be an escape from reality as well as a healer." Anthony Storr

Book World p12 My 28 '72 1050w

Choice 9:1139 N '72 190w

"[The author] has an enormous range of interests and is passionately idealistic in his views. . . . Thought-provoking reading for musicians and for all those who share the author's feelings about a better world." B. D. Henry

Library J 97:1017 Mr 15 '72 150w

"The back-and-forth movement between Menuhin's career and his reflections on [a] . . . variety of subjects is what characterizes these pieces and gives them their special flavor and value. . . . Technical details are limited to a few remarks about cadenzas and an analysis of the opening measures of the Beethoven violin concerto. Teachers and students will undoubtedly want to look into another recently published Menuhin book called 'Violin' [BRD 1972], in which the author presents six lessons. In 'Theme and Variations,' he is content to identify it as the most perfect of instruments. . . . [This book] is somewhat arbitrarily divided ('Music,' 'Education,' 'The Environment,' and 'Britain, Europe and the World')." David Noakes

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 28 '72 1100w

"The most substantial paper is an appreciation of Indian civilization, which runs to ten pages—this in addition to an informative paper on Indian music. . . . There are one or two chapters of autobiography, half a dozen short sketches of musicians, one being of [Menuhin's] teacher Georges Enesco, but only two dealing with technical aspects of music. There are a dozen excellent portraits. Few executive musicians of international repute have touched life at so many points and are able to write about them so persuasively."

TLS p893 Jl 28 '72 170w

MENUHIN, YEHUDI. Violin; six lessons. 144p il $7.95 Viking press

787 Violin

ISBN 0-670-74688-6 LC 72-162661

The book begins with preparatory exercises "intended to flex, strengthen, and coordinate

MENUHIN, YEHUDI—Continued

your left and right hands. . . . The six 'lessons' actually grew out of six films of twenty-five minutes each, that [the author] made with a small class of children at the Yehudi Menuhin School of Music in England, and the chapters of the book . . . amplify and explain the subject matter of each of the six lessons on film, with additional exercises and illustrative diagrams." (Book World)

"The chances are that you could do, over and over, everything that Yehudi Menuhin does and asks you to do in these six lessons, and you would still play the violin as well as you do now. Probably you would also stand taller, breathe better, move about a room more gracefully, and conceivably you might be both healthier and happier. But certainly the thing that would be least noticeably changed about you would be your fiddling. . . . [But] fiddle-maniacs devour . . . [all violin books] as they will this one." Arnold Gingrich

Book World p4 Ja 16 '72 650w

"[This book] should be read by every violinist and violist, for it contains a wealth of information particularly for advanced players and for string teachers. The fourth lesson or chapter, 'Bow Movements,' alone makes the book worth its price. The book ranks . . . as one of the most important recent contributions to the literature." A. B. Skei

Library J 97:503 F 1 '72 100w

MERCHANT, LARRY. And every day you take another bite. 191p il $6.95 Doubleday

796 Football
LC 71-161314

A critical analysis of professional football by the author who "writes a daily sports column for the New York Post called 'Fun & Games.' . . . He doesn't believe sports build character, [or that] booze and broads are bad for athletes; but neither does he believe that pro football is what got us into Vietnam." (Book World)

"Merchant is a skeptic who casts a cool eye on the sports scene. . . . [Turning] to the dedication page of his witty, insightful, and sophisticated book . . . [one] reads: 'For Heidi,' Merchant's wife? Mistress? Daughter? No, that Swiss miss who intercepted the Jets-Oakland Raiders air time and caused the biggest network furor in years. . . . It's such joy to see the [National Football League's] pomposities pricked with a city boy's switchblade." Joe Flaherty

Book World p15 Ja 2 '72 450w

Reviewed by Allen Cohen

Library J 97:212 Ja 15 '72 210w

"[This] is an exceedingly funny perceptive book. Merchant . . . is a disciple of the laudable theory that impertinence ought to be a sports-writer's primary weapon. He has some marvelous comments on the holy alliance between football and superpatriotism . . . football and God . . . and ballplayers. . . . His sassy prose is a necessary antidote to the NFL's pompous self-promotion." Jonathan Yardley

New Repub 165:22 D 18 '71 200w

Reviewed by Paul Zimmerman

N Y Times Bk R p35 N 21 '71 150w

MERCOURI, MELINA. I was born Greek. 253p il $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92
LC 75-157610

The "autobiography of the star of Never On Sunday and Promise At Dawn. . . . [She tells about] her childhood as the . . . granddaughter of Athens' . . . mayor, her marriage at sixteen to a wealthy Greek, her early . . . training in the Athens' theatre. . . . the men in her life. . . . [her meeting] with the exiled American writer and movie-maker, Jules Dassin, their tempestuous courtship and marriage, the films they made together and their years in the United States." (Publisher's note)

"[The author] gives us a review not only of the modern Greek theatre, but also of recent Greek history. Both views are deeply personal and reflect Miss Mercouri's emotional involvement. Her book convinces me that her opinions are based on truth and love of country and should be believed. From the very first paragraph, the smoothness of the language is impressive. . . . The translators have done a very respectable job of presenting Miss Mercouri's warmth, effusiveness, love of Greece. It is, indeed, an informative and interesting book." L. G. Crane

Best Sell 31:402 D 1 '71 380w

Reviewed by Liz Smith

Book World p4 N 28 '71 850w

"Rarely does a celebrity's autobiography speak with a voice and an emotion true to the spirit and style of the personality involved. Mercouri's engaging story of her life does just that. . . . Lying at the core of this autobiography, however, is Mercouri's love for Greece and her hatred of the junta that has destroyed democracy in the country from which she is now exiled. . . . She is critical of the United States government. . . . I don't agree with every political judgment Mercouri makes, but I couldn't help but be moved by the anger, the compassion, and the outspoken honesty of a courageous Greek spirit." Henry Halpern

Library J 96:3600 N 1 '71 300w

"[Melina Mercouri's] view of politics is highly personalized, even for a Greek. . . . Occasionally [she] lapses into a kind of Zorbaesque pseudery. . . . Yet when she is able to resist the obligation to appear larger than life her comments can be shrewd and perceptive. . . . Her splendid gift for the crushing phrase is admirably demonstrated. . . . Moreover, her account of her stormy personal life is transparently honest, and there are few who would have given so frank an account of a wartime liaison with an Athenian black-marketeer and collaborator. And if her grasp of recent Greek history is not very strong, her book does none the less provide a revealing insight into the highly personal and individualistic nature of Greek politics."

TLS p1567 D 17 '71 500w

MERILLAT, H. C. L. Land and the constitution in India. (Columbia univ. Southern Asian inst. Publication) 321p $10 Columbia univ. press

333.3 Land tenure. India—Social conditions
ISBN 0-231-03362-1 LC 79-127362

"One of India's central dilemmas is to reconcile the urgent need for greater economic equality with constitutional guarantees of private property and her hope for orderly social change. Merrillat's . . . book explores the . . . implications of this problem. . . . [He] begins with a survey of pre-independence land tenures and constitutional patterns. Then, focusing on the battle over ownership of land and industrial property, he explores the recent relations between constitutional law and the political process, leading to last year's struggle in Congress over the nationalization of major banks." (Choice)

"Merrillat's book has the advantage of factual accuracy, clear style, and an important subject. . . . The book's announced purpose, however, of giving both lawyers and the general reader 'some understanding of the social context in which Indian law relating to property rights in land has developed' is not fulfilled." Mark Naidis

Am Hist R 77:570 Ap '72 150w

"[This] useful and perceptive book tells a double tale of the effect of constitutional development on policies of agrarian reform and urban land use; and of the impact of these policies on the course of Indian constitutionalism. . . . While it modestly refrains from any generalizations to other areas of policy or to relations between constitutional development and redistributive reform, this book provides a carefully analyzed and revealing case study of the collision of legal culture with national policy." Marc Galanter

Ann Am Acad 402:147 J1 '72 550w

"An essential addition to college libraries on both contemporary India and comparative modernization."

Choice 7:1736 F '71 140w

"One comes away from . . . [this book] with a feeling that there is some hope that the planning process in India at last shows some signs of emerging from the web of preconceptions and biases that seem to have coalesced into a 'planthink' ideology." William Vickrey

Pol Sci Q 87:148 Mr '72 400w

MERIWETHER, LOUISE. The freedom ship of Robert Smalls; il. by Lee Jack Morton. unp $4.50 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Smalls, Robert—Juvenile literature. U.S.—History—Civil War—Juvenile literature. Slavery in the U.S.—Juvenile literature ISBN 0-13-331082-5 LC 76-160258

"Robert Smalls was born a slave. He worked in Charleston making money for the master. By the time he was eighteen, he was married with a family. . . . [This] is the story of Robert's . . . journey to freedom on a captured confederate gunboat, with fifteen other runaway slaves—men, women and children." (Publisher's note) "Grades two to three." (Library J)

"[The author] focuses on the exciting escape incident and mentions Small's youth as a slave and later years as a prominent politician only in passing. Attractively illustrated with pictures on every page, several maps, and photographs of Smalls and his family, this valuable introduction to a daring and clever man should prove useful for second and third grade readers as well as for older children." Judith Schneider

Library J 97:1600 Ap 15 '72 80w

"This account tells nothing about Smalls' long years of service after the war, and the narration is static; nevertheless, the book provides for younger readers a good introduction to a black leader and the dramatic event that changed his life." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:46 D 11 '71 90w

MERK, FREDERICK. Fruits of propaganda in the Tyler administration; with the collaboration of Lois Bannister Merk. 259p $9 Harvard univ. press

973.5 Tyler, John. U.S.—Politics and government—1815-1861. Maine—History. Texas—History ISBN 0-674-32676-8 LC 79-135547

"In this book, based on two papers presented in earlier years, the Merks seek to relate the influence of propaganda to the settlement of the Maine boundary dispute of 1842 and the annexation of Texas. Their contention is that Secretary of State Daniel Webster, with the consent of President John Tyler, used a secret executive fund to bring about acceptance of the settlement of the Maine boundary question. . . . They also assert that Senator Robert J. Walker's 'Letter of Mr. Walker' was a part of Tyler's propaganda to create a pro-annexation attitude in the North, especially in anti-slavery circles." (Choice) Index.

"Students of Professor Frederick Merk's brilliant monographs on manifest destiny, the Monroe Doctrine, and the Oregon question will be disappointed in this loosely argued collection of essays. . . . This book fails in its attempt to sustain an interpretive overview of Tyler's diplomatic methodology in propaganda terms." Robert Seager

Am Hist R 77:1177 O '72 550w

"The role of newspaper publisher and politician Francis O. J. Smith in disseminating propaganda is highlighted. . . . The inclusion of the complete text of the Walker letter and the Smith-Webster correspondence along with additional relevant documents is valuable. The discussion of the uses of propaganda during Tyler's Administration can be related to contemporary events, making this a timely book. Should be a part of all college libraries."

Choice 8:904 S '71 180w

"This engaging title is designed to cover two contrasting episodes. . . . Both are exercises in propaganda, to be sure, but Merk's essays on them show signs of independent composition, and his brief introduction is not quite enough to pull them together into a coherent whole." D. M. Pletcher

J Am Hist 58:740 D '71 340w

Va Q R 48:xxx1 winter '72 150w

MERK, LOIS BANNISTER. Fruits of propaganda. See Merk, F.

MERLI, FRANK J. Great Britain and the Confederate navy, 1861-1865. 342p il $7.50 Ind. univ. press

973.7 Confederate States of America. Navy. Confederate States of America—Foreign relations—Great Britain ISBN 253-38427-3 LC 72-628291

Professor Merli describes the "attempts of the Confederacy to circumvent British neutral-ty and build a navy in Great Britain during the American Civil War. . . . The author investigates the reactions of the government of Great Britain to Confederate attempts to construct naval craft in British yards and relates his findings to those of other historians who have studied the foreign response to the Civil War. He tries in particular to view the resulting problems from the eyes of statesmen in the various offices of her Majesty's government and in general gives the British and continental aspects of the story." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This monograph] admirably illuminates the international dimension of the American Civil War. . . . [Merli presents] a masterful account of Confederate naval strategy and personnel. Moreover, he gives a valuable discussion of such matters as a technical evaluation of the famous rams and the fatal defects of Confederate finance and an administration so woefully lacking efficiency and real appreciation of sea power. But despite this extensive background, Merli never loses sight of his main theme, the response of Britain to the efforts of the Confederacy to acquire a navy in Britain and thus traverse Britain's neutral obligations." Malcolm Lester

Am Hist R 76:1522 D '71 300w

"[There are several books on] various aspects of Merli's field. None really supercedes this book as it is in a sense an up-to-date, though abbreviated, compendium of them all. Here is scholarship of a high order. The 46 pages of supporting notes are very pertinent and the bibliographical essay at the end is worth the price of the book. An excellent reference text and a solid, reliable, and scholarly story as well."

Choice 8:275 Ap '71 130w

"[The author] readily acknowledges his obligations to such old standbys as E. D. Adams, Frank Owsley, and J. D. Bulloch, as well as to more recent accounts. But he has also made extensive and effective use of such unpublished sources as the Palmerston Papers. Foreign Office archives, and so forth. . . . The book's organization is somewhat disjunctive, but the style is clear and lively. . . . The profession is indebted to Merli for providing a compact, useful, and up-to-date treatment of an important phase of Anglo-American relations." L. H. Johnson

J Am Hist 58:755 D '71 550w

MERRIAM, EVE, ed. Growing up female in America; ten lives; ed. and introduced by Eve Merriam. 308p il $7.95 Doubleday

920 Woman—Biography. Women in the U.S. LC 79-157611

The editor "presents glimpses into the lives of American women of different ethnic, religious, and social groups—blacks, whites, Jews, Indians, the rich and the poor. The excerpts from autobiographies, journals, diaries, and correspondence [are intended to] illustrate, with varying particulars, the 'dailiness' of women's lives throughout U.S. history." (Library J)

Choice 9:250 Ap '72 180w

"Merriam has edited a book that puts the women's movement of today into historical perspective. . . . Especially illuminating are not the accounts of women who succeeded in overcoming obstacles to become leaders in their fields, for they are overrepresented in literature about women, but those individuals—like Eliza Southgate, a Colonial schoolgirl, and Arvazine Angeline Cooper, a pioneer wife—who did not aspire to greatness or change in their lot, but merely led ordinary domestic lives within the confines of their eras." Deborah Halprin

Library J 96:3749 N 15 '71 120w

Reviewed by Janet Prince

Library J 97:1183 Mr 15 '72 130w [YA]

"We know very little of the lives of women, and much of what we do know is unreliable. Merriam has moved into this void. . . . [But] there is something missing in these accounts. For every revelation, there is an omission, and often the omission seems to be in the writer's mind, not just on the page. The sense of rebellion is there, but it seems weaker than one would expect. . . . The acceptance of woman's role remains astonishing, especially considering the number of outstanding rebels included. . . . Merriam's book is a refreshing change from the abstractions, the polemics, the claims and counter-claims [of books on feminism]. . . . Without moralizing, these brief lives are filled with moral lessons." B. B. Watson

MERRIAM, EVE—Continued

Nation 214:183 F 20 '72 1350w

MERRIAM, EVE. Project 1-2-3; pictures by Harriet Sherman. unp $4.95; lib bdg $4.72 McGraw

372.7 Counting books
SBN 07-041516-1 LC 77-163295

The author "depicts—through the use of numbers from one to ten—the everyday life and personalities of the ghetto apartment projects." (Book World) "Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"The text is relatively straightforward and informative, enhanced immeasurably by the cheerful, orderly artwork of Harriet Sherman." M. J. Bandler

Book World p2 (children's issue) N 7 '71 50w

"A housing project that is 'as big as a town' is the focal point of this imaginative counting book. Many clever, unobtrusive applications of the numbers . . . are neatly incorporated into the text which, along with the pictures concisely and accurately portrays the physical organization and life style in a typical urban housing project. . . . The stylized expository pictures, painted in vivid, opaque, tempera colors (e.g., red-orange, deep pink, dark yellow) are rather flat and two-dimensional, nevertheless, an appropriately contemporary feeling is evoked by their streamlined uncluttered style. All in all, this book is a welcome and overdue departure from the traditional, ubiquitous animal counting books." Melinda Schroeder

Library J 96:3894 N 15 '71 150w

MERRILL, HORACE SAMUEL. The Republican command, 1897-1913 [by] Horace Samuel Merrill and Marion Galbraith Merrill. 360p il $12.50 Univ. press of Ky.

329.6 Republican party—History. U.S.—Politics and government—1898-1919
SBN 8131-1245-1 LC 76-147852

"The authors chart . . . the deterioration of effective leadership within the Republican party in the 15 years from McKinley to Taft. . . . [They] see the period as one of centralizing national control over political parties despite some vigorous state level leaders and programs." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The authors] write from a profoundly cynical view of public life in which corrupt office-holders served dominant business interests and oversaw a docile, kept electorate. The authors find little genuine conviction behind Republican policies and regard the electoral process as a sham contest to mask sinister machinations between organized capital and politicians. Relying heavily on innuendo and implications of misconduct, the Merrills have constructed an indictment of the GOP and predictably render a verdict of guilty. . . . The resulting narrative reflects the passion and intensity of this position but will leave the knowledgeable reader unpersuaded. In their eagerness to make their case the Merrills repeat themselves, commit errors of fact and citation, and on occasion bend the evidence to prove a point." L. L. Gould

Am Hist R 77:1074 O '72 660w

"Those who like their American political history straight will enjoy this thoroughly researched and well-written book very much indeed. . . . [It] suffers from two main inadequacies. First of all, it lacks analysis: the story is merely a story, without a beginning, without an end, and without any serious effort at interpretation. Secondly, there is no flesh on the bones of the characters who stalk through its pages. Of course, most of them are well known to literate Americans, but the authors might have made an effort to portray them as real human beings, rather than as mere speech-makers and letter-writers." David Fellman

Ann Am Acad 400:173 Mr '72 500w

"Roosevelt, while no hero, is shown possessing 'superb political acumen' as he preserves party unity, exercises Presidential influence to get popular rate regulatory and trust-busting legislation, and sidesteps tariff, currency, and race questions on which the party was divided. . . . First-rate illustrations, footnotes. Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 9:128 Mr '72 160w

"[This book] is organized chronologically, by sessions of Congress. Generally the authors assess the activities of the figures they describe in light of other writers' interpretations of the major legislative battles of the era. They offer new details . . . of the party's major issues. More disappointing, despite the writers' interest in leadership, there is little information on the overall structure of the party. The book's main value will probably be its incorporation of recent scholarship into a detailed treatment of economic legislation—or its lack—during the Republican era." R. D. Marcus

J Am Hist 59:166 Je '72 300w

MERRILL, JAMES. Braving the elements; poems. 73p $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

811
LC 72-78483

In this collection of poems are some which are autobiographical and some which deal with love. Some of them have been previously published in various periodicals.

"Serpentine sentences, idiosyncratic verbs, and a preoccupation with flux and paradox are characteristic of Merrill's poetry. . . . While a few of the poems are somewhat contrived, others such as 'Under Libra: Weights and Measures' and 'Up and Down' deal in a straightforward manner with the elemental stuff of life. Merrill, it seems, has listened to himself: 'The very great or very fatuous/Complicate the pinnacles they reach.' Merrill does not, and his greatness increases with each volume." Marilyn Gell

Library J 97:2847 S 15 '72 100w

"In this volume, Merrill has found a use, finally, for all his many talents. His surreptitious fondness for narrative . . . has now found a clear medium in his wonderful short narrative lyrics; his almost unnaturally exquisite gift for euphony has become unobtrusive but no less exquisite, in fact more so; his ironic and wayward humor has been allowed to surface in poetry as well as in prose; his single best subject—love—has found a way of expressing itself masked and unmasked at once. . . . It is hard to know where Merrill will go from here—whether he will set himself to a Proustian remembering and give us more vignettes of the past or whether some new convulsion of life will wreck the fine equilibrium by which, in this book, the four racing winds are held and viewed." Helen Vendler

N Y Times Bk R p5 S 24 '72 1000w

MERRILL, JAMES M. William Tecumseh Sherman. 445p il $10 Rand McNally

B or 92 Sherman, William Tecumseh. U.S.—History—Civil War
LC 78-153112

This is a portrayal of Sherman's life, character, and military career viewed against the background of his times. Bibliography. Index.

"The author emphasizes Sherman's restlessness and his innate honesty. . . . [He] refrains from burdening the reader with a surfeit of military maneuvers and regimental victories. Rather, he covers the Civil War through dispatches and letters written by Sherman. . . . This very human and easily read biography is not cluttered with footnotes that impede reader enjoyment. Some of Sherman's drawings are reproduced and give further indication of a man of many talents." F. C. Brown

Best Sell 31:325 O 15 '71 600w

"[This new biography] is a highly significant study. . . . Some years ago Merrill had the remarkable experience of finding in the archives of Notre Dame University 'thousands of letters' written by Sherman over a span of many years, and never before used by an historian. These letters comprise a major source for the reassessment of Sherman . . . and Merrill has skillfully used his materials. His style holds the reader's attention from the first to the last chapter. Sherman emerges as a warmly human, many sided man with strong convictions on many issues that are relevant today."

Choice 8:[1379] D '71 140w

"A popular biography which paints a somewhat different picture of Sherman than we normally receive. . . . Merrill reveals Sherman as a man who, while stern, nevertheless had a warm personality and was devoted to his large family. . . . Although lacking information on Civil War tactics and strategy, this work is interesting, personal, and highly recommended." D. H. Cloudsley
Library J 96:3318 O 15 '71 140w

MERRILL, MARION G., jr. auth. The Republican command 1897-1913. See Merrill, H. S.

MESA-LAGO, CARMELO, ed. Revolutionary change in Cuba. 544p $14.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

320.97291 Cuba—Economic conditions—1959—
Cuba—Politics and government—1959—
Cuba—Social conditions
ISBN 0-8229-3232-6 LC 73-158190

"Seventeen essays which provide a . . . discussion of various aspects of the Cuban Revolution. Most of the contributors are sociologists, economists, and political scientists. . . . The volume concentrates on economic aspects but there are chapters on ideology, international relations, religion, literature, education, theater, and cinematography." (Choice) "Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"Especially noteworthy are the analyses by James M. Malloy ('Generation of political support and allocation of costs'), Cole Blasier ('The elimination of United States influence'), Edward Gonzalez ('Relationship with the Soviet Union'), Roberto M. Bernardo ('Managing and financing the firm'), and José A. Moreno ('From traditional to modern values'). The cool, mechanistic orientation of most of the essays . . . tends to obscure the emotional aspects of this dynamic social movement [but this is] an important, scholarly addition to the literature on the Cuban Revolution. Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 9:709 JI/Ag '72 200w

"In an atmosphere heavy with polemics and ingenuous personal narratives, it is a pleasure to encounter a sober, and even arid, book of this type. . . . There are no real 'conclusions,' for the authors are not always in agreement. As in most symposiums, the contributions are of an uneven quality, but many are very good indeed. A valuable acquisition for academic libraries." Mark Falcoff

Library J 96:3619 N 1 '71 180w

MESSERLI, JONATHAN. Horace Mann; a biography. 604p pl $15 Knopf

B or 92 Mann, Horace
ISBN 0-394-42920-6 LC 78-154905

This is a portrait of the humanitarian reformer who helped lay the basis for the American public school system. Bibliography. Index.

"[This study] is thorough, up-to-date in its awareness of Mann's historical context, and written with energy and clarity." B. A. Weisberger

Book World p13 Ap 16 '72 550w

"[This] is the most important biography of Mann yet undertaken. . . . [It] is not the conventional biography but more correctly 'a life and times of Horace Mann.' It is a formidable achievement. . . . Fully documented; note on MSS sources. . . . Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 9:858 S '72 230w

Harvard Ed R 42:423 Ag '72 1000w

"Relying heavily on the Mann papers in the Massachusetts Historical Society and on similar materials elsewhere, which are virtually the only sources he cites. . . . [the author] portrays a self-conscious elitist who undertook to perfect American society with or without the collaboration of the electorate. . . . His biography is surprisingly unsympathetic to its subject and oddly out of touch with the patterns of thought and behavior characteristic of the man and his times. It essays some treatment of the conditions to which Mann addressed himself, but the history it introduces is conventional rather than deeply felt, and its efforts to interpret Mann's career in the context of the times are more often portentous than penetrating. The main strength of the book lies . . . in the case it makes that Mann persistently exaggerated the opposition to his educational reforms, and in the unfamiliar biographical details it makes available." Rush Welter

J Am Hist 59:706 D '72 400w

"[This is] a really perceptive and revealing biography of America's greatest 19th-century educational influence. Messerli's Mann is not the idealized paragon of earlier biographies. . . . The author's skilled use of hitherto unavailable, unknown, or unused primary sources concerning Mann's life has transformed dull records into dramatic and informing episodes. . . . [Horace Mann] for the first time has had his significant life story told in top quality fashion." E. M. Oboler

Library J 97:868 Mr 1 '72 200w

Reviewed by D. W. Howe

New Eng Q 45:589 D '72 700w

MESSICK, HANK. John Edgar Hoover; an inquiry into the life and times of John Edgar Hoover, and his relationship to the continuing partnership of crime, business, and politics. 276p $6.95 McKay 353.5 Hoover, John Edgar. U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation. Crime and criminals—U.S.

LC 70-188259

"Messick contends that the FBI director has refused to interfere with—indeed, has protected—the syndicates while concentrating on bank robbers and pinkos. . . . [He] emphasizes the . . . web of relationships among politicians, gangsters, Hoover, and the military-industrial complex." (Library J) Index.

"After perusing this book, one feels that [Hoover] . . . had feet of clay. . . . The author has presented an in-depth study of his subject, but he has also brought in important events in the administrations through which Hoover received accolades, whether earned or not." I. R. Hill

Best Sell 32:84 My 15 '72 550w

"[Messick's] book outstrips as criticism the insider critiques such as W. Turner, Hoover's FBI [BRD 1970]. . . . Hoover comes through as a draft dodger, a fanatical anti-Communist, a petty-minded buffoon, a liar, a racist, and even as naive and stupid. These serious charges are presented convincingly, and should be read by Hoover detractors and admirers, and by all those interested in the relationships that exist among government, crime, and the economy. Highly recommended for public, high school, and college libraries."

Choice 9:882 S '72 160w

"Messick, not kindly disposed to the FBI chief, to say the least, considers him a hypocrite and an ideologue partially responsible for the rise of organized crime."

Christian Century 89:523 My 1 '72 50w

"[This account] is revealing, but not as shocking as Messick hoped. Sparse footnoting, a loaded vocabulary and emotional, unsubstantiated allegations damage the author's credibility. Recommended with a large grain of salt; it may inspire a more scholarly investigation." M. S. Kingsley

Library J 97:1456 Ap 15 '72 100w

MESSINGER, SHELDON L., ed. The state of the university. See Kruythosch, C. E.

METCALF, GEORGE R. Up from within; today's new black leaders. 302p pl $7.95 McGraw

920 Negroes—Biography
SBN 07-041661-3 LC 77-167558

The "former state senator from New York has compiled biographies of eight black leaders: John Conyers Jr., Kenneth A. Gibson, Clifton R. Wharton Jr., Shirley Chisholm, Julian Bond, John Mackey, Alvin Poussaint, and Andrew F. Brimmer. The information, taken from personal interviews and published articles, provides the reader with . . . biographical sketches and . . . accounts of contemporary political machinations." (Library J)

"Mr. Metcalf writes knowingly and even a bit enthusiastically. There are places where critics might take slightly different views (about the Adam Clayton Powell case, for example), but nevertheless he tells all his stories very well. His foreword is exceptionally good." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 31:417 D 15 '71 700w

METCALF, G. R.—Continued

"Accounts of eight successful blacks that represent a middle-class answer to black power militants. . . . These, Metcalf contends, are the leaders of the third stage of the 'Negro revolution,' which combines the gains of the civil rights movement and the black pride of the black power movement of the mid-Sixties. In this stage blacks will compete in economics and politics and will do as they please in social and cultural affairs. . . . One may question if these success stories and individualistic efforts are adequate proof of the success of the new stage if, indeed, there is a new stage."

Choice 9:250 Ap '72 180w

"[Metcalf's] admiration is for the 'stable' blacks who work primarily within the system for change and for equality of power between black and white. Militants may disagree with his criteria of success in a white-oriented world, and white America would do well to note that none of these leaders came from the background of grinding poverty that afflicts the majority of American blacks." P. C. Black

Library J 96:3601 N 1 '71 160w

METCALF, SHEILA. The tuna cookbook. 175p $4.95 Doubleday

641.5 Cookery—Fish
LC 73-171306

This book contains 150 recipes utilizing tuna fish.

Reviewed by Friede Gruenrock
Best Sell 31:469 Ja 15 '72 60w

"Metcalf demonstrates that tuna is 'one of the most versatile foods on the market.' Some of the recipes simply substitute tuna for the main ingredients of classic dishes: tuna stroganoff, tuna chow mein. Others are delightful new inventions: plum tuna, fake frog legs. In addition to tuna entrées, there are recipes for tuna in appetizers, salads, sandwiches, soups, and dips, and a special section of foods that go well with tuna. All the recipes are imaginative, easy, refreshingly different, and, of course, inexpensive." Berkley Laite

Library J 97:72 Ja 1 '72 90w

MEY, HARALD. Field-theory: a study of its application in the social sciences; tr. by Douglas Scott. 326p il $7.95 St Martins 301.1 Social psychology
LC 75-181050

The author "believes that 'field-theory' as it was developed by Gestalt psychology and . . . by Kurt Lewin, is superior, as a basis for a variety of types of sociological and psychological analysis, to any form of positivism, to systems theory, and to the action theory of Max Weber. He sets out to expand the theory and to argue that much of what is most profitable in social science can be adequately stated in terms of field theory." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is the revised and slightly expanded English translation of the author's doctoral dissertation originally written in German. . . . The text is redundantly footnoted. Typical of most scholarly translations from German to English, the text reads very ponderously and slowly. Although primarily a critical review of the literature, Mey attempts through the organization of his work to show the direction which future development in field theory will take. . . . [This work] will be of some use to advanced students of field theory."

Choice 9:1008 O '72 130w

"[This is an] immensely learned book. . . . What [Mey] wants is a theory that does not take normative consensus for granted and envisages the possibility of conflict. . . . Most interestingly Mey sees as the clearest expositor of field theory in the social sciences, Gunnar Myrdal, writing in his early essay on the political element in economic theory in 1932. He has considerable time also for Mannheim."

TLS p471 Ap 28 '72 1250w

MEYER, HANS GEORG. Henrik Ibsen; tr. by Helen Sebba. (World dramatists) 201p il $6.50 Ungar

839.8 Ibsen, Henrik
ISBN 0-8044-2616-3 LC 72-163145

"Translated from the German, this book approaches Ibsen's major plays from a philosophic viewpoint. . . . Meyer sees Ibsen in terms of Kant, Hegel, Marx, Nietzsche, Kierkegaard, in terms of a dialectic movement within each play where the characters try to escape from a reified world of people and positions. . . . [He] focuses on [an] interpretation of Ibsen [as a] man in his universal stance of search for selfhood." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The book is enhanced for an undergraduate and graduate audience by chronology . . . illustrations of interesting performances, and a final short chapter on American productions of Ibsen."

Choice 9:1145 N '72 110w

"There is obviously much useful information in [this] volume. The analyses are sensible but superficial. . . . Libraries will find [the book] particularly helpful for beginning readers of [this] dramatist." E. G. Schreiber
Library J 97:2604 Ag '72 20w

MEYER, MICHAEL C. Huerta; a political portrait. 272p $9.50 Univ. of Neb. press

B or 92 Huerta, Victoriano, President Mexico
ISBN 0-8032-0802-2 LC 70-162343

The author's "objective is to provide an analysis of the political circumstances and conditions apparent at the stage, 1913-14, of the Mexican Revolution and to offer a profile of Huerta's public life in terms of his character and his approaches to governmental leadership." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Meyer's goal is not to present a biography of Victoriano Huerta, although much emphasis is placed on his maturation and personal accomplishments. . . . [The author's] most important contribution is the exhaustive use of heretofore uncovered or unused documents and writings. Meyer collates these written materials and offers a fresh interpretation and a more balanced view of Huerta and his government than previous works. Nothing of this scope and detail on Huerta and the period has been written. . . . [The book] is an asset to the multiplicity of books on the Mexican Revolution and an excellent reference and resource work for undergraduate and graduate scholars."

Choice 9:1033 O '72 170w

"[Meyer] has written a judicious reappraisal of Huerta which gives the controversial Mexican dictator and President (1913-14) an objective and overdue hearing (in contrast to the distorted prevailing judgments of the pro-Revolutionary school of Mexican historians). . . . This study provides ample evidence that Huerta was a villain, but perhaps now the myths about him may be put aside. A 17-page bibliography of primary and secondary sources will be of general use to historians of modern Mexico and of Mexican-American relations. For scholarly and large public libraries." R. D. Harlan

Library J 97:2577 Ag '72 140w

MEYER, MONICA. jt. auth. Shellfish cookery. See Chekenian, J.

MEYER, ROGER E. Guide to drug rehabilitation; a public health approach; foreword by Jerome H. Jaffe. 171p $5.95 Beacon press

362.2 Narcotic habit—Rehabilitation. Drug abuse
ISBN 0-8070-2772-3 LC 76-179152

"This book explores and evaluates current drug rehabilitation programs. Major emphasis is on programs for treating heroin addiction, including methadone maintenance and narcotic-blocking drugs, civil commitment, and various psychological treatments. Methods of dealing with the abuse of amphetamines, barbiturates, hallucinogens, and marijuana are also discussed." (Library J)

"[This is] an authoritative guide to drug rehabilitation which will serve to clarify the situation for the staff and members of town drug committees and state drug advisory councils. Specific drug programs will find the small book comprehensive and very readable. Meyer offers one of the rare accounts of outpatient methadone detoxification. If there is a need to go into more depth in a particular area, extensive bibliographic citations for each chapter enable the researcher and the provider of health services to check additional sources."

Choice 9:1002 O '72 170w

"[This book] is excellent in its discussion of the abuse of narcotic drugs and of practical means of fostering a public health response to drug problems. . . . [Meyer's] analysis of the marijuana problem and of the poor attempts at drug education also have merit. But his section on psychedelic drugs, though accurate in factual information, is weak in its comprehension of the scope of possibilities inherent in the use and abuse of these substances. . . . As a whole [however] his book is balanced, concise and clear." W. A. Richards

Christian Century 89:1254 D 6 '72 200w

"[This book is] directed at professionals in the field, as well as others in a policy-making capacity. . . . Dr. Meyer does not advocate a single method of treatment, but feels that different approaches are appropriate depending on community needs and resources. The most comprehensive guidebook in this field to date." R. H. Lipsett

Library J 97:2372 J1 '72 140w

MEYNELL, FRANCIS. My lives. 332p il $10
Random house

B or 92

LC [74-596760]

"Sir Francis sums up his many careers as a sometime journalist and spokesman for the British Left, an occasional poet, a . . . civil servant, and the . . . printer, editor, and guiding spirit of the . . . Nonesuch Press." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 31:418 D 15 '71 470w

Reviewed by Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p10 Ja 16 '72 290w

"The book is never quite a gossip column, but it sometimes skirts dangerously near that territory. However, the paradoxes implicit in Sir Francis's protean personality guarantee that 'My Lives' is anything but a dull book—its author has his roots in that flowering of eccentric individuality the later Victorian age so often achieved and which is so seldom recognised. He is, perhaps, at his best when he is objectively describing his experiences as a conscientious objector in the first world war. He went on a hunger and thirst strike that lasted until his tongue was 'so hard, dry and shrunken that it seemed inanimate. . . . 'So you are a fighter,' exclaimed a sergeant major who had at first been hostile. The son of Alice Meynell was always that."

Economist 239:64 My 22 '71 300w

"The [author] is very much in the company of such gentle enemies of the status quo as Bertrand Russell and Leonard Woolf. . . . Altogether, he is an admirable person who tells a long story as we might expect: neatly, honestly, and with deceptive mildness. . . . This is an important source work for modern British publishing and literary history." C. W. Mann

Library J 96:3601 N 1 '71 160w

Reviewed by Raymond Fletcher

New Statesman 81:813 Je 11 '71 170w

TLS p586 My 21 '71 750w

"[This] is a curious book, full of ancient (and usually lost) political fights, what is now called 'radical chic,' and a singularly involved love life. As literature the book is not, alas, at a very high level, but is a very good handbook on how to be a member of the establishment while fighting against it. Odd."

Va Q R 48:x winter '72 100w

MICHAEL, FRANZ. The Taiping rebellion; history and documents, by Franz Michael, in collaboration with Chung-li Chang [tr. by Margery Anneberg and others]. 3v; v 2-3. Documents and comments. (Wash. [state] Univ. Publications on Asia, 14) 726:729-1815p ea $30 Univ. of Wash. press

951 China—History—Taiping rebellion, 1850-1864

LC (66-13538)

In the first volume, BRD 1966, "Michael presents an analytical history of the rebellion. Volumes II and III provide the documentary substance of this history, giving the . . . story of the rebellion as it emerges from the rebels' own accounts. . . . The documents are presented chronologically according to the six phases of the rebellion as distinguished by the authors in Volume I. . . . The history of each document and an analysis of its contents are given in . . . commentaries." (Publisher's note) Chronology in volume three. Bibliography of volumes two and three in volume three. Index to volumes two and three in volume three.

"The publication of these two volumes marks the culmination of the intensive study of the Taiping Rebellion begun at the University of Washington about 15 years ago. . . . [The items] are arranged chronologically, so that they correlate with the narrative history which was derived from them, and include all sorts of evidence from poems, examination papers, certificates, and correspondence to the confessions of the Taiping leaders at the end of the rebellion. These three volumes, together with [V.] Shih's The Taiping ideology [BRD 1967, 1968], reveal from the inside the nature and development of the great mid-19th century movement against traditional Chinese culture. Essential for any college or university library which is building up a collection on modern China."

Choice 8:1373 D '71 180w

"This is the greatest collection of source material on the Taiping Rebellion, translated from Chinese into English by nineteen scholars and edited by Gladys Greenwood. . . . [Volumes II and III] provide the documentary substance of the Taiping history . . . as it emerges from the Taiping rebels' own publications of more than forty booklets—a unique feature, as most Chinese rebels left no writings. . . . New translations provide the translator's names at the end of each document; the quality varies a little according to different translators. . . . A comprehensive bibliography of works in Chinese, English, Japanese, French, German, and Russian is furnished and is very informative and useful. . . . As a whole the volumes are really a chef-d'oeuvre for the study of the Taiping Rebellion." S. Y. Teng

Pacific Affairs 45:100 spring '72 600w

MICHAEL, HENRY N., ed. Dating techniques for the archaeologist; coedited by Henry N. Michael and Elizabeth K. Ralph. 227p il $12.50 MIT press

913 Archeology—Methodology

ISBN 0-262-13074-2 LC 79-153296

This volume "brings together contributions by eight authors, with four of the seven chapters on dating by means of radiocarbon (Ralph), archeomagnetism (Bucha), thermoluminescence (Winter), and obsidian hydration (Michels and Bebrich)—providing . . . discussions that include outlines of laboratory procedures. The other chapters [are] on dendrochronology (Michael), fission-track dating (Faul and Wagner), and potassium-argon dating (Faul)." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

"Described as primarily a handbook for the professional archaeologist, the book is clearly enough written that even the more difficult parts can be followed by those with a knowledge of high school chemistry and physics. It ought to have a sizable audience among readers who are curious how scientists, through applying atomic physics, have learned to date our world. . . . Recommended for college libraries."

Choice 9:1023 O '72 190w

"This collection of papers . . . inaugurates a series of handbooks to be produced under the auspices of the University of Pennsylvania Museum Applied Science Center for Archaeology. . . . The chapter on radiocarbon is one of the most complete summaries of the technique available. . . . The chapter on obsidian hydration provides a complete historical survey of the development of the technique. [However, although it] . . . notes the chemical problems in obsidian hydration work, it does not bring into clear focus the trends of the current research." R. E. Taylor

Science 177:419 Ag 4 '72 700w

"A valuable, concise, pointed set of summary pieces each explaining the how of one physical dating technique for the use of professional archaeologists. A good many readers not in that trade may expect to use it with real profit, both for reading as a whole and an accessible and authoritative source for specific points and for guidance to methods and the literature." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 227:198 ■ '72 370w

MICHELANGELO BUONARROTI. Michelangelo. 15p pl col pl $5.95 Phaidon; for sale by Praeger

730.92
ISBN 0-7148-1483-0 LC 76-141063

This book discusses Michelangelo's life and artistic achievements and illustrates his work with 32 black and white plates of his sculpture and 16 color plates of his paintings.

"Many of [the plates are] in excellent color. One of the attractive features of the volume is that the selection of illustrations is not limited to the more familiar work of the artist. . . . This is a series that can be highly recommended to libraries from the high school level upward and to students and amateurs of art."

Best Sell 31:306 O 1 '71 50w

"This [Phaidon Great Artists Collection] series emphasizes the need to be particularly critical in evaluating the claims and blandishments of publishers as they tout their wares. The prefatory essays in these books are perfunctory and the color reproductions . . . are deplorable. Granted that the asking price is minimal for art books today, the prospective customer is not receiving a bargain. Art libraries or individual collectors are advised to investigate and compare the following low-priced series: Abrams' 'Classics of the world's great art' or Time-Life's 'Library of art.' Either of these sets offers excellent value for the money. The series under review is not recommended."

Choice 9:50 Mr '72 30w

Economist 240:53 Ag 7 '71 10w

"In making these volumes . . . available to such a wide public at an extremely modest price . . . the Phaidon Press is living up to its long-standing reputation as a pioneer of haute vulgarisation in art history. . . . The printers have done as well with . . . difficult business of reproducing large-scale [Michelangelo] frescoes in little."

TLS p1598 D 24 '71 90w

MICKELSON, SIG. The electric mirror; politics in an age of television. 304p il $8.95 Dodd

329 Television in politics
ISBN 0-396-06363-2 LC 74-39223

This is an "analysis and interpretation of how TV has affected politics in the U.S. and abroad since the early 1950's. . . . [The author includes] TV's problem with the FCC fairness doctrine and the Nixon Administration's displeasure with its TV coverage, and examines the sociopolitical consequences of TV's reporting of political conventions." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has been president of CBS-TV News. . . . He mines from the particular advantage of his experience the anecdotal detail and background information which, paired with the materials obviously the results of wide research, introspection, and collection, are able to support, intrigue, and amuse the interested lay reader—at whom this book is clearly aimed. . . . All but the most destitute or otherwise specialized libraries should have this book. But it should be understood that . . . this is an easy book, full of careless redundancies." R. J. Williams

Best Sell 32:173 J1 1 '72 200w

"A well written and generally absorbing book. Mickelson has explored every aspect of how TV covers political events and how election campaigns are run. . . . [He] has done his exhaustive research well, and the result is a particularly valuable work." M. S. Lasky

Library J 97:1795 My 15 '72 140w

"There are [some] inside goodies, but the currants are few and far between in this great dough-y book (not so the typographical errors). The author . . . has managed to make the coming together of television and politics pretty dull reading." C. H. Simonds

Nat R 24:1071 S 29 '72 140w

MIDDENDORF, JOHN H., ed. English writers of the eighteenth century. See English writers of the eighteenth century

MIDDLEBROOK, MARTIN. The first day on the Somme, 1 July 1916. 346p il $8.95 Norton 940.4 European War, 1914-1918—Campaigns and battles—France. Somme, Battle of the, 1916
SBN 393-05442-X LC 71-159456

"After an immense but useless bombardment, at 7:30 A.M. on July 1, 1916, the British Army went over top and attacked the German trenches. It was the first day of the Battle of the Somme, and on that day the British suffered nearly 60,000 casualties, two for every yard of their front. . . . Middlebrook's research has covered . . . official and regimental histories . . . tours of the battlefields, [and] interviews with . . . survivors, both British and German. . . . [In his account he attempts to] convey the overall strategic view and the terrifying reality that it was for front-line soldiers." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The index is full and superb. The order of battle is clear. The map work is good. Many will not be so much interested in such a mass of detail as to wish to have this book. Others professionally or historically interested must have it—and . . . will find it fascinating and eminently readable and exciting." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 31:462 Ja 15 '72 440w

Choice 9:567 Je '72 170w

"The author . . . writes from the viewpoint of the front-line soldier, describing all of the hardship, fear, boredom, and fatalism. The wealth of detail is both fascinating and overwhelming. Middlebrook treats successively the setting of the battle, the preparations, zero hour, and the battle itself. Three excellent chapters conclude the study—the 'Aftermath,' the 'Cost,' and 'An Analysis.' The last is particularly good. Excellent photographs, good maps, and several appendixes complete this thorough and scholarly study." R. T. Redden

Library J 97:1013 Mr 15 '72 110w

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 6 '72 100w

"The septuagenarian recollections [of the survivors] assisted by their contemporary papers, make this a particularly vivid and personal narrative, because Mr Middlebrook, under the strong influence of compassion and fascinated horror, has achieved a manner both lucid and eloquent. . . . All the official sources have also been consulted. . . . Autobiographies, novels and poems have contributed. Perhaps the most historically valuable, and certainly the most entertaining, parts of the book are the stories of the recruiting of Kitchener's army. . . . [The author] does not neglect the generals, and their staffs. . . . There is a certain dry tang about his manner when he deals with the higher echelon. . . . What sticks in the mind are the figures [of the casualties]. . . . The 'butcher's bill,' in the eighteenth-century phrase, is all the more moving because we have been given so many individual stories of how men enlisted and how they faced their disastrous battle."

TLS p1037 Ag 27 '71 650w

MIDDLEKAUFF, ROBERT. The Mathers: three generations of Puritan intellectuals, 1596-1728. 440p $12.50 Oxford

920 Mather, Richard. Mather, Increase. Mather, Cotton. Puritans. U.S.—History—Colonial period
ISBN 0-19-501305-0 LC 79-140912

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Theodore Hornberger
Am Lit 44:477 N '72 470w

Reviewed by D. S. Lovejoy
J Am Hist 58:993 Mr '72 650w

Reviewed by D. D. Hall
New Eng Q 44:659 D '71 950w

MIDDLETON, W. E. KNOWLES. The experimenters; a study of the Accademia del cimento. 415p il $22.50 Johns Hopkins press

507.2 Accademia del cimento
ISBN 0-8018-1250-X LC 77-142816

In this account of "the Accademia del Cimento (1657-1667) of Florence, 'the first organization founded for the sole purpose of making scientific experiments,' . . . [the] chapters provide background material on pre-1657 science; on the two Medicl patrons of the 'new science' (Grand Duke Ferdinand of Tuscany and his brother, Galileo's pupil, Prince Leopold); on the ten Academicians; a review of the academy's establishment and operations; an account of the preparation of its sole publication, the Saggi di naturali esperienze (1667), with new translation plus introduction, notes, unpublished experiments, observations; discussion of transalpine relations of the Accademia; its dissolution; and a . . . concluding essay." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"A splendidly broad, detailed, scholarly work on a hitherto little-treated topic. . . . Five valuable appendices; Florentine weights and measures converted to metric; . . . excellent, informative index. Essential for undergraduates and graduates in the history of science and 17th-century history. Interesting general reading."

Choice 9:388 My '72 130w

"Middleton has produced an admirable work of scholarship which will be an essential purchase for all history of science collections. . . . [The] essays on the relationships between the Italian academicians and savants in other countries will be very useful for students of European intellectual history. The documentation is illuminating." Jack Goodwin

Library J 96:3770 N 15 '71 110w

"Only the specialist will want to follow Middleton into the thickets of details, but he can do so with great assurance of the reliability of the presentation. Middleton knows his primary sources extremely well, and more often than not lets them speak for themselves, in a faithful but readable English translation. . . . For all his contributions in setting straight many points of detail, Middleton has avoided very significant questions that did not occur to him because of the meticulous and focused character of his book. He makes no concerted attempt to assess the place of science in the Medici court, or to explain the lack of continuing interest in natural philosophy outside the tiny ring of experimenters." Roger Hahn

Science 177:983 S 15 '72 800w

"The Experimenters, like Dr Middleton's histories of the thermometer, barometer, and meteorological instruments generally, is a thorough piece of writing, which at once becomes the standard introduction in English to the published record of the ten Academicians over their ten years of work together. It introduces without answering, a question of great historical interest: why, with the publication of the Saggi, did Tuscan science falter and pass into relative obscurity? But it takes us one stage nearer to an answer, providing as it does much useful information not only on patronage, but on what was done with patronage which is more to the point."

TLS p871 J1 28 '72 600w

MIERS, EARL SCHENCK. Crossroads of freedom; the American Revolution and the rise of a new nation; drawings by Charles Waterhouse. 290p maps $9 Rutgers Univ. press

973.3 New Jersey—History. U.S.—History—Revolution
ISBN 0-8135-0699-9 LC 78-163953

This book covers the campaign in New Jersey "from Fort Washington to Trenton and Princeton, Morristown to Monmouth, ending with the battle of Springfield and the defeat of the British. . . . [Miers makes] use of the diary of Joseph Plumb Martin, a young man who remained in the Continental Army throughout the war and recorded events from the viewpoint of the ordinary citizen-soldier. Contrasted with his account are the records and correspondence of generals and politicians as well as what the newspapers had to say and what was going on outside the battle zones." (Publisher's note) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Colorful vignettes of Molly Pitcher and unsung heroes and attention to the more imaginative of Washington's officers heightens the adventure. Miers writes for the young reader, but his sharpness of portrayal and blowing up of little known episodes, such as Lord Stirling's excursionary attack on Staten Island across the ice of New York Bay, gives an added dimension. Certainly not indispensable for a scholarly collection, this brief military history does have the human touch and is enjoyable."

Choice 9:276 Ap '72 130w [YA]

"The use of eyewitness accounts, especially Washington's writings, combined with a skillful style, make [this] a readable and useful work, particularly for young people and general readers. Recommended, although its concentration on events in New Jersey may cause some readers to prefer a more general account." R. W. Ryan

Library J 97:497 F 1 '72 70w [YA]

MIGEL, PARMENIA. The ballerinas: from the court of Louis XIV to Pavlova. 304p il $10.95 Macmillan (N Y)

792.8 Dancers—Biography. Ballet—History
LC 74-158169

This account of the lives and careers of early ballerinas "begins with Mlle. de la Fontaine (1655-1738), who in 1681 took the lead in Lully's Le triomphe de l'amour, the first time that women danced professionally at the Opéra de Paris, and it ends with Anna Pavlova (1881-1931), who in 1909 journeyed west from Russia with the Diaghilev company that changed the course of ballet history." (Sat R) Bibliography.

"There is not a dull page in this [book]. . . . The author has a nose for gossip and anecdote as well as for facts, and she brings each of these women vividly to life in a few deft words. . . . The chapters vary in length according to the availability of interesting material. The sections on the pre-Romantic dancers are of special interest because this material has not been readily available in English before in such an attractive presentation. Copious notes, an extensive bibliography, and a good index round out the work. An important book for dance collections and of potential interest to the general reader." G. L. Mayer

Library J 97:2748 S 1 '72 130w

"There isn't, alas, very much to be gleaned from the lives of most dancers. Among the accounts of their triumphs, finances, love affairs, and quarrels, the significant element gets lost. What we really want to know is how they danced and what contribution they made to their art. . . . Accurate and scholarly though [Migel] is, she has an overriding interest in personalities and adventures. She is absorbed by the people behind the careers. She takes their artistry as self-evident and concentrates instead on their biographies."

Dale Harris

Sat R 55:95 O 7 '72 950w

MIKHAIL, E. H. Sean O'Casey: a bibliography of criticism; with an introd. by Ronald Ayling. 152p $12 Univ. of Wash. press

016.822 O'Casey, Sean—Bibliography
ISBN 0-295-95167-2 LC 76-37007

The "professor of English literature, Lethbridge, Canada, has included in his compilation some 2,500 entries (including both English and foreign-language titles) ranging [1918-70]. Sections are devoted to reviews of O'Casey's works; books of criticism; . . . essays in periodicals; reviews of play productions; reviews of staged autobiographies; reviews of films; and unpublished material, mainly dissertations." (Choice) Indexes of works and of authors.

"[The section on books of criticism] could have been better divided into books devoted solely to O'Casey criticism, and to books in which criticism of O'Casey among others is included. . . . In a work such as this, one cannot reasonably expect completeness, but there are some surprising omissions. . . . The work is an index of the growth of O'Casey studies, and it supplements and enlarges Charles Carpenter's 'Sean O'Casey studies through 1964', which was originally published in Modern drama [BRD 1969]. . . . It is a good addition for O'Casey collections, but general collections can be well served by Carpenter's list in The Sean O'Casey reader which also gives a balanced selection of works from the O'Casey canon at practically the same price."

Choice 9:1114 N '72 240w

"[This] is particularly valuable for its thorough coverage of newspaper reviews of first productions and revivals of the plays. Use of the 'Index of Works' is essential, since references to criticisms of the same work are often scattered. However, the failure to identify items of first importance or to provide annotations in significant number may limit the value of this bibliography for beginning students of O'Casey. Recommended for larger subject collections." T. J. Galvin

Library J 97:2563 Ag '72 110w

MIKO, STEPHEN J. Toward Women in love: the emergence of a Lawrentian aesthetic. 299p $9.75 Yale univ. press

823 Lawrence, David Herbert
ISBN 0-300-01470-8 LC 73-151583

"This study of Lawrence's fictional career through Women in Love sees his development as a 'basic search for coherence—not just of the worlds of novels, stories, and poems but of human life itself.'" (Library J)

"[This is] another of those interminable repetitions, and boring exegeses that distinguish Lawrentian scholarship, this time more narrowed down to an explication of a paradox thought to underlie the author's aesthetic: the intellectual preaching anti-intellectualism. . . . Only for college libraries."

Choice 9:815 S '72 190w

"Lawrence's imagination was truly dialectical; and although this work is not entirely original in its approach, Miko is the first critic to systematically follow through on this idea. The volume that results is solid and illuminating, though, not surprisingly, the analysis of the relatively neglected works—The White Peacock [BRD 1911], The Trespasser [BRD 1912], and the expository writings—has more to offer than the interpretations of those critical staples, Sons and Lovers [BRD 1913], The Rainbow, and Women in Love. Not enough attention has been given to the lengthy process by which Lawrence achieved his mature voice and style. Toward Women in Love addresses itself to precisely this question and in a way that will commend the book to students of this novelist's art."

Keith Cushman

Library J 97:1438 Ap 15 '72 210w

"[This work] is not concerned with Lawrence's passionate problem nor his attitude to tragedy. Professor Miko is convinced that as Lawrence grew older he 'became increasingly hostile to tragedy, either as a literary form or an attitude to life.' Seeking to trace 'the emergence of a Lawrentian aesthetic' he found certain recurring patterns of conflict. He concludes that 'the element of wholeness through conflict is persistently present' throughout Lawrence's work. . . . Although Toward Women in Love is concerned to show Lawrence's search for an essential unity in spite of all human contradictions, Professor Miko acknowledges that the occasions when Lawrence's novel did veer towards becoming a treatise were lapses. Memory suggests that these were not so obvious to the happy few who were able to read Lawrence before the anatomizers got hold of him."

TLS p280 Mr 10 '72 550w

MILESTONES of history; 100 decisive events in the history of mankind. 936p il col il maps $30 Norton

909 World history
SBN 393-05432-2 LC 76-139852

This work "covers in one hundred essays the development of civilization, from the formation of the earliest states in Egypt and Sumer to the landing of Apollo 11 on the moon in 1969." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Most readers of this handsome oversized volume will find its outstanding feature to be the 1500 beautiful illustrations, a third in full color: some are modern photographs, but most are illustrations of paintings, manuscripts, architecture, pottery, and statuary. The work differs in organization from other world histories, which tend to be so condensed that they are unreadable. Each of the 100 chapters is devoted to one event—political, military, literary, musical, scientific, or religious—and each is written for the general reader by a specialist. . . . This is more than a coffee-table book; its penetrating interpretations should delight and inform cultivated readers."

E. P. Stickney

Library J 97:1322 Ap 1 '72 130w

"[The major events] chosen for fairly full treatment by individual authors . . . have been linked by a rather pedestrian chronological narrative. . . . [Each part] is provided with a chronological chart for the period covered. There are numerous, if sometimes rather oversimplified, maps. Altogether this is the kind of compilation which is likely to arouse any latent interest in the past, and to provide many pleasant hours of browsing. But it must be said that inaccuracies abound, especially in the captions to the illustrations and in the chronological charts. . . . The individual contributions, as might be expected, vary in quality, some being outstanding pieces of analysis, while others yield too readily to the heresies of over-emphasis and pattern-making."

TLS p802 Jl 9 '71 810w

MILL, HARRIET TAYLOR. Essays on sex equality. See Rossi, A. S., ed.

MILL, JOHN STUART. Essays on sex equality. See Rossi, A. S., ed.

MILLARD, ANNE. Egypt; with an introd. by W. B. Emery. (The young archaeologist bks) 112p il lib bdg $3.86 Putnam

913.32 Egypt—Antiquities—Juvenile literature. Archaeology—Juvenile literature
LC 70-129232

"This book has three main themes. The first part is designed to give some insight into the life of the archaeologist in Egypt, how to get onto a dig [and] what the work is like. . . . The second part concerns the daily life of the ancient Egyptians as it can be reconstructed from the finds made by archaeologists. The third section deals with individual finds and excavations." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"This British publication is definitely not for young American readers. The format resembles that of an academic/scholarly tome, and even worse, the text reads like one. The book is a mélange of informational tidbits: historical, daily life, how-to-knowledge for budding Egyptologists, geographical, etc. There is a time chart as well as an index, but the bibliography—adult-oriented to begin with—has British, adult-oriented citations. There are many better available titles on ancient Egypt."

M. J. Shapiro

Library J 97:1179 Mr 15 '72 70w

"The subject of Egyptian archaeology holds an intrinsic magic for [children] which must give any author on the subject an initial advantage. In spite of this Anne Millard, with a style seemingly aimed at reassuring the nervous elderly spinster contemplating a package tour to Luxor, only succeeds in making it dull."

TLS p394 Ap 2 '71 90w

MILLARD, REED. How will we meet the energy crisis? power for tomorrow's world. by Reed Millard and the editors of Science book associates. (Tomorrow's world ser) 189p il $4.50 Messner

621.4 Power resources—Juvenile literature. Power (Mechanics)—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-671-32477-2; 0-671-32478-0 (lib bdg)
LC 78-161514

"The power producing potential and the social and environmental implications of nuclear energy, tidal energy from the sea, natural gas, hydroelectricity, ocean surface waters, and solar energy are discussed. . . . A brief epilogue takes up the questions of pollution and whether the power industry should be controlled by the government or by private enterprise. [Bibliography. Index.] Grade eight and up." (Library J)

"[This study] offers a much more optimistic view of hydro-electric power than [some] and points up aspects of power distribution which I had not sufficiently considered. It also forces me to recheck some figures. . . . I am still of the understanding that roughly half of the practically developable water power on this continent has already been tapped, but I needed reminding that this is no excuse for stopping hydroelectric development. The book should stimulate some strong discussion between ecologists and those people who feel that they cannot face a drastic situation—the reduction of man's present energy consumption." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:167 Ap '72 220w

"A broad ranging survey of scientific research dealing with new sources of electric power in use today and projected for the near future. . . . A list of sources about power (societies and government agencies) . . . round out this clear, inclusive offering." Eleanor Frome

Library J 97:289 Ja 15 '72 100w

MILLER, BENJAMIN, F. The family book of preventive medicine; how to stay well all the time, by Benjamin F. Miller and Lawrence Galton. 704p $12.95 Simon & Schuster

616 Medicine, Popular. Hygiene
ISBN 0-671-20812-8 LC 70-139644

This book "covers general health care, care of the body systems, and preventive mental care. The section on family preventive care includes chapters on sexual adjustment and genetic counseling. Over 60 'disease scenarios' conclude the volume. Each scenario emphasizes the dynamic nature of the physician's diagnosis and treatment, and includes the epidemiology, treatment, and prognosis of the disease, as well as . . . advice on prevention." (Library J) Index.

"Appeals to a nurse-teacher of student nurses because curriculum focus should be prevention of disease and teaching good health to our community—something this book does for the public. . . . The public will appreciate the use of medical terminology followed by definitions which they often hear from their own doctors—minus the definitions. The short paragraphs with topic headings make for easy reading. Will appeal especially to parents with young families and give excellent background to readers with no formal biological training which so many people lack, yet need, today. It is a matter-of-fact presentation which psychologically helps many people to accept themselves. The bibliographic references in the mental health section are a good feature. All in all, a good book for any family."

Choice 8:1353 D '71 120w

"Helpful and frequent cross references enhance the text. The broad coverage, the positive emphasis, and the nontechnical vocabulary make this a volume to be recommended highly." S. B. Hesslein

Library J 96:2333 J1 '71 140w

MILLER, DAVID, jt. auth. Going to jail. See Levy, H.

MILLER, GEORGE A., ed. The sociology of organizations. See Grusky, O.

MILLER, HELEN HILL. Greece through the ages; as seen by travelers from Herodotus to Byron. 324p il $15 Funk

913.38 Greece—Antiquities. Greece—Description and geography
LC 70-121601

The author takes the reader on a journey to Greece by quoting from eyewitness accounts from antiquity to the mid-nineteenth century. These descriptions are incorporated into her own commentary. Illustrations by travelers as well as modern photographs are included. Chronology. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[Miller's commentary] is knowledgeable, entertaining, and brightly informative." R. F. Grady

Best Sell 32:21 Ap 1 '72 140w

"[The] chapters are devoted to the ten regions in the Greece most frequented by tourists of today. The author has written extensively on Greece and its Mediterranean colonies. In this work, her text is largely subordinated to the accounts of travelers in this area. . . . Besides views of classical sites, there are also pleasantly informal notes on wild flowers and ancient byways. A useful bibliography completes this handsome volume."

Va Q 48:cix summer '72 70w

MILLER, HENRY. My life and times. (A Gemini Smith bk) 204p il $17.95 Playboy press

B or 92
LC 79-151843

"Pictures of Miller, his friends, his homes, and particularly his manuscripts, notebooks, and paintings [are accompanied by a text which is] part autobiography, part scattered commentary on life, sex, art, writing, etc." (Library J)

"[This superbly edited] collection of taped conversational recollections and reflections is the next best thing to an actual visit with Henry Miller. . . . The end-papers are a detailed chronology of [his] life. Yes, this is a coffee table tome, but Miller is triumphantly present throughout. The book could serve as an introduction to this American writer; his warmth and gusto shine through every page. Most academic libraries ought to have a copy. For the casual reader, this is Henry Miller at his most accessible and his most attractive."

Choice 9:215 Ap '72 140w

"This handsome book has been created by ■ Californian photographer, Bradley Smith, who has put together a collection of his own and others' photographs and a text edited out of many hours of taped conversations with Miller. The pictures . . . are fascinating. The text is less consequential. . . . It nevertheless exhibits the typical frankness and clarity of Miller and the peculiar gusto and serenity of his life. As obviously packaged a product as this is, it has been done superbly; and anyone interested in old Henry will find hours of browsing enjoyment in it." Eric Moon

Library J 96:4003 D 1 '71 110w

"The erotic motif is imposed on some of the photographs—cheaply and irrelevantly. . . . There are also reproductions of Miller's paintings . . . which are endearingly bright and fin de siècle. Finally, there is Miller talking about himself and giving us all hope. . . . He is a fine advertisement for the longevital virtues of regular sex. But the book is a mere plaything or a playboy thing, in no wise a fitting summation, a glossy toy that might lull the reader into not taking Miller as seriously as he ought. Miller has spent a long industrious life grinding slow and exceeding fine, also coarse. He is a world literary figure. . . . [But] industry and longevity are no substitute for genius." Anthony Burgess

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ja 2 '72 1800w

"The package offered—an oversized, coated-paper collection of photos, documents, and taped remarks by Miller on 'Now,' 'Writing,' 'Childhood,' and other subjects—is billed as 'intellectual history.' And the pictures are groovy indeed. Here the author . . . studies at his desk (in the shadows sits a topless lovely, reverent, silent, proud). Turn the next page and it's 'Hi there!' to three Japanese girls, among them Miller's fifth wife. . . . Turn the next and here's your host glossing graffiti found in the master bath. . . . Several documentary bits in these pages are actually piquant—manuscript versions of certain of the hornier passages in Tropic of Cancer [BRD 1961, and] diary lists of exotic places visited and remembered ('Grand Canyon—Still the Best!') . . . But, on the whole, in this outing braininess doesn't show." Benjamin De Mott

Sat R 54:29 D 11 '71 1400w

TLS p408 Ap 14 '72 550w

MILLER, K. BRUCE. Ideology and moral philosophy; the relation of moral ideology to dynamic moral philosophy. 200p $7.50 Humanities press

170 Ethics, Ideology
ISBN 0-391-0011-X LC 76-135983

The author attempts "to integrate the factors of a general world view, a rationally examined and justified moral philosophy, and a commitment to moral action into an effective tool of moral-political reform and defense against alien (i.e., Soviet Marxist) ideologies." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"For those who have an interest in bridging the gap between ethical speculation and moral action, Miller's book presents the concept of ■ moral ideology. . . . [It] includes ■ 50-page appendix of notes and quotations [and] an index of topics and proper names."

Choice 9:326 S '72 200w

"[This book] should appeal most to those who still believe that the Soviet-U.S. confrontation is an ideological one, and in particular to those of somewhat conservative political, economic, and religious views. It is not likely to rally the uncommitted to the cause. Although the work is aimed at ■ general audience, the prose is slow and difficult to read; and the points that many of the sentences appear to make disappear on unpacking." P. W. Cummings

Library J 97:878 Mr 1 '72 100w

MILLER, MERLE. On being different; what it means to be a homosexual. 65p $4.95 Random house

301.41 Homosexuality—Personal narratives
ISBN 0-394-47330-2 LC 70-162391

The author, an editor and writer, describes "the roots of his homosexuality . . . [and describes] how being ■ homosexual affected the course of his life—his work, his friendships, his brief marriage." (Publisher's note) Part of this book appeared in the January 17, 1971, edition of The New York Times Magazine as an article entitled What it means to be a homosexual.

MILLER, MERLE—Continued

Reviewed by G. D. Phillips
America 126:26 Ja 8 '72 200w

"[The Times] article is reproduced on the first thirty-nine pages of the . . . book. It is an interesting vignette that does quite a bit of justice to the individual's viewpoint on the subject. . . . The loneliness of early life and the trials and tribulations of puberty, college career, army service, and a disastrous attempt at marriage were capsulized in a fine piece of writing by an author who had something to say. . . . [The second section] gives an overview of the human inter-personal relations that took place before and during the preparation of the article and details some of the aftermath. It is not nearly as worthwhile as the article was although there is an occasional deep thought worth mulling over." Edward Bartley

Best Sell 31:402 D 1 '71 240w
Reviewed by J. K. Marshall
Library J 97:2109 Je 1 '72 120w

"[This] book has very little to do with erotic experience, and that little seems bereft of joy. What it is primarily about is the process of stigmatization in society and [the author's] feelings of shame at having for forty years attempted to conceal . . . an aspect of his personality that had been defined as ignominious. . . . [Miller's book] often sounds like a confession, but is meant, I believe . . . as a Declaration of Independence. . . . But it seems perplexing that a professional writer should believe that this short, highly selective autobiographical essay . . . should add so much to his public's understanding." E. Z. Friedenberg
N Y Rev of Books 17:32 N 4 '71 1400w

Reviewed by A. T. Baker
Time 99:81 F 28 '72 550w

MILLER, NEAL E. Neal E. Miller: selected papers. (Psychonomic perspectives) 874p il $15; pa $6.75 Aldine-Atherton

150.19 Learning, Psychology of. Motivation (Psychology). Behaviorism (Psychology)
ISBN 0-202-25034-2 LC 70-115969

These 64 articles are concerned with "Miller's contribution to the study of behavior. . . . The papers are divided into two groups: the first deals with conflict, displacement, learned drives, and theory; the second with learning and motivation and their physiological mechanisms." (Library J)

"[The articles] were chosen by Miller on the basis of their current importance and historical significance. . . . The reader can proceed according to Miller's arrangement by theme (e.g., fear, drugs, learning, etc.), or he can follow the papers chronologically. . . . [When] he will be astounded to learn that one man could have produced so many significant disparate achievements over a span of only 35 years. . . . The papers, covering four decades, are consistently well written and are of great theoretical, empirical, and historical significance; this book should become a standard text for all modern behavioral scientists regardless of their own orientation. Recommended for university, college, and large public libraries." H. B. Taub
Library J 96:2329 Jl '71 200w

"Miller is one of a very few who have made truly significant contributions to the elucidation of the mechanisms that control behavior. Thus this collection of his writings will be of great interest not only to professional workers in experimental, physiological, and clinical psychology but to those in other disciplines who are particularly interested in behavior. . . . [His] rare research style emerges, however, only for the relatively sophisticated reader, because by and large the papers or clusters of papers stand in isolation without adequate integration into the several mainstreams of behavioral inquiry of which they have been such an important part. . . . The book has three kinds of shortcomings: recent, important developments are omitted; transitions between experiments are not described or are unclear; the significance of some of the work is lost because it is out of context." P. L. Carlton
Science 175:873 F 25 '72 900w

MILLER, NORMAN, Jr. ed. New American revolution. See Aya, R.

MILLER, PEGGY. James. 344p il $12.95 St Martins

B or 92 James, Prince of Wales, the Old Pretender. Great Britain—History—Stuarts, 1603-1714. Great Britain—History—1714-1837
ISBN 0-04-923056-5 LC [72-886719]

This is an account of the life and career of James Stuart, the "Old Pretender". It also deals with James's son, Charles Edward "Bonnie Prince Charlie", and James's half brother, the Duke of Berwick. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. A. S. Dollard
America 126:599 Je 3 '72 750w

"[James] was one of nature's losers, and as such seems to attract female authors like Dr. Peggy Miller. . . . His was a frustrated and melancholy life, and if it failed to reach the heights of tragedy, as I think it did, it was because of the ordinariness of his character, the humdrum quality of his life. Peggy Miller's elegant, well-researched . . . biography brings this out, though I do not suppose this was her intention." J. P. Kenyon
Book World p13 My 7 '72 1200w

Choice 9:707 Jl/Ag '72 160w

"[This] story of a good man baffled by inherited fate is not a gay one. But it is well told, though with too many misprints and oddly spelt Scottish names for so handsome and pricey a book. It is a personal biography and not a political analysis of Jacobitism in England and Scotland, which remains for the reader what it usually was for the pretender: noises off, hard to interpret."

Economist 242:47 Ja 16 '72 320w

"[This book] is sympathetic, sensible, and suitable for any library. It is based upon the standard authorities and the Stuart papers at Windsor, and is written with a sure historical touch and considerable literary grace." R. R. Rea

Library J 97:491 F 1 '72 60w

Reviewed by A. Bakshian
Nat R 24:1258 N 10 '72 270w

"This cannot be called a book that was needed . . . [but can] be commended, with reservations, to that large body of readers for whom Jacobite history can never be too often rewritten. The author has found some new material, especially in the vast hoard of Stuart papers in Windsor Castle, and her work is shapely and readable; though a little more care might have purged the text of frequent lapses in syntax. She keeps attention fixed on her hero, turning aside for only a page or two to describe the risings of 1719 or 1745-46 in which he took no part. Not only James but his parents, his brother Henry and half-brother James, Duke of Berwick, and his wife Clementina are portrayed with sympathy and justice."

TLS p242 Mr 3 '72 650w

MILLER, ROGER LEROY. The new economics of Richard Nixon; freezes, floats, and fiscal policy [by] Roger LeRoy Miller and Raburn M. Williams. 88p $5 Harper

330.973 U.S.—Economic policy
ISBN 0-01-126379-6 LC 70-185621

Most of the text is "devoted to providing an economic background against which the Nixon policies can be held up to view. The authors conclude in their final chapter, 'What's So New?', that Nixon's program is mainly political window dressing. That is, wage and price controls are useless, the dollar standard (as opposed to gold) has been in effect since 1968, and the import surtax is politically inspired to benefit such interests as the automobile and steel industries at the expense of consumer freedom of choice." (Library J)

"The appendixes of this little volume are valuable, as they contain the text of President Nixon's economic controls speech of August 15, 1971, as well as the text of the executive order on the subject of price and wage controls and the Presidential proclamation regarding the ten percent import tax. Unfortunately, the authors' analysis of Nixon economics will be difficult for the general reader to understand because Miller and Williams too often resort to those convoluted kinds of sentences so dear to the hearts of academic economists." J. B. Woy
Library J 97:2085 Je 1 '72 160w

"Professors Miller and Williams have provided a devastating, definitive answer to the fraudulent pretensions of Nixonomics in this very big little book." Alan Reynolds
Nat R 24:594 My 26 '72 550w

Reviewed by H. G. Johnson
N Y Times BK R p4 Ag 27 '72 650w

MILLER, THOMAS LLOYD. The public lands of Texas, 1519-1970; foreword by Ralph W. Yarborough. 341p il maps $8.95 Univ. of Okla. press

333.1 Texas—Public lands—History
ISBN 0-8061-0972-6 LC 75-160500

The author covers legislation in the Texas area "relating to the public lands—lands for settlers, for soldiers, for internal improvements, for schools—as well as the administration of laws related to rights to timber and minerals. . . . Included are tables showing receipts from Texas lands from 1835 through 1970, along with other tables of land grants to improve water transportation and grants for irrigation canals and ditches." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Public land is one of the features that make Texas unique, and at last that aspect of Texas economic history has been presented. Organized on a chronological basis, Miller has compiled a worthwhile supplement to the normal fare of Texas political history. The work leaves much to be desired in writing style, transitions, and paragraph development. It depends heavily on a presentation of unexciting factual data. Nevertheless, it is a meaningful contribution and will assist the student of Texas and Western history. . . . Of special value are the 34 pages of appendices."
Choice 9:1198 N '72 130w

"To the familiar story of empresario grants, military bounty donations, the 3,000,000 acre grant for the construction of the capital, and the generous donations for education, are added a discussion of the grants for river and harbor improvements, irrigation canals, building railroads, roads and ships, the digging of wells, and encouragement of industry. This portion of the book is mostly factual with a plethora of data that is partly based upon and yet fills out the detail in earlier studies. . . . [Miller] deplores excessive benevolence in granting land, but does not examine the social and economic results of land policies that have permitted the ownership of the most valuable resources to benefit a small class of rugged individualists operating in a near laissez faire economy." P. W. Gates
J Am Hist 59:440 S '72 550w

MILLER, TOWNSEND. Henry IV of Castile, 1425-1474. 306p pl $8.95 Lippincott

B or 92 Henry IV, King of Castile and Leon, Castile—History
ISBN 0-397-00798-1 LC 70-163226

In this account of the life and times of Henry IV, the King portrayed as "an eccentric and a failure—the . . . veteran of futile campaigns, the . . . victim of unending intrigue. . . . [His] two marriages were disasters . . . [and] he is known to most historians as Henry the Impotent. . . . [This is also a] study of [his] nature, psychological and sexual." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of persons.

"Biography is as painless a way as possible to enter in a historical period. . . . This particular biography has both pros and cons aside from this general advantage: on the credit side it fills a gap in English regarding the life and times of Henry IV (contemporary with the end of the Hundred Years' War and the Wars of the Roses). The quality is high—Miller is steeped in the land and the period, and knows how to squeeze out of the sources everything there is to know about Henry and the people surrounding him. On the debit side, Henry's person and career are part of one of the less interesting phases of peninsular history. . . . A rather esoteric vocabulary detracts from the book's general appeal ('the perigee of his fortunes,' 'whiffled protestations,' 'flighty ephebes,' etc.), although chapters on military events manage to be downright exciting. Helpful genealogical table."
Choice 9:707 JI/Ag '72 190w

"Though there have been several biographies of Henry in Spanish, he has hitherto lacked one in English. This deficiency . . . Miller has now supplied in no uncertain way. Though his book is strongly underpinned by the use of contemporary documents and chronicles, prejudiced and contradictory as the latter often are, this is no formal study. Here is the story of Henry the Impotent and his exploiters vigorously told. The main characters, John II of Aragon, Villena, Queen Juana, Henry himself are brought alive by the exercise of the faculties required by the best historical novelists. This is not a pejorative comment. Never have the confused politics of mid-fifteenth-century Castile been so clearly or imaginatively explained in English. Moreover the author is a declared sympathizer with his tragic hero, so that there is much humanity in the book, and this is extended to most of the main personalities."

TLS p1114 S 22 '72 700w

MILLER, WAYNE CHARLES. An armed America, its face in fiction; a history of the American military novel. 294p $7.95 N.Y. univ. press

813 American fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 0-8147-0473-5 LC 75-111521

The author "surveys American military fiction from James Fenimore Cooper's The Spy and other novels of the Revolution, through Melville, the novels of the Civil War and of the two World Wars, to such recent works as Catch-22 [by J. Heller, BRD 1962]." (Am Lit)

"A great many novels are indeed swept into [the author's] capacious net, and since they are often works unlikely to have been read by most of his readers Mr. Miller proceeds largely—and quite properly—by summary, quotation, and the evocation of central characters, episodes, and themes. In this comprehensiveness of scope lies the book's chief virtue. It provides a useful, straightforward resource for any specialist or general reader interested in discovering how American novelists have through successive wars and generations, confronted both the ideologies and the brutal realities of warfare and of the military power structure. As criticism, unfortunately, the study is less valuable." Michael Millgate

Am Lit 43:487 N '71 400w

"Inasmuch as there has been no comprehensive history of the American military novel, this book is to be recommended. It provides a useful service in cataloging and examining the great number of works that it does. It is, however, a difficult book to read as history because, in part, of its frequent cursoriness. It is no less difficult to read as literary criticism. Miller feels the need to review the criticism of each work before discussing it as either a manifestation of the 'tradition' of the military novel or of his thesis, the degree and character of the criticism of the establishment found in these works."
Choice 8:834 S '71 180w

MILLHAUSER, STEVEN. Edwin Mullhouse: the life and death of an American writer, 1943-1954, by Jeffrey Cartwright; ■ novel. 305p $6.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-48009-0 LC 72-2230

An "account of the hitherto unrecognized genius Edwin Mullhouse, novelist (Cartoons) at ten, mysteriously dead, at eleven. Supposedly written by Edwin's Boswell and best friend, Jeffrey Cartwright, the narrative takes us from Edwin's first gurgles to his creative Later Years. . . . The two boys react to each other like a sinister Holmes and Watson—Edwin makes fun of Jeffrey, whom he rightly sees as ■ drip, and Jeffrey's underlying resentment and disapproval occasionally come to the narrative surface." (Sat R)

Reviewed by J. J. Gustainis
Best Sell 32:335 O 15 '72 650w

Reviewed by A. J. Anderson
Library J 97:2647 Ag '72 140w

"Jeffrey is no oleaginous and self-pitying Charlie Brown; the novel has no Christian Message. Jeffrey is a Nabokovian child: witty, literate, perceptive and disturbingly complex. Edwin is different, an artist of the Beckettian sort. Their acquaintances, their schooldays, their relationship—all is grist for Jeffrey's mill and for Millhauser's beautifully shaped and polished description of the pleasures, sorrows and evils of childhood, of art and of life. Don't be put off by the apparent whimsy of the title and the youth of the characters; this is a mature, skillful intelligent and often very funny novel—and the author's first."

MILLHAUSER, STEVEN—Continued

New Repub 167:30 S 16 '72 260w

Reviewed by William Hjortsberg

N Y Times Bk R p2 S 17 '72 1000w

Newsweek 80:106 O 9 '72 340w

"What begins as a satire on exhaustive biographies becomes, itself, an exhausting satire. The trouble is that such jokes (especially at this length) are self-defeating. To write about an uninteresting childhood in all its minutiae is to make the account itself uninteresting and boring. . . . This novel has some of the most beautiful pointless prose in recent fiction. Moreover, the other level on which the book operates—that of commentary on, and remembrance of, childhood—is licked before it starts by the distance a satirical style imposes. . . . It is all too bad because, despite its length and fundamental triviality, this is the work of a very gifted young writer. No doubt one's disappointment is partly the result of the inflated expectations these very gifts arouse." Joseph Kanon

Sat R 55:73 S 30 '72 650w

"It seemed unlikely that anyone would try to outdo [V.] Nabokov [in Pale Fire, BRD 1962] at his own game, but Steven Millhauser, a Brown University graduate student, has given it a game try in a really promising short novel. His jokes are broader than Nabokov's and are not woven into the story with nearly the master's exquisite timing. But he is witty, and his conceit—making both the artist and his biographer small boys—is elastic enough to stretch the length of the book. . . . As a biographer, Jeffrey shares the mania for list making that afflicts everyone from Joyce to Susan Sontag. There are catalogues of Edwin's first utterances ('nnnn' for complaining, 'kkkk' for giggling and 'chff'—an early version of Jeffrey?); the 54 books Edwin owned at age two. There are also bull's-eye descriptions of the exquisite boredom of kindergarten, and a fine malevolent parody of children's picture books called The Lonely Island." Martha Duffy

Time 100:98 S 25 '72 550w

MILLIGAN, JOHN D., ed. From the fresh water navy: 1861-64; the letters of Acting Master's Mate Henry R. Browne and Acting Ensign Symmes B. Browne. (Naval letters ser, v3) 327p il $13.50 U.S. naval inst.

973.7 U.S.—History—Civil War—Personal narratives. U.S.—History—Civil War—Naval operations

ISBN 0-87021-198-6 LC 78-107466

The authors "served in the navy's freshwater fleet on the Mississippi River during the Civil War. . . . By early 1862 the Browne brothers were assigned to the same ironclad, and it, along with other gunboats, moved down the Mississippi to gain control of the river from the Confederates. They saw action against the enemy at Columbus, Kentucky; Island No. 10; Fort Pillow, Tennessee; and against the Confederate fleet near Memphis. Henry died of shock and burns. . . . Symmes Brown remained on active duty and participated in the assaults against Vicksburg and, later in the final stages of the Red River campaign." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"Well edited and handsomely designed like the two preceding volumes in the series: W. Keeler, Aboard the USS Monitor, 1862 and Aboard the USS Florida, 1863-1865, this book provides extensive and skillful annotation interspersed with the text; introductory material on the letter writers. . . . excellent illustrations and end maps; a brief bibliography; a useful appendix describing each of the Union and Confederate river war steamers; and a particularly thorough index. The letters, mostly by the surviving brother to his fiancée, are literate, informative and especially valuable for their portrayal of shipboard life and the hazards of service in a variety of Union steamers."

Choice 8:1082 O '71 130w

"The United States Naval Institute is to be congratulated for publishing its series of Naval letters, making available official and private papers in various manuscript collections. . . . [The editor] has maintained a high standard of editing and has retained the basic tone of the letters while, at the same time, putting them into a most readable form by inserting explanations (which are set off by italics), dividing the text into paragraphs, making the spelling consistent, adding within brackets corrections of misstatements, and deleting minutiae." J. M. Merrill

J Am Hist 58:1020 Mr '72 300w

MILLS, JAMES. Report to the commissioner. 284p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-24940-7 LC 79-165402

This is a "tale of police as well as criminal . . . involvement in the New York City drug scene. When a bungling rookie stumbles into the middle of a shady undercover operation by the Narcotics Bureau, he sets in motion a complex process which isolates him as the inevitable scapegoat while others scramble for cover." (Library J) Glossary.

Reviewed by T. G. McKenna

America 127:130 S 2 '72 650w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:92 Ag '72 30w

"The format and style of this book are so much like those of a factual account that it is difficult to review it as fiction. Very few novels begin with an acknowledgment of thanks to a non-existent detective and his hypothetical colleagues. To follow this with a four-page preface that sets the tone of the fact-like pattern and to add a glossary of special police department words adds strength to the illusion that this work is not an illusion at all. Be that as it may, fiction it is, and exceptionally fine fiction at that. . . . Perhaps the action may seem to drag at one or another particular place, but it is difficult to believe that any reader could put this book aside for any considerable length of time." Edward Bartley

Best Sell 32:195 J1 15 '72 220w

Horn Bk 48:614 D '72 200w

"Reporter Mills, who wrote The Panic in Needle Park [BRD 1966] and The Prosecutor [BRD 1969] has written an absorbing insider's story of life on the seedier sidewalks of New York." Arthur Curley

Library J 97:2433 J1 '72 100w

New Repub 167:31 Ag 5/12 '72 350w

"We have here one of the new breed of crime novel that does not adhere to the creaky whodunnit convention of keeping secrets from the reader at all costs. . . . Mills's book is a spellbinder, ironic in its implications, explosively dramatic in its narrative. But there is much bigger and more significant story in 'Report to the Commissioner' than its structure allows us to see. In the end, it is the uninhibited plumbing of human depths that makes the most potent and meaningful drama. A length of recording tape is not the best plumb-line." Stanley Ellin

N Y Times Bk R p4 J1 16 '72 600w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 80:94 J1 10 '72 240w

Reviewed by I. P. Heldman

Sat R 55:57 Ag 12 '72 800w

TLS p1375 N 10 '72 90w

MILNE, LORUS J. The cougar doesn't live here any more [by] Lorus J. Milne and Margery Milne; line drawings by Stanley Wyatt. 258p $9.95 Prentice-Hall

591 Rare animals. Wild life—Conservation

ISBN 0-13-181149-5 LC 76-131870

The authors "tell the story of the world's vanishing wildlife and the desecration wrought by man within a geographical framework: forests, savannas, remote islands, high mountains, coastal marshes." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This book, as with the many others written by this husband and wife team, is thoroughly researched and superbly written. The authors, through their world-wide travel experiences, are able to write intimately about man's rich international wild-life heritage and how his greed, lack of ecological understanding, and, in many situations, his ever-increasing numbers alone have led to the reduction or extinction of species. It should become a standard work in nature and natural history and will, undoubtedly, reach a wide audience of scientists, students, and general populace. A brief listing of references for additional reading presented for each chapter will be of interest to many readers."

Choice 8:1202 N '71 130w

"Accurate descriptions based on firsthand knowledge, reasonable explanations, practical methods of conservation, and fine bibliography make this work worth purchasing. The authors ask: 'When, we wonder, will mankind—the self-styled 'wise' 'Homo sapiens'—realize how unreliable both expediency and economics are as guides?' Perhaps their work will bring the day closer. Recommended for collections large and small." A. M. Meissner
Library J 96:2096 Je 15 '71 130w

MILNE, MARGERY, jt. auth. The cougar doesn't live here any more. See Milne, L. J.

MILTON, JOHN R., ed. Conversations with Frank Waters. (Sage bk) 90p il $4; pa $2 Swallow press
818 Waters, Frank
ISBN 0-8040-0575-3; 0-8040-0576-1 (pa)
LC 78-189195

Waters' writings on the American West include 'fiction, anthropology, Indian myth and religion, history, and biography. . . . In this book, taken from a series of seven taped TV interviews, Milton and Waters discuss many aspects of these writings. We are given background and sidelights on [his] literary career, as well as a view into some of the development of Waters' philosophy." (Library J) Waters bibliography.

"The book proves once again that transcribed conversation does not make the best reading. It lacks the polish of the written word and the charm and spontaneity of the spoken one. However, if it makes people more aware of Waters' books it will have served a purpose. Should be added to all Western and American literature collections." W. H. Farrington

Library J 97:2607 Ag '72 200w

"If . . . there really is any such critter as a 'Western' writer, it might be Frank Waters, who makes a brief appearance in [this] new nonbook. . . . This little volume is mentioned here simply because it might introduce some new readers to brother Waters, who is not only a good writer but, what is rarer, a good storyteller, and who possesses perhaps the finest sense extant of the West's special tatterdemalionry." William Brandon

Sat R 55:50 J1 1 '72 500w

MILWARD, ALAN S. The fascist economy in Norway. 317p $17 Oxford

330.9481 Norway—Economic policy. Norway—History—German occupation, 1940-1945
ISBN 0-19-821496-0 LC 72-177595

This history of the Norwegian wartime economy has two parts. The first part seeks "to show that the New Order in Norway was . . . aimed at a more or less permanent restructuring of the Norwegian economy. . . . [The second part] attempts to show the plans of the New Order as being ideological or 'socio-psychological' as well as economic." (TLS) Bibliography.

Reviewed by C. A. Clausen

Ann Am Acad 403:191 S '72 430w

"Milward covers the subject exceedingly well. His chapters on theory, Nazi planning and industrial development of Norway and conclusions are especially excellent. As the only study in English with no real Norwegian competitors, the work is uniquely important and the author's knowledge imposing. Although it might be too much to expect of an academic work, a less plodding style would be appreciated. But as the only book in the field, with an excellent bibliography and thorough coverage of the subject, no historian will be foolish enough to complain. For large collections and academic libraries."

Choice 9:691 J1/Ag '72 200w

"After introductory—and rather less satisfactory—chapters on the Norwegian setting, Professor Milward lays the basis for his main theme with a succinct survey of the far-reaching schemes to make Norway a suitable partner in the New Order of the Grossraumwirtschaft which was to follow Germany's victory in the war. He makes no exaggerated claims about strict coherence of those plans, which were worked out amid the internal rivalries and conflicting priorities of different parts of the Nazi hierarchy and subjected to the occasional interventions of the Führer himself. But the main elements emerge clearly. . . . [The second part] is more problematic. . . . Yet Professor Milward does have a case for his emphasis on the ideological elements of the New Order, even if it has to be limited to an observation that . . . ideological and economic-imperialist motives were inextricably intertwined throughout."

TLS p692 Je 16 '72 1050w

MINEAR, RICHARD H. Victors' justice; the Tokyo war crimes trial. 229p il $7.95 Princeton univ. press

341 War crime trials
ISBN 05645-5 LC 74-163211

"The Tokyo trial in which 25 military and political leaders of Japan were charged with and convicted of a variety of war crimes lasted for over two years. . . . [The author] reviews the background, proceedings, and verdict of the trial, examining . . . the problems of international law, of legal process, and of history which it raised. With regard to each of these aspects of the trial, he finds that there were serious questions about the integrity of the tribunal. He argues that the trial was in fact biased against the defendants and that the verdict was 'victors' justice." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by B. D. Williams

Best Sell 31:419 D 15 '71 350w

"[This] first comprehensive account in English of the Tokyo War Crimes Trial . . . should stimulate interest of laymen as well as students of international law and Japanese history. Readable. Highly recommended for college libraries."

Choice 9:562 Je '72 80w

Christian Century 88:1397 N 24 '71 30w

"It may be that Americans have viewed the Tokyo trial less critically than those in Japan or abroad. Certainly in Britain it has long been accepted as victors' justice. This book is, therefore, likely to be regarded here as less novel and less iconoclastic than the claims made for it would suggest. While the Tokyo trial had many shortcomings, some of the author's complaints are harsh. . . . A truer picture of the Tokyo tribunal would have emerged if the book had compared its workings with those of the local war crimes tribunals which were simultaneously operating in territories like China and the Philippines, which had been occupied by Japan. There is no doubt that the Tokyo tribunal was more judicial and judicious. But, should we become too smug over the standards of allied justice, Mr Minear's book is a valuable corrective."

Economist 243 [i.e. 234]:62 Je 17 '72 450w

"This is a partisan presentation, but it is based on a close examination of the record by a highly qualified scholar. It is a disturbing book, but is recommended." C. W. Stucki

Library J 97:895 Mr 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Richard Story

Pacific Affairs 45:431 fall '72 450w

TLS p1029 S 1 '72 190w

Va Q R 48:xvii summer '72 110w

MINER, EARL. The cavalier mode from Jonson to Cotton. 333p $9 Princeton univ. press

821 English poetry—History and criticism
ISBN 0-691-06209-9 LC 74-155002

"In a companion volume to The Metaphysical Mode from Donne to Cowley [BRD 1970] Miner discriminates the styles, recurring subjects, cultural assumptions, and view of life of the Cavalier poets, and thus distinguishes their poetry from other seventeenth-century alternatives. . . . [He] uses a number of texts to show how the Cavaliers extolled the good life and, at the same time, were concerned with threats to it: time, chance, disorder. He concludes with a discussion of two major subjects in Cavalier poetry, love and friendship." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This work is an attempt to come to terms with one of the least studied areas of English literature. . . . Miner occasionally says exciting things, but he can never quite decide whether the book is genuinely thematic or historical in its organization. Further, he limits his discussions of many of the lesser poets of the group. Partly because of the organization and partly because of the level of background which Miner presumes, the book will be difficult for most undergraduates to use."

Choice 9:61 Mr '72 130w

MINER, EARL—Continued

"The present work maintains the steady perception and the careful scholarship of [its companion volume and] is a valuable contribution to literary scholarship." Walter Waring
Library J 96:4016 D 1 '71 120w

"For the cavaliers as poets [Miner] has an endless fund of sympathy and admiration. His book is based on a wide knowledge both of the poets he is describing and of those from whom he wishes to discriminate them. He is at ease also with their classical sources. Finally, and best of all, given his scholarly equipment, he enjoys them. . . . His book, however, is not at all doctrinaire and he feels his way as well as arguing it. He knows his subjects because he is at home with them, and home, though he does not choose to expatiate on it as a cavalier theme, is an essential part of the social mode, whether it is reflected in Jonson's stately 'To Penshurst' or in Herrick's 'glittering chimney' and 'friendly Larre'." TLS p634 Je 2 '72 340w

MINER, JERRY, jt. auth. Public expenditure. See Burkhead, J.

MINERS, N. J. The Nigerian army, 1956-1966. 290p maps $7.25 Barnes & Noble

966.9 Nigeria. Army. Nigeria—Politics and government
SBN 416-08270-X LC [76-27849]

This is a study "of the development of the Nigerian Army from its . . . origins to a . . . body which effected the military coups of January and July 1966. In January 1966 only nineteen of the 250 officers in the Nigerian Military Forces were Nigerian, and the soldiers were generally despised by nationalists. . . . [Ten years later the Army] had been modernized and expanded . . . and all its officers were Nigerian. The first half of the book traces the stages of this transformation and reveals the difficulties which had to be overcome; the second part describes the increasing tension and political manoeuvring which exploded into the military coups of 1966. The political background . . . and the reasons for the success or failure of these and several earlier attempts to subvert the existing government are [also] examined." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Miners has written a concise political and social history of the Nigerian army. . . . [The book] provides information accurately, concisely, and fairly. . . . To have written clearly about the tangled events of recent Nigerian history is no mean task; The Nigerian Army, 1956-1966 is no mean book." C. E. Welch
Am Pol Sci R 66:1068 S '72 900w

"Highly detailed yet quite readable. . . . Miners, who taught in Lagos during the period covered, covers the Civil War in a brief postscript. His information and interpretations are generally accurate, if somewhat cautious—yet the book might have benefited from either greater comparison with changes in other post-colonial armies or consideration of theories of civil-military relations. . . . [The author] has contributed a valuable study that research collections on international affairs should purchase. Maps, postscript on the Civil War, statistics on the officers corps . . . further add to the book's academic utility." Choice 3:1498 Ja '72 130w

"[This book] reveals a considerable understanding of the motivations of the army officers and the complex interplay between their personal interests, political views and ethnic affiliations. . . . The book's greatest strength lies in the minutiae, in notes and text, tracing the careers of individual officers, and supplying a guide to who was where, when. Its weakness, despite the wide reading of comparative material indicated in the bibliography, is the failure to transcend this level of analysis and to set the Nigerian experience in a broader sociological perspective." TLS p1293 O 15 '71 340w

MINNEY, R. J. Hampton Court. 242p pl $7.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

942 Hampton Court. Great Britain—Kings and rulers
SBN 698-10442-0 LC 72-76661

The author "has written a history of Hampton Court, emphasizing its years as a residence for England's kings and queens." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The author, quite at home with the treasure of legend and anecdote surrounding beautiful Hampton Court, has brought light into the dark corridors and labyrinthine ways of one of the most imposing of Britain's great houses. The chronicle is an eclectic work, racy in tone and fascinating in content. . . . Using a garnish of tidbits of tawdry scandal, Mr. Minney quotes vividly from the diarists Evelyn and Pepys, and from private letters and general sources. The author is rather free with 'probables' and 'possibles.' . . . The volume is handsomely illustrated." C. M. Siggins
Best Sell 32:188 J1 15 '72 550w

Christian Century 89:784 J1 19 '72 20w

"[Minney's] anecdotal narrative is readable but superficial. Although some narrative description of Hampton Court and a few diagrams of its buildings and gardens are provided, the volume is of little use as a guide book; and its value as history, except perhaps on the most popular level, is minimal." J. F. Husband
Library J 97:2186 Je 15 '72 90w

MINNIS, NOEL, ed. Linguistics at large. See Linguistics at large

MINTONYE, GRACE, jt. auth. Creating with papier-mache. See Seidelman, J. E.

MINTZ, ELIZABETH E. Marathon groups: reality and symbol; with contributions by Lorelle Saretsky [and] Barry Sherman. (The Century psychology ser) 286p $7.95 Appleton 616.89 Psychotherapy. Group relations training
SBN 390-64279-7 LC 73-157796

The author gives an "account of her participation observations, experiences, and perceptions of marathon groups. Marathon, as she uses the term, means the prolonged periods of time a group (primarily therapy groups) remain together for the purpose of dealing openly with human feelings." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Name index. Subject index.

"Mintz has a readable style and a rational progression. The primary value will be for other marathon leaders and the professional community, including aspiring students. Her claims for the success of the marathon arrangement are modest and unexaggerated. The text . . . is a professional treatment of a very controversial development in the field of behavior modification." Choice 8:1648 F '72 120w

"Lacking objective data from research to provide conclusive answers to questions about marathon encounter groups, the author invokes the testimony of marathon leaders and participants to support her conviction that the encounter group may be 'the greatest social invention of our time' (Carl Rogers), and the marathon encounter group its most potent form. She believes the power of the marathon encounter group is related to its functioning as reality and symbolic experience simultaneously. . . . An appendix gives suggestions for marathon leaders. Expertly written and informative. Recommended." A. J. Sprow
Library J 96:3589 N 1 '71 110w

MISHAN, E. J. Cost benefit analysis; an introduction. 364p $12.50 Praeger

658.1 Welfare economics. Cost effectiveness
LC 70-150700

Through "selected case studies . . . Mishan describes the various ways to allocate costs and benefits, drawing on present-day techniques of economic analysis, including operations research, decision theory, and game theory. These case studies illustrate the fundamental principles of cost-benefit analysis and show how realistic decisions—decisions that take into consideration the welfare of society as a whole—are actually made." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book can be read by anyone who understands economics at the introductory textbook level. The price for this wide potential audience is sometimes a repetitive and verbose statement of materials which could be set forth much more succinctly in analytical fashion.

Nevertheless, the book can be used to introduce a fairly sophisticated type of analysis at the undergraduate level. Among the concepts presented are consumers' surplus, Pareto optimality, spillover effects (externalities), utility measurement, various investment criteria, and the effect of legal liability on the evaluation of spillovers. Recommended for college libraries."

Choice 9:854 S '72 100w

"This... is neither a guide to cost-benefit analysis nor a general appraisal of it. Real examples of cost-benefit analysis are few and sketchy. In places its understanding requires distinctly more training in economic theory than an introductory textbook can provide, in contrast with the declared ambition of the preface. But the sections on consumer surplus and rent, externalities, and on investment criteria, which together make up over half of the book, undoubtedly deserve to be read by many students as they usefully embody and extend a number of the author's important theoretical contributions."

Economist 240:51 Ag 7 '71 500w

MISHIMA, YUKIO. Spring snow; tr. from the Japanese by Michael Gallagher. (The Sea of fertility [v 1]) (UNESCO collection of representative works: Japanese ser) 389p $7.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-44239-3 LC 74-154940

"The first volume of Mishima's final work... handed to his publisher on the day before his suicide [is] set in Tokyo at the turn of the century. . . . Satoko daughter of the old aristocracy, and Kiyooki, son of the newly ascendant elite, begin an affair at the moment of Satoko's betrothal to an imperial prince. Their affair, bordering on treason and sacrilege, is doomed from the start. In fact, it is this very doom that Kiyooki, an indulged and oversheltered boy, seems to love." (Library J)

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Atlantic 230:126 O '72 800w

Reviewed by Carolyn Riley
Best Sell 32:240 Ag 15 '72 700w

"[This] is a work of symphonic richness. Though the love story of Satoko and Kiyooki dominates the foreground, it is evident that Mishima is laying in a vast store of thematic material for further development. Politics, military history, the rise and fall of families, the merging of eastern and western traditions, contrasts between the life of passion and the life of reason, the paradoxes of action and its consequences, of violations of taboos and the possibility of purification, all of these notes and many more, are sounded, again and again. . . . A master of technique, a stylist of crystalline imagery, Mishima is like Stendhal in his precise psychological analyses, like Dostoyevsky in his explorations of darkly destructive personalities, like Thomas Mann in his sweep of generations. . . . [The book is] artfully translated." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 14 '72 350w

"I do not want to suggest that Spring Snow is entirely autobiographical, for it is not. Kiyooki is not Yukio. Not him as he became, though it is the portrait of the artist as a young man—a very particular kind of young man. Mishima usually had about him such a young man whom he would guide and look after much as Kawabata had looked after the young Mishima himself. Such is common occurrence in literary circles in Japan, and the main difference was that the young men were all as much as possible the way Mishima himself had been at their age: they were often Peers' School (or some equivalent); they were always majoring in literature (Japanese or otherwise); they were literary, promising, and callow. They were the mirror of Mishima at a certain age, and Kiyooki is one of them to the life." Donald Richie

Harper 245:105 S '72 3200w

Reviewed by A. G. Mojtabal
Library J 97:2117 Je 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by David Brudnoy
Nat R 24:852 Ag 4 '72 1000w

Reviewed by Lawrence Olson
New Repub 166:25 Je 24 '72 1700w

Reviewed by Anthony Holden
New Statesman 84:732 N 17 '72 550w

Reviewed by Hortense Callisher
N Y Times Bk R p56 N 12 '72 4500w
New Yorker 48:78 J1 29 '72 200w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck
Newsweek 79:72 J1 '72 400w

"Mishima's effective use of innumerable small details to create ■ authenticity in his portrayal of a society is nowhere more apparent than in Spring Snow. . . . [His] style in this work is remarkably beautiful. He exploits every resource of the Japanese language, giving new life to unbroken literary traditions of ■ thousand years. He was unquestionably a modern writer, speaking to modern audiences, but he created in Spring Snow ■ classic, ■ absolute evocation of ■ Japanese way of life that is completely intelligible but completely remote. . . . It is a pity the translation does not live up to the grandeur of the original. Mishima's masterpiece, but its flaws should not deter readers. Spring Snow, even in this translation, confirms Mishima's judgment that he would be remembered above all for this work." Donald Keene

Sat ■ 55:57 Je 10 '72 2350w

"Word from Japan is that some of [the book's] sketchier aspects, notably those dealing with Buddhism and ideas of reincarnation, will be developed later on, changing the emphasis of the whole work. By itself, the book must be judged as an attempt at a grand-scale novel in the 19th century manner. Coming from Mishima, this is a surprise. The material is neither adventurous nor perverse—two qualities often found in his best fiction. The leisurely, well-upholstered prose is far from the impeccable, stripped-down modern style found in previous novels. Ultimately, this new direction is not particularly fruitful. But if Spring Snow is ■ failure, it is ■ fairly entertaining one. . . . Perhaps [its] most attractive quality is a strain of humor seldom found in Mishima." Martha Duffy

Time 100:86 J1 10 '72 700w

TLS p1357 N 10 '72 800w

MISRA, B. B. The administrative history of India, 1834-1947: general administration; completed under the auspices of the Indian inst. of public adm, New Delhi. 672p $19.25 Oxford

954.03 India—Politics and government
LC 78-21796

The author studies "the ways in which the various branches of the executive government came into being and grew . . . [and] surveys the growth and transformation of the public services of India. . . . [There is a] chapter on the development of the Indian councils after 1833. The final sections deal with the administration of justice, civil and criminal procedure, and the courts, as well as with local self-government." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"One of the most useful sections of the book is the chapter on 'The Administration of Indian Finance,' in which Dr. Misra covers the ground fully and lucidly. . . . [This] account brings together in one place a wealth of valuable data. The chapter on 'Administration of Revenue' is equally exhaustive, but covers material that has, by now, been treated at some length in several published studies. . . . [The volume] is a monument of careful and detailed scholarship of the older variety. It is in many ways a gold mine of reference material for those who want to know what were the acts, rules, and regulations upon which the government of India—or of the provinces—operated at any given point in time." R. I. Crane

Am Hist R 77:570 Ap '72 440w

"[This work] on the theme of Indian constitutional history . . . differs from the others in the application of more recent methodology. Misra has done a thorough examination of governmental documentation as well as private papers of numerous Viceroys and Secretaries of State for India. Very useful bibliography of important books and documents. Should find a place in libraries with collections on Indian history."

Choice 8:721 J1 '71 80w

MISTRAL, GABRIELA. Selected poems of Gabriela Mistral; tr. and ed. by Doris Dana; woodcuts by Antonio Frasconi; pub. for the Lib. of Congress. bilingual ed 235p $10; pa $2.95 Johns Hopkins press

861
ISBN 0-8018-1197-X; 0-8010-1256-9 (pa)
LC 77-137467

This collection contains poems selected from the previously published work of Mistral who won the Nobel prize for literature in 1945. Index of themes.

MISTRAL, GABRIELA—Continued

"Dana's introduction to the parts of this volume are splendid in their simplicity and discernment. . . . [Her unrhymed lines] transmit beautifully into our language the essence of Mistral's thought and the quality of her deep feelings, a difficult task successfully fulfilled."

Choice 8:1590 F '72 180w

Reviewed by Ronald Christ

Commonweal 95:528 Mr 3 '72 450w

"[The author's] poems are passionate and vibrant; many are dazzling love songs or warm statements of mother-child relationships. This enigmatic figure deserves wide recognition in English, and while the present book attempts to help, the translations fall far short of conveying the qualities that make Mistral a fine poet. Many come across as flat, prosy phrases set up in verse form. The edition does include the Spanish text, and the translator states that her purpose is merely to encourage a reading of the original. It is doubtful that poor translations will accomplish this, however; it is more likely that they will discourage further interest. . . . Informative introduction and foreword; but the book provides only a tantalizing glimpse of a major poet." Priscilla Whitmore

Library J 96:2516 Ag '71 220w

Reviewed by Gary Brower

Mod Lang J 56:461 N '72 450w

"[Mistral] was one of the first poets in Latin America to write in the true language of a woman and not as a woman trying to imitate the poetry of men. . . . Essentially, [her] poetry is not a poetry of protest but a poetry that lives by a secret spiritual power that expresses itself gently or forcefully, in obscure symbols made with earthy and common things. . . . In one of the commentaries that precede each of the four sections of Selected Poems, Doris Dana, the translator, expertly touches upon this idea of a spiritual and social potential forever moving in Gabriela's poetry. . . . [This is] a splendidly balanced collection of the four most important stages of Gabriela's life. . . . [The translator] has succeeded in her attempt to make Gabriela sing—not merely talk—in a language that is faithful to the original Spanish. . . . and which in itself is good English poetry. . . . This memorable volume is further enhanced by the woodcuts." Fernando Alegria

Sat R 54:25 JI 17 '71 1450w

"[The translations] are adequate introductions to the originals, which are among the finest poems the world has been given in this century."

Va Q R 48:xxvi winter '72 150w

MITCHELL, ADRIAN. The bodyguard. 187p $5.95 Doubleday
LC 76-143486

Set in England the central character of this novel "is Len Rossman, a bodyguard, one of the shadowy elite whose talents lie in their anonymity and who appear only as huge faceless men lurking in the background of photographs taken of statesmen and diplomats. Rossman's singular ambition is to be the greatest bodyguard in the world, and in the 1980's . . . bodyguards are in enormous demand because of the widespread fear of the anti-state subvert movement known as The Rot. The Rot consists of a large number of splinter groups [such as] the Urban Guerrillas, dedicated to attacks upon military bases [and] the Boulders, who wear grey body make-up so that they look like stones when they stage one of their sit-downs." (New Statesman)

"A novel of suspense set in the near future in which an all-powerful police force effectively controls the people does not promise the greatest originality. However, it takes place in an England enmeshed in a fully developed Common Market, and this adds a touch of exoticism for an American audience. . . . Our hero's adventures are fully as baroque as James Bond's and the sex scenes are rather more elaborate and diverting. The denouement, though satisfactory, is not totally unexpected. All in all, in spite of a modish sociological stance, this novel remains no more than a mild entertainment." Henri Veit

Library J 96:2544 Ag '71 130w

"[Mitchell] is one of the few writers to have created a genuinely comic view of the future. . . . Rossman dictates his narrative from a hospital bed after he has been gunned down by subverts and it reads less like black comedy than a well-organised nightmare of curiously funny occurrences. Part of the novel's merit lies in its dream-like texture, which the author creates and explores with considerable imagination, and part in the picture of a future that goes against the trend set by [G. Orwell's] 1984 [BRD 1949], which seems to have been followed slavishly, with a few variations, ever since. . . . Another aspect of the novel's appeal is in the character of Rossman, who is both complex and satisfying, and who combines mindlessness with an oddly naïve individuality of his own." Campbell Black

New Statesman 80:249 Ag 28 '70 300w

"The author has little interest in Rossman's case as a public defender who cannot find a name for a piece of evidence and labels it 'Exhibit A.' Consequently, he lacks even the zest of the average placard-bearing nay sayer. Mitchell's story line can best be described as a plot of gold at the end of a paranoid rainbow. . . . There are the faintest shades of Swift and Kafka lurking in this book, as if they had been supplied in a fiction-by-number kit. . . . Rossman's monologue . . . is a bed-ridden assemblage of current tabloid fears which Mitchell has drawn on to cover all possible bets. . . . His book is not the allegory it wants to be, nor is it acceptable science-fiction." William O'Rourke

N Y Times Bk R p41 N 7 '71 800w

TLS p965 1 '70 450w

MITCHELL, ALLAN. Bismarck and the French nation, 1848-1890. 152p $10 Pegasus (N Y) 327.43 Bismarck, Otto, Fürst von. Germany—Foreign relations—France. France—Foreign relations—Germany
LC 72-167692

This political biography is devoted to the analysis of the German chancellor's attitude toward France. The author seeks to show that despite "social and economic trends . . . it was Bismarck's manipulation and isolation of the traditional enemy to the west that laid the foundations for the German ascendancy." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The only mildly unorthodox interpretation is the suggestion that Bismarck's conciliatory policy in the early 1880's was a symptom of political and economic difficulties in Germany, a point neither firmly pressed nor clearly proved. Mitchell . . . is correct in insisting that the proper analysis of Bismarck's policies includes both the 'iron' of social forces and the 'blood' of a proud, ambitious Prussian Junker."

Choice 9:1192 N '72 150w

"Germany's surge of strength and France's decline during the latter decades of the 19th Century were due in no small part to the cunning diplomatic game played by Bismarck. . . . Mitchell's short essay reveals little that isn't stated elsewhere; but as a scholarly, yet readable synthesis of the subject, it does have merit. It is frightfully expensive, but contains an excellent annotated bibliography." M. R. Yerburch

Library J 97:1432 Ap 15 '72 100w

MITCHELL, GEORGE. Blow my blues away. 208p il $10 La. state univ. press 784.7 Blues (Songs, etc.) Negro musicians
ISBN 0-8071-0416-7 LC 72-119111

The author "offers 100 photographs and seven interviews with black musicians of the Mississippi Delta area, 'whose special mode of expression—country blues—is fast disappearing.' Between the interviews are interspersed Mr. Mitchell's impressions of a weekend barbecue and a church service. Appended is a small collection of blues lines, stanzas and songs." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Books such as this one and Nancy Sirks' One Family [BRD 1971] allow the strength and tragedy of the black poor to be impressed on our souls through the vehicle of their own words. . . . [The] regional songs collected by the author . . . are apparently available on discs. . . . The price is high for this book but so is the quality." Anita Iccaman

Library J 96:2148 Je 15 '71 110w [YA]

"Although [the] foreword, written by Robert Coles, warns that [this] 'is a beautiful book, full of all of the doubt and beauty and despair and richness and misery of southern black people,' the reader is still inadequately prepared for [its] superficiality and banality. . . . The rural blacks . . . do not emerge as real persons, not even to this black reviewer. . . . Anyone who reads this book might as well be wasting his time, despite its handsome format. [Its] one redeeming feature . . . is that among the inevitable photographs of desolate shacks in overgrown fields, broken-down chairs on rickety porches, rusty stoves, stacks of dirty dishes and half-empty containers of food on dusty tables, there are some stunning shots of dancers and of guitarists, drummers, and fifers making music." Eileen Southern Music Lib Assn Notes 29:34 S '72 450w

"The photographs are terrible, technically, and the documentation of the music is inadequate. The musicians interviewed are scarcely a representative sampling, but their answers to Mr. Mitchell's questions are fascinating and valuable. . . . To the question why they sing the blues, one answer: 'You gets pacified.' Blues to blow the blues away."
N Y Times Bk R p38 Mr 12 '72 150w

MITCHELL, JULIET. Woman's estate. 182p $5.95 Pantheon bks.

301.41 Women's Liberation Movement. Woman—Social conditions
ISBN 0-394-47342-6 LC 77-164419

After "scrutinizing the political background of women's liberation, its sources, and its common ground with other radical movements of the sixties, [the author describes] the organization of women's liberation movements in America and Western Europe. . . . In the second part of the book [she] locates the areas of women's oppression, first from a theoretical standpoint and then by examining . . . the condition of women in England as a model. . . . She concludes with a discussion of the meaning of the family today and the psychology of women. . . . [The author] is one of the editors of the New Left Review and a member of the London Women's Liberation Workshop." (Publisher's note)

"[In her] excellent and deeply perceptive book . . . Juliet Mitchell reveals herself as a humane, wide-ranging, and toughminded critic and guide. Her Marxist background has not turned her into a stereotyped thinker. Nor does her feminism trap her in the fashionable antipathy to Freud which ignores his profoundly innovative re-view of family emotions. Again and again I found myself cheered and impressed by her apercus: 'The freedom of the housewife is her isolation'; or . . . 'Reactionary ideology always returns us to our biological fate, denying options and choices. There is much meat in this valuable book, for which I wish a wide readership.' Elizabeth Janeway

Book World p6 Ja 30 '72 650w
Choice 9:542 Je '72 160w

"All Feminists with children will welcome the careful attention Mitchell pays to the crucial topic of socialization of the young. She seems genuinely concerned about the fate of children and strongly reiterates the crucial nature of the love and care children receive in their formative years—a topic ignored, glossed-over, or airily dismissed in much Feminist literature. Her conclusion is a measured plea for intelligent analysis, for the 'cement' of ideas and methods, and the necessity for organization and leaders. [This book] must be recommended not only as an antidote to the shortcomings of other Feminist writings, but because it stands, in its own right, as the work of a thoughtful, learned woman who knows that there are no easy paths to a just society." J. B. Elshtain

Commonweal 96:193 Ap 28 '72 1200w

"Believing that women's liberation is impossible under capitalism, Mitchell analyzes the education and work opportunities of Englishwomen, . . . contraception, marriage, love, and most importantly, the oppressive, powerful ideology underlying and maintaining the family in capitalistic society. She doesn't fall into the abolish-the-family bag, but instead pushes for the institutionalization of numerous forms of cohabitation—single male or female parents raising children, extended kin groups, etc. . . . Her dismissal of schools and colleges as 'highly "immature" institutions' is simplistic. However, most of what she postulates is scrupulously thought out and capably expressed, and the book is essential for any library claiming to take the women's movement seriously." D. G. Stavn

Library J 97:2111 Je 1 '72 $60w

"Mitchell's prose reflects the complexities of her thought; it is dense, occasionally obscure and dull. The best way to approach the book, I think, is to start on page 75, where begins material from Mitchell's 'Women, The Longest Revolution,' an important essay which appeared in the New Left Review of December, 1966. . . . [Then] tackle the first seventy-four pages, which are an account of the origins of the women's movement in the 1960s. The first third of the book is good history but so ponderous and poorly written that the reader may think the book is an academic obituary, while in fact the rest of it is an original and disturbing argument." Richard Sennett

N Y Rev of Books 18:23 Ap 20 '72 2500w

Reviewed by E. G. Rostow
Yale R 61:628 Je '72 2450w

MITCHELL, L. G. Charles James Fox and the disintegration of the Whig Party, 1782-1794. 318p $12 Oxford

942.07 Fox, Charles James. Whig party (Great Britain). Great Britain—Politics and government—1760-1789
ISBN 0-19-821338-9 LC [70-560323]

This is an account of the political career of Charles James Fox "from the time he first held high office in Rockingham's short-lived administration, and seemed poised for power, to . . . July 11, 1794, when the Duke of Portland, Rockingham's successor as titular head of the Whig tribe, led the main body of the party into alliance with Pitt." (TLS)

"In a well-written study that surveys all available evidence, Leslie Mitchell makes a convincing case for Fox's being a more astute political leader than many have credited. Fox emerges as a man of principle who threw away opportunities for office because he insisted that the House of Commons, not the King, should be the authority for ministerial advancement." R. W. Smith

Am Hist 77:142 F '72 550w

"Mitchell presents . . . [the] complicated history [of the Whig Party] clearly and judiciously." C. B. Cone
Social Studies 63:338 D '72 300w

"Mitchell has chosen for his careful study one of the most exciting and instructive passages in English political history. . . . By far the best chapters in the book are those which describe how events in France (judiciously exploited by Pitt) forced apart the conservative and Foxite wings of the Whig connexion, leaving Fox with no choice but either to strike his political flag or to enter the political wilderness. The story draws an epic quality from the interest of the principal characters in themselves, the majesty of the events with which their personalities had to interact, and the inevitability of the conclusion. But it must be admitted that in Mr. Mitchell's hands the epic moves slowly, and at times tediously."

TLS p666 Je 11 '71 650w

MITCHELL, P. M., Jr. ed. Anthology of Danish literature. See Jansen, F. J. B.

MITFORD, T. B. The inscriptions of Kourion. 422p il maps $20 Am. philosophical soc.

481 Inscriptions. Kourion, Cyprus—Antiquities
LC 78-121295

This is a "study of all known inscriptions from the ancient city of Kourion on the island of Cyprus. These date from the seventh, perhaps even the eighth century B.C., through the Classical, Hellenistic, and Imperial Roman periods, to the early Byzantine era." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Indexes.

"The arrangement [of the inscriptions] is chronological, in four parts, with every surviving inscription illustrated. . . . The editor has done his job with a sense of proportion, a sense of humor, and a flawless competence worthy of more significant material." Paul Mackendrick

Am Hist R 77:491 Ap '72 420w

"This book is not only beautifully produced but also represents a virtuoso performance by the author. . . . For each inscription the editor gives the provenience, a complete description, including that of the letter-forms, a full bibliography, and a succinct commentary. Photographs of all texts except those now lost are included and are most helpful, especially since the use of slick paper throughout allows them to be printed in the text itself, not on plates at the back. They are generally good, and line drawings are often added when deemed necessary. Finally, there are six tables of various Cypriot signaries, full concordances and indices, and five plans." D. W. Bradeen

MITFORD, T. B.—Continued

Class World 65:169 Ja '72 490w

MITGANG, HERBERT. Abraham Lincoln: a press portrait. See Mitgang, H., ed. Lincoln's long shadow

MITGANG, HERBERT. Get these men out of the hot sun. 203p $6 Arbor house
ISBN 0-87795-035-0 LC 71-188941

This novel begins in 1976. "In the last six months of [Nixon's second term] the President has become merely a vague presence, infrequently glimpsed by the public and then as little more than a figure 'waving in the background' of official White House photographs. . . . Secret Service men spot him easily from the air: 'He was the only one in the yacht who fished while wearing a dark business suit and tie.' . . . Finally, the First Lady gets the advice of a brilliant shrink. His diagnosis: emergent dysfunction. . . . Yet the White House hums on. It is run by a communications apparatus and the Vice President. . . . Can the Vice President be stopped? Thereon hangs the tale." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Mitgang's credentials as an anti-Nixon & Agnew man are quite in order: he is an editor for The New York Times, and a former executive editor for CBS News. This slight, overpriced little lampoon is in the sort of questionable taste college moderators of magazines have to contend with now and again." S. J. Laut

Best Sell 32:41 Ap 15 '72 240w

Reviewed by R. H. Roschan
Library J 97:1347 Ap 1 '72 90w

"Before all else, let it be said that journalist Herbert Mitgang has nerve. Let it also be said that he has given us a good little yarn, breezily spun, unpretentious, easy to read at a short sitting. This should make it possible for even Washington politicians to read it. Republicans should love it for the exposure it gives them. Here is a spare but unsparing tale that is often funny even as it builds suspense and finally fills us with horror. . . . Good yarn." Frank Trippett

N Y Times Bk R p40 Mr 26 '72 800w

"Move over, Philip Roth. Make room, Art Buchwald. Look out, Gore Vidal. Meet Herbert Mitgang . . . a writer with a quiverful of sharp satirical shafts with which to play Zap the Nixnews. What an angry book Mitgang has written! What a joy parts of it are. And what a pity he failed to sustain it all the way. . . . The author assures us that this is a historical novel of the future about some fictional characters. . . . So disclaiming, Mitgang is off and running down the Nixon administration. . . . [At the point that] Agnew is out to short-circuit the nation's communications industry and replace it with a sort of Big Brotherhood of Thought Control. . . . Mitgang's chillingly amusing satire begins to aspire to Day of the Jackal [BRD 1971 by Frederick Forsyth] suspense. A pity, for the shift in mood saps the book of its previous verve and bite." Arthur Cooper

Sat 55:73 Ap 8 '72 480w

MITGANG, HERBERT, ed. Lincoln's long shadow [Cover title]. 3v $18.51; 309p il set $23.95; ea $7.95;$9.37 Quadrangle bks. Contents: Spectator of America, by Edward Dicey; ed. with an intro; Abraham Lincoln, a press portrait: his life and times from the original newspaper docs. of the Union, the Confederacy, and Europe; a new interpretation of the classic biography Lincoln as they saw him; [and] Washington, D.C. in Lincoln's time, by Noah Brooks; ed. with new commentary.

973.7 Lincoln, Abraham, President U.S. U.S.—History—Civil War
ISBN 8129-0177-0; 8129-0170-3; 8129-0171-1
LC 70-143574; 72-143572; 76-143573

This three-volume, boxed set consists of three previously published books. All three edited and supplied with an introduction by New York Times editor, Herbert Mitgang. For Abraham Lincoln, A Press Portrait, which was originally compiled by Mr. Mitgang, see BRD 1956 under the title Lincoln As They Saw Him. For the Brooks volume, first published in 1895, see BRD 1958 for the edition edited by Mitgang. Dicey's book is a collection of dispatches which he wrote on a trip here as an English journalist sympathetic to the Union cause. First published in 1863 as a two-volume work entitled Six Months in The Federal States, Mitgang has condensed it into one volume, corrected some errors of fact and omitted dated passages. Volume indexes.

"Since all [three books] are contemporary accounts relating to Lincoln and the Civil War written by observers who were eyewitnesses or by editors who often gave their brutally frank opinions, they make good reading. They also supply a valuable fund of information and opinion. Especially useful for college libraries for use by both undergraduate and graduates."

Choice 8:1378 D '71 80w

"None [of the present volumes] has been easily accessible to the general reader. . . . Each book is equipped with a useful introduction and headnotes, but the indexes are skimpy. . . . Dicey's commentary has never been published in the United States. . . . Dicey reported incisively upon the social atmosphere, the progress of the war and American political mechanisms. He saw a little of Lincoln and a lot of Washington. . . . Always fair and sometimes intuitive in his judgments, Dicey rejected the idea, then widely held, that reconciliation could not occur after the war. But he was handicapped, as Carl Sandburg says, by being 'alien to American ways.' Together, these three handsomely produced books, struck off in the heat of critical times, illuminate as only contemporary writings can the character of Lincoln and his America." Gerald Carson

N Y Times Bk R p34 O 10 '71 850w

MIZENER, ARTHUR. The saddest story: a biography of Ford Madox Ford. 616p pl $20 World pub.

B or 92 Ford, Ford Madox
LC 73-124285

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Peter Shaw
Commentary 52:79 S '71 1700w
Economist 243:69 My 6 '72 500w

Reviewed by Allon Rodway
Encounter 39:66 D '72 600w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
New Statesman 83:599 My 5 '72 1550w
Yale R 61:XX O '71 1050w

MIZUMURA, KAZUE. If I built a village. . . [il. by the author]. unsp $4.50 Crowell
ISBN 0-690-42903-7 LC 77-140645

"Three ideal communities—a village, a town, and a city—are . . . described and visualized in this picture book. . . . Throughout, Mizumura fosters awareness of how man's home could accord with nature. . . . Preschool to grade three." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler
Book World p3 (children's issue) N 7 '71 50w

"An entirely childlike book with a simple but poetic statement on ecology. . . . Clarity and rhythm of design characterize the unsophisticated crayon-like drawings that provide visual interpretation. The illustrator's bright, energetic designs [picture] leaping rabbits and trout, owls, mice, geese, and moles—all in their respective habitats. The theme is effectively expressed without becoming burdensome for the small child." V. H. Horn Bk 47:602 D '71 100w

Reviewed by Nancy Schildt
Library J 96:4179 D 15 '71 140w

"A solitary child, building with blocks, muses about the anti-city. Lovely scroll-like paintings of rabbits, trout, eagles show no sense of involvement with reality. . . . No doubt meant as a book filled with love and sensitivity but the result comes across as vapid." J. B. Mercer

N Y Times Bk pt 2, p46 N 7 '71 60w

"Delicate watercolors and ink-and-wash drawings combine with a simple text to express both a sense of order and a love of wild creatures in a book that is not really a story but a vision of a world in which beauty and kindness prevail." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:59 N 13 '71 80w

MOELLER, BEVERLEY BOWEN. Phil Swing and Boulder Dam. 199p il pl maps $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

328.73 Hoover Dam. U.S.—Politics and government—1919-1933. Swing, Philip David
ISBN 0-520-09384-4 LC 71-633550

The author's thesis is "that California Congressman Philip Swing, more than any other individual, contributed to the surmounting of all legal and political barriers to the construction of the dam. . . . [Moeller recounts] Swing's efforts through six terms as a representative from California's '7-11' district between 1921 and 1933 to authorize construction of the dam despite the opposition of skeptical easterners, the state of Arizona, and the opponents of public power." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"This carefully researched and objective monograph should provide an effective antidote for recent efforts to revitalize the fictitious myth of Herbert Hoover as the true progenitor of the New Deal. Assiduously grounded in exhaustive research, mostly in primary materials, this erstwhile dissertation is a model of careful historical scholarship. It should be of interest not only to those concerned with the West but to all students of twentieth-century America." G. D. Nash
Am Hist R 77:1178 O '72 400w

"This thoroughly researched work is not only a welcome addition to the scanty published material available on American political figures of less than Presidential and senatorial stature, but is a significant contribution to our knowledge of the conservation movement in the 1920s." Choice 9:874 S '72 180w

"Moeller has not tried to write a complete history of the political and legal ramifications of the dam, but instead she focuses narrowly upon Swing and his efforts. As a result, she slight the efforts of other Californians as well as Nevadans in bringing about this achievement. Nonetheless, this is a valuable and needed study, for earlier works on this subject, as the author correctly points out, have been grossly inaccurate in assessing the relative roles of Swing and Hoover in bringing the idea of a dam to fruition." R. J. Roske
J Am Hist 59:464 S '72 400w

"This well-written account is pertinent today to the study of our national resources and the jurisdiction over production and distribution of hydroelectric power." Jerry Cao
Library J 96:3324 O 15 '71 150w

MOFFETT, TOBY. The participation put-on; reflections of a disenchanted Washington youth expert. (A Delta bk) 267p $6.95; pa $2.45 Delacorte press

309.2 Youth—U.S.—Political activity. U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Office of Students and Youth
LC 78-172114

In May, 1970, Moffett "resigned as director of the Office of Students and Youth in HEW in protest against the Cambodia invasion and the killings at Kent State. [He] was appointed to the office in September, 1969, with a mandate to serve as 'an advocate for youth.' . . . [He tells] the story of his increasing disenchantment." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by M. M. Barry
America 126:243 Mr 4 '72 340w

Reviewed by Brother Benedict Wengler
Best Sell 32:32 Ap 15 '72 210w

"[Moffett] writes with a deep sense of frustration and despair of his experiences with governmental bureaucracy and of his efforts to influence the policies of the Office of Education. . . . [This] is a candid, personal tale that touches on many of the youth- and student-oriented government programs. The last chapter provides an insider's view of Washington's uproarious 1971 May Day. All but the most hardened cynics would give the author credit for his work-from-within approach, and the reader is left wondering, along with Moffett, what do you do when that approach doesn't work? Recommended." Topsy Smalley

Library J 96:3995 D 1 '71 140w
New Repub 166:31 Ja 29 '72 390w

"[This] is an overdrawn, belabored depiction of the life and death of a basically unimportant sideshow to the Nixon Presidency. . . . Moffett is a difficult writer to follow. His organization is loose, and he has made the chronology of his life a puzzle to decipher. . . . [He] has also [adopted] the clichéd phrases of the Left in order to confirm in the eyes of the readers his own complete 'radicalization.' . . . The best parts of [the book] are the occasional moments of honesty that flash through [it]: Moffett's . . . self-analysis about his job, his admission that he was 'so immersed in the high-level government problem-solving game that [he] found it hard to see . . . that nothing was happening.' . . . Only when we catch glimpses of the crass politics of the Nixon administration, and the bewilderment of Moffett's own life, does his account begin to intrigue." Stephen Schlesinger

Sat N 55:31 Ja 1 '72 700w

MOFFITT, JOHN. Journey to Gorakhpur; an encounter with Christ beyond Christianity. 304p $7.95 Holt

294.5 Hinduism. Christianity and other religions
ISBN 0-03-086577-8 LC 70-155525

"Moffitt, a poet and professing Catholic who spent 25 years as a member of the order of Ramakrishna in India, . . . [seeks to show] that, like Christ for Christians, Brahman represents for Hindus and Buddha represents for Buddhists the same timeless presence of God in man. . . . [He offers] interpretations of Hindu scriptures (the Vedas, Upanishads, and the Bhagavad-Gita) . . . [and describes some of the] Hindu philosophical schools, such as the nondualism of Shankara and Ramanuja and the dualistic Vedanta of Madhva." (Library J) Index.

"[This book is intended] for those hearing about Hinduism for the first time. Those who have been reluctant to walk an unfamiliar path toward an encounter with a non-Christian religion will find in Moffitt an able guide through his mixture of autobiographical notes, anecdotes, scriptural explanations, personal poems and religious history. The 'four voices of Christ' encountered on the journey to Gorakhpur are those of intuitive wisdom, devotional self-giving, conscious discipline and service to the human community. . . . Pointing out some of the similarities between Hinduism and Christianity . . . [Moffitt makes] some rather startling suggestions. Some theologians will want more precision in his terminology . . . and some missionaries will decry his virtual destruction of the basis for a traditional missiology." L. J. Farwell

America 127:159 S 9 '72 550w

"The reader must approach some difficult ideas and names with care and with love. Narrow minds ought not to approach this book. It is mind-blowing and faith-challenging. Our Christ is one for all men. . . . This is not an emotional work, nor is it always easy reading. It is fascinating to allow one's imagination to be fed by these facts of ritual or prayer or discipline and then to compare such with what we know of Christ, of God, of Humanity. . . . The author's background in music and poetry has allowed him a sensitive mood of color and song which adds to this charming portrayal. Read it and enjoy its richness." E. J. Linehan
Best Sell 32:309 O 1 '72 700w

Reviewed by George Weckman
Christian Century 89:1190 N 22 '72 460w

Reviewed by Martin Marty
Critic 31:84 N/D '72 470w

"[The author] is ideally equipped to introduce the reader to Eastern religious thought as it compares to Christianity. . . . It is a measure of Moffitt's tolerance that he considers Chairman Mao, next to Gandhi, a leader who truly serves his nation. . . . He reveals his poetic talent not only in some of the verse found in the book, but also in his colorful biographies of past and present Hindu spiritual leaders. This beautifully written book should appeal to people with religious commitments, to those who feel a need for spiritual uplift, and to those who are interested in a meeting ground between East and West." E. F. Hirsch
Library J 97:2412 Jl '72 250w

MOFFITT, JOHN, ed. A new charter for monasticism. See Meeting of the monastic superiors in the Far East, Bangkok, 1968

MOGELON, ALEX, jt. auth. Twentieth century woodcuts. See Laliberté, N.

MOHAN, BEVERLY. Riding; a guide to horsemanship [by] Beverly Mohan [and] Margaret Mohan Steinberg. (An All-star sports bk) 128p il $3.95; Titan ed $3.99 Follett

798 Horsemanship—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-695-80173-2; 0-695-40173-4 (Titan ed)
LC 70-125021

This book covers "equipment, learning to ride and owning your own horse. A section on fun with horses covering games and shows is [also included]." (Choice) Glossary.

"[This is] a condensation and simplification of a 1963 book by the same authors and is written for the general public, particularly for the young rider. . . . A wealth of foundation material on riding is covered."

Choice 8:1480 Ja '72 80w

Reviewed by R. R. Knudson

Library J 96:4204 D 15 '71 30w

MOISÉS, ROSALIO. The tall candle; the personal chronicle of a Yaqui Indian, by Rosalio Moisés, Jane Holden Kelley and William Curry Holden; introd. by Jane Holden Kelley. 251p il $7.50 Univ. of Neb. press

970.3 Yaqui Indians
ISBN 0-8032-0747-6 LC 71-100809

This is the "record of a Mexican Indian who lived from 1896 to 1969. Moisés tells of a . . . period of almost continuous struggle during which the Yaquis strove to preserve their autonomy and to keep their lands from the Mexicans and in the process were deported, forced into exile, or sometimes massacred." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Style, while lacking the polish of a native speaker, is most readable and suited to a high school audience and beyond."

Choice 8:1386 D '71 260w

"William Curry Holden first met Moisés in 1934 while on an ethnographic trip to Mexico. Later, after they became friends, Holden persuaded Moisés to write an autobiography. Moisés did so, but in English rather than in Yaqui or Spanish. Since his command of the language was inadequate, his manuscript could not be published. The task of editing was then given to Holden's daughter, the archaeologist Jane Holden Kelley, who, with the aid of the author, revised and corrected his work and added a 50-page introduction of her own. The final result is this remarkable . . . [book which] is fascinating to read and, although obviously written from a somewhat anti-Mexican point of view, is definitely a contribution to the literature of the American Indian." T. M. Avery

Library J 96:3133 O 1 '71 190w

MOLTMANN, JÜRGEN. Theology of play; tr. by Reinhard Ulrich. 113p $4.95 Harper

218 Pleasure. Play. Theology
SBN 06-065902-5 LC 73-160635

This "is a four-way dialogue in which three American theologians of play—David L. Miller, Sam Keen, and Robert E. Neale—respond . . . to Moltmann's . . . essay, 'The First Liberated Men in Creation,' [which] seeks to reassert the value of aesthetic joy against the absolute claims of ethics. . . . Robert E. Neale in his essay 'The Crucifixion as Play' challenges Moltmann's assertion that the Crucifixion stands apart and cannot be construed as 'playful.' . . . Sam Keen has responded with a 'godsong,' a little pro-fun ditty about good and (d)evil. And David L. Miller, in 'Playing the Game to Lose,' . . . [deals] with the 'bugaboo of death' in play studies and argues a radical understanding for the basic Christian concept that 'the good of salvation is for the losers.'" (Publisher's note)

"Moltmann scolds [the three American essayists] in a postscript. He thinks they overdo the play motif and make it a be-all and end-all of existence. His own essay is thoughtful, as one might expect, but the 'theology of play' has lost its zing. It may become a grace note to the rest of theology, and on those terms Moltmann's piece is a contribution."

Christian Century 89:853 Ag 30 '72
90w

"The latest theological fad is 'theology of play,' a shift away from the serious, political oriented theology of the 1960's to themes of celebration, worship, festivity, etc. The first of this genre to receive public attention was probably Harvey Cox's The Feast of Fools [BRD 1969]. Others have followed. Here is offered a 75-page essay by Moltmann, whose Theology of Hope [BRD 1968] has become a minor modern classic. . . . This is probably the most thoughtful book on the subject so far, but its Germanic style and orientation will prevent it from becoming popular reading on the American scene." D. W. Dayton

Library J 97:3324 O 15 '72 120w

MONDELLO, SALVATORE, jt. auth. The Italian-Americans. See Iorizzo, L. J.

MONJO, F. N. The Jezebel wolf; il. by John Schoenherr. 47p $4.50 Simon & Schuster

Wolves—Stories
SBN 671-65191-9 LC 73-144225

"Putnam's younger son had never heard the story of the wolf his father had killed, and he gets the full details in several installments. The wolf having ravaged the local livestock, was hunted over many miles, and finally trapped and killed in her lair." (Sat R) "Grades two to four." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p11 (children's issue) N 7
'71 130w

"The author has not only presented a nostalgic bit of Americana but also created an engrossing narrative with the structure and cadence of a folk tale. . . . Although the hired hand, the neighbors, and the dogs taking part in the famous hunt are given fictional names, the essential facts [are] true to Putnam's version. . . . A story with particular appeal for boys." M. M. B.

Horn Bk 47:476 O '71 160w

"In line with the modern view that wild animals are neither good nor evil but simply occupy their niche in the ecological chain, the author disclaims in an epilogue any desire to perpetuate the big, bad wolf myth and the description of the chase and eventual death of the so-called 'she-devil' still makes a whopping good story that is sure to appeal to reluctant readers." L. R. Hemenway

Library J 97:276 Ja 15 '72 110w

"This fictionalized account of a true incident in the life of Israel Putnam, the 'Old Put' of the Revolutionary War, is narrated in a natural, conversational style, chiefly as a reminiscence. . . . The illustrations are stunning, and the tale is told with a storyteller's flair." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:27 Ag 21 '71 110w

MONOD, JACQUES. Chance and necessity; an essay on the natural philosophy of modern biology; tr. from the French by Austryn Wainhouse. 198p il $6.95 Knopf

574.01 Biology—Philosophy
ISBN 0-394-46615-2 LC 77-154929

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by R. G. Manker

Christian Century 89:405 Ap 5 '72 600w

Reviewed by R. J. Herrnsstein

Commentary 53:83 Mr '72 2900w

Economist 243:73 My 13 '72 550w

Reviewed by A. A. Beltran

Library J 97:207 Ja 15 '72 140w

New Statesman 83:643 My 12 '72 1550w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliven

New Yorker 48:75 Ag 12 '72 550w

Reviewed by Th. Dobzhansky

Science 175:49 Ja 7 '72 2000w

TLS p629 Je 2 '72 400w

Reviewed by John Beloff

Va Q R 48:289 spring '72 1700w

MONOD, JACQUES, ed. Of microbes and life. See Of microbes and life

MONROE, HASKELL M., ed. The papers of Jefferson Davis, v 1. See Davis, J.

MONTAGU, ASHLEY. The elephant man; a study in human dignity. 140p il $5.95 Dutton 155.9 Merrick, John
SBN 0-87690-037-6 LC 79-167770

The story of John Merrick who "was born with a severe bone and skin disorder. When he was three, his home became the workhouse. For most of his life, he was exploited by others as a traveling circus exhibit. Then, toward the end of his life, Merrick was befriended [by an English surgeon, Sir Frederick Treves] given a home, treated with respect. And . . . he emerged from the half-world of his existence a loving, gentle, dignified human being." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Montagu has reprinted Treves's best-known essay, 'The Elephant Man,' written three essays himself, and gathered related texts and illustrations. John Merrick, the 'Elephant Man,' suffered from congenital malformations of his head, right arm, and both feet, from neurofibromatosis, and from tuberculosis of the hip. . . . Montagu gives probable diagnoses for the diseases and conditions that afflicted Merrick and discusses the effect of inheritance and environment on his personality; in particular, he treats the surprising fact that Merrick's mind was not warped by his misfortunes. This is a positive and human book, although the clinical illustrations and some of the technical descriptions may upset queasy readers. For academic and public collections." W. K. Beatty
Library J 96:3625 N 1 '71 250w
TLS p655 Je 9 '72 1700w

MONTELEONE, JOHN J., jt. auth. Fitness with Glenn Swengros. See Swengros, G. V.

MOODY, J. CARROLL. The credit union movement; origins and development, 1850-1970, by J. Carroll Moody [and] Gilbert C. Fite. 369p il $9.50 Univ. of Neb. press 334 Banks and banking, Cooperative
ISBN 0-8032-0754-9 LC 78-155220

The authors "trace and analyze the evolution of cooperative credit, emphasizing institutional growth and the work of individuals and associations in founding and promoting credit unions, and evaluate their impact on American life." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"[A] thoroughly researched, well-written, and comprehensive study of the cooperative credit movement in the United States. . . . Primary sources used by the authors include the correspondence of Filene and Bergengren and the business and related records of CUNA, CUNA International, and the insurance and supply affiliates. The authors have effectively utilized these materials in presenting the story of cooperative credit in a book that should be a model for the writing of socio-economic business history." Lee Scamehorn
J Am Hist 69:175 Je '72 450w

"There has not been a modern scholarly history of these financial co-ops until now. . . . [The authors] devote most of their volume to the period from 1920 to 1945, the period corresponding to the reign of Roy F. Bergengren as managing director of the Credit Union National Association. . . . Recommended for large or specialized libraries." J. B. Woy
Library J 96:3319 O 15 '71 90w

MOODY, RICHARD. Lillian Hellman, playwright. 372p il $6.95 Pegasus (N Y) 812 Hellman, Lillian
LC 76-175224

A study of the playwright and her work. Bibliography.

"[This book] is very earnest, reasonably sensible, and not nearly as interesting as Miss Hellman's autobiography and The Collected Plays." Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 230:97 J1 '72 30w

"A blandly appreciative but also occasionally illuminating study of Lillian Hellman as playwright. . . . Moody has much to say of interest about the revisions as well as the sources of Hellman's plays." Ellen Moers
Commentary 54:96 S '72 1150w

"I wish this biography had been a novel instead; then Hellman's exciting life would have had priority. As it is, discussions of her plays occur at appropriate points in the chronology, discussions which are unfortunately long on summary and short on analysis (and therefore not very useful). The book does supply considerable personal information and is thus—along with Hellman's memoir . . . necessary reading for students of her plays. Nonetheless, I found myself teased by the book's lack of context for important facts." Kristin Morrison

Library J 97:2384 J1 '72 200w

"Almost all the biographical data in this study of 'Lillian Hellman: Playwright' comes straight from her memoir, 'An Unfinished Woman' [BRD 1969]. The interpretations of her plays are equally secondhand: run-throughs, eked out with quotations. In place of criticism, there are surveys of early drafts to show that later ones were improvements, and summaries of contemporary reviews with plaudits appropriated and strictures modified. When no other ground for praise exists, Richard Moody, professor of theater and drama at Indiana University, points to a successful box-office. [Hel] isn't concerned with excellence." C. T. Samuels
N Y Times Bk II p2 Je 18 '72 750w

MOON, SHEILA. A magic dwells; a poetic and psychological study of the Navaho emergence myth. 206p $7.95 Wesleyan univ. press
970.3 Creation. Navaho Indians—Religion and mythology
ISBN 0-8195-4018-8 LC 72-105501

A "psychological analysis of the Navaho emergence myth. . . . The myth explains the emergence of a Navaho from a world archaic soul to a mature Navaho person of this world. Throughout Moon applies this emergence process principle to the 'psychological and spiritual growth of modern man.'" (Choice)

"Moon confronts the Navajo myth directly, and her readers must do the same: with the Jungian approach we all become members of the myth's audience, even if we are not Navajos. . . . One wishes that Moon had let the Navajo myth speak for itself more often than she did; except for a few direct quotes, we are given only a synopsis in her own words. . . . She introduces one of the quotes by remarking, 'The text . . . better conveys the cosmic quality than would any paraphrase'. . . . One might add that even a paraphrase may 'better convey the cosmic quality' than an analysis, which is perhaps what she had in mind when she ended the book by repeating her entire synopsis, this time uninterrupted by discussion." Dennis Tedlock
Am Anthropol 73:1359 D '71 650w

"[This study is written] in a deeply inviolated narrative poem style often struggling within itself, trying to emerge in clarity and in meaning to make sense to the reader. . . . [Moon's] book not only fits into the recent revival of Jungian psychology per se, but unexpectedly and naively into the anthropology of structural humanism of Lévi-Strauss (in contrast to the existential humanism of Sartre) . . . Recommended only to super-undergraduate students in psychology, anthropology, religion, and folklore."
Choice 7:1585 Ja '71 170w

MOONEY, BOOTH. Roosevelt and Rayburn; a political partnership. 228p $6.95 Lippincott 973.917 Rayburn, Sam Taliaferro. Roosevelt, Franklin Delano, President U.S. U.S.—Politics and government—1933-1945
LC 73-141905

The author "tells of Rayburn's rise from freshman Texas congressman, committee member and chairman, and majority leader to Speaker of the House. He . . . documents Rayburn's role in securing the Texas delegation vote for Roosevelt in Chicago in 1932 and follows this with examples of the . . . leadership Rayburn displayed in the early New Deal days in securing the enactment of basic reform legislation in banking, relief, industry, rural electrification, etc. The author also covers Rayburn's importance to the war effort in the 1940's, emphasizing Roosevelt's dependence on and confidence in him." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Did you know that Roosevelt and Sam Rayburn were born in the same year? Did you know that Roosevelt was rich and Rayburn was poor? If not, this book is for you. Mooney fails to utilize the many studies of specific aspects of F.D.R.'s Presidency. . . . A book with depth and perspective about Rayburn remains to be written. . . . Undergraduate libraries will find this book superfluous."
Choice 8:1243 N '71 120w

MOONEY, BOOTH—Continued

"This is a highly readable account . . . based on many years of personal friendship with the Texan, on conversations with friends and associates in Washington, and on the extensive resources of the Sam Rayburn Library. This volume fills a gap in the historical literature of the period, and it can also serve as a textbook on the office of Speaker of the House, a post Rayburn held for 17 years." Eugene Holtman

Library J 96:1364 Ap 15 '71 200w

MOONEY, CHRISTOPHER F. The making of man, essays in the Christian spirit. 181p $4.95; pa $2.95 Paulist/Newman

201 Theology
LC 72-147906

"This collection of nine essays . . . [deals with the] question of how the Christian and the human coincide. . . . The first three essays, under the heading 'A New Creation,' treat the future, where the implications of the Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World, the relationship between prayer, time and hope, and the futurist theologies are delineated. The second trioka, 'Soundings for Now,' explore theology and liberal education, woman in the Church and Ignatian spirituality. The last three essays, 'The Optic of Teilhard de Chardin,' look into evolution and the problem of God, change and balance in the Christian life and the world-views of Teilhard and Marx." (America)

"Intended for the nonprofessional theologian, all of the essays are clearly written and well argued. Such a book should be welcome to those who wish to get a perspective on contemporary theological issues and inquiry. What is most admirable about Father Mooney's book is its pastoral orientation. This orientation he clearly intends when he begins the book with a commentary on Vatican II's Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World. . . . The author in his inquiry and critical judgments has thoroughly grasped, as much as is possible for one man, the spirit of our age. He knows how to ask the right questions and he is sensitive to and reverent toward the movements of culture and God in his life." P. J. Fleming

America 125:154 S 11 '71 350w

Reviewed by John Deedy
Critic 30:93 Mr '72 30w

MOONEY, MICHAEL MACDONALD. The Hindenburg. 278p pl $8.95 Dodd

629.133 Hindenburg (Airship)
ISBN 0-396-06502-3 LC 75-184190

In 1937 the German zeppelin Hindenburg exploded prior to landing at Lakehurst, New Jersey. Although the official investigation concluded that static electricity caused the disaster, the author suggests that an anti-Nazi crewman planted a bomb in an act of political sabotage.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 229:1261 Ap '72 330w

Reviewed by Judson LeHave
Best Sell 31:557 Mr 15 '72 290w

"Readers will have little or no say about the success of 'The Hindenburg'—its financial success that is. It was born rich. Universal Pictures bought up its film rights before it had even reached publication. As for the book clubs, one has named it a 'selection,' another an 'alternative.' [The book] describes a grisly tragedy in grisly detail but it does have some good things in it. It probes . . . why the Nazi dirigible met with disaster, and why secrecy surrounded the investigation, how, in fact, politics affected the whole Zeppelin operation. . . . Oddly enough it is when Mr. Mooney leaves his carefully researched facts and tries to 'brighten' his story that he wearies one reader at least. He attempts to borrow a novelist's omniscience and fails." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p16 Mr 16 '72 400w

"[A] well-illustrated account . . . which should attract a wide readership." B. S. Viault

Library J 97:1714 My 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by P. L. Buckley
Nat R 24:702 Je 23 '72 300w

"With fascinating detail, Mooney tells of that great Zeppelin's last flight . . . and his successful recreation of a trans-Atlantic airship voyage [is] the work of an artist with words. When it comes to explaining the tragedy, however, Mooney is on far less certain ground. . . . The book is unfortunately marred by an extraordinary number of factual and proofreading errors. . . . The mistakes number over forty. The author's inattention to detail, evidenced by these errors, and his failure to report correctly easily verifiable historical fact raise doubts about the credibility of his sabotage findings. . . . In the future printings it is hoped the author will add a much-needed index, and supply proof of sabotage." J. G. Vaeth

N Y Times Bk R p18 Mr 19 '72 650w
New Yorker 48:148 Ap 15 '72 170w

MOORE, ARCHIE. Any boy can; the Archie Moore story, by Archie Moore and Leonard B. Pearl. 263p il $6.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Boxing
ISBN 0-13-038562-X LC 76-163398

Moore's boxing "career provides the background against which Moore's personal views on civil rights and the problems of social unrest are discussed." (Library J)

"Although the book provides a retrospective look at Moore's boxing career and many of his memorable fights, boxing enthusiasts will find these accounts sketchy as little is said about strategy and tactics. Throughout, a heavy emphasis is placed on Moore's work with the culturally disadvantaged and the circumstances that led him into that work and on his philosophy of nonviolence. Containing many insights [the book] . . . is interesting and readable." J. M. Christ

Library J 96:3631 N 1 '71 130w

"Moore, a great boxer and now head of a California-based youth program, sells his theories on boxing and life with repetition, simplicity and a large helping of bromides. . . . I think his intentions are good, but he's been in southern California too long." J. B. Segal

N Y Times Bk R p46 D 5 '71 60w

MOORE, BARRINGTON. Reflections on the causes of human misery and upon certain proposals to eliminate them. 201p $7.95 Beacon press

309.173 U.S.—Social conditions
ISBN 0-8070-1530-X LC 72-75542

The author attempts to synthesize his "perspectives as to the causes of human misery. [He] moves from his introductory essay, 'On the Unity of Misery and the Diversity of Happiness,' to a consideration of war, cruelty, and general human perversity, and then to a chapter on hunger, toil, injustice, and oppression. He reflects on the multiple dimensions of intellectual freedom, democracy, socialism, capitalism, etc. and some aspects of each that could be used to ameliorate the social and political conditions that cause human misery." (Library J)

"[Moore] is sober in tone because he is addressing revolutionaries and telling them they are wrong in basic ways. . . . Policy is barely broached but the human condition is laboriously and ably dissected. . . . Moore poses certain problems about the causes of 'human misery'—and argues by process of elimination for the least evil means of stemming the misery, which he perhaps misleadingly labels 'liberalism-with-a-difference.' . . . [The author is an] intellectual tiger worth wrestling with. [He] convinces me on particular points, and he has integrated his thoughts about liberal societies and communist societies. . . . [but his] pessimism gets a little heavy." Ross Terrill

Atlantic 230:120 O '72 1000w

"Animadversions on the character of 'predatory democracy.' These are only slightly restrained essays from the more or less Marcusean left."

Christian Century 89:928 S 20 '72 20w

"Moore has attempted to move beyond narrow ideological and philosophical predispositions and to view the human condition as it has been reflected in the social and organizational values of Western civilization, and even more specifically, in the 20th-Century United States. In a Faulknerian sense, the book implies that man can prevail; in an Aristotelian sense, it suggests the application of logic can still make some progress against the social causes of human misery. This is particularly true in the last chapter, 'Some Prospects for Predatory Democracy.' This intellectually demanding book is for the reader who is willing to subject to analysis his own certainties about contemporary society." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:2745 S 1 '72 200w

"The virtue of Moore's discussion is that he is lucid about the conditions for change. The argument about radical possibilities will of course continue, but a close reading of the final chapter of Reflections could inform that argument with more precision than it has so far enjoyed. Finally Moore's pessimism could have a tonic effect on the Left. A radicalism that attempts to deal with his arguments could become less rhetorical, less prone to excess, better aligned with real possibilities than before. This disquieting book clarifies many of the questions that haunt the radical imagination. More than a hundred self-congratulatory polemics, it raises those most urgent and useful arguments: arguments with oneself." Todd Gitlin
Nation 215:471 N 13 '72 2300w

MOORE, BRIAN. The revolution script. 261p $6.95 Holt

364.15 Abduction. Cross, James Richard. Laporte, Pierre
ISBN 03-086743-6 LC 78-160438

"On Oct. 5, 1970, a cell of six Canadian revolutionaries—all members of the Front de libération de Québec—took James Cross, senior British Trade Commissioner, from his home in Montreal and held him captive some 60 days before his negotiated release and their departure on an R.C.A.F. transport for exile in Cuba. During this period, another . . . group of French Canadian dissidents kidnapped Pierre Laporte, Minister of Labor and Immigration in the Quebec Provincial Government, and strangled him to death. . . . For the framework of [this account] Moore relies on press reports, court transcripts, and a 90-minute tape left by Cross's kidnappers." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Cornelia Holbert
Best Sell 31:447 Ja 1 '72 450w

"[This] is the sort of book that might have been written by the second-best reporter on a third-rate provincial newspaper, and about the best thing that can be said for it is that it gets better as it goes along, although it never gets very good." L. J. Davis
Book World p10 D 19 '71 340w

Reviewed by C. I. Miller
Canadian Forum 51:74 Ja/F '72 600w
Economist 242:49 Ja 22 '72 280w

"Moore, author of . . . The Luck of Ginger Coffey [BRD 1961, and other novels] follows the kidnappers . . . until their departure for Cuba, and attempts to recreate their motives, their thoughts, their anxieties. Brilliantly written, the account is as gripping as a good detective novel. And it is thought provoking; it . . . provides insights into terrorist psychology that go beyond the Canadian context. The book does have weaknesses. . . . Yet, whatever disagreements it may provoke, there can be no doubt that this is an important and brilliant [work]. It belongs in every library." M. S. Cross
Library J 96:3995 D 1 '71 300w

Reviewed by Francis Hope
New Statesman 83:86 Ja 21 '72 750w

"Moore tells a bizarre, suspenseful, essentially true story. . . . For the scenarios and dialogues of conspiracy, aspiration and action, he draws upon the novelist's imagination. . . . He writes a frequently compelling, occasionally tedious narrative as he invents movements of kidnappers and authorities, hideout conversations and transmissions of messages, and the cancerous growth of fear. . . . Moore's characters thin out as his plotting thickens. His mountain of detail is slow to climb. But the drama of his [book] holds us." Webster Schott
N Y Times Bk R p6 N 28 '71 900w

Reviewed by Pierre Nadeau
Sat R 55:77 F 12 '72 850w

"Apart from [a] portentous terseness, and the unremarkable spots of novelistic lubrication that keep time moving between events, there is nothing much here that invites literary judgment. From a political standpoint, it is important to learn something of the legitimate grievances of the French Canadians, even if Moore has to filter them through the extreme attitudes adopted by the FLQ. A decently literate account of present-day Irish life, written from the point of view of the IRA gunman, would have a similar flavour. . . . In the context of the book itself, sympathy with the cause of French Quebec is effectively neutralized by the callousness of the young kidnappers, and more especially by the action of their reckless FLQ colleagues, who murdered the Labour Minister Pierre Laporte." TLS p57 Ja 21 '72 900w

MOORE, DAVID G., jt. auth. The organization makers. See Collins, O.

MOORE, DAVID R., jt. auth. People of the dreamtime. See Baglin, D.

MOORE, FRANCIS D. Transplant; the give and take of tissue transplantation. 364p il $9.95 Simon & Schuster

617 Transplantation of organs, tissues, etc. SBN 671-20871-3 LC 78-139649

This book is a "presentation of the entire field of organ transplantation. . . . [The author] tells us how it all started, how we got where we are, what remains to be done. He asks all the difficult questions. Should we redefine death in terms of brain function? Who shall receive an organ and who should be denied one? Can we afford to spend $75,000 for one heart transplant or $15,000 for a kidney, while each year thousands of children die of malnutrition?" (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"Nine years ago . . . [Dr Moore] wrote Give and Take [BRD 1965], an account of progress in transplantation until then. Now, after years of immense progress, he has updated the book, adding more material than the original volume contained. . . . Moore knows what he is talking about. Whatever he has not done himself he has seen done, and he has spoken and worked with the men who have done it. There could be no better guide through the brief but intense history of transplantation. . . . But early on, a reader becomes more than aware that Moore is a surgeon and not a writer. . . . [He] is wedded to what could be called either 'medical terminology' or 'the jargon of the trade.' . . . Anyone who curls up with this book had better have a medical dictionary at his side." Edward Edelson
Book World p12 F 20 '72 900w

"[This] book is a work of the first magnitude. It will be of inestimable value to the physicians, the medical historian, and the layman, being nothing less than a singular compendium. . . . Eminently readable, the volume does not have a glossary. Rather, each time a technical term is introduced, it is explained in a comprehensible, brief footnote. . . . The book should be required reading for any tissue donor, and, whenever possible, for any recipient and the members of his family." Choice 9:525 Je '72 150w

"[This] book is lucid, comprehensive, [and] objective. . . . Early in his book . . . Dr. Moore tackles a problem that any doctor writing for the public must solve: that of explaining technical, scientific concepts in generally intelligible terms. In a book on transplants the author must explain rejection . . . tolerance, immunity; he can hardly avoid histocompatibility, auricle and glomerulus. When Dr. Moore finds it necessary to resort to scientific terminology, he translates it fluently into language that any reader, willing to give the text the attention it deserves, can understand. But 'Transplant' is not merely a technical treatise; it is a human and compelling book." W. A. Nolen
N Y Times Bk R p38 Mr 5 '72 900w

MOORE, JOAN W. Mexican Americans [by] Joan W. Moore with Alfredo Cuéllar. 172p il $5.95; pa $3.50 Prentice-Hall

917.91 Mexicans in the New Southwest SBN 13-57940-0; 13-579482-X (pa) LC 77-113844

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by J. H. Burma
Am J Soc 78:460 S '72 650w

Reviewed by Elaine Hobart
Contemp Sociol 1:553 N '72 900w

Reviewed by John Womack
N Y Rev of Books 19:15 Ag 31 '72 200w

MOORE, WILL G. The classical drama of France. 138p $4; pa $1.95 Oxford

842 French drama—History and criticism
ISBN 0-19-885055-7 LC [74-850453]

A "survey covering the period from the Pléiade to 1680. [Moore's] skepticism about our capability to know the past leads him to challenge monolithic perceptions of French classical drama which have insisted (excessively, for Moore's taste) on the importance of rigid conventions and rules as the critical factors in determining the worth of dramatic productions. At the expense of those he labels 'proto critics' (Chapelain d'Aubignac, Boileau) who viewed the theater as doctrinaires . . . he praises the freer, more generous but still critical acumen of the practitioners, chiefly Corneille and Molière, for whom rules were not a frustrating constraint." (Choice)

"Moore makes much of rhetoric (in the best sense) and particularly of the Alexandrine verse as a versatile vehicle of dramatic expression. In some respects the unacquainted lay reader may feel he is entering the middle of an argument with this book. Nevertheless, and despite minor technical objections (some quotations translated, others not; a few typographical errors; meager bibliography; sketchy and uneven treatment of several works), Moore presents some refreshingly ingenious insights."

Choice 9:75 Mr '72 200w

"There are useful chapters on the attitudes of seventeenth-century critics to the dramatists and on the tastes of the theatregoing public which turned Thomas Corneille's Timocrate, incredibly, into the greatest box-office success of the century. . . . The best pages of [this] book are undoubtedly those devoted to appreciations of the artistic merits of individual plays."

TLS p743 Je 25 '71 290w

MOORE, WILLIAM. Against the odds. 244p $8.50 Jossey-Bass

378.1 Junior colleges. Underachievers
ISBN 0-87589-067-9 LC 74-118720

The president of Seattle Community College argues "for basic reforms in two-year colleges in order to upgrade the educational opportunities of low academic achievers with diverse backgrounds and capabilities. Moore contends that high-risk students represent a rather significant proportion of the burgeoning junior college's clientele, and that unless greater efforts by administrators, faculty, and especially counselors are made to help these comparatively neglected students, both higher education and society at large stand to lose a great deal in the way of valuable human resources. In addition . . . Moore describes a recent experiment in 'compensatory' education designed to strengthen the marginal college student's academic self-concept." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Written by a black community college administrator, who was himself a 'high-risk' student at one time. . . . This informative, unique, and well written monograph is especially timely in a period when student grievances and higher educational problems in general are receiving widespread attention. Almost anyone associated with the modern community college movement should find the book rewarding."

Choice 7:1556 Ja '71 120w

"According to Moore—and he makes his points in a forceful, well-documented manner—the average community college is effective in developing liberal arts transfer programs and effective in preparing youth for technical occupations. But the schools are not effective in teaching and counseling terminal liberal arts students and their work with students who need further preparatory work is a disaster and constitutes a national disgrace. . . . [This book] is a clear call for community college administrators and faculties to live up to their responsibilities to young people. It also offers good suggestions and examples for program development." W. F. Brazziel

J Higher Ed 41:661 N '70 500w

MOORE, WILLIAM. Blind man on a freeway. 173p $7.75 Jossey-Bass

378.1 Junior colleges
ISBN 0-87589-106-3 LC 72-168858

"Moore believes that the administrator at the community college level (emphasis on the urban setting) is ill-prepared for his job. . . . The first two chapters explain the disruptive forces within the academic community and how unprofessionally they are handled by faculty and administrators. Moore makes a plea to open the closed doors of higher education through a better understanding and knowledge of the disadvantaged." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[The author] is highly critical of the training programs based on a traditional academic framework. He tees off on the administrators and faculty accusing them of short-sightedness, snobbishness, of being evasive and elitist. Indeed he goes so far as to say administrators are guilty of purposeful discrimination. . . . His experience with the disadvantaged comes through in vivid detail and [the] chapter, 'Opening the closed door,' may be the best in the book. . . . The guide for improving community relations should also be very helpful."

Choice 9:413 My '72 200w

"Moore has written a book about me, a blind man-administrator on a two-year college-free way. He has written sympathetically about subjects which are current on my agenda—money and mischief, blacks and boards, open college doors and closed faculty minds. Unlike many college of education generals, he has not always been in an armchair. He was once in battle. His book is a practical compendium of wisdom born under fire. . . . [It] is insightful about political conduct. But the behavior of the academic politicians essentially remains cast in the terms of the Old Politics. That's the problem." W. M. Birenbaum

J Higher Ed 43:326 Ap '72 400w

MOOREHEAD, ALAN. The White Nile. rev ed 368p il col pl maps $15 Harper

962 Nile River. Africa—Discovery and exploration. Africa—History. Explorers
ISBN 06-013049-0 LC 78-160663

This is "the story of the exploration of the Nile from the Mountains of the Moon to the Mediterranean. . . . In this edition Moorehead has slightly shortened his text to make room for 48 colour plates and 120 monochrome illustrations, mainly from contemporary sources, a number of which have not been published before." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

"When Alan Moorehead wrote The White Nile [BRD 1961] he created a book which has become a classic in his own time. And to prove it, here is a magnificent new edition, produced with the lavishness every classic deserves. . . . [His] words have been set in readable type on sturdy paper and wedded to a set of quite remarkable illustrations. Re-reading The White Nile, one cannot help being struck again by the beauty of Moorehead's prose. . . . To get the right combination of nineteenth-century history and I-was-there travel writing is difficult, but Moorehead does it, and the result is to put the reader into the history and to make the near incredible events and people he describes seem real."

Byron Farwell

Book World p6 N 28 '71 1450w

Library J 97:61 Ja 1 '72 30w

MOOREY, P. R. S. Catalogue of the ancient Persian bronzes in the Ashmolean Museum. 343p il $40 Oxford

739 Bronzes. Ashmolean museum
ISBN 0-19-812160-7 LC 76-593764

This study of the bronzes of Western Iran "informs us when, how and where the two principal families of bronzes, Luristan and Am-lash, . . . were found, of any relevant archaeological material, of the historical context of the material where it exists, and of any related objects. . . . The catalogue itself describes more than 500 objects, all of which are illustrated in the plates, and some of which are drawn as well. It is divided into seven chapters dealing with tools and weapons; horse harness; figurines and miscellaneous statuettes; pins; personal ornaments and toilet articles; miscellaneous sheet-metal objects; and sheet-metal vessels. An appendix discusses twelve objects of gold, silver or iron. Each chapter begins with a . . . general description of the class of object before going on to individual descriptions." (TLS) Bibliography.

"[This is a] thorough and systematic study. . . . Its value lies in its being the first and most up-to-date account of the material found in both Iran and Europe. Moorey had opportu-

ity to study at firsthand the bulk of the collections in those areas. The American collection, however, [is] known only from secondary sources. As a reference work this catalogue supersedes earlier writings and will be probably without peer for some years to come."

Choice 8:1234 N '71 130w

"The would-be student of West Iranian metalwork is faced by a fantastic quantity of objects . . . [and] the relentless flow still, alas, shows no sign of abating, indeed it increases. . . . Many scholars would have thought the task of trying to bring order into the products of this bronze flood hopeless. Dr Moorey has, however, proved that this is not so: he has begun to do for some classes of bronzes, the types represented in the museum collections, what Berenson did for Italian Renaissance painting. . . . [This] is the very best kind of museum catalogue, which not only provides all the important information about the collection with which it is dealing, but also makes an important contribution to the scholarship of its field. Dr Moorey has made excellent use of modern research and has been able to present clearly and simply the very complex arguments for dating the objects."

TLS p72 Ja 21 '72 1550w

MOORHOUSE, GEOFFREY. Calcutta. 376p 11 $8.95 Harcourt

954 Calcutta—History
ISBN 0-15-115369-8 LC 75-174512

Calcutta is the problem city of the world with some eight million inhabitants including a million beggars. "It is a center of violence and . . . Maoist communism [as well as] the commercial, cultural, and intellectual center of the second most populous country on earth. This book tells [its] story." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book should, I think, be prescribed reading in every history and sociology course in the land. Expert in its research highly informative, competently written, and compassionate, it pictures human conditions we must realize and face up to responsibly. . . . The story of the 'incredible' woes of Calcutta and of its 'nauseating wealth' seems the story, writ large, of every city and country where inequitable distribution of wealth, jobs, and, in general, access to the basic necessities of life wreaks havoc. 'Calcutta' presents a frightening picture. . . . [It] is a blockbuster, an excellent book, possibly a prophetic one." Brother Berchmans Downey

Best Sell 32:33 Ap 15 '72 500w

Reviewed by B. D. Nossiter

Book World p1 Mr 12 '72 900w

Choice 9:866 S '72 170w

Reviewed by John Reed

Christian Science Monitor p11 F 3 '72 650w

Economist 241:63 O 30 '71 240w

Reviewed by R. S. Haas

Library J 97:895 Mr 1 '72 90w

"Most people (Indians as well as Europeans) don't want to know about Calcutta. All the same, this is a superb book—enormously informative, so vivid that it scarcely needs its excellent photographs, compassionate without sentimentality, humorous whenever possible, rising to the dimensions of its subject without a trace of over-writing, and done consistently in a prose that achieves the English virtues of strength, clarity and elegance. . . . I particularly admired [the author's] skill at bringing in a great many hard facts and figures so that they form part of the historical narrative or the descriptive picture. . . . The truth about this terrible city, in all its aspects, is here. In modern times, there has been no other comprehensive book on Calcutta. After this, it won't be needed." Mervyn Jones

New Statesman 82:788 D 11 '71 850w

Reviewed by Neville Maxwell

N Y Rev of Books 18:8 Mr 23 '72 700w

"[Moorhouse] has defined and documented the heavy British responsibility for the 'mess' that is modern Calcutta. . . . [He] is horrified by Calcutta, but he is also stirred by it. . . . Luckily, his writing is ■ vivid and lively as his subject. A journalist, who served 13 years on the staff of The Guardian, [he] has a feature writer's knack for the colorful phrase. Too often, though, he lapses into the picturesque patois of a traveler's guidebook. . . . There is also, for my taste, too much dawdling over the architectural and other remnants of the British Raj and too little attention to the social and political cauldron of recent years. Yet, ultimately, this is a passionate book, mixed of love and anger, and it ends with ■ chilling apocalyptic vision appropriate to its intensity." J. A. Lukas

N Y Times Bk R p3 F 13 '72 1150w

"British journalist Geoffrey Moorhouse spent a couple of months observing life in Calcutta and apparently, alas, very little longer writing about it. Had Moorhouse interviewed more Calcuttans, had he been a more felicitous writer—or at least had the services of a good editor—he might have written the sort of book he intended. . . . Yet, despite the fustian, despite the discursiveness, Moorhouse manages to sketch a portrait of Calcutta that is so unremittingly bleak, so despairingly nightmarish that, I suspect, it must be seen to be believed. . . . Perhaps the most revealing indication of Calcutta's chances for survival is the fact that writers habitually resort to a vocabulary of apocalypse when discussing it. Moorhouse is no exception. . . . A grim, foreboding book." Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 79:106 F 21 '72 800w

TLS p524 My 5 '72 450w

MOORMAN, CHARLES. Kings & captains; variations on a heroic theme. 190p $7.95 Univ. press of Ky.

809 Literature—History and criticism. Epic poetry—History and criticism
ISBN 0-8131-1248-6 LC 78-147858

This study deals with "the conflict of individual and corporate values, seen as the dichotomy between the roles of king and adventurer, in heroic fiction from Homer to Malory [Moorman] sets the historical context of each author against remembered values of the past, in terms of history and legend, usually postulating an intervening oral tradition." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Moorman is interesting, particularly upon his speciality, Arthur; he is not completely persuasive. The thesis, so rife in modern literature, that the hero is always in opposition to the establishment, ill fits the Aeneid, the Divine Comedy, or the Faerie Queene. Bibliographical notes and brief index. Useful for large collections of comparative literature." Choice 9:208 Ap '72 160w

"[The author's] thesis works well with The Iliad and Malory, and these are the strongest chapters. But the discussion of Roland is unsympathetic and muddled, the analysis of Beowulf misleading, the reading of the Nibelungenlied confusing, and the sketching of the Icelandic sagas thin. The only value this volume might have lies in its collecting of background data, but the same information might better be gleaned from the introductions to competent translations. Not recommended." D. K. Fry

Library J 96:2775 S 15 '71 80w

MOOTE, A. LLOYD. The revolt of the judges; the Parlement of Paris and the Fronde, 1643-1652. 407p $15 Princeton univ. press

944.03 Fronde, France—Politics and government—Bourbons, 1589-1789
ISBN 0-691-05191-7 LC 78-155003

"Part I, 'Prelude to the Fronde,' begins in 1610. Chapter One, 'French government and society,' gives a . . . description of how early modern government was organized and how it worked in practice. . . . Military events, experiences of important persons, etc., are subordinated to an analysis of 'institutional' developments, particularly the attempts by the parliamentarians to maintain a middle-of-the-road position in the conflicts while still achieving some moderate reforms. . . . Index and bibliography." (Choice)

"[This is a] richly detailed, meticulously documented study. . . . Moote's accomplishments are impressive: he has given order and emphasis to recent interpretations of the Fronde; he has probed, with insight and learning, the aims and achievements of the officers; and, above all, he has provided the judges with an updated apologia pro vitiis suis." J. C. Rule
Am Hist R 77:1454 D '72 600w

"[This is the] first major study in English of the Fronde since P. R. Doolin's The Fronde [BRD 1936]. It is the best in any language for placing the Fronde in perspective and utilizing the numerous recent studies of 17th-century France. The period covered is longer than the title indicates. . . . Enough narrative is included to make the book understandable to the nonspecialist. Valuable for all college and university libraries.

MOOTE, A. L.—Continued

Choice 9:425 My '72 140w

Va Q R 48:xcvi summer '72 60w

MORAN, JAMES. Stanley Morison; his typographic achievement. (Visual communication bks) 184p il $17.50 Hastings house

686.2 Morison, Stanley. Printing—Specimens
ISBN 8038-6706-9 LC 77-163559

The author attempts to assess Morison's "many contributions to the fields of printing and publication, particularly his work at the Cambridge University Press and his role in modern typesetting and the harnessing of it to a new composing and casting technology." (Choice) Contains A selection of Morison's writings: books, articles, and pamphlets. Bibliography. Index.

"While it is much too early for a definitive appraisal of the technical and scholarly achievement of this complex artisan, Moran has written a sympathetic and provocative study upon which others will be built. . . . The book is lavishly supplied with illustrations of Morison's work. Every college library should have this book available for students and faculty interested in the graphic arts whether or not it supports formal instruction in this area."

Choice 9:960 O '72 200w

"[This] work opens with a well-rounded account of the typographical scene in England and the United States before Morison's appearance. But Mr Moran soon starts to relate the 'various odd facts and contradictions' which he has thought it his duty to report 'in an endeavour to provide as objective a study of Morison as possible'. . . . Moran is unfair to Morison in a number of . . . places, but he . . . nevertheless recognizes Morison as a major figure in the history of typography, a man of extraordinary personality . . . who put the study of typographical history firmly on the map, and who worked so hard to provide the range of type faces which have enabled designers to plan good-looking printing not merely for the privileged few, but for the multitude. It adds up to an unmatched typographic achievement."

TLS p816 Jl '9 '71 500w

MORAND, PAUL. The captive princess; Sophia Dorothea of Celle; tr. from the French by Anne-Marie Geoghegan. 261p $6.95 Am. heritage

B or 92, Sophia Dorothea, consort of George I, King of Great Britain. Königs-mark, Philipp Christopher von, Count
ISBN 0-07-043037-3 LC 75-39601

This biography of the divorced wife of George I of England contains an account "of her tragic love affair with . . . Count Philipp Christoph von Königsmark." (Library J) Originally published in 1968 entitled Ci-git Sophie Dorothee de Celle.

"This love story . . . is comparable to any of the greats in history, chiefly because of the letters written to each other and preserved, and the intensity of the affection between them. . . . Morand has written his biography . . . so that it reads with the ease of a novel. He has kept footnotes to a minimum but incorporated his sources within the body of the story." I. N. Pomea

Best Sell 32:234 Ag 15 '72 330w

"Two full-length biographies of Sophie Dorothea have been published in 1972, both essentially based on the correspondence between her and Königsmark. Ruth Jordan's Sophie Dorothea [BRD 1972] a well written and attractive book, is now joined by Morand's similarly readable and competent study. There are slight variations of emphasis, but the only real difference between the two books is that Morand prints more of the famous love letters in full; they are still worth reading." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 97:2384 Jl '72 140w

MORAVIA, ALBERTO. Two: a phallic novel; tr. by Angus Davidson. 353p $7.95 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-28005-3 LC 76-183232

"Rico, a film writer, is trying to come to terms with his gigantic member which is forever taking him away from his work by leading him into sexual excesses. He is 'desublimated' and longs to achieve sublimation through work, specifically, directing the film he is writing about a young revolutionary group expropriating a capitalist's art collection. The novel is his odyssey through sex and politics as he gains a degree of self-understanding." (Library J)

Reviewed by Pierre Courtines

America 126:620 Je 10 '72 110w

Reviewed by E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 32:56 My 1 '72 550w

"Wife: You're not reviewing this book are you? Reviewer: How do you mean? Wife: I mean you're not seriously thinking of reviewing it? Reviewer: Yes, as a matter of fact, I am. It is a very comical novel. W: Perhaps you find it comical. . . . I find it gross. R: How about 'droll'? W: How about it? R: I mean couldn't I say it's droll? W: You could say anything. I think it's hideous. I'd give it an X-rating. . . . R: I can see you're against the novel. I found it amusing." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 17 '72 280w

"A tour de force that works surprisingly well. You hardly expect much from a 'phallic novel' which is a dialogue between a man and his penis. But Moravia is far too serious to be prejudged in terms of a clever plot gimmick and the come-on of a tacked-on subtitle. (The Italian title is simple Io e Lui—I and He—capturing all of the psychological duality implied in the book.) . . . [The author] raises more than prurient interest: What role does sexuality play in creativity? How does man subdue his animalistic nature in order to contribute to society? What is the generation gap between the Maoist and the radical of the 1950's and 1960's? Not all readers are going to stick this one out. The serious may be turned off too quickly by the sensational; the salacious, by the philosophical—but the Moravia-oriented will be fascinated even though this is not his best." R. D. Olson

Library J 97:1035 Mr 15 '72 250w

Reviewed by Kenn Stitt

New Statesman 83:611 My 5 '72 160w

Reviewed by Karl Miller

N Y Rev of Books 18:21 Ap 20 '72 600w

"Moravia's latest novel . . . seems rather more technically innovative than his earlier works, for he feels obliged to make his 'phallic' antagonist at least as articulate and witty as the failed artist who is his protagonist. But, of course, a similar device was employed in a similar way long before. Moravia invents nothing ever, only recapitulates; and here he turns out to be doing variations on the theme somewhat more ingeniously, though less pretentiously, handled some 270 years ago by Diderot in 'Les Bijoux Indiscrets.'" Leslie Fiedler

N Y Times Bk R p2 Ap 30 '72 1850w

New Yorker 48:141 Ap 29 '72 110w

Reviewed by Peter Wood

Sat R 55:76 Ap 29 '72 320w

MORCOMBE, MICHAEL K. Wild Australia. 112p il col il $7.95 Taplinger

574.994 Natural history—Australia

ISBN 0-8008-8322-5 LC 70-179495

This volume portrays "a variety of Australian wildlife. Topics include a . . . selection of flora ranging from the . . . Eucalyptus and . . . Banksias to the many wildflowers of the western region. The selection of fauna is dominated by marsupial mammals and birds." (Choice)

"The outstanding feature of the book is the outstanding quality of the many photographs. . . . The more than 90 color plates are especially effective in depicting the color patterns of the beautiful Australian birds. The authoritative text describes the life style, adaptations, and interrelationship of the organisms in an easy-to-read, straightforward style. The book is written for a general audience, especially those interested in natural history; however, it should also appeal to many professional naturalists because of the excellent photographs. Strongly recommended."

Choice 9:673 Jl/Ag '72 160w

"Morcombe's text, what there is of it, is not particularly informative or well written; but his photographs are excellent—he favors colorful flora and fauna rather than the usual kangaroos and koalas. While it is an attractive volume [it] is not an essential purchase for most libraries." J. F. Husband

Library J 97:2196 Je 15 '72 100w

MORDILLO, GUILLERMO. The damp and daffy doings of a daring pirate ship. unpub col il $3.95; lib bdg $3.84 Harlin Quist; for sale by Watts, F.

ISBN 8252-0071-7; 8252-0072-5 (lib bdg)
LC 72-146838

"This textless picture book depicts 'the launching of a pirate ship and its victory (despite many misplaced cannonballs) over another ship; the pirates' triumph (with one small arrow) over a sea monster they have roused; the trip to their treasure island to load up with plunder and the subsequent sinking of their overloaded ship. When last seen, however, the dauntless pirates—who have managed to swim back to their island—are busily building another ship from the trees they have felled there. . . . Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"[The] illustrations are crammed full with mischievous detail. . . . This is that rarest of all substances: a perfect book." J. F. S.
Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 11

'71 70w

Reviewed by J. F. Smith

Christian Science Monitor p7 F 24 '72
10w

"A very appealing package with its 9" square size and full-color illustrations on heavy slick paper. . . . Cartoonist Mordillo has provided comic, rotund little pirates to sail around his lushly coloured seascape, and he has charted a truly delightful voyage for young readers and pre-readers." M. A. Dorsey
Library J 96:4180 D 15 '71 150w

"It is fairly well established now that although most children from two to three can pick out recognizable objects from pictures, these should be clearly outlined and easily distinguishable from their background. . . . [Mordillo has a] feeling for visual space, so the child can . . . focus on the main action Yet unfortunately, despite clever effects, much of this action takes place on a pirate ship that is drawn far too small, with grub-like sailors who do not signal their story at all clearly to young, inexperienced eyes."

TLS p769 J1 2 '71 300w

MORETTI, MARIO. The art of the Etruscans.
See Matt, L. von

MORETTI, MARIO. New monuments of Etruscan painting; foreword by Massimo Pallottino; English tr. by Dawson Kiang. 359p il col il maps col maps $57.50 Pa. state univ. press

751.7 Painting, Etruscan. Mural painting and decoration
ISBN 0-271-00079-1 LC 68-8548

This work is a pictorial record of the "painted tombs that were located and explored in the Monterozzi cemetery at Tarquinia between 1958 and 1963. . . . [In addition to a] short introductory essay, . . . [the book includes a] tomb-by-tomb description of the archaeological context and subject-matter of the paintings, which are illustrated by nearly 200 full-page or double-page photographic reproductions in colour." (TLS)

"Photographic quality is largely mediocre with some exceptions both good and foul. . . . The commentary is simple and the measured drawings appear to be adequate, if a trifle sparse in measurements. Even though one cannot dismiss this publication as entirely devoid of use, it must be pointed out that in so far as . . . [this] volume is concerned, one can recommend it only to a profligate dilettante."

Choice 9:500 Je '72 160w

"There can be nothing but admiration for the intelligent and thorough exposition of the paintings. The contents of each tomb are described with great care and lucidity. . . . The lighting conventions are superb, affording the clearest perspective from several angles. Surely this important study will be a happy starting point for many new studies of Etruscan art and life. . . . Recommended for larger public, special, and academic libraries." F. D. Lazenby
Library J 96:3999 D 1 '71 120w

"The text is commendably factual [and] carefully documented. . . . [The reproductions] are of outstanding quality. Indeed, given the problems of conservation which these tombs present, in many cases it may well be that this volume rather than the paintings themselves will be the enduring record. . . . [The full] documentation helps to bring into perspective the relationship of Etruscan to Greek painting."

TLS p338 Mr 24 '72 600w

MOREY, WALT. Deep trouble. 214p $4.95 Dutton

SBN 0-525-28620-9 LC 72-133117

"The setting is a small salmon fishing port in Alaska in 1958, just before statehood; the hero is an 18-year-old boy who feels responsible for supporting his family. Joey fears diving since his father died doing it, but he overcomes his fright and matures during a summer of inspecting underwater salmon traps. . . . Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"[This book] reveals the mood of the people as they eagerly await statehood and stimulates the reader to a warm appreciation of the Alaskan background. Good adventure, realistic situations, believable characterizations, and a very likeable young hero bring strength to the story." B. R.

Horn Bk 47:292 Je '71 150w

"The characters are stock, but the plot is fast-paced, and the moments of underwater suspense are genuinely chilling. The story even ends on a realistic note: Joey goes to work in a marina, not off to college. The familiar Morey elements are all present here—warm family relationships, an engaging pet (a seal), plus authentic information about and a vivid evocation of Alaska. This book will have a solid audience, including older slow readers." Dallas Shaffer

Library J 96:1507 Ap 15 '71 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Catherine Storr

New Statesman 83:758 Je 2 '72 60w

"The theme of a young man's acceptance of responsibility is handled convincingly, and the Alaskan setting has flavor." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:31 Mr 20 '71 100w

TLS p486 Ap 28 '72 130w

MORGAN, ALLEN. Dropping out in ¾ time. 152p $4.95 Seabury

B or 92 Conscientious objectors—Personal narratives. Vietnamese Conflict, 1961—Conscientious objectors

ISBN 0-8164-0234-5 LC 73-163968

"This autobiography documents the experience of . . . [a] young man from the time he receives his call to take an army physical until he becomes a landed immigrant in Canada." (Library J)

"Here is a personal document not as dour as many, to read as you make up your mind about the amnesty controversy."

Christian Century 89:523 My 3 '72 40w

"While previous works have not depended upon artistic merit for their impact, this work makes an effort to achieve literary quality. The individual who emerges corresponds more nearly to the stereotyped 'draft dodger' than to the more articulate, concerned, and aware of the young men who have been immigrating to Canada. His autobiography is a self-revealing portrait of an almost self-destructive individual in a self-destructing society. ■ present-day 'dangling man' who manages to stop dangling. It deserves a wide reading both as a record of personal experience and as a presentable piece of writing." J. M. Elrod

Library J 97:1705 My 1 '72 140w

MORGAN, DAVID. Suffragists and Democrats: the politics of woman suffrage in America. 225p $7.50 Mich. state univ. press 324 Woman—Suffrage. Women in the U.S.

ISBN 0-87013-163-4 LC 76-150079

The author "traces 'the enactment of the Nineteenth Amendment and . . . a stage in the history of women in America,' centering on the political battles in and around Congress and the political parties from 1912 to 1920." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Morgan's title is misleading for he says more about the Democratic party's politics than about the political philosophy of the suffrage movement. Morgan's contribution is his tracing in detail the struggle to gain Congressional approval for a constitutional amendment from 1916 to 1919. While more thorough than Eleanor Flexner in Century of struggle [BRD 1959, 1960], he gives less credit to the women activists. . . . Morgan has a rather pedestrian style and says little new, except for his assessment of the Southern textile manufacturers' opposition to the movement. Libraries interested in a general survey might find the volume useful."

MORGAN, DAVID—Continued

Choice 9:573 Je '72 150w

Reviewed by L. E. Fredman
J Am Hist 59:745 D '72 440w

"An English political scientist's view of American women and their involvement in the politics of suffrage, this [is a] neatly put together, scholarly volume. . . . Morgan tends to assume that his readers have little background in women's history, and notes numerous bits of biographical information, cites frequently the prominent women's manuscript collections, and provides a thorough bibliography. His narrative is objective and clearly written; it offers no really new interpretation of these episodes of early 20th-Century history, but is, rather, a facile and much needed synthesis from the many primary and secondary sources." E. G. Dettelson

Library J 97:1433 Ap 15 '72 120w

MORGAN, ELAINE. The descent of woman. 258p $7.95 Stein & Day

573.2 Somatology. Woman. Man—Origin and antiquity. Evolution
ISBN 0-8128-1458-4 LC 76-186494

"These speculations about human prehistory and evolution, about the reasons for all kinds of human behavior, and about the possibilities of other kinds of behavior differ from most such theoretical works (Ardrey's, say, or Tiger's) in two ways: first, they assume that pre- or proto-hominids waited out the ten million hot, dry years of the Pliocene era as semi-aquatic mammals, and, second, they pay a good deal of attention to the role of the female in the development of the human race. The emphasis is much more on feeding than on fighting." (New Yorker)

"The book begins with a semi-arboreal lady hominid who, driven by drought from dying forest to open savannah, 'knew at once she wasn't going to like it there.' It ends, some millions of years later, with an early Stone-Age woman, competently self-supporting but conned into keeping a lumbering, greedy male about the cave for his sporadic usefulness as a provider of mammoth cutlets. Miss Morgan has read everybody, generally with a disrespectful eye, and has scooped up such evidence as serves her purpose. What doesn't serve is tossed briskly into the kitchen midden. Whether one takes her ideas seriously or not, Miss Morgan's book is engaging for its nerviness and ingenuity. It also has a tongue-in-cheek humor hitherto unknown in enterprises of this kind." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:112 Je '72 190w

"It would be disappointing to hear [Miss Morgan's] notions discussed alongside those of, say Robin Morgan and Shulamith Firestone. She deserves better. . . . But before women's liberationists hoist Miss Morgan to their shoulders, they should study carefully her hypotheses concerning the 'male dominance' phenomenon. . . . The human male has, as it were, failed to evolve in this respect as a result of forces so deep-seated that there is little voluntary control of the behavior. . . . Miss Morgan suggests that women might be able to alter their relationships with men in such a way as to minimize their sense of subordination without making impossible demands on men. It is her hope that, once women behave as if they were equally dominant, men might, in time, act accordingly. [This] is an important book. If only for its discussion on the motives of war and aggression, it should be read by every concerned individual." Carolyn Riley

Best Sell 32:138 Je 15 '72 950w

"This book is written in so chattily vulgar ■ style that it may deter the serious reader. . . . [However] Miss Morgan is formidably intelligent, extremely well-informed, provocative, and original. . . . [She] is concerned to show that many of the assumptions made about primitive man and his ancestors . . . take origin so exclusively from the masculine point of view that they may be distorted. . . . Interestingly enough, Miss Morgan ends her book with a plea that the rewards and value of motherhood should be more widely recognized in our society. . . . This maddening book is brimful of stimulating ideas. It deserves to be an enormous success. I hope the author will then . . . settle down to a serious appraisal of the biological and ethological implications of the many unproven hypotheses with which she presents us." Anthony Storr

Book World p3 My 7 '72 90w

Choice 9:1051 O '72 200w

Reviewed by Maureen Duffy
New Statesman 84:517 O 13 '72 1150w

"It is, and has been for too long, open season for silly books about human nature and human evolution. . . . For a few happy and hopeful moments I thought that Elaine Morgan, an articulate and widely-read Oxford graduate in English, had actually [written a spoof on them, but] . . . she means what she says. . . . [Her central theme] is that the remote forerunners of Homo sapiens include a breed of sea beasts, primates which left the trees and lived in the oceans—and that the female of the species was primarily responsible for this remarkable turn of events. . . . Unfortunately for the validity of this book . . . [the] theory simply does not stand up. . . . All the new evidence [since it was first proposed by Alister Hardy over a decade ago] indicates that our ancestors were terrestrial rather than marine creatures. . . . Pseudoscience marches on." John Pfeiffer

N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 25 '72 900w

New Yorker 48:139 My 20 '72 110w

MORGAN, H. WAYNE. Unity and culture: the United States, 1877-1900. 175p il $6.95 Penguin 917.3 U.S.—History—1865-1898. U.S.—Intellectual life
ISBN 0-7139-0269-8 LC 70-32028

"Morgan examines four aspects of American history in the post-Civil War era. . . . First, he recounts the nation's development during this period from an agrarian society to one of industry and commerce in a growing urban culture. He then traces the political history, from Lincoln and Johnson to Garfield, Harrison, and McKinley. He chronicles the resurgence of cultural life following the war, examining the new wave of writers and artists and the development of symphony orchestras, libraries, museums, and unique architectural styles. The final chapter is a . . . survey of America's increasingly important role in world affairs. . . . The study ends with McKinley's entry into world politics and the nation's involvement in the Spanish-American War." (Library J)

"Morgan draws liberally on his other writings about the period and on his wide knowledge of the sources. The book was apparently written for general readers or, perhaps, for classroom use in introductory courses. The essays begin with analytical introductions, then turn to chronological development of topics. . . . [This work] contains few new insights . . . [and] although it is judicious, it is probably too thin to warrant inclusion in library collections. Twelve pages of well chosen plates; good bibliographical essay; three-page index."

Choice 9:128 Mr '72 150w

"Morgan has a . . . difficult task to reduce to order and coherence the notoriously confused generation that followed the civil war and reconstruction. This he does with a good deal of deftness, but when a substantial chapter (the most original) on cultural developments and an admirable bibliographical appendix are removed, there is not much space left for everything else."

Economist 241:60 O 30 '71 150w

"[This history] written in a popular style . . . [is] recommended for public and school libraries and for the academic library." Eugene Holtman

Library J 96:3130 O 1 '71 120w

"[The author] has far too little space to accomplish his task. A hundred and forty pages of text might be adequate for an essay on a well-worn theme, but it is not enough when so much has to be placed in a new perspective. When he says that 'coverage is necessarily selective' he makes something more than an understatement. The whole of the South gets one page and a paragraph, black history no more than a passing reference, and . . . America west of the Mississippi hardly exists. . . . One feels that Mr Morgan ought to have taken three times as much space if he was really expected to write a history of this controversial period; what he has provided is one hurried chapter of social survey and three good essays upon chosen aspects of American civilization."

TLS p410 Ap 14 '72 750w

MORGAN, KENNETH O. The age of Lloyd George. (Historical problems, studies and documents, 12) 233p $8.50 Barnes & Noble 320.942 Liberal party (Great Britain). Lloyd George of Dwyfor, David Lloyd George, 1st Earl. Great Britain—Politics and government ISBN 0-04-942092-5 LC [72-189601]

This volume "aims to use Lloyd George's career as a means of tracing the revival, triumph, division and decline of his own Liberal Party, in which he himself was the decisive agent for change. It spans the period from 1890, when Lloyd George entered Parliament and when the Liberals were in the early processes of reorganization and recovery, down to the 1929 general election, when Lloyd George's last crusade failed and when the Liberals were shown to be no longer serious challengers for political power." (Pref) Annotated bibliography. Index to part one.

"Morgan speaks with special authority on Welsh Liberalism and his essay of 97 pages is an extraordinary capsule history of British Liberalism from the Newcastle Program (1891) to about 1932, which serves to introduce an additional 113 pages of documentary extracts. The most interesting of these are previously unprinted letters from the Lloyd George papers. . . . This is not a work for the general reader, but it belongs in libraries of colleges and universities where the history of British politics is taught. Good bibliography."

Choice 9:1192 N '72 110w

"[Morgan's book] is extremely clearly written and is reinforced by sympathy and true perception. The second half of the book consists of a selection of documents to illustrate the text. The thread of argument which runs through [the book] and carries conviction with it is that Lloyd George owing to his Welsh origins, came to Westminster as an outsider and 'an outsider he remained'."

TLS p1626 D 31 '71 700w

MORGAN, M. C. Lenin. 236p $8.75 Ohio univ. press

B or 92 Lenin, Vladimir Il'ich ISBN 8214-0094-0 LC 74-158177

The author is concerned with "Lenin's ideological papers and his growth as a theoretician in exile, underground, and in revolution and has related them to Lenin's life and to his expanding observation and experience. . . . [Morgan deals also with] the Congress in London in August 1903; the Revolution of 1905; The Finland Station; the Congress of June 1917 and the October Revolution . . . [and] charts Lenin's course through the . . . founding of the Soviet State, the famine, civil war, the incorporation of the nationalities, the new economic policy and the problems (diplomatic, political and economic) of the last years." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index of names and places. Index of subjects.

"[This is] a mediocre biography of Lenin, by a nonspecialist. . . . It is a fairly good and readable summary, though somewhat uncritical, of Lenin's career. But Lenin stands forth too heroically against a passive, unfocused background. Morgan is very poor on the doctrinal, strategic development of Marxist-Leninist theory. Not a work of distinction."

Choice 9:869 S '72 60w

"Lenin is one of those historical figures who never lose their appeal to biographers. And yet, since the Kremlin archives on him remain closed, scholars must continue to rework the same, admittedly large mass of material. That a readable and worthwhile study should emerge from these efforts is often as much a tribute to the subject as to the writer: this is one example. Morgan's book is based on the standard published works. . . . The book is sympathetic to Lenin, the man and the revolutionary. . . . The portrait drawn is attractive, and there are no reflections on Lenin's contribution to the later emergence of Stalinism." R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:2083 Je 1 '72 170w

"Morgan's short biography of Lenin, though not profound, is pleasantly written and extremely readable. He seems to be innocent of the Russian language. All Lenin's own writings, and much that has been written about him, are available in English translation. But it does not make a difference. Lenin's world here remains remote. . . . [Morgan] has, however been eclectic in his use of English-language sources; and in a field so extensively monopolized by hagiographers and denigrators he has kept his head very well. His Lenin is a hero of human dimensions, not a demigod or a monster."

TLS p1596 D 24 '71 130w

MORGAN, MARGERY M. The Shawian playground; an exploration of the art of George Bernard Shaw. 366p pl $16 Barnes & Noble 822 Shaw, George Bernard SBN 416-08990-9 LC [72-181323]

"Beginning with the novels, the book covers the whole span of Shaw's career as a dramatist, paying special attention to critically and theatrically neglected plays, and offering . . . interpretations and evaluations of others. . . . It is argued that his art is more deeply related to human experience than is usually understood. . . . Miss Morgan points out that as a political thinker Shaw was concerned with major and lasting political dilemmas rather than with mere propaganda. . . . It is seen too that Shaw adapted both the forms of nineteenth-century theatre and the patterns of Greek drama . . . to his own purposes." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Much of the book is very good indeed. There are some illuminating insights into individual Shaw plays, and anyone interested in G.B.S. will find nothing better written on 'Misalliance' [BRD 1914] and 'Back to Methuselah' [BRD 1921], sections which appeared earlier as articles and although largely unchanged retain their value. Other chapters, some published as much as 12 years ago and also unrevised, unfortunately show their years in the neglect of new material. . . . [This] is a volume of missed opportunities. Forced parallels, false analogies and flimsy conclusions are scattered among pages of solid scholarship and sound criticism. Too long in the making, Miss Morgan's book was not long enough in the revising." Stanley Weintraub

N Y Times Bk R p36 N 5 '72 900w

"[This] is a major contribution to Shaw criticism, worthy to stand with the best—with Chesterton and Bentley and Alick West. Margery Morgan is concerned with the plays as individual works of art, the products of an unusual imagination. She recognizes, as Shaw's critics have not always done, that an imagination like his is more than an instrument for shaping ideas—that it is a part of the shape. Shaw's odd personal nature, his ideas about women and sex, about violence, about authority and about reason determine not only the contents of his plays but their forms, and Miss Morgan is brilliant in her discussions of how this process works. . . . [Her] sense of Shaw's forms is sophisticated and subtle. . . . The book gives a steady impression of a supple and mature critical intelligence working at the height of its powers."

TLS p917 Ag 4 '72 360w

MORGAN, ROGER, jt. ed. Britain and West Germany. See Kaiser, K.

MORISON, SAMUEL ELIOT. The European discovery of America: the Northern voyages, A.D. 500-1600. 712p il col pl maps $15 Oxford

973.1 America—Discovery and exploration. Voyages and travels. Explorers ISBN 0-19-501377-8 LC 71-129637

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1497 Ja '72 110w

Reviewed by D. B. Quinn
Engl Hist R 87:401 Ap '72 650w

Reviewed by C. R. Boxer
J Am Hist 58:930 Mr '72 420w

Reviewed by S. G. Morse
New Eng Q 44:657 D '71 850w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison
Sci Am 226:122 Mr '72 900w

MORISON, SAMUEL ELIOT. Samuel de Champlain, father of New France. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 229p il $10 Little

B or 92 Champlain, Samuel de. America—Discovery and exploration LC 71-186963

A biography of the French explorer which describes his many trips to New France—his mapping of hitherto unknown areas, his friendly relations with the Algonquins and Hurons, his settling of Port Royal and Quebec, his death in Canada in 1635. The book [includes] Champlain's own drawings. (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

MORISON, S. E.—Continued

"Anyone interested in early Colonial America will find this absorbing account of one of the most important and picturesque explorers of those days both delightful and instructive. . . . It is a work that will appeal to any class of reader and is a must for the college or high school library." F. J. Gallagher

Best Sell 32:174 J1 1 '72 500w

Choice 9:1198 N '72 190w

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 11 '72 250w

"This amply illustrated book by a major scholar is clearly a work of love. Morison displays great familiarity with old sources and an intimate personal knowledge of terrain acquired during almost a lifetime spent along the northern New England coast. He romps through the early history of New France and the life of Champlain. . . . The only irritations in the book are the scattered acid remarks about some liberal aspects of 20th-Century life." Jerome Nadelhaft

Library J 97:2034 Je 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by J. C. Lobdell

Nat R 24:857 Ag 4 '72 140w

"Champlain's own 25-page 'Treatise on Seaman'ship and the Duty of a Good Seaman' is included in this volume as an appendix, having been translated by Morison himself in his teaching days at Harvard. . . . [Morison] . . . is of an old school, committed both to the integrity of each detail (he hokes up no undocumented childhoods, no imaginary dialogues) and to rendering the whole with grace. . . . His heart as well as his mind is in this biographical adventure."

New Repub 166:31 Je 17 '72 500w

"[This volume] does more than merely chronicle [Morison's] hero's deeds, for he provides a succinct and shrewd appraisal of French activities in North America until the mid-17th century. . . . Champlain's efforts to save Canada, as told by Morison in his sinewy and idiomatic prose is a thrilling and moving story. . . . This is a salty and entertaining volume." L. B. Wright

N Y Times Bk R p23 J1 16 '72 700w

New Yorker 48:94 Je 24 '72 200w

Time 100:88 J1 10 '72 300w

MORLEY, HENRY PARKER, Baron, tr. Trionfi. See Petrarch. F. Lord Morley's Triumphs of Fraunces Petrarcke

MORLEY, JAMES WILLIAM, ed. Forecast for Japan: security in the 1970's. 249p $9.50 Princeton univ. press

330.952 Japan—Economic conditions. Japan—Politics and government. Japan—Military policy
ISBN 0-691-03091-X LC 71-37578

In these "seven essays six American specialists in Japanese politics . . . attempt . . . to forecast Japan's defense policies for the next few years. . . . They discuss the strength of the Japanese economy; the attitudes of the business community; the prospects of the conservative party leadership; the strategic thought of the conservatives; and the foreign policy problems that Japan is likely to face." (Choice) Index.

"For the most part these essays reflect the conventional wisdom of American policy makers and academic experts on Japan. While there is little in this book in the way of new information or interpretation, it does give a handy summary of the thinking of American specialists. The book's major failing is the lack of an essay presenting the views of those who fear ■ reviving Japanese militarism and imperialism. . . . Useful for students and for readers interested in Japanese politics."

Choice 9:1042 O '72 150w

"The six contributors to this book . . . conclude that Japan will maintain its current rate of spending on defense (roughly 1 per cent of GNP), relying on the United States for ultimate protection and concentrating national resources on economic development. Instead of confrontation with China and the nations of Southeast Asia, Japan will strive for co-operation and détente. At a time when so much has been written about the specter of renewed Japanese militarism this may seem an incredibly naive conclusion. But it is, in fact, a realistic one, based on solid analysis of domestic political pressures in Japan and the key international problems Japan faces."

Va Q R 48:cxlix autumn '72 170w

MORLEY, JOHN. Death, heaven, and the Victorians. 208p il $12.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

393 Funeral rites and ceremonies. Death.
ISBN 0-8229-1103-5 LC 78-173852

This book deals with "how death was looked upon (and responded to, and celebrated, and written about) during the 19th century. The author . . . supplements his text with a series of . . . photographs [which portray] . . . various aspects of Victorian mourning." (New Repub)

"As befits the director of the Royal Pavilion, the Art Gallery, and the Museum at Brighton, Morley is a scholarly man capable of graceful turns of phrase and a sly wit. He delineates, but he does not speculate. It would have been useful, for example, to have discussed funerals as vehicles for the discharge of grief. . . . For all their grossness, Victorian funerals handled the psychology of grief rather well, and it is Morley's one shortcoming that he does not explore this aspect of his history. Otherwise his book is a fitting companion to Jessica Mitford's The American Way of Death (BRD 1963). So for John Morley a rousing R.I.P.!" Alden Whitman

Book World p13 Ap 30 '72 700w

Choice 9:567 Je '72 110w

Reviewed by S. R. Rounds

Library J 97:2092 Je 1 '72 110w

"[The author] is no sociologist, but he has ■ sharp eye for the fears and anxieties that plague Western man. He can also write well, and pull together what he sees. . . . What [he] tells us is rather dismaying: men and women on the rise, on the make, can never escape the dimensions of their lives, however established they become. Those Victorian merchants and generals and admirals and ever so pious clergymen thought they had ■ pact with Eternity itself, whereas to us, their successors, they and their pretensions are to be smiled at if not scorned."

New Repub 166:23 Mr 25 '72 380w

"Morley . . . has written a serious historical study of the subject which is neither morbid nor mocking. . . . The question for us, now that the death-cult has vanished since the mass slaughter of this century, is why did the rich fantasy life of the English take this turn? Mr. Morley says little about this . . . [and] he puts his emphasis on the sentimentality and the hypocrisy of our cult." V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 82:739 N 26 '71 1550w

"[This] magnificent study, grotesque, comic, moving as different lights fall upon it, insists too much that pre-occupation with bereavement and the panoply of woe was a purely Victorian mood. . . . This noted, it must be said that [Morley] has made a wonderful job, within narrow limits, of his survey of nineteenth-century funerary customs."

TLS p1393 N 5 '71 650w

Va Q R 48:cviil summer '72 80w

Reviewed by D. R. Faulkner

Yale R 61:615 Je '72 1250w

MORRELL, DAVID. First blood; ■ novel. 252p $5.95 Lippincott
LC 73-186591

"Rambo, ex-Green Beret, is hitchhiking through Kentucky. Tease, ex-Korean veteran and now sheriff, escorts him out of town. Not one to be pushed, Rambo antagonizes the sheriff to the point of getting arrested and booked. After he slashes and kills a guard and escapes, all hell breaks loose. The ensuing chase through the wilderness is . . . a contest between exhilarated hunters." (Library J)

"Once you start reading [this first novel] you can't put it down. But you do. You have to. The violence and murder and blood and guts come not fast but shockingly, forcing you to glance up to make sure you're still in the safe comfort of your house or the real world in which you're a person instead of the hunter or the hunted. . . . The number of people killed is uncountable, the property damage inestimable. Death comes from weapons, from bats and beetles, crashing helicopter, tumbling off cliff, exploding gas station, etc. . . . Some parts of this novel are given to introspection: why Rambo forces issues and enjoys killing, why Teasle has to prove himself. A few parts question a society that trains and honors military killers, but is not really concerned with their rehabilitation to a nonsanguinary life. . . . I did not enjoy reading this book, but I am impressed and recommend it, especially for people who live in the comfort of a non-violent world." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 32:106 Je 1 '72 500w

"The characterizations of Rambo and Teasle and the implications of training to kill linger long after the blood stops flowing and the fires stop burning. A first-rate action novel for men." R. H. Donahue
Library J 97:1461 Ap 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by John Deck

N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 18 '72 400w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 80:92 Jl 10 '72 300w

"[This] story of a prolonged manhunt . . . is also a carefully developed psychological study. Rambo is not just a hitchhiking hippie; he's an ex-Green Beret whose Special Forces training equipped him to endure physical torture in a Vietcong jungle camp. And Teasle is no 'pig', in yesterday's student jargon; winner of the Distinguished Service Cross in Korea, he's a foil who gradually enlists Rambo's respect. Alike in intelligence and cunning, but different in their feeling for life, the two men engage in a classic conflict of will and temperament. Both reach almost heroic stature as they overcome despair in inhuman circumstances. . . . [Morrell's] 'first published novel,' . . . [shows] how a thriller can be a work of art." Joseph Catinella
Sat R 55:69 My 27 '72 300w

Reviewed by John Skow

Time 99:82 My 29 '72 500w

"This is an extremely nasty, extremely blood-spattered book, and also a clever first novel. The nastiness is not just in the prevailing death and decay, but even more in the moral . . . that there's honour in fighting."
TLS p1375 N 10 '72 100w

MORRIS, DESMOND. Intimate behaviour. 253p $6.95 Random house

152.1 Touch. Man

ISBN 0-394-47919-X

LC 73-179304

The author of The Naked Ape (BRD 1968) and The Human Zoo (BRD 1969) seeks to explore man's need to touch and be touched, to love and be loved. Dr. Morris "argues that intimate behavior—and the absence of it—is central to our existence. [He] believes that the roots of intimacy are formed in the months just before and after birth . . . [and that] when the adult lacks genuine human warmth, he seeks out the substitute intimacies our culture provides." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:128 Ap '72 50w

"This is a much better book [than The Naked Ape—timely, because it not only inculcates the cross-biologic viewpoint but deals with a number of our hangups in relation to the expression of our emotions, of which we are becoming increasingly aware. There is also a lot more emphasis on Morris's own observations. . . . [His] excellent account . . . does much to explain the rash of sensitivity groups. . . . If we read it aright, Morris's book tells us in simple terms a very great deal about ourselves, our illnesses, our politics, and our children. . . . I'd personally rather have this than a heavier work of research biology. Now that Morris has a popular audience I hope this book makes him another million dollars. It would be a small price to pay for a work of worthwhile public education." Alex Comfort
Book World p1 F 27 '72 950w

Choice 9:285 Ap '72 110w

Reviewed by P. W. Boytinch

Library J 97:508 F 1 '72 230w

Reviewed by Charles Rycroft

New Statesman 82:510 O 15 '71 1350w

"To a writer so fixated on substitutes, breasts for buttocks, tears for urine, cigarettes for nipples, I am tempted to reply that his zany conjectures are substitutes for thought and that 'Intimate Behaviour' is, on balance, a pseudo-book. . . . To those who are bound to be skeptical of some of Morris's more daring conclusions, I should say that the author, having formulated these conclusions, promises, at a later date, to publish a detailed study proving them. Which is to say, having devised an unintentionally risible key to human intimacy, he will now go on to construct a suitably incredible machine to fit it. A challenging task, I daresay." Mordecai Richler

N Y Times Bk R p3 Mr 5 '72 1450w

"We are led here, paralleling insights of Freudian and other developmental psychologists, through a physiological cycle of dependence—the seeking to become more independent, and a return to dependence (in adult sexual intimacies). But to equate adult love bonding with mother-infant bonding, as does Morris, is only partly acceptable; the former is considerably more complex. . . . Roughly the last half of Morris's book is devoted to a consideration of restraints imposed upon human social intimacy. . . . Many important observations about such behavior in our own society simply confirm what we know from other, principally psychological, sources. . . . I agree with Morris that we are in trouble wherever we deny the expression of intimacy when people seek it. I do not agree that our society is the prime offender in this regard. [So are] many small-scale tribal societies." B. J. Siegel
Sat R 55:77 Mr 4 '72 900w

Reviewed by Horace Judson

Time 99:83 Mr 13 '72 360w

MORRIS, IVAN, tr. As I crossed a bridge of dreams. See As I crossed a bridge of dreams

MORRIS, TAYLOR. The walk of the conscious ants. 260p il $6.95 Random house

378.1 Education, Higher. Walking. New England—Description and travel

ISBN 0-394-47425 LC 79-171128

This book describes how, in 1969, Morris, an English professor at Franklin Pierce College took his English class on the road on a 6-week, 600-mile walk away from curriculum and toward experience. They travelled from New Hampshire to Nova Scotia via back roads.

"The book is chiefly a simple diary with a few scholarly quotations thrown in. Nothing profound was discovered or learned or newly understood. The feeling of unity, of closeness, of interdependence would be obtained by any group of hikers—the Boy Scouts, for instance. Morris says, 'We kicked education in the ass. And that's a nice feeling . . . and what did you learn? I think instead of learning . . . that something was added to our lives.' It is not much of a sum total for such a walk, but it does indicate that the author would be better at leading expeditions than at teaching a class." D. F. Lawler

Best Sell 32:122 Je 1 '72 650w

"There were plenty of obstacles, and plenty of low-points. . . . And opposition. Hostility. Sheer incomprehension or fear on the part of many whose towns they passed through. . . . [The group] also met with immense friendliness, generosity, openness. . . . [This] is a book Thoreau would have liked. It says a lot about the counterculture, about how the greening of America starts as a state of consciousness, about what is wrong with our system of formal education, about education and ecstasy, about our possessions and our conventions and how they keep us from developing. About our persistent desire to get away from it all. If Toynbee is right, that men and civilizations manifest patterns of withdrawal-and-return, Mr. Morris is a spokesman for the withdrawal phase: long on walking, short on what to do after the return home." Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 7 '72 600w

"This well-written chronicle can be read as an educational experiment, an adventure-travelogue, or a study of attitudes in small-town America." Raymond Barber
Library J 97:1010 Mr 15 '72 130w

New Repub 166:32 Je 24 '72 320w

MORRIS, TERRY. Shalom, Golda. 208p il $5.95 Hawthorn bks.

B or 92 Meir, Golda—Juvenile literature
LC 70-146296

"The author traces the life and career of Golda Meir from her childhood in Russia to her life in the United States, and her departure for Israel. There she became a signer of Israel's Declaration of Independence and served as Israel's first ambassador to Moscow. Later she entered the Israeli government to become Minister of Labor, Foreign Minister, and finally, Prime Minister." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

MORRIS, TERRY—Continued

"An interesting life suitable for the 'Fem Lib Movement.' This biography will appeal to most girls." S. M. C.

Best Sell 31:335 O 15 '71 90w

"An accurate biography of Golda Meir, Israel's woman prime minister, which also includes a history of the State of Israel, with which Mrs. Meir has been involved since 1921. . . . Photographs of Mrs. Meir add interest to the book. Peggy Mann's Golda: the Life of Israel's Prime Minister [BRD 1971] is longer, more detailed and more smoothly written than this book. However, Morris more effectively portrays Meir's positive attributes and deals more matter-of-factly with her status as a woman." M. W. Greenberg

Library J 97:2490 J1 '72 120w

MORRIS, WESLEY. Toward a new historicism. 265p $10 Princeton univ. press

801 American literature—History and criticism. Literature and history. Criticism
ISBN 0-691-06155-6 LC 77-166384

These essays examine the perspectives of a number of American critics of literature. "Each critic discussed by Mr. Morris represents [an] interpretation of the relation between a literary work and its socio-historical environment. . . . The new historicist's view of literature offers [he concludes] a corroboration of the freedom of human creativity within the bounds of historical meaning." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] surveys (not chronologically but thematically) the attempt to dissolve the distinction . . . between aesthetic (textual) and cultural (historical) interpretation. Sensitive to nuance and keen to logical assumptions and consequences, Morris devoted the first part of his book to historicists like Parrington, Hicks, and Brooks. . . . In the second part he looks at generally more recent figures (among them Ransom, Mathlessen, Burke, Pearce, and Krieger) who have self-consciously sought a bridge between the literary critic and the scholar-historian, who want to see the literary work as both uniquely autonomous and historically embedded. Extensive documentation. . . . Unfortunately, the writing is dense at times and the meanings of some terms not always clear; still, this study belongs in all collections of literary criticism."

Choice 9:1131 N '72 150w

"Carefully documented and lucidly written, this overview surveys recent attempts to bring the oppositions of literary historian and critic together. Morris' analysis of modern American historicism emphasizes the need for integrating an awareness of historical context with aesthetic function. No other study brings as much theory under scrutiny as does this essay which will be of value to critics, philosophers, and historians. . . . [Morris] successfully illustrates that the artist works within a cultural milieu but that he must break away from it as new works are made." V. A. Kramer

J Aesthetics 31:137 fall '72 350w

MORRIS, WILLIE. Good old boy; a delta boyhood. 143p $3.95 Harper

B or 92

SBN 06-024335-X LC 75-157897

"Written as a kind of letter to his son, who is growing up in New York City but is curious about what it was like for his father in a small Southern town twenty years ago, this is a shortened and somewhat simplified version of the 'Mississippi' section of the author's . . . autobiographical work of 1967, North Toward Home [BRD 1967, 1968]. . . . Here the emphasis is on sports, dogs (especially Ol' Skip, the football-playing fox terrier), practical jokes, school days and clever country ruses." (America) "Grade six and up." (Library J)

"Good reading, especially for boys, but also for anyone who appreciates reminiscences vividly remembered and lovingly recounted. Split McGee, Bubba Barrin, Rivers Applewhite, Paul and Pinkey Posey, and Willie himself are all unforgettable." T. H. Stahel
America 126:324 Mr 25 '72 250w

"Willie Morris may be better known for his editorship of Harper's magazine, but [his book] is a fine example of just how exciting an adventure tale can be when it's well-written as well as filled with action. Author Morris sketches his Mississippi boyhood, sometimes in the spooky undertones of a master ghost-story teller, sometimes in the carefree accents of a boy whose spare time is occupied with gift-wrapping dead rats, or baking castor-oil cookies for the Yazoo City Women's Society. Ingenuously he rambles up to the book's central episode: an encounter with seven giant tattooed Choctaw Indians in—yessirree—a haunted house that will make your hair stand on end." J. F. Smith

Christian Science Monitor p7 F 24 '72 100w

Horn Bk 48:60 F '72 250w

"Though set in the South, the racial problems of the era play only a small part here. There are many fine descriptions of growing up . . . and the anecdotes, though regional in flavor, are universal in appeal. However, the lack of a well-defined plot and the setting in the near past will likely limit the book's appeal to a small but highly appreciative audience." Brooke Anson

Library J 97:290 Ja 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:86 Ap 22 '72 100w

MORRIS, WRIGHT. Love affair—a Venetian journal. unpag. col. il $12.50 Harper

914.5 Venice—Description

SBN 06-013092-X LC 72-79683

This book consists of "a collection of color photographs, with brief paragraph captions that . . . provide a running commentary on the author's stay [and] some glimpses of Venetian life." (Sat R)

"[Morris] has not only written 44 brief comments on aspects of the Venetian scene but he himself took the stunning color photographs facing each of these prose pages. To tell the truth, the pictures are more magical than the prose which tends to be somewhat flat. . . . Morris concentrates on people and things and gets them down neatly. . . . This handsome book ought to appeal to two large groups: those who have visited Venice and liked it and those who haven't but would like to." J. W. Donohue

America 127:327 O 21 '72 420w

Best Sell 32:356 N 1 '72 170w

New Yorker 48:191 N 11 '72 150w

Sat R 55:108 O 7 '72 120w

MORRISON, DENTON E., ed. The significance test controversy; a reader; ed. by Denton E. Morrison and Ramon E. Henkel. 333p il $12.50 Aldine-Atherton

519 Statistics. Social sciences

ISBN 0-202-30068-4 LC 77-109520

This book consists of papers "dealing with the controversy over the . . . use of statistical tests of significance. Thirty-one chapters are divided among five parts, each with an introduction by the authors who give an overview of the material to follow. . . . Part One, 'Critical historical context,' consists of three chapters from [L.] Hogben's Statistical theory [BRD 1958]. Part Two, 'The controversy in sociology,' Part Three, 'Criticism by psychologists,' and Part Four, 'Criticism from other quarters,' consist totally of 27 papers, 18 of which were originally published prior to 1965. Part Five, 'Epilogue,' was written by two sociologists especially for this volume." (Choice)

"[This] is a book for all those who use tests of statistical significance. More, it is a book for all those who read scientific reports which use tests of statistical significance. . . . Skeptics believe that the statistical significance tests are usually a waste of time for behavioral scientists. Morrison and Henkel have done us all a service by collecting many of the best of these critiques. The editors make no pretense at objectivity; they are frankly against the general use of tests of significance; their selection of essays is one-sided; and their conclusions . . . are not the findings of impartial judges, but the closing arguments of a pair of devil's advocates. Consequently, the reader would be wise to give attention to the few papers in this book which support the use of statistical tests—papers by David Gold . . . or by Winch and Campbell." Raoul Naroll

Am Anthropol 73:1437 D '71 1200w

"[While this work] is claimed to be non-technical, one would have a difficult time plowing through the practical, theoretical, and philosophical issues dealt with without previous training in the theory of significance testing. Of greater concern, the book is not representative of the contemporary orientations towards the problem."

Choice 7:1740 F '71 230w

MORRISON, JAMES. Treehouse. 181p $5.95 Dial press

LC 75-37449

"The love of Sam and Nell is nurtured strongly by the aerial retreat that their adoptive parents built for them and the natural son, Magruder, in their childhood. Its tufted isolation bound the three in glorious fantasy and intimacy, and the dream persists even after Sam's enlistment in the Peace Corps, Magruder's assignment to Vietnam and Nell's lengthy affair with an eligible lawyer." (New Repub)

"This is the simple story of Sam Barnes who, after two years of Peace Corps work in Africa, comes home to Wilton, Connecticut, to discover that he has fallen in love with his sister Nell. But don't be too concerned, for both Sam and Nell are adopted children. . . . If you read 'Treehouse,' read it today. I doubt if it will be around much longer than that." A. J. Solomon
Best Sell 32:204 Ag 1 '72 200w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman
Library J 97:2246 Je 15 '72 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Cynthia Harrison
Library J 97:2647 Ag '72 110w

"[Morrison] has succeeded in his first novel in creating characters of charming decency. An old-fashioned goodness umbrellas his story and lends fragrance to an afternoon's reading."

New Repub 167:31 S 16 '72 200w

"[This] is a gentle love story about nice people, which makes it an immediate standout. It incorporates a predictable element, but this is neatly blindstitched into the fabric of the narrative. . . . [Sam's] unusually precise search for identity is conducted by Mr. Morrison with subtlety and charm, by-passing some obligatory Freudian confrontations." Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk ■ p19 J1 23 '72 100w

MORRISON, JOSEPH L. Governor O. Max Gardner; a power in North Carolina and New Deal Washington. 323p il $10 Univ. of N.C. press

B or 92 Gardner, Oliver Max
ISBN 0-8078-1153-X LC 74-132253

This is an account of Gardner's "political, business, and personal life. Morrison, late professor of journalism at the University of North Carolina, . . . has grounded this study in a . . . collection of Gardner Papers. He has also relied on a large number of interviews with Gardner's associates and contemporaries. [He seeks to] . . . integrate the personal side of Gardner's life into that of his political and business endeavors." (J Am Hist) Index.

"This book will not be the last work on O. Max Gardner, but it is a judicious, well-written, and interesting account. . . . The frequent references to Gardner as 'a born leader' . . . and a man of 'exquisite scrupulousness' raise doubts about the author's willingness to make critical judgments. [The] book is somewhat limited in two other respects. It [does not] . . . provide a good treatment of [Gardner's] administration as governor, a matter that deserves a full-length study in its own right. The same is true of the 'Shelby Dynasty.' While Gardner's role in that powerful group's dominance is described, the activities of the corporate entity, the interlocking relationships of its members, and the process of their decision making need further study. Nevertheless, this is a useful book. . . . It makes clear, for instance, the nature of Gardner's legal and business activities [and] it sketches the twisting and turning of North Carolina's one-party politics." D. W. Grantham

J Am Hist 58:797 D '71 700w

"This biography of the state's reform governor [is a] . . . well-researched and well-organized book. . . . [It] presents the largely untold story of Gardner as a successful lawyer-lobbyist and businessman who remained a dedicated New Dealer and friend of FDR. Gardner . . . became an important link between FDR and the business leaders. . . . The book is a valuable contribution to the growing list of biographical monographs that explicate the state and federal political relationships during the New Deal era. It also adds to our understanding of the ambiguous role of business in this period." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 96:1605 My 1 '71 190w

TLS p264 Mr 10 '72 200w

MORRIS, JAMES E., jr. auth. The brains of animals and man. See Freedman, R.

MORSE, FLO. Yankee communes; another American way. 178p il $4.95 Harcourt

334 Collective settlements
ISBN 0-15-299710-5 LC 73-157875

This is an "account of four American communal societies—the Shakers, the Rappites, the Perfectionists of the Oneida Community, and the present-day Society of Brothers. . . . [The author discusses the] individual style of each community . . . comparing such similarities as communal ownership of property, emphasis on the importance of work, equal distribution of responsibility, success in financial matters, and . . . adherence to the dictates of their leaders." (Publisher's note)

"Each movement . . . [is] succinctly and sympathetically described within the context of the times. Parallels among the four, and ties to other well-known communities, are frequently drawn; the preface traces the utopian ideal from the society described by Thomas More to the present-day Hog Farm. Strong current interest in the viability of communes as a counter culture adds to the usefulness of this excellent background book for collections serving young people." Brooke Anson
Library J 96:4192 D 15 '71 130w [YA]

"In a well-researched examination of [the four communes] . . . Morse describes their goals, philosophy, . . . and practices, as well as the discrimination they suffered." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:47 Ja 15 '72 80w

MORTIMER, PENELOPE. The home. 258p $5.95 Random house

ISBN 0-394-47306-X LC 77-179305

This novel is an "examination of the deterioration of a family. When middle-aged Eleanor Strathearn's marriage breaks up . . . she sees it as a chance to become a different, fully realized person, a task that turns out to be first difficult, then impossible. Her husband, still professing love for her, is living with a young girl; her five children worry about her but, inevitably, leave her; her mother, a model of Victorian values, dies; her mother-in-law takes care not to get involved; old lovers desert her; new lovers promise to appear and do not." (Library J)

Reviewed by Steven Kroll

Book World p6 Mr 19 '72 600w

"The milieu is upper-middle-class British, but readers of novels with less sophisticated backgrounds will strongly identify with the heroine's struggle to find a place in a suddenly foreign world. Those who like Doris Lessing and Elizabeth Taylor will like The Home." S. L. Silverman

Library J 97:516 F 1 '72 170w

"As one might expect from Mrs Mortimer, every arrow planted in this female Saint Sebastian [Eleanor Strathearn] is skillfully aimed and marvellously sharp. She writes with breathtaking economy: in just over 200 pages 20 characters get through enough scenes to fill twice that length under the guidance of a lesser talent. The progressive boarding-school, the eldest son's queer ménage in Paris, one daughter's venture into the emotional jungle of an American campus, in every case, a minimum of establishing detail is selected with a maximum of descriptive skill. It is like watching a Polaroid camera roll out a developed picture in 60 seconds. The picture is almost uniformly grim." Francis Hope
New Statesman 82:408 S 24 '71 650w

Reviewed by Karl Miller

N Y Rev of Books 18:21 Ap 20 '72 430w

"The author proliferates domestic problems ad infinitum. You name it, and the Strathearns have probably got it: unwed motherhood, homosexuality (male and female), alienation,

MORTIMER, PENELOPE—Continued

the Lolita complex and the hippie syndrome. But these are problems without characters. Long-suffering Eleanor, whose new house never becomes a home, is too indistinct a victim over whom to shed a tear. An elegant style is not enough to conceal the fact that 'The Home' rises from the ashes of countless daytime serials." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p52 F 27 '72 190w
New Yorker 48:153 Mr 18 '72 160w
Newsweek 79:77 Mr 6 '72 190w
TLS p1137 S 24 '71 1150w

MORTIMER, WYNDHAM. Organize! my life as a union man; ed. by Leo Fenster. 274p il $9.95 Beacon press

331.88 Labor unions—History. Labor and laboring classes—U.S.
ISBN 0-8070-5438-0 LC 73-136233

In his autobiography the author describes "the struggle for the unionization of the automobile industry during the 1930's and 1940's. Mortimer, son of a Welsh coal miner, started work in a Pennsylvania mine [in 1896] when he was 12 years old. His experiences with harsh labor conditions in various jobs, including one on an automobile assembly line, turned him to socialism. He became a fervid advocate of industrial unionism and was one of the founders of the United Automobile Workers." (Library J) Index.

"Aside from being [an] autobiography . . . this is a history of the labor movement, for Mortimer's career paralleled the growth of industrial unions. The book's highlight is his account of his role in planning, organizing, and directing the famous GM sit-down strike of 1936-37. Mortimer was no writer, but Fenster a longtime union activist, has done a good job of editing the manuscript. . . . Recommended for libraries with strong holdings in labor history."

Choice 8:1222 N '71 100w

"[The author's fascinating] story of organizing General Motors is dramatic, but even more dramatic is the account of his fight for industrial unions against the craft unionism of the AFL. Mortimer is scathingly critical of AFL leadership, charging them with deliberate attempts to sabotage his efforts. He tells of jealousies and rivalries among AFL leaders who were more interested in their positions than in the welfare of the workers. In the chapter 'The Problems Before Labor,' he applies his socialistic philosophy. Letters in the appendix document his criticism of the AFL. An important contribution to labor history."

R. W. Henderson

Library J 96:1969 Je 1 '71 190w

MOSES BEN MAIMON. A Maimonides reader. See Maimonides

MOSKOS, CHARLES C., ed. Public opinion and the military establishment, by Charles C. Moskos, Jr. 294p $12.50; pa $7.50 Sage publications

355 U.S.—Armed Forces
ISBN 0-8039-0115-1; 0-8039-0116-X (pa)

"A collection of 10 sociological essays assembled under the auspices of the Inter-University Seminar on Armed Forces and Society sponsored by the Russell Sage Foundation. This volume is the first of a planned series on war, revolution, and peacekeeping. [Intending] to report, analyze, and project public attitudes toward the American military establishment, the overall themes seem to be (1) defining and contrasting historical and contemporary concepts of American militarism and (2) assessing hypotheses about degree and changes of militarism based upon empirical research." (Choice)

"Contributors include several respected writers on civil-military relationships. The short essays are usually footnoted and provide readers with adequate reference to comprehensive, standard, and recent writings in the subject areas. Individual contributions are not well integrated around the themes, some data become repetitive, and editorial commentary or influence appears to be limited to a short introduction. The book is printed in typewriter format and typographical errors are distracting at times. Recommended for college level specialty collections."

Choice 9:97 Mr '72 160w

"Moskos' book [is] suitable for both public and academic libraries. . . . The editor argues that the continuing estrangement of the military from civilian society will be fueled by recent trends in recruitment (e.g., reduced number of ROTC officers and fewer, possibly no, drafted enlisted men). Without broad civilian representation, the military of the 1970's could become even more authoritarian and resistant to civilian influence. If future volumes maintain the same degree of editorial quality, this series will bring new life to a subject that all too often expires under its own weight." Mike Gabriel

Library J 96:3338 O 15 '71 120w

MOSLER, GERARD. Sharpen your wits; a puzzle book to bend your brains; il. by Steve Madison. 142p $3.50 Doubleday

793.7 Puzzles—Juvenile literature
LC 73-144284

"One hundred and fifty-two puzzles that . . . entertain . . . also [test the reader's] logic, judgment, memory, and ingenuity." (Horn Bk)
"Grade six and up." (Library J)

Horn Bk 48:164 Ap '72 30w

"This diverting collection of mental challenges ranges from tests of observation ('On which side of the box is the coin-return slot on a public telephone?') to knowledge of people, places and words ('What common expression could also be expressed as "Tone & Rage"?'). The problems are clearly written and often presented through pictures. Just in case your attention slips, answers are included."

S. K. Ryan

Library J 97:1618 Ap 15 '72 100w

MOSLEY, SIR OSWALD. My life. 521p il $12.95 Arlington house

B or 92
ISBN 0-87000-160-4 LC 78-179718

The author who founded the British Union of Fascists in 1931 traces his career from Conservative to Independent to Labourite to Fascist. Index.

"With a single volume written in his sunset years, the author has achieved considerable, perhaps lasting literary fame. But it is unlikely to bring more than fleeting consolation to the man of action who half-a-century ago seemed destined to lead any political party he cared to join. . . . The author is at pains to refute the two most persistent charges brought against him—that he relished violence and that he was anti-Semitic. . . . On both counts there is a formidable weight of evidence to disprove Mosley's defense, and I for one remain unconvinced of the fundamental benevolence of British Fascism." Kenneth Rose

Book World p4 Mr 12 '72 1140w

Choice 9:567 Je '72 220w

"Self-justifying autobiography written by Britain's fascist leader. At times he comes off sounding like a Huey Long or a Fr. Coughlin—rightist in all his sympathies but leftist in some of his policies. From any angle, a disturbance of the peace."

Christian Century 89:176 F 9 '72 40w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 9 '72 100w

"[Mosley's] autobiography is . . . essentially a story of self-destruction. . . . Characteristically, though, [he] reserves most of his sympathy for himself and his immediate family; the soft streak of self-pity which runs through the book is in contrast to the sharp, witty, and often brutal anecdotes about his contemporaries. . . . The portraits of some of the political eminences of the 20's—like Lloyd George and Lord Curzon, Mosley's first father-in-law, and of the Labour Ministers in the 1929-31 government—are always sharp and occasionally funny. Sometimes, though, the impression left by these vinegary sketches is that of a man paying off old scores. . . . Yet [the] book is perhaps worth reading if only for its oblique but real relevance to today."

Rudolf Klein

Commentary 53:98 Ap '72 1900w

Reviewed by H. J. Steck

Library J 97:2385 Jl '72 240w

Reviewed by Anthony Lejeune

Nat R 24:596 My 26 '72 1300w

New Repub 166:30 F 19 '72 350w

Reviewed by Noel Annan

N Y Rev of Books 19:22 Ag 31 '72 5250w

Reviewed by Peter Stansky

N Y Times Bk R p2 Mr 12 '72 1100w

"These memoirs are more than a mere apologia, though they are that. Mosley's recollections of English politics and political personalities in the nineteen-twenties show a considerable literary gift, and show, too, how one decade of drift and refusal to innovate could produce the economic (and other) disasters of the next decade. . . . His portraits of his colleagues in Ramsay MacDonald's Labour Government are utterly lifelike and wholly unflattering. . . . Mosley gives a plausible enough account of his British Union of Fascists, of the evolution of its policies and tactics . . . and this account enables the reader to discover the particular deficiency that, despite all Mosley's very real abilities, disqualified him from participation in British political life—namely, that he has always been exceptionally good at explaining his own points but totally unable to grasp anybody else's."

New Yorker 47:103 F 5 '72 310w

MOSS, ROBERT. The war for the cities [Eng title: Urban guerrillas]. 288p $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

301.6 Terrorism. Guerrilla warfare
SBN 698-10449-8 LC 72-76666

Moss "concedes that there can be no purely military solution to urban violence, and suggests that the survival of a political system depends not so much on the balance of conflicting forces as on its willingness and capacity to satisfy demands for reform. With this as his frame of reference, he provides . . . case-studies of the IRA in Ulster, the FLQ in Quebec, the Weathermen in the United States, the Brazilian guerrilla groups and the Tupamaros in Uruguay. He also touches, in passing, on Algeria and Cyprus, by way of illustrating some of his basic theories about the use of terrorism as a political instrument." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

Economist 242:55 F 12 '72 70w

"Moss goes behind the headlines and provides a valuable analysis of spreading urban terrorism, pointing out both its common characteristics and the unique features of revolution and government repression in a number of specific countries. . . . Most insecure, he feels, is Uruguay, where a working democratic government faces increasing violence as it fails to solve serious economic problems." E. R. Hayford

Library J 97:2629 Ag '72 130w

"Mr. Moss is convincing when he sketches the psychopathic personality attracted to violent life-wing causes. . . . The study is excessively biased toward Latin America. . . . But Latin America has a long tradition of political violence—and personal violence too—antedating the U.S. impact. . . . I shall not offer alternative explanations here except to point out, at the risk of being called fascist, that national character cannot be left out of the equation. In Latin America Mr. Moss follows a well-trodden path when he points out that the Moscow Communists have generally eschewed guerrilla warfare, urban or rural, for reasons he describes. . . . This is not the case everywhere, nor has it been the case in the past." Alfred Sherman

Nat R 24:1186 O 27 '72 1800w

"Academic books can be as ephemeral as journalism. Given the job of reviewing them, I always ask myself whether they tell me anything I didn't know from reading the papers. . . . In no case does [the author of this book] improve on the newspaper files. When he gets to Northern Ireland, the reader would be much better off with Simon Winchester or the Sunday Times Insight team: accepting the gospel according to Maudling all the way, Mr Moss is definitely misleading at certain crucial points. . . . As we persevere, however, it becomes clear that Latin America is what [he] does know about. . . . Moss has a soft spot for the Tupamaros of Uruguay. He gives a useful list of kidnap victims." Mervyn Jones

New Statesman 84:358 Mr 17 '72 310w

"Anyone Involved in the problem of Ulster . . . could do much worse than choose Moss's thoughtful and perceptive study of urban insurrection. It is written mainly within the context of what the apostles of violence could call Establishment or adaptation-orientated psychology; but it is written with compassion and a wary distrust of the facile rhetoric of the political assassin. Mr Moss . . . is coldly contemptuous of the theory—advanced by Frantz Fanon and seized upon by some of his less profound disciples—that violence, so far from being evil, is a powerful and beneficial force capable of 'liberating the personality'. . . . The solution to the problems of violence in society will . . . be found only by a long and painful effort of understanding. Mr Moss's book is a notable contribution to the process."

TLS p293 Mr 17 '72 1000w

MOULTON, PHILLIPS P., ed. The journal and major essays of John Woolman. See Woolman, J.

MOUNTFORD, ARNOLD R. The illustrated guide to Staffordshire salt-glazed stoneware. 88p pl col pl $20 Praeger

738.3 Staffordshire pottery
LC 73-151804

This book describes the origin and manufacture of the white salt-glaze decorated pottery. Bibliography. Index.

"It is a delight to greet this first full book on the subject of this distinctively English ware that blossomed in the 18th century into a variety of forms ranging from plates to teapots and vases to figurines. . . . [The author] incorporates the results of recent excavations of kiln sites and employs original documents, some here quoted for the first time. And as an extra dividend he illustrates many important pieces in American collections."

Choice 9:52 Mr '72 170w

"[The author] brings us new information, corrects errors, and elucidates puzzles. . . . The enamelled stonewares are among the gayest of all potters' wares, and have long been valued and collected. It is surprising that no monograph has been devoted to the subject before now. Mr Mountford is uniquely well placed to provide it, being the director of the Stoke-on-Trent Museum. The great majority of his 244 illustrations are of specimens in his own care, and new information comes from the study of documents in the same museum. . . . [However] the dating of some of his illustrated examples seems open to discussion."

TLS p8 Ja 7 '72 270w

MOUNTZOURES, H. L. The bridge. 373p $8.95 Scribner

SBN 684-12744-X LC 76-37196

The protagonist of this novel is "Philip Neros, one of a brood of eight Greek-Americans living in a Connecticut industrial town. Mother, a dementia praecox, [is] 'buried in self loathing and self-love'. [There are] interludes in the county home and in the lair of a sadistic foster mother, who mistreats the children and feeds them Laddie Boy. And home: a disheveled nightmare awash in rubbish, hovering on the brink of scandal and disaster. Instead of being squashed by his upbringing, Philip is challenged by it, tries to relate to his tormented father and his mad mother, is obsessed with discovering his roots." (N Y Times Bk R) Chapter 1 appeared first in slightly different form in the New Yorker under the title Bits of Glass, 1968. Chapter 8 was published first in the Atlantic.

Reviewed by R. D. Evans

Best Sell 32:146 Je 15 '72 550w

"A first novel by an accomplished short story writer. Readers of the author's The Empire of Things and Other Stories [BRD 1968] will recognize the scenery and the characters of The Bridge—the hard-working Greek immigrants in the sleazy Connecticut city, and their love-hate relationship with the mother country. But the novel lacks strength. There is a good deal of near-repetition, and a tighter story would have helped. But Mountzoures is a writer of delicacy and compassion. He makes us see the Greek restaurant almost as an epic battleground: the cause, if not of madness, at least of grief. And his description of poverty, squalor, and welfare care that made up life in the Depression is sharp, not sentimental." Margaret Wimsatt

Library J 97:2117 Je 1 '72 120w

MOUNTZOURES, H. L.—Continued

"Mr. Mountzoures extracts pure gold from the rough matrix of his hero's experience. . . . [Philip's] endeavors are depicted by the author with an expert blend of imagery and introspection that communicates a paradoxical joy in life." Martin Levin
 N Y Times Bk R p30 Je 18 '72 130w
 New Yorker 48:102 Je 17 '72 250w

MOWAT, C. L. Great Britain since 1914. (Sources of hist. studies in the use of hist. evidence) 224p $6.75; pa $3.45 Cornell Univ. press

016.942 Great Britain—History—20th century—Bibliography
 ISBN 0-8014-0632-3 LC 79-146277

This volume is a guide to the material available for writing the recent or contemporary history of Great Britain. "The sources and character of the history to be written are classified in six chapters: Standard and official sources . . . Cabinet papers, documents in the Public Record Office and private papers . . . Memoirs, diaries and biographies. . . . Contemporary writing [including] imaginative literature; newspapers and other periodicals . . . Films, tape-recordings, interviews, pictures and the contents of museums. Lastly, a chapter is devoted to particular aspects of history, economic, scientific and official. The book concludes with a chapter showing the utilization of resources in a particular case-study—that of the Zinoviev Letter, which helped to lose the 1924 General Election for the Labour Party." (TLS) Index.

"Although certain themes, notably the empire-commonwealth and several aspects of social and intellectual history, are either neglected or scantied, the informed reader will nevertheless get a feel for much that happened in those years, especially the crises—industrial unrest, foreign policy, political wheeling and dealing. He will appreciate the value as well as the limits of personal materials particularly, so far as concerns their validity and the degree to which events come alive and their opacity evaporates. . . . In short there is no end of good fare here for the reader with wit enough to digest it." C. F. Mullett

Library Q 41:350 O '71 850w

"[This is] a helpful and often entertaining classified guide-book. . . . Mowat has furnished much more than a catalogue of resources. His running commentary on their nature, value and limitations is a fascinating illustration of the historian at work. . . . It is a matter for the deepest regret that Mowat died before his last book was finished. It has been faithfully brought to completion by G. R. Elton, the general editor of the series; but a few rough edges remain."

TLS p728 Je 25 '71 650w

MOWATT, D. G. Friderich von Husen; introduction, text commentary and glossary. (Anglica Germanica, Ser. 2) 212p $13.50 Cambridge

831 Friedrich von Hausen
 ISBN 0-521-0788-1 LC 76-116748

Mowatt has applied to this edition of the poems of the minnesinger the principle that "the only suitable basis for a critical edition is a diplomatic reprint of the extant manuscripts, and that editorial conjectures should be dealt with in interpretive commentary. The introduction, which takes up half the book, is divided into two parts. The first furnishes the reader . . . [with] information about the manuscripts and the known facts of the poet's life [and] with a justification of the editor's procedures and an exposition of his principles of interpretation and textual criticism. In the second half Mowatt attempts to develop the critical method he has expounded by applying it in what he calls a trial investigation of a single poem, namely . . . 'Minherze un mîn lip die welient scheiden.'" (Mod Lang J) Glossary.

"Mowatt takes issue with most previous scholarship in the two main areas of editorial activity. . . . As far as the grouping of the poems is concerned, he shows rather convincingly that what has been done can hardly be considered much of an improvement over the order in which the stanzas appear in the manuscripts. With regard to the problem of textual emendation, he quite rightly insists that the only valid reason for altering the given text is the conviction that the manuscript version is impossible. . . . There are, to be sure, a number of points in the introduction with which one could take issue. . . . The general skepticism which Mowatt exhibits toward most past attempts at textual emendation, however, can only be welcomed by anyone who has had to use such editions as Des Minnesangs Frühling." S. J. Kaplowitt

Mod Lang J 56:116 F '72 650w

"The first half of the book is almost entirely polemical. . . . The outspoken condemnation of the inadequacy of Carl von Kraus's standard edition of Des Minnesangs Frühling, and the demand for a far more conservative text, should prove a useful stimulus to research on a number of poets. It is all the more regrettable, therefore, that Professor Mowatt's iconoclasm gets the better of him. The unbalanced excesses and abuses of textual criticism do not invalidate its necessity. There is a discrepancy between the author's theoretical utterances . . . and his discussion of an actual poem, where he in his turn finds that considerable textual comment . . . is a necessary preliminary to interpretation. . . . But everyone, textual and literary critics alike, will be grateful for the diplomatic text and glossary which forms the second half of his book."

TLS p316 Mr 26 '71 800w

MOY-THOMAS, J. A. Palaeozoic fishes; 2d ed. extensively rev. by R. S. Miles. 259p il $12.75 Saunders

567 Fossils. Fishes
 ISBN 0-7216-6573-X LC 79-157532

This is a "revised edition by Miles of the late J. A. Moy-Thomas' handbook of Palaeozoic fish evolution. The revision . . . features a completely new set of . . . figures and bibliographical citations up to 1970. The text has been substantially rewritten and enlarged. . . . Sections on the probable life history patterns of the major groups of fishes dealt with have been added." (Choice)

"For the most part [the text] is very clear and quite readable. . . . This book will be read by the relatively small number of specialists in the field of fish paleontology, but should also appeal to those undergraduate and graduate students interested in a view of the early evolution of fish."

Choice 9:81 Mr '72 140w

"By following Moy-Thomas's basic formula, by prolific use of excellent illustrations, and by showing a fine sense for what is important and what can be left out [Miles] presents us with a valuable, unified approach to an all too diverse subject. [He] has made a few improvements in the organization, putting the appropriate classification at the start of each of the sections and a brief but select bibliography at the end of each. . . . An excellent feature of the illustrations is a clear scale, notably lacking in other such works. The illustrations have all been drawn (usually redrawn from recent research works) to a common style, and what they occasionally lack in detail they make up in clarity and number. . . . An excellent feature of the book is the detailed treatment of fine structure of hard tissues. . . . This is an excellent book and a worthy successor to Moy-Thomas's original."

K. S. Thomson
 Science 175:1102 Mr 10 '72 700w

MOZART, JOHANN CHRYSOSTOM WOLFGANG AMADEUS. Die Zauberflöte. See Chagall at the "Met"

MPHAHLELE, EZEKIEL. Voices in the whirlwind, and other essays. 215p $6.95 Hill & Wang

809 Negro literature—History and criticism
 ISBN 0-8090-9627-7 LC 70-163568

"Six essays ranging in subject from censorship in South Africa to the aesthetics of black literature. Other themes explored are African literary tradition and culture, the commitments of the African writer, and the concepts of Pan-Africanism and Negritude. The author [is] a South African [novelist] in exile now teaching at the University of Denver." (Library J)

"[The author] is to be praised for the depth of sensitivity and intelligence with which he treats [his] subjects. We have had few books by Africans or Europeans which dealt with these controversial topics, and certainly none which so evidently manifest themselves as products of a lifetime of thought and passionate concern. . . . The writer's own pain and suffering in South Africa pervade all the pieces; they are most fully related in the essay on censorship. The facts of the author's self-imposed exile are presented coolly, without a trace of self-pity. Few of us can comprehend what kind of oppressive system forces a man to give up his land, life, and people and become a wanderer. Mphahlele ably communicates the rationale for his courage and his art." Robert Koester

Library J 97:2843 S 15 '72 210w

"[This collection] could have been subtitled 'Toward a Black Aesthetic,' because five of the six pieces are concerned with this difficult problem of definition. 'The Fabric of African Cultures' and 'African Literature: What Tradition?' are . . . two of the four essays that make this book worth reading. . . . The longest and most important essay, 'Voices in the Whirlwind: Poetry and Conflict in the Black World,' is concerned with the meaning and function of poetry in situations of political and cultural conflict. . . . This is a lengthy, complex essay, which no summary can do justice. . . . Despite its difficulties, it is always exciting and is an important contribution toward a philosophy of black esthetics. Mphahlele writes well and has a first-rate intellect; it is to be hoped that he shares much more of that intellect with us in future works." Julius Lester

N Y Times Bk R p50 O 22 '72 1100w

MRAZEK, JAMES E. The fall of Eben Emael; prelude to Dunkerque. 204p il maps $6.95 McKay

940.54 Meuse, Battle of the, 1940
LC 74-119765

The author a retired U.S. Army colonel provides an account of how the Wehrmacht took the Belgian fort of Eben Emael through the surprise use of the glider and hollow charge explosives. Chronology. Glossary. Bibliography.

"The fall of Eben Emael was one of a series of dazzling German military triumphs in 1940. . . . [This is] the first detailed account in English [of the operation]. . . . However, readers will be puzzled by the author's claim that this victory unlocked the door to the west. . . . By ignoring the main armored thrust through the Ardennes to the south, which led to the downfall of France and the disaster at Dunkirk, Mrazek has placed the events at Eben Emael in an erroneous strategic setting. Readers can correct this oversight and still read of the essentials at Eben Emael by consulting [A. Horne's] To lose a battle [BRD 1969]."

Choice 8:601 Je '71 130w

"As a subject Eben Emael is important and exciting enough to merit a book on its own. But, though Colonel Mrazek has assiduously raked all the details together, his book is disappointing. It largely takes the form of a reconstruction of eye-witness accounts, always a slightly suspect process. . . . At the same time, the narrative is somewhat confusing. . . . [Also] Mrazek presses too hard, overriding his own hounds. The hollow charge explosives are linked tenuously and needlessly with the atomic bomb . . . and the significance of the capture of Eben Emael is exaggerated both in its effect on the immediate campaign and on future warfare. The author himself once commanded glider troops, so his enthusiasm is excusable. But, unfortunately, it is not infectious."

Economist 244:82 Jl 1 '72 400w

MUELLER, WILLIAM R. Celebration of life. 289p $8.95 Sheed

808.8 Fiction—History and criticism. Self. Human relations
ISBN 0-8362-1078-6 LC 70-39868

The author deals with "a wide range of masterpieces of modern fiction in search of his identity and his relation to the cosmos. He discusses novels by Joyce, Sartre, Ellison, Conrad, Camus, Mann, Lawrence, Orwell, Woolf, Mauriac, Kafka, and Broch—three for each of his . . . categories: 'Man and Vocation,' 'Man and Nature,' 'Man and Other Men,' 'Man and God.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"In the tradition of his own The prophetic voice in modern fiction [BRD 1960] Mueller combines a religious stance with a critical eye to study 12 modern novels. . . . The individual studies do not seem to break any major new ground, but the synthesis is interesting and helpful for students of the novel and religion."

Choice 9:1287 D '72 140w

"While sophisticated enough in the use of critical techniques [Mueller] cares also about what authors actually say and likes to trace the quasi-religious themes that run through their works. In this study of a dozen novelists he finds an accent on wonder not previously discerned. We have no doubt that many a pithy illustration for talks and writings can be purloined here. A kind of spiritual guide book through modern fiction."

Christian Century 89:698 Je 14 '72 80w

"[This] is not a great book, but it capably leads readers into and through some great books." Martin Marty

Critic 30:76 Jl/Ag '72 20w

"The book's strength is its personal commitment; its weakness is its blandness and its tendency to overlook ironies in its search for affirmation. Apparently the author discovered his identity and his relation to the cosmos."

Keith Cushman

Library J 97:2188 Je 15 '72 150w

MUGGERIDGE, MALCOLM. Paul, envoy extraordinary [by] Malcolm Muggeridge & Alec Vidler. 159p il maps $5.95 Harper

B or 92 Paul, Saint
LC 73-184408

The authors undertook a "two-month trek that followed Paul's journeys between Jerusalem and Rome, and produced a commentary for five BBC television programs screened in 1971. Muggeridge's prologue and Vidler's epilogue . . . [consider] what Paul stood for, what he achieved, what he meant to two . . . friends with widely different backgrounds, and his meaning for today's reader. The dialogue . . . describes the places Paul visited and . . . attempts to bring out his personality and ministry." (Library J)

Reviewed by S. E. Smith

America 126:580 My 27 '72 330w

"Maps, and plates from the mosaics of Ravenna, the Roman Theatre at Ephesus, the exquisite Egnation Way from Neapolis to Rome, and the final Christ of Piero della Francesca would make the book live even were the text dry, which it is not." Cornelia Holbert

Best Sell 32:65 My 1 '72 600w

Christian Century 89:523 My 3 '72 30w

"The vitality of the dialogue was probably more effective combined with the photography of the TV series; however, the book's color plates are well selected and heighten the mood. The reputation of the authors will make this a good selection." L. H. Ward

Library J 97:1334 Ap 1 '72 130w

"This is an unusual book about one of history's unusual men. . . . What [the authors] attempt is a novel way of presenting a complex personal figure who is not an easy hero to the modern taste. . . . The book itself contains some fine demonstrations of haute vulgarization at its best, in which the authors present a difficult facet of early Christian or Pauline theology comprehensibly to the modern mind without over-simplification. . . . The treatment of the subject itself is consistently sound. I cannot add that the dialogical form of narrative and exposition, as here employed, is brilliantly successful. In places it seems contrived and it meanders." C. E. Simcox

N Y Times Bk R p7 My 7 '72 700w

"Few men have provoked such violent hatred and/or love as St Paul (five pages of quotations illustrate this diversity), and for a mass-audience, comprising Paulophobes and Paulophiles, no single commentator could have held attention. The bulk of the book is the television script, shorn of irrelevancies. . . . Dr Vidler's side of the dialogue is precise and authoritative. He is the expert, between whom and the public Mr Muggeridge is the intermediary. An accomplished entertainer, Mr Muggeridge enthuses, digresses, flies kites, feeds Dr Vidler with half-truths to be corrected in a manner which confirms the friends and enemies of his telly-persona in their convictions, while painlessly advancing information, narrative or exegetic."

TLS p377 Mr 31 '72 600w

MUIR, PERCY. Victorian illustrated books. 287p il $20 Praeger 096 Illustration of books. Illustrators, English
LC 70-138245

"Muir, author of English Children's Books: 1600 to 1900 [BRD 1954], is also a collector and bookseller. . . . [In this book] there is much emphasis on techniques, the new reproductive processes that helped make Victorian book illustration (at its best) so notable. Economic factors . . . are also treated." (Library J) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This] book is superb: it treats the subject in depth, and it is authoritative, enjoyable to read, and well illustrated." Sanford Dorbin
Library J 97:186 Ja 15 '72 70w

"Muir's book gave him 'great pleasure in writing' and his enthusiasm is apparent on every page. . . . Anyone who longs to read about the agonies of the artist in relation to his own creativity and his often vexed relations with engraver and publisher will be disappointed. Opinions and value-judgments are, however, delivered unsparingly. . . . One is relieved to find Turner placed where he should be as a book illustrator, at the top of his profession. . . . There are some jarring notes in the confusing index, and a rare moment of complete bafflement—as when a superb illustration to The Hunting of the Snark by Holliday appears in a chapter on American illustration, and is apparently not mentioned either in the main body of the text or the index. For those who like to be 'chatted to 'over the walnuts and the wine,' this will be a welcome book; others with grosser appetites may well find that it lacks nourishment." TLS p154 S 24 '71 1000w

MUKHERJEE, BHARATI. The tiger's daughter. 210p $5.95 Houghton
ISBN 0-395-12715-7 LC 77-162011

"Tara Banerjee, born in Calcutta, sent to Vassar for an education and married to an American . . . returns to Calcutta, without her husband. She wants to see her family, her city, her friends again; she wants to recapture what she once knew, seven years earlier when she left at age 15. . . . [She] is a Brahmin, daughter of a merchant prince known as the Bengal Tiger. She lives in Calcutta, secluded from the city by walls, guards and ground glass; the blinds on her house doors are sprayed hourly with rose-scented water. Outside the goondas riot and bleed." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by I. N. Pompea
Best Sell 31:478 F 1 '72 300w

"This is surely much more than conventional 'return of the expatriate' fiction, structured on the familiar pattern of trembling expectation, shock of unrecognition, episodic disillusionment, and final sad acceptance of one's alien position between two worlds. The form may be similar, but the substance is freshly complex and enlightening. The comedy is certainly here—brought off with economy and understatement—but beneath its surface lies bitter truth and dread. As in [E. M.] Forster's A Passage to India [BRD 1924], the serio-comedy is based largely on disproportion, imbalance, incongruity. . . . I especially call your admiring attention to the intricate characterization of Joyonto Roy Chowdhury, tea-estate owner." J. R. Frakes
Book World p2 Ja 9 '72 400w

"The only blunder in the novel is the girl's getting compromised by a pushy older man—a gratuitous try at sophistication. Miss Mukherjee's sophistication is of another kind. It is a pleasure to read her delicate responses to coming of age between the two polarities of Calcutta and America. Nothing thrust forward, eyes demurely askance, she gives the impression of fully revealing feminine and intellectual perceptions without betraying her power to hegule." R. J. C.
Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 27 '72 340w

Reviewed by B. S. Nelson
Library J 97:901 Mr 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by Carol Coon
Library J 97:1181 Mr 15 '72 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Christopher Ricks
N Y Rev of Books 18:23 Mr 9 '72 1000w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p16 Ja 2 '72 240w

"Tara is familiar; like so many heroines in fiction of feminine and vaguely British orientation, she is bright, elegant, alert and ironic—and with much to learn. Above all, she is vulnerable . . . because she finds herself alienated from the naïveté and callousness of those she loves. . . . Her understanding of her situation is above all complex: 'The misery of her city was too immense and blurred to be listed and assailed one by one . . . it was fatal to fight for justice.' So Tara thought. She began by withdrawing from her companions on a train; she ends by huddling in a car that is being stoned by a mob. It is all very neat—too neat, perhaps, in that Miss Mukherjee tends to repeat delicate points that she has already made—but the wit is dry and the perceptions acute. More people would like this book than are likely to read it." P.S.P.

Newsweek 79:79B Ja 17 '72 550w

Reviewed by Joseph Hitrec
Sat R 55:76 Mr 11 '72 600w

MULKAY, M. J. Functionalism, exchange and theoretical strategy. 260p $10 Schocken

301 Sociology
LC 70-144783

"The general theoretical underpinnings of sociological enquiry . . . have recently become . . . problematic again as functionalism has come under . . . attack and as rival theoretical approaches—especially exchange theory—have come to dispute its claims. [The author confronts] these theoretical and methodical issues and [attempts an] assessment of the theories, of Pareto, Parsons, Merton, Homans and Blau. He shows how each of the theorists studied devised a new strategy to replace the unsuccessful policies of a prior theory in a process of 'strategical dialectic'. . . . The main focus of this study is the emergence of exchange theory as a reaction against the strategy of structural-functionalism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Pareto's work is seen as lacking a clear conceptual apparatus, Parsons' is too limited to grand theory, while Merton's advocacy of theories of the middle-range is criticized for its lack of a direct and systematic inductive method. The notion of social exchange, introduced by Homans, is viewed as an attempt to remedy these defects which itself fails because of its reductionism, while, in reacting against Homans' work, Blau 'brings no nearer the conceptual clarity and precision without which conclusive theoretical advance is inconceivable.' These conclusions are as gloomy as the choice of authors considered is curious. . . . The student can be forgiven a view of theory, as depicted in this book, as something which must be learned for examinations but which is inherently esoteric and without relevance to empirical analyses of the world. While recognizing the gap between theory and research, the author implies support for a view of theory as best left to the theoretician." David Silverman

Ann Am Acad 400:212 Mr '72 410w

"[Mulkay's] survey of the selected theorists is very good . . . [and he] relates them to each other and criticizes them in terms of a constant framework capable of yielding genuinely comparable discussions. Each theorist is summed up with incisive acumen." TLS p801 J1 9 '71 850w

MULLER, HERBERT J. In pursuit of relevance. 306p $10 Ind. univ. press

901.9 Civilization, Modern. U.S.—Civilization, Science and the humanities
ISBN 0-253-14190-7 LC 70-163517

These "essays discuss 'relevance' in areas of [of] tragedy, freedom, literature, history, science." (Library J) Index.

Choice 9:495 Je '72 130w

"A salty older humanist surveys the educational and literary scene today, asking his usual pointed questions about the relevance of what we're all about. He is a bit too enthralled by the promise of the counterculture—is it still relevant? But many old liberals have been thus enthralled and are outliving their fascinations with the youth culture. So, too, will Muller." Christian Century 88:1422 D 1 '71 60w

"The book is affectionately addressed to the young who are pursuing 'relevance' from an elder statesman of the academic community who, while sympathetic to their pursuit, is uncertain as to the meaning or wisdom of their goal. . . . In the end, Muller must fail to 'reach' his audience because he cannot surrender his belief in certain absolutes (this emerges most clearly in his comments on reforming the university) based on his feeling of superior knowledge (he is, after all, older). The book is . . . well written; and it is thought provoking even if his attempts to be fair-minded and to present both sides do leave the reader feeling that he is wandering about in a fog. However, it is not likely to be in high demand and is overpriced." C. J. Schmidt

Library J 96:3628 N 1 '71 180w

New Repub 165:26 D 11 '71 130w

"The questing approach and easy style of this book may (or may not) disguise the profundity of the author's endeavor. . . . Professor Muller is honest and earnest, though never humorless, and so learned that he knows what he does not know. In short, a very helpful book indeed."

New Yorker 47:64 Ja 1 '72 120w

"To enter this book is like entering a room full of burnished surfaces, with leather-bound books on all the shelves and casement windows open to the outside world. This is because the great humanist who wrote it cannot help but communicate his sense of the dignity of our heritage, the spaciousness of our history, the eternal wonder of our arts. Yet he announces at the very start that the miscellaneous essays included here were all occasioned by doubts aroused in him by the turmoil outside. . . . He experiences no fundamental doubts, [however], with respect to the perspectives and sensitivities to be gained through study of the humanities." Maxine Greene

Teach Col Rec 73:601 My '72 1400w

MULLINS, WILLIAM. Student housing; architectural and social aspects, by William Mullins and Phyllis Allen. 248p il $25 Praeger 727 Housing, Students
LC 76-159965

This "book is divided into three parts: Part One, which views the various types of student housing and other forms of community living, includes an appraisal of the requirements and problems of young residents and an examination of management. Part Two illustrates, with plans, photographs, and text, fifty-nine schemes built in Britain, Europe, Japan, and the United States during the last ten years. Part Three includes a . . . Briefing Guide, sections on furniture and fittings, loan finance, noise control . . . [and] a chapter entitled 'An American Experience,' devoted to student housing in the United States." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Written by a British architect/housing specialist team, which accounts for its heavy British orientation. . . . The second chapter provides a well rounded, well illustrated, international collection of housing schemes, and the brief third chapter offers some detailed planning guidelines regarding aspects of student housing such as financing, furniture and furnishings, and noise control."

Choice 8:1358 D '71 120w

"This would be a more useful book if the authors had made a firmer decision on what it was going to be about. The title is explicit enough, and the pictures of new buildings, occupying 189 of the 248 pages, show buildings designed for students of one kind or another, though they do not limit themselves to residential buildings; but the introductory text is about hostels—a different and wider subject. . . . Its most useful contribution is a very complete set of references to reports, articles, and statements of various kinds on the manifold subjects it touches on. The core of the book, however, is the illustration section. . . . Inconsistencies and muddled thinking . . . prevent this somewhat slapdash publication from becoming the serious study that is wanted."

TLS p913 J1 30 '71 650w

MULVIHILL, WILLIAM. Night of the axe. 184p $5.95 Houghton

ISBN 0-395-13650-4 LC 72-172623

This novel is "about a group of settlers crossing the mountains to California in 1846 and what happens when they come upon a gigantic tree along the way. In some awe the party agrees to make camp. And so the confrontation develops—between those who want to stay on longer and cut down the tree and those who want to move on before the snow falls, between the vicious, posturing Dallas Mecom and the practical, concerned leader, Benedict." (Book World)

"[This] is a mercifully short (large type, much white space) comic book allegory. . . . The characters feature every known variety of frontier stereotype, and each is given a brief, pat description at the beginning. Of course those who go with Benedict make it to glorious California, and those who stay with Dallas, for whatever reasons, are destroyed. . . . It's all as vapid and pretentious and melodramatic in style as it is in objective."

Steven Kroll

Book World p7 Mr 19 '72 160w

"Only when the author describes Benedict's and a few loyal survivors' final trek over the mountains does he rise above the banal plot and the stereotypes to strike an authentic chord." J. C. Pine

Library J 97:1827 My 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 97:2246 Je 15 '72 120w [YA]

"Mulvihill is a novelist worth reading. He is original, tells a story well, and has a big theme. . . . [This] is his best-written book. It is economical, even sparse, and the action is swift. . . . The group's chosen leader [is] simple, rational, responsible, purposeful. . . . His antagonists are wild men, driven by impulse, who attract and dominate the waverers as the amoral strong often do. There is a struggle for allegiance. The irrational destruction of the magnificent tree becomes the goal of the aimlessly violent. . . . A carnage of human destruction follows. The man who cares, and has a goal—California—persists. The rest of the book confirms the theme and the message. . . . One weakness in this book . . . is not a weakness in Mulvihill's own terms. His characters, while not stock figures, are types." Dan Levin

Nation 214:572 My 1 '72 1450w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p35 Mr 5 '72 70w

MUMFORD, LEWIS. The letters of Lewis Mumford and Frederic J. Osborn; a transatlantic dialogue, 1933-70 [by] Lewis Mumford and Frederic James Osborn; ed. by Michael Hughes. 493p $15 Praeger

711 City planning

LC 72-177252

"The origins of and many of the more important developments in the Garden City and new town movements took place in the United States and in Britain, where Mumford and Osborn, respectively, have been among the leading advocates of these city planning philosophies. . . . Their letters reflect the growing friendship between them, as well as their increasing cooperation in writing about, and arguing for, Garden Cities. The letters . . . [also record] reactions to current events in planning, and in the later ones there are many references to personal and family matters." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 32:15 Ap 1 '72 400w

"In both Osborn's letters and Mumford's responses there emerges a humanism that brings the two into an intimacy that submerges their class and educational differences. . . . As in most collections of letters, there are some that are tedious. What is astonishing here is the high proportion that are either truly informative or revealing of personality. Another reward is that the issues Mumford and Osborn discuss speak to urban social problems that Americans are grappling with now." Alden Whitman

Book World p6 F 27 '72 750w

Choice 9:796 S '72 200w

"This book will be of interest mainly to scholars and to proponents of the Garden Cities philosophy." E. B. Murphy

Library J 96:4001 D 1 '71 120w

"In these letters two entirely different personalities, both devoted to the cause of rational and humane town-planning, sound off their ideas in incisive prose. . . . A two-sided correspondence . . . provides a continual reminder of the fact that no two men, however desirous of moral growth and social change, will ever envisage their objectives in identical form, and it shows how these differences can be met with good temper and grace. . . . Throughout the correspondence Osborn harps on what he feels is his intellectual inferiority to Mumford . . . but he nevertheless sticks to his guns. . . . One section of the book, when Osborn is describing the background to the County of London Plan (1943) and the Greater London Plan (1944), has all the tension of political gossip and negotiation in a good Whitehall novel." Paddy Kitchen

MUMFORD, LEWIS—Continued

New Statesman 83:86 Ja 21 '72 850w

"The letters run to more than 450,000 words and in reducing this formidable amount by half the editor . . . has done a magnificent job in preserving continuity and leaving the reader gasping for more. . . . For those who have never found the time to read properly the published works of Messrs Mumford and Osborn . . . this collection of letters should leave no doubts about where each of them stands in the long and continuing battle for more humane values in the environment of our increasingly metropolitan society. Neither author is afraid to assess the importance and sometimes the failure of his own contributions. The present volume provides a useful, authoritative, and decently objective commentary on their life's work. It is a summing-up and a testimony. In a sense, therefore, this is a collection for specialists."

TLS p161 F 11 '72 600w

Va Q R 48:cxvii autumn '72 130w

MUNDEN, KENNETH WHITE, ed. The American film institute catalog of motion pictures produced in the United States: v. F2: Feature films, 1921-1930. See American Film Institute

MUNGO, RAYMOND. Between two moons; a technicolor travelogue. 223p il $7.50 Beacon press

B or 92 U.S.—Description and travel. Collective settlements
ISBN 0-8070-6402-5 LC 70-179153

This work is "about Mungo, his commune, his travels, his loves, his hallucinations. . . . [included are] the suicide of commune 'leader' Fox (and his subsequent apparent reincarnation in another commune in Costa Rica) (and) the attempted suicide of Mungo himself posing ineffectively as one Dennis Lunar." (New Repub)

"Written as a movie script taken from real life, this work is partly a continuation of the author's Total Loss Farm (BRD 1971). Communal life is seen in all its idyllic splendor with touches of pathos, inner turmoil, and an ideological conflict with the Jesus freaks on yonder side of the mountain. The word images flashed on the screen are a mixture of Brueghel and Currier and Ives; the graphic images—done in shades of blue on mint green paper—are turn-of-the-century Sears Roebuck. Unsatisfactory and disquieting as the results of the experiment are, this book is probably destined for those who have known Mungo in his previous lives and can thus forgive a bit of corn and melodrama." Gloria Gehrman

Library J 97:2197 Je 15 '72 100w

"Mungo can write with great perceptiveness about other matters than himself when he wants to, but in [this book] he hasn't wanted to."

New Repub 167:23 Ag 19/26 '72 150w

MUNGO, RAYMOND. Tropical detective story; the flower children meet the voodoo chiefs. 185p $4.95 Dutton

ISBN 0-525-22328-2 LC 73-179844

"Another series of adventures for the Total Loss Farm—er [of the book Total Loss Farm, BRD 1971. It is] a novel in the sense that the names have been changed to protect the innocents. This time we follow him as sanity forces him off the communal farm in Vermont and sends him tripping through Europe, back for a respite in New England, then on to the tropics of Miami Beach and Central America. Mostly it's about a lot of changes in a man's head, 'a series of visions of the true Enormity of It All, private screenings I've had of the movie in God's mind.'" (Library J)

"Behind a lot of grass smoke about the 'soul of the century' and some flighty remarks on reincarnation and 'psychic force' lurks a story that amounts to no more than aimless ramblings and beddings by a bevy of elderly hippies." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:92 Ag '72 50w

"A loss of the jollies found in Mungo's first two books but told with characteristic honesty. Watch out! There's a little Mungo in all of us." Gloria Gehrman

Library J 97:2433 J1 '72 140w

"Mungo has the notion that he is one of the few humans who is living, really living, and so he feels it his duty to tell us all about it. He could be said to be in a state of over-write. Let it then be said. He should be taxed by the word. . . . [The] author is so 'full of wonderment' that he can only rarely descend to the plains of plain exposition. . . . Let us pray for a few months' silence from this fine talent."

New Repub 167:23 Ag 19/26 '72 150w

Va Q R 48:cxxi autumn '72 100w

MUNN, R. E. Biometeorological methods. 336p il $12.50; pa $6.95 Academic press

574.5 Bioclimatology
ISBN 0-12-510250-X LC 71-97488

This book "presents multi-faceted biometeorology as a . . . set of research tools for investigating and solving problems of the atmospheric environmental relations of organisms." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Although not designed as an introduction to the subject, [this book achieves its] end by its wealth of examples that Munn has carefully drawn from current literature. . . . Highly effective in presenting research design, advice on the choice and handling of statistical and physical methods, and methods of data display. An appendix has 50 stimulating 'problems' which invite the student to undertake investigations on his own. A 21-page bibliography with 481 citations includes selected older standard literature but is drawn mostly from critical papers of the last decade."

Choice 8:1042 O '71 170w

"A considerable portion of the book deals with problems of sampling the atmosphere in time and space, and it includes a useful discussion of instrument response and time constants. Statistical methods are considered somewhat cursorily. . . . Methods of dimensional analysis and physical modeling of biological phenomena receive brief treatment. . . . Applications of synoptic climatology to such diverse problems as forest fire weather forecasting and the large-scale dispersal of insects and birds illustrate the usefulness of this standard climatological tool. Munn even discusses the application of economic analysis to biometeorological problems. . . . The book covers an extraordinarily wide range of topics. No one can read [it] without obtaining ideas for new approaches to old problems." W. E. Reifsnnyder

Science 172:1325 Je 25 '71 260w

MUNSTERBERG, HUGO. The arts of China. 234p il col pl $17.50 Tuttle

709.5 Art, Chinese
ISBN 0-8048-0039-1 LC 70-188012

The author of Chinese Buddhist Bronzes (BRD 1968) "uses a chronological method in relating the history of Chinese art, from prehistoric times, through nine dynastic periods—Shang, Chou, Han, the Six Dynasties, T'ang, Sung, Yuan, Ming and Ch'ing—in ceramics, bronze, sculptures, painting, lacquer work, architecture, fabrics." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"[The] text is illustrated by 115 plates, ten of which are in rich color. . . . Dr. Munsterberg is at present chairman of the Art History Department at the New York State University at New Paltz, New York. This is a splendid addition to the Charles E. Tuttle Company's [publications]." R. F. G.

Best Sell 32:356 N 1 '72 110w

"In ten chapters . . . Munsterberg summarizes the art of China. Each chapter is in the same format: a sketchy paragraph of history followed by a paragraph or two on each art form as exemplified by an illustration. There is little sense of the vital relationship of the art to history, culture, or religion. . . . The whole reads like a series of art appreciation lectures based upon a highly personalized choice of slides. . . . Many [of the illustrations] are not of museum quality and therefore do not tell the story effectively. This volume adds nothing to the field for established collections and is not sufficient as art history to warrant its inclusion in smaller collections." R. D. Olson

Library J 97:3304 O 15 '72 150w

MURDOCH, IRIS. An accidental man. 442p $7.95 Viking

ISBN 0-670-10208-3 LC 79-171893

"The central figure of this novel is one of those accident-prone figures whose . . . misfortune becomes a substitute source of strength. . . . Ever since his brother injured his hand in a childhood incident, the world owes Austin a blank cheque to cover subsequent reverses—which do not fail to arrive. But someone is always sorry for him, always getting him out of trouble even at the price of their own. His self-pity destroys others, in accordance with what Miss Murdoch . . . calls 'whatever deep mythological forces control the destinies of men'." (New Statesman)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
America 126:549 My 20 '72 70w

Reviewed by Frank Kermode
Atlantic 230:85 J1 '72 850w

Reviewed by Eileen Kennedy
Best Sell 31:530 Mr 1 '72 650w

Reviewed by J. C. Oates
Book World p3 Ja 23 '72 500w
Choice 9:215 Ap '72 120w

Reviewed by P. K. Bell
Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 27 '72 600w

Economist 241:vi N 6 '71 370w

Reviewed by Laurence Lerner
Encounter 38:73 Je '72 460w

"Iris Murdoch's new novel is cruel and small, not redeemed by beauty or terror. Long passages work because of the wit with which Murdoch puts words together, and the baroque paraphernalia (improbable coincidences, chapters consisting entirely of letters) is fun for a few hundred pages, but its falseness becomes obvious: suspension of disbelief can't stand the strain of repeated transmission of urgent messages by letters carried through London streets in the 1970's. Worse, this long novel, which takes three upper-class London families through about ten different plot lines, hasn't a single character who could possibly serve as a protagonist. . . . One is always conscious of Murdoch's superiority to what she is writing about, and [this novel] is a suffocating disappointment from a major writer." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:215 Ja 15 '72 200w

Reviewed by Foster Hirsch
Nation 215:59 J1 24 '72 1000w

Reviewed by D. K. Mano
Nat R 24:408 Ap 14 '72 550w

Reviewed by Francis Hope
New Statesman 82:561 O 22 '71 700w

Reviewed by Karl Miller
N Y Rev of Books 18:19 Ap 20 '72 500w

"Like most of the earlier novels, [this] is a study in humiliation. And the people, as always, are violently possessive of each other. But this novel is better written than many of its predecessors, and the focus has shifted. . . . There's an insistence on individuals trying (and often failing) to help or simply influence one another. . . . Perhaps Murdoch's best territory is contradictory emotions—showing one person loathing and loving another, or fearing but pursuing him, or merely acting in opposition to his feelings. . . . [This] is a fairly difficult novel, but it yields a lot to chew on. . . . [The author's] dissection of helplessness is indeed well worth pondering, along with the observation that 'Life is a phase.' Her novels force a reader to review his own beliefs." Nora Sayre

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 23 '72 1500w
New Yorker 47:102 F 12 '72 160w

"Is there a more exasperating novelist than Iris Murdoch? Her fourteenth novel proceeds with such an air of ramshackle improvisation that the reader despairs of ever sorting out the characters and making sense of their behavior. . . . This is a novel to be read at least twice or not at all. Even on a first reading there are exhilarating big scenes to keep you going: the death of Alison Ledgard . . . the moving breakup and last-minute reconciliation of a lesbian couple . . . [and] a scene in which the blackmailer demands not only money but that the victims read his unpublished novel. . . . 'An Accidental Man' turns out to be a kind of mystery story, in which the hero is revealed to be the least likely suspect for the role. . . . What seemed at first to be a shambles of a novel takes shape around him. 'An Accidental Man' is an original, unnerving comic vision." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:68 Ja 24 '72 490w

Reviewed by Gina Mallet
Sat R 55:68 Ja 29 '72 490w

TLS p1305 O 22 '71 650w

Va Q R 48:c summer '72 80w

Reviewed by Michael Cooke
Yale R 61:599 Je '72 430w

MURPHY, JAMES J., ed. Three medieval rhetorical arts. 235p $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

808.04 Rhetoric
ISBN 0-520-01820-6 LC 72-132416

The editor has assembled treatises on three "branches of mediaeval Latin rhetoric, written between 1135 and 1322. Anonymous of Bologna, The principles of letter-writing (translated by J. J. Murphy); Geoffrey of Vinsauf, The new poetics (translated by J. B. Kopp); [and] Robert of Basevorn, The form of preaching (translated by L. Krul). An appendix contains excerpts from Aristotle's Topics and his On sophistical refutations, two widely used textbooks of dialectic." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Brief, pungent, and provocative essays precede each translation in addition to the masterly introduction to the subject of mediaeval rhetoric by Murphy. Apposite footnotes, not overloaded with esoterica, a complete bibliography and good clear type, all combine to make the book a pleasure to read as well as a valuable and necessary addition to any library serving students and teacher of rhetoric, mediaeval civilization, and the history of ideas."

Choice 8:1582 F '72 150w

"The brief introduction is sound and helpful in its indications of where a student might go for more information and the texts appear to be idiomatically and accurately translated."

Va Q R 48:xxx winter '72 80w

MURPHY, JOHN. Homosexual liberation; a personal view. 182p $5.95 Praeger

301.41 Homosexuality—Personal narratives
LC 75-145950

This is an "account of the GLF [Gay Liberation Front] movement in New York, and [the author's] part in it." (Choice)

"Murphy's point is that there is nothing wrong with being different, that homosexuality should not merely be tolerated but understood and accepted by the rest of mankind. That is a large order, and Murphy joined Gay Lib to try to implement this goal. . . . All but the most fervent Gay Lib supporters will find Murphy's tone at times somewhat antagonistic. He tends to weaken his case by overstating it, as when he proposes that limiting phrases like 'consenting adults' and 'in private' not be included in laws that allow homosexual practices, since there are no such parallel laws for heterosexuals." G. D. Phillips

America 126:26 Ja 8 '72 200w

"Murphy's account is personal and anecdotal. There are few surprises for the reader who has lived in a metropolitan center recently, and the chapter reviewing a few well known books with homosexual themes is embarrassingly superficial. . . . but Murphy gives a firsthand account of the GLF movement in New York . . . which rings of sincerity and truth."

Choice 9:290 Ap '72 170w

Reviewed by J. K. Marshall
Library J 97:2109 Je 1 '72 120w

MURPHY, MICHAEL. Golf in the kingdom. 205p $7.95 Viking

796.352 Golf. Philosophy, Hindu
SEN 670-34529-6 LC 74-133734

The author "describes a mystical journey with his teacher [Shivas Irons] along the 'Links of Burningbush.' . . . He then discusses the largely Oriental transcendentalism which Irons, the curious old golfer, related to him in less than two days in 1956." (Library J) Bibliography.

MURPHY, MICHAEL—Continued

"[Shivas Irons'] theosophic interpretations of the ancient game [of golf] are sensitively detailed here. . . . As a result of reading this book, philosophically inclined duffers may be able to shave a few strokes from their game (or at least feel less frustrated if they don't); and golfing-inclined philosophers may ultimately conclude, as have many mystics of the past, that words often form a barrier rather than a path to true enlightenment." Charles Farley
Library J 97:2425 J1 '72 130w

"Murphy has done something special. By grounding his book in the details and language and rhythms of golf, by making it not just about a round of golf but a round of golf itself (it's comfortably read in four hours, about the length of time it takes to play 18 holes on a weekday), he's written a mystical tale capable of winning a constituency that (count me in) never made it past page 20 of 'Magister Ludi.' . . . I read it as a literal adventure of the body and spirit, and totally believed and loved it, and it's been the same for a lot of unmythically-inclined golfers (and others) I've talked with." Nancy Weber

N Y Times Bk R p36 O 22 '72 750w

"The basic autobiographical episode [in this book], involving a Scots guru/pro named Shivas Irons, is, like the name itself, frankly fantastic. . . . The book never totally strays from its base subject of golf, and it even contains some practical tips. . . . In regard to traditional Christian problems like the existence of evil and the paradoxes of ethical action, 'Golf in the Kingdom' says little. During the raucous symposium that follows his round of golf with Shivas, Murphy claims, there was a 'lively discussion of shanking and the problem of evil,' but we never hear it. Murphy/Shivas does offer, for the length of a page, ethical distinctions between 'Mind-at-Large' and 'Higher Self.'" John Updike

New Yorker 48:76 J1 29 '72 1250w

MURPHY, PAUL L. The Constitution in crisis times, 1918-1969. 570p pl $10 Harper

973.9 U.S.—History—20th century. U.S.—Constitutional history. U.S. Supreme Court
ISBN 06-013118-7 LC 70-156570

The author's "study assesses fifty years of constitutional development against the backdrop of shifting national moods and public pressures. He . . . asks historical questions and seeks historical answers to the proper use of law as an instrument for social control in an advanced industrial state." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Historians, lawyers, and laymen alike will appreciate this most sound and lengthy [work]. . . . [It] is a superb book. . . . [which contains] eloquent discourses of underlying political and judicial processes and actions." M. L. Fausold
Ann Am Acad 402:165 J1 '72 500w

"One may wonder, in a general constitutional history, at the failure to explore change in the presidency more thoroughly, although the emphasis on the Court is completely defensible. . . . This volume will be helpful to both professional and lay students of the Constitution. And its implication for the new Nixon Court is that the present judicial Thermidor is a natural accompaniment of the 1968 election." E. M. Yoder

Book World p1 Ja 23 '72 420w

"With few exceptions milestone cases are those traditionally used in constitutional history texts covering the period since 1918. This book represents a good effort to show the relationships between Presidential leadership and the Court and between the Court and public opinion. A sophomore history student can understand the flow of these pages, profiting from thumbnail sketches of individual justices while enjoying reading about the Four Horsemen who were 'soulmates' and that there was a 'flap' between Douglas and Jackson. It will take the more advanced student, however, to follow the technical reasoning." Choice 9:132 Mr '72 100w

Reviewed by W. M. Wiecek
J Am Hist 59:455 S '72 1150w

"Murphy's impeccable research and graceful narrative effectively illumine subtle legal and philosophical distinctions and also provide the continuity necessary to understand the signifificant changes characterizing the Supreme Court in the 20th Century." Frank Annunziata

Library J 97:2092 Je 1 '72 160w

MURPHY, ROSALIE, ed. Contemporary poets of the English language. See Contemporary poets of the English language*MURRAY, ALBERT. South to a very old place. 230p $7.95 McGraw

917.5 Negroes—Southern States. Southern States—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-07-044073-5 LC 78-169023

The author "sought out white Southern thinkers (including C. Van Woodward and Robert Penn Warren) and concluded that the Southern experience transcended the factors of race in shaping that unique being, the Southerner. In the course of his odyssey, Murray defends both Lyndon B. Johnson and Jews who have supported the black movement, and ridicules blacks who have turned to Africa for identity." (Library J)

"This is a worthwhile addition to the growing number of books by blacks that seek to interpret the black experience in twentieth-century America and to explain America to herself. We can be grateful that Mr. Murray took time from his work as Visiting Professor of Literature at the University of Massachusetts to write it." J. S. Philipson

Best Sell 31:462 Ja 15 '72 420w

"Formally the book is shaped by a sequence of visits which Murray made to various Southern ('downhome') persons and places . . . [by which he] intended to test and elaborate his conception of the distinctive kind of sensibility which, he believes, is characteristic of the South at its best. . . . Over all, however, Murray does not make very clear his conception of this downhome sensibility. Presumably he means more than just the down-to-earth common sense which New Englanders are reputed to possess. . . . [His book] would not have suffered from the omission of some tired but still-fashionable clichés about the white South: Whites live in terror of black sexuality; nearly all have mulattoes in their closets [etc.]. However, in a book that contains much solid sense, one can overlook such extravagances." Madison Jones

Book World p11 D 26 '71 1250w

"Murray rejected the radical critique of the black cultural and revolutionary nationalists in The Omni-Americans [BRD 1970]. In the present work, autobiographical in nature, he continues his argument. . . . [This book] establishes [him] as one of the ablest critics of the radical black movement, as a writer of skill and precision, and as one of the more insulated black thinkers who continues to cling to the integrationist solution." F. A. Burdick

Library J 96:3743 N 15 '71 130w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg
N Y Rev of Books 18:30 F 24 '72 2350w

Reviewed by Toni Morrison
N Y Times Bk R p5 Ja 2 '72 2250w
New Yorker 47:84 Ja 8 '72 320w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:80 Ja 31 '72 360w

"As Murray, now a New Yorker and Harlemite, talks his way southward, he intermingles reminiscences of youth with engaging conversation, cultural criticism, and comments on his folk heritage. He charms, provokes, amuses, and spreads wisdom at every stop. And from this potpourri he creates a disciplined piece of art: a reflective and elegant rendering of a man's coming to terms with his roots. One of the most celebrated ties between the races (apart from that of blood) links the black mammy and the white Southern boy. Murray reflects on this bond. . . . [He] shrewdly contrasts the Southern white's traditional idealization of black mothers with many social scientists' antimatriarchal theories. In neither case do whites perceive the positive strengths black women impart to their young." R. A. Gross

Sat R 55:72 Ja 22 '72 1000w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard
Time 99:65 Ja 10 '72 750w

MURRAY, BRUCE C., jt. auth. The view from space. See Davies, M. E.

MURRAY, JACQUELINE. The first European agriculture; a study of the osteological and botanical evidence until 2000 B.C. 380p il maps $10.75 Aldine-Atherton

630 Agriculture—Europe—History. Domestic animals—History
ISBN 0-85224-182-8 LC 77-130762

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by C. A. Reed
Am Anthropol 74:113 F/Ap '72 800w
Choice 8:1342 D '71 170w
TLS p17 Ja 7 '72 950w

MURRAY, JOHN JOSEPH. Antwerp in the age of Plantin and Brueghel. (Okla. Univ. The centers of civilization ser. v27) 170p $2.95 Univ. of Okla. press

949.3 Antwerp—History
ISBN 0-8061-0893-2 LC 75-88150

The author "traces the history of the city, discusses the factors which determined its greatness, and gives an account of the people who lived and worked there [with emphasis on printing]." (TLS)

"In every way a disappointing book. . . . Murray has produced an inaccurate, error filled monograph which will confuse, irritate, and bore more students than it will enlighten. This cursory study . . . is basically a helter-skelter catalogue of names and events, both great and obscure, drawn from Antwerp's rise, apogee, and decline. . . . The style is slipshod throughout."

Choice 7:1566 Ja '71 180w

"[This] informative book . . . gives an interesting picture of Antwerp in its heyday. Unfortunately [the book is] marred by a number of inaccuracies, particularly where literature is concerned. . . . Moreover, Professor Murray is constantly at odds with the Dutch language. His misspellings are too numerous and too serious to be excused as mere printing errors, and his translations from the Dutch are often very strange indeed. . . . Blemishes such as these, in combination with Professor Murray's reluctance to acknowledge his sources, make this book rather less useful than it could have been."

TLS p941 Ag 1 '72 150w

MURRAY, PETER. Piranesi and the grandeur of ancient Rome. 72p il $8.75 Transatlantic

769 Piranesi, Giovanni Battista
ISBN 0-500-55003-4 LC 72-180852

In this fourth Walter Neurath Memorial lecture, "the author sets Piranesi . . . against the baroque tradition of theatrical scene-painting of his time—from which his dramatic perspective effects derive—and in relation to Italian townscape or veduta painting." (TLS)

"The author emphasizes the context for Piranesi's works; and, in fact, a good third of the essay concerns other artists and literati of 18th-Century Italy. Murray's chronology is sometimes inaccurate, but that only occasionally spoils his art-historical points. His wide-ranging text is very readable. . . . and with A. Hyatt Mayor's excellent Giovanni Battista Piranesi [BRD 1953] is the only general introduction in English. The illustrations are well chosen, but poorly reproduced." Andrew Robison

Library J 97:1312 Ad 1 '72 90w

"[This] short text . . . seems to have been taken verbatim from the lecture itself (except for the addition of footnotes and a useful chronological table). . . . Professor Murray is clearly familiar with the most recent research on this extraordinary man, whose art reflects the conflicting currents of neo-classicism and nascent romanticism which are a puzzling feature of his age. His lecture provides an excellent introduction to [this] artist."

TLS p443 Ap 21 '72 250w

MURRAY, WILLIAM. Previews of coming attractions; scenes and faces from the permanent L.A. fun game. 302p $8.95 World pub.

917.94 California—Social life and customs. California—Description and travel
LC 73-115805

"A novelist and free-lance writer, [the author] fled Manhattan in 1965 for five acres in Malibu with a creek and horses. This is a collection of his magazine pieces, some published nationally, but many from West, the Los Angeles equivalent of the New York Times Magazine. . . . Persons, typical or famous, are characterized and profiled. The various Scenes are set forth—the beach, tennis, horse racing—as well as particular places and life styles: Palm Springs and Las Vegas, Hollywood, Hell's Angels, Swingers." (Library J)

"The strength of Murray's modus operandi is that he is fascinated by people and writes well about them, not, at the same time, having any reluctance to throw himself into the foreground of the scene he is reporting. . . . Murray has little to say to the reader whose first concern with California has been with the troubles on the campuses and in the ghettos and with the growing power of a law-and-order government in Sacramento. . . . I was puzzled and distressed by Murray's failure to come to grips with what is most evidently a powerful ambivalence in his own feelings about California. . . . He doesn't seem to realize he has written a horror story." Kenneth Lamott

Book World p7 N 22 '70 850w

"Murray's style is somewhat uneven but he is generally amusing and perceptive, if not always profound. He rises to occasional heights as in a deft hatchet job on the King family and a hilarious account of a visit to a Swingers' orgy. In all, a lively and current roundup of the L.A. scene, and for you out there, maybe a preview of your future. Recommended." Clayton Brown

Library J 96:93 Ja 1 '71 150w

MUSCATINE, CHARLES. Poetry and crisis in the age of Chaucer. (Notre Dame Univ. Ward-Phillips lectures in English lang. and lit. v.4) 168p $5.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press

821 English poetry—History and criticism. Literature, Medieval—History and criticism
LC 78-185409

The author attempts to justify the relevance of "the study of late medieval English poetry. After a short introduction on style as a reflection of the author's response to his world, he sketches the political, religious, and social crises of late 14th-Century England as background to a chapter each on the Pearl poet, Piers Plowman, and Chaucer." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Four substantial lectures on three major poets of the 14th century . . . by an eminent medievalist. . . . Muscatine asks serious questions about literary value in 'Relevance, poetic style, and cultural crisis,' and promises answers that are 'moral, aesthetic, and historical.' He overemphasizes the social and religious conservatism of the Pearl poet, and takes for granted the moral and historical relevance of Piers Plowman. The strength of each lecture is really in stylistic analysis, as he clarifies the intricate design in Pearl and Sir Gawain, the surrealistic qualities in Piers Plowman, and the idealistic and pathetic sides of Chaucer. A suggestive and carefully documented study."

Choice 9:1131 N '72 120w

"A book aimed at beginning students rather than at scholars. . . . Other professors may have their own responses to [the] question of relevance, but few could publish such an elegant defense of literary studies, and ultimately of the teaching of humanities." D. K. Fry

Library J 97:2843 S 15 '72 300w

MUSÈS, CHARLES, ed. Consciousness and reality; the human pivot points; ed. by Charles Musès and Arthur M. Young. 472p $10 Outerbridge & Lazard; for sale by Dutton

126 Consciousness. Reality
ISBN 0-87690-028-7 LC 74-65547

In this "collection of writings on aspects of the nature of consciousness . . . the aim of the editors . . . is to point up the need for more attention to man's subjective potentialities and to promote the new interest of science in subjective states. The various contributors . . . discuss such topics as ESP, hypnosis, ancient Egyptian trance methods, Amazon tribal drugs, dream control, fire walking, and meditation methods. Also included are discussions of the scientific method in psychology, consciousness as a topic in physics.

MUSÈS, CHARLES—Continued

mathematical models of subjective states, language and evolution, and immortality in religion." (Library J)

"[This] is a mixed bag. The range of the 26 papers is wide, and their emphases and quality vary greatly. But they all do refer, in some way or other, to problems of understanding subjective consciousness; and consciousness is a very diffuse topic. . . . As a set of general readings in a field that has no defined boundaries, this book will be useful for general collections. Its reference value is limited, however, since there is no index and no bibliography." George Adelman
Library J 97:2411 J1 '72 200w

"[This book is] another tour of the edge of science and speculation, 10 years in preparation. . . . [A section entitled] 'Mysteries of the Delic Psyche,' is concerned with man's timeless potential and new discoveries of accounts of beings who came from the sky and the sea to teach the Babylonians and Sumerians. (One is strongly reminded of Ezekiel's sighting of that flying saucer!) Finally, in a section called Pegasus, the book melds poetry and mathematics (hypernumbers)." Theodore Sturgeon
N Y Times Bk R p20 S ■ '72 140w

MUSGROVE, FRANK. Patterns of power and authority in English education. 186p $6.50; pa $3.25 Barnes & Noble

370.942 Education—Great Britain. Educational sociology
SBN 416-16550-8; 416-16560-5 (pa)

The author's thesis "is that schools (and universities) do not have sufficient power to do the jobs which they are called upon by society to do." (Choice) Index.

"A controversial little book. . . . [It] is more a statement of philosophy than a research study, and it is based on the British experience. Musgrove specializes in the sociology of education (University of Manchester) and holds to the view that many of the innovations in school administration (in England at least) have not improved the schools. He feels that sufficient authority must be trained by the principal or other academic authority. The volume's main hypotheses seem rather unclear and not conclusively proved. Nevertheless, [it] does provide some stimulating food for thought and is generally well written. Recommended mainly for those with a specialized interest in the sociology of education or in educational administration." Choice 8:1367 D '71 150w

"[This is] an interesting analysis of some aspects of the power structure in education. [The author's] arguments, which are illustrated by a wealth of references and facts, seem a little difficult to test against ordinary social observation, since they seem to express more a series of attitudes than of directly testable propositions." TLS p686 Je 11 '71 170w

MUSHKAT, JEROME. Tammany: the evolution of a political machine, 1789-1865. 476p il $15 Syracuse univ. press

329 Tammany Hall. New York (City)—Politics and government
SBN 8156-0079-8 LC 78-150346

This "account of New York City politics from the early national period through the Civil War seeks to explain the rise and prolonged success of Tammany (both Hall and Society). What began as a purely fraternal order and patriotic society in 1787, became over the years the organizational center for the city's Democratic party, and, with the advent of bossism late in the time period discussed, the model for much of American urban politics since then." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author's] foreword suggests an analytical approach to Tammany's first three-quarters of a century, but the lengthy body of his book confines analysis within a restrictive narrative framework. One wishes that Mushkat had sacrificed detail to interpretation. . . . In the absence of other full-length treatments of Tammany through the Civil War, this book is recommended for acquisition by medium-sized and large college libraries." Choice 8:1244 N '71 130w

"[Mushkat] lays out the intricacies of New York City politics in copious detail, with much (often too much) added material on state politics. . . . The monograph's chief defect lies in the author's inability to relate the operations of the Tammany machine to the society around it. . . . [The book] is cluttered with a lavish harvest of mixed metaphors, strained similes, oxymora, and clichés." F. O. Gatell
J Am Hist 59:128 Je '72 650w

Reviewed by W. S. Sayre
Pol Sci Q 87:328 Je '72 900w

MUSOLF, LLOYD D., jt. ed. Legislatures in developmental perspective. See Kornberg, A.

MUSSULMAN, JOSEPH A. Music in the cultured generation; a social history of music in America, 1870-1900. 298p il $9.75 North-western univ. press

780.1 Music—History and criticism. U.S.—Civilization
ISBN 0-8101-0350-8 LC 77-149920

A study of the musical content of issues of Atlantic, Century, Scribner's and Harper's magazines during the period covered. "After describing the various sources and currents that make up the idealistic aesthetic and meliorist social attitudes held by the writers . . . [Mussuman discusses their views on] nationalism, [operettas], opera . . . Wagnerian music drama, and music for the church and for the parlor." (Mus Q) Bibliography.

"This book offers a clear view of the place of music in American thought and life in the late 19th Century. . . . The history [Mussuman] presents is fascinating, and his book does much to illuminate contemporary social-musical patterns. The author writes clearly, but his prose lacks life. Nevertheless, the book is highly recommended." A. B. Skel
Library J 97:1017 Mr 15 '72 70w

"The contributors to be passed in review include such arbiters of American taste as George William Curtis, William Dean Howells, and Richard Watson Gilder (some of the most powerful men in the public and literary life of the nation), musicians both European and American, among them Richard Hoffman, William Mason, Dvořák, and Gounod, professional critics and writers on music, such as William F. Apthorp, William J. Henderson, Henry T. Finck, and Henry Krehbiel, and, drawing up the rear, a mixed group of clergymen, litterateurs, and authors of letters to the editor. Mussuman gives a systematic exposition to the views set forth by this circle of writers and a valuable running commentary that puts it all in perspective. . . . [His] approach is always fair-minded, passing by even the most tempting targets for mockery in favor of a judicious sympathy with his subjects." C. H.
Mus Q 48:322 Ap '72 2600w

MUSULIN, STELLA. Austria and the Austrians (Eng title: Austria: people and landscape) with a foreword by W. H. Auden. 248p pl maps $7.95 Praeger

914.36 Austria—Description and travel. Austria—Civilization. National characteristics, Austrian
LC 71-173443

The author devotes a chapter to each of the provinces of Austria and describes the "contrasts between the regions . . . as well as . . . differences of temperament. . . . [She also discusses Austria's] history, from the Illyrians whose lakeside settlement near the salt deposits at Hallstatt has given a name to an epoch of prehistory, to the recent liberation of the eastern provinces and part of Vienna from Soviet Russian occupations." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"An exceedingly well written, essay-type description of Austria, its various provinces and the Austrians. . . . [The] book is a mixture of description of contemporary Austria and excursions into various periods of Austrian history combined with an account of the lives of many eccentric men and women who have added their own particular flavor to the past. Particularly readers who have some familiarity with Austria will enjoy the witty descriptions and analyses of Austrian past and present in this small but valuable book." Choice 9:707 J1/Ag '72 180w

"Organized as a tour guide by region, but containing mainly historical information, [this book] will not be especially helpful to either the tourist or the historian. The text is so filled with unfamiliar place-names and references to ancient events and personalities (often without making it clear which they are), that it is very difficult to follow, even for a devoted lover of Austria. Historical anecdotes are often dismissed in a sentence, without pausing to examine their significance." Barbara Pinzelik
Library J 97:1809 My 15 '72 120w

"Except at the picture-postcard and Blue Danube level, Englishmen, even otherwise educated Englishmen, are woefully ignorant of Austrian history and even of Austrian geography. Wisely, Baroness Musulin takes this ignorance as her starting-point. She sets out to educate, and does so amusingly and discreetly, but beneath the velvet there is a missionary zeal to destroy the false gods that stand between her readers and a true understanding of her country. She has written, in the best sense, a traveller's companion, not a guide-book. . . . Her self-appointed task is to illuminate the self-evident present through the often accidental past, without writing a textbook."

TLS p1559 D 10 '71 500w

MUTCHLER, DAVID E. The church as a political factor in Latin America; with particular reference to Colombia and Chile; foreword by Irving Louis Horowitz. 460p $18.50 Praeger 261.7 Catholic Church in Latin America.

Christianity and politics
LC 74-153836

"This study examines the critical impact of the Catholic Church system in Latin America with specific regard to concerted attempts in Colombia and Chile to develop organizational capacity for influence and power. The discussion is concerned with three related issues: first, the interests that link church policies and activities throughout the Americas; second, the internal state of Church resources; and third, the over-all impact of the Church on the developmental processes of Latin American nations." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"Based on a doctoral dissertation in sociology, this book is a jargon-filled analysis which moulds an ample supply of information and documentation into a narrow theoretical schema. . . . Perhaps to the professional sociologist the technique, analysis and conclusions of this book will produce intellectual ecstasy as it appears to have in Prof. Irving Louis Horowitz who wrote a glowing foreword. But to one who knows and observed many of the individuals involved and lived through the period on the ground, the book is at best a glimpse of total reality, at worst—balderdash. . . . If one accepts this book as a scientist's effort to build some sort of framework to dissect and examine complex social phenomena . . . it is interesting. On the other hand, one looking for a balanced view of the subject which takes into account the complexity of the phenomena without ideological bias . . . will find this book unsatisfying and even pernicious." R. A. Dungan

America 126:209 F 26 '72 390w

"Stylistically, this book will alienate readers, but, since the work is a trove of information about the prospective disintegration of the church in Chile and Colombia, this will be regrettable. . . . Skillfully delineating the difference in attitude of the once liberal Jesuits, [Mutchler] shows how they attempt to keep their own stature and power visible while the gap between church and state and the masses becomes more intense. . . . While this is a vital book, it requires careful analysis and readers with an above average background in church and Latin American history-sociology. Highly recommended for graduate libraries."

Choice 8:1644 F '72 170w

MYERS, CHARLES A. Computers in knowledge-based fields; a joint project of the Industrial relations section, Sloan school of management, Mass. inst. of technology and the Inter-university study of labor problems in economic development. 136p $10; pa $2.95 MIT press

001.6 Electronic data processing
ISBN 0-262-13068-8 LC 74-128540

A professor of management at M.I.T. discusses "education, library systems, legal and legislative services, medical and hospital services, and both national and centralized local data banks. In each case the author describes the needs that led to the introduction of computers, their initial or early applications, and their most recent applications. . . . He also projects possible long-term developments, noting the implications these might have for changing the nature of work and organization in these fields and the resistance to such change." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The hour or two this book requires will help the reader to appraise the past, present, and probable future of computer applications, particularly in fields other than librarianship. In the opinion of this reviewer, the posture of the author is conservative and eminently rational. The book is well-supplied with citations to more complete information on the many topics included. The librarian, if he can overcome his animus at what may seem like cavalier treatment of many unsung library automation projects, will find the other sections and conclusions of interest, value, and backed by authority. Possibly the author's terseness on library projects may be the result of kindness rather than oversight!" Harold Ostvold

Library J 95:4234 D 15 '70 420w

"Myers' conclusions respecting the impact of automation on libraries are relatively sane and realistic. . . . [His] cautious predictions are laudable. His treatment of the subject, however, is superficial, and in places even misleading and heavily biased on the side of INTREX. Those who are knowledgeable in the field will find little in his treatment that is either new or helpful; the uninitiated would do well to read only the [summary statement to chapter two]." J. H. Shera

LRTS 16:111 winter '72 1350w

MYERS, JOHN MYERS. The border wardens. 212p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

363.4 Law enforcement. Mexico—Boundaries

This is a "history of the U.S. Border Patrol along the Mexican line." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[The author] has accumulated much information about the history, the work, and the problems of policing the border. . . . While Myers' style may trouble some readers, his book deserves wide reading for its treatment of the current threats of illegal immigration and the flow of narcotics. Recommended for all general collections." D. O. Kelley

Library J 96:494 F 1 '71 110w

"There are many stories of border derring-do. The prose is as windy as the big outdoors; but, in his descriptions of the exploitation of braceros and pressures applied to the Patrol by greedy growers, Mr. Myers does a service."

N Y Times Bk R p14 Mr 28 '71 60w

MYERS, ROBERT MANSON, ed. The children of pride; a true story of Georgia and the Civil War. 1845p $19.95 Yale univ. press

973.7 Georgia—History. U.S.—History—Civil War—Sources. U.S.—Biography. Jones, Charles Colcock, 1804-1863

ISBN 0-300-01214-4 LC 79-99835

This is "a collection of more than 1000 letters written by the members of a large and prominent Georgia family in the years 1854-68. . . . [The family] centers around the Rev. Charles Colcock Jones, a retired Presbyterian minister. The other principal letter-writers are his wife, Mary E. Jones; the elder of his two sons, Charles, Jr.; and his daughter, Mrs. Mary S. Mallard. There is also . . . [an] assortment of uncles, aunts, nieces, nephews, cousins and others who . . . fit into that vast familial tangle known as a southern 'connection.' . . . [The letters reveal] the last days of a civilization, its collapse, and the beginning of its new life." (New Repub)

"[This book] is unique and admirable in many ways. But perhaps its greatest contribution is to dramatize the paradox of such resoundingly moral men as Rev. C. C. Jones defending to his death the institution of slavery." Michael Flusche

America 126:597 Je 3 '72 700w

Am Lit 44:536 N '72 70w

Reviewed by W. W. Abbot

Am Scholar 42:168 winter '72-'73 900w

Choice 9:876 S '72 150w

Economist 243:79 My 27 '72 700w

MYERS, R. M.—Continued

Reviewed by David Bertelson
J Am Hist 59:724 D '72 380w

Reviewed by E. G. Detlefsen
Library J 97:2180 Je 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by J. C. Lobdell
Nat R 24:962 S 1 '72 260w

"[This book] enlarges our understanding of [a] traumatic period in American history as few others have done. . . . [It] is extraordinary social history, a recapturing of the past in which the reader not merely observes but participates. It is, I think, a great and indispensable book. . . . The story (and, speaking of it as such, one is tempted to call it a novel) proceeds at the pace of life itself. Great events are always in the background, finally to intrude with crushing immediacy, but these are lives—as are all our lives—of essentially private drama. . . . The book is about irretrievable losses and human suffering, and thus is about much more than a Southern family in the years 1854-68. We read it now to our profit." Jonathan Yardley
New Repub 166:27 My 13 '72 1500w

Reviewed by E. D. Genovese
N Y Rev of Books 19:16 S 21 '72 110w

"No story in America's history has . . . so well stood the retelling, as that of the Old South and its destruction. But . . . Myers's splendid [book] tells it as it has not been told before, in the fullness of its poignance and tragedy. . . . [The letters] convey an impression not confined to only a small and so possibly peculiar cultural area. And though no claim can be made that the picture drawn reflects the whole of the Antebellum and wartime South, it does render the character of a significant part of that society with a vividness and force that are surely unparalleled. . . . Myers has included at the end of the text a complete 'Who's Who,' which presents a biographical sketch of every individual mentioned in the letters. There are more than one thousand of these sketches. . . . [Myers also] has added a fairly extensive Prologue and Epilogue." Madison Jones

N Y Times Bk ■ p1 My 7 '72 1900w

"[In these letters] the family exchange day-to-day news, sometimes prosaic and undramatic, often stuffed with conventional sentiment, piety and weather reports. When war comes, it doesn't affect these people closely at first. They expect an early happy ending. The collapse of their way of life comes so gradually that we don't feel the deepest shock of change any more than the uncomprehending participants do—until it's all over and we look back. Then the perspective is shattering. . . . Myers has edited superbly, refraining from narrative links or footnotes. . . . This takes diligence, which is repaid in immediacy." Walter Clemons
Newsweek 79:97 Ap 24 '72 650w

TLS p656 Je 9 '72 1800w

Reviewed by F. M. Brodie
Va Q R 48:616 autumn '72 1550w

MYERS, ROLLO. Modern French music: from Fauré to Boulez [Eng. title: Modern French music: its evolution and cultural background from 1900 to the present day]. 210p il $12.50 Praeger 781.7 Music, French—History and criticism.

Composers, French
LC 77-154606

Myers writes of the work and lives of twentieth century French composers. "The first part of the book describes the influences—social and cultural—on the twentieth-century composer. The second section concerns the period from [1902] . . . to World War I, a time . . . of challenge to the artistic Establishment. . . . The third part deals with . . . the neoclassical movement, the impact of Dada and Surrealism, and the influence of the modern Viennese school. . . . The fourth section brings us to the present: the birth of musique concrète . . . and the beginning of a new era in music, when composition in the old sense gradually has given way to sound manipulation and greater experimentation." (Publisher's note)

"Necessary for every music library and an excellent choice for the general library."

Choice 9:516 Je '72 140w

"In academic British style, Myers writes of Fauré and d'Indy, 'the new "Old Masters"': Roussel; Koechlin; and Dukas; Debussy, Ravel, Satie, and 'Les Six'; Varèse, Jolivet, and the 'Independents'; Messiaen, Boulez, and younger composers. He devotes a chapter to developments in opera, ballet, and choral music; the partial catalog of operas produced in France between 1900 and the present is useful. . . . For large music libraries." Dika Newlin

Library J 96:2647 S 1 '71 90w

"Myers's assertion that 'French music has always been predominantly aristocratic in its higher manifestations' . . . is debatable. . . . [He] investigates the psychology of musical nationalism on many ethnological and social planes. . . . [and] concludes his historical survey with the observation that 'for the majority of contemporary composers conscious nationalism has ceased to be a source of inspiration. . . . In the period that led up to this phenomenon . . . Myers traces the main evolutionary lines, concluding with a section on the composers of the present day, among them the garish but irresistible Messiaen.'"

TLS p36 Ja 14 '72 550w

MYRDAL, GUNNAR. Asian drama; an inquiry into the poverty of nations; an abridgment by Seth S. King of the Twentieth century fund study. 464p $10 Pantheon bks.

330.95 Asia, South—Economic conditions.
Asia, Southeastern—Economic conditions
ISBN 0-394-47086-9 LC 75-162556

This is an abridgment of the author's three-volume study (BRD 1968) "on the major economic problems, and their implications, of Pakistan, India, Ceylon, Burma, Malaya, Thailand, Indonesia, the Philippines and, to a lesser extent, South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos." (Publishers' Weekly)

"The value of this abridged version of Gunnar Myrdal's monumental Asian Drama is that it incorporates the incisiveness of the original three-volume work and, yet, is reduced to a size more manageable for use in university classrooms and governmental policy-making centers." J. S. Milne

Ann Am Acad 402:148 Jl '72 430w

"King preserves Myrdal's thesis that economic development cannot be understood unless it is studied in its broad political and social matrix, and faithfully summarizes Myrdal's unorthodox yet realistic analysis of the process of change and the factors thwarting it. After an introduction, five chapters examine the economic realities; six explore the nature of political life, planning, and administration; seven analyze population, employment, and the use of labor in agriculture and in large- and small-scale industrialization; and the last six study health, education, and population. Well written, accessible to the layman, and definitive yet succinct." R. E. Will

Library J 97:210 Ja 15 '72 130w

"King, with the author's assistance, has reduced the text to about one-sixth of the original, enormous, length; no attempt has been made to bring the work up to date."

TLS p736 Je 30 '72 60w

MYRDAL, JAN. Gates to Asia; a diary from a long journey [by] Jan Myrdal and Gun Kessle; tr. from the Swedish by Paul Britten Austin. 246p il $7.95 Pantheon bks.

915 Asia, Afghanistan
ISBN 0-394-47115-6 LC 75-162580

A travel diary written over the years 1958 to 1965, with a postscript in 1971, "which begins and ends in Afghanistan. . . . What is happening in various parts of Asia is, Myrdal now concludes, not the development of 'human solidarity' as speeches in the UN and elsewhere suggest, but out-and-out neocolonialism." (Va Q R)

"[Not] a good book. Myrdal writes a staccato, often verbless prose. You know. Crisp. Like that. He is repetitious; much of what he has to say is out of date . . . and he is quite a considerable bore whenever he moves from record to opinion. That he is activated by an ungrated dislike of the British may be forgiven him. . . . But his account of British policy in India and Afghanistan . . . has a very odd ring to any one with an unbiased knowledge of imperial history. Afghanistan is annexed as his private property. . . . It leads to a good laugh or two. More than once he equates the British military with the German SS, and their commander with Hitler. . . . On Soviet Central Asia he is more dispassionate. Among the Turkmens and the Uzbeks he uses his eyes rather than his prejudices and the result is evocative." Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p7 Ap 2 '72 320w

"Polemical essays . . . in the form of travel-ogues, which decry the destructive effects of British colonialism and modern civilization on Afghanistan, with a few pages on India and Turkmenistan. The pseudo-history and interesting but largely irrelevant photos by Kessle, Myrdal's wife, are not particularly informative, while the often fascinating descriptions of the peoples and countries they saw and their pungent comments on Western influence (though often well-founded) are too subjective, emotional, unsystematic, and unoriginal." D. W. Littlefield
Library J 97:874 Mr 1 '72 140w
(Correction: 97:2393 J1 '72)

"[Myrdal's] comments upon those who control Soviet policy in such places as Turkmenistan are just as severe as those which he passes on the baleful effects of British rule in India. His real enthusiasm is reserved for the Afghan people, whose determination to resist British control in past times he admires unstintingly, even to the extent of accepting, quite uncritically from the historical standpoint, their national legends. Despite the justifiable critical comment it is impossible to withhold admiration from Mr Myrdal and his wife for their dauntless explorations." TLS p887 J1 28 '72 150w

"[This] contains also a socio-political commentary that can only be called 'drastic'. . . . There is a bitterness in much of [Myrdal's] analysis, but there is also a deep sympathy and understanding. It is regrettable that so many of Gun Kessle's excellent photographs are without caption. Were they clued with the circumambient text, this would be unimportant; as it is, it is a bit frustrating." Va Q R 48:xiv winter '72 130w

MYRON, ROBERT. Modern art in America [by] Robert Myron [and] Abner Sundell. 218p il $5.95 Crowell-Collier press
709.73 Art, American. Art, Modern—20th century
LC 76-153760

This book presents "modern schools of art, artists, paintings, buildings, and sculptures of the years from 1871 to the 1960's. Besides presenting historical information, the authors also explore how this art relates to American sociology." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index.

"Both history and sociology have been described in a fluid, lucid, and beautiful text that is perfectly illustrated with many excellent reproductions. An outstanding piece of nonfiction." A. L. S.
Horn Bk 48:160 Ap '72 250w

"A detailed, very vivid, albeit sometimes confusing survey. . . . [The] organization is occasionally neglected and some facts omitted: for example, the Cubist look of Marin's paintings is cited 30 pages before cubism is explained; the academic tradition in contrast to developing modern painting is never defined or illustrated although academic sculpture is illustrated, etc. Illustrations are in black and white only and there are few; for this reason, as well as the high vocabulary load, the book will be most useful and interesting to teens with some previous general knowledge of art." M. A. Dorsey
Library J 97:1618 Ap 15 '72 100w [YA]

N

NABOKOV, NICOLAS. American music since 1910. See Twentieth-century composers, v 1

NABOKOV, VLADIMIR. Glory: a novel. tr. from the Russian by Dmitri Nabokov in collaboration with the author. 205p $6.95 McGraw
ISBN 0-07-045733-6 LC 73-165256

"This, the fifth of Nabokov's nine Russian novels and the last to be translated into English, appeared first in Germany in 1932. [It] is the story of Martin Edelweiss, a Russian émigré who discovers that he is not good for much. He has no particular talent, is not attracted to work, is in love with a girl who refuses to marry him. . . . Martin, realizing that his life—he is then 22—is about to be wasted . . . [decides to] embark upon a

'perilous, daredevil project,' an illegal attempt to re-enter Soviet Russia, which [he] and his mother had abandoned in 1919. He seems to succeed; anyway, he is not heard from again." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by Daniel Coogan
America 126:184 F 19 '72 650w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 228:153 N 1 '71 30w

Reviewed by F. L. Ryan
Best Sell 31:478 F 1 '72 550w

"What [the novel] lacks is a sense of focus. It is full of brilliant flashes. A metaphor sparkles, a memory gleams. One is constantly aware of the presence of Nabokov himself. . . . Felicities also abound—occasionally felicities of language, but more often of thought: fancies, darting asides, conceits. At a time when gray, workaday prose is the rule, or else dense patches of private writing, it is marvelous to find such loving care for detail. At the same time, the effect is often reminiscent of art nouveau—like, say an excessive piece of Lalique jewelry. It goes too far, to the detriment of the English language. . . . The original, and more fitting, title of the book is Podvig, or 'The Exploit.' It would, I think, have been better to leave it untouched as an honorable piece of juvenilia rather than to give it a new name and launch it afresh in a different world." Alan Pryce-Jones
Book World p3 Ja 2 '72 1000w
Choice 9:823 S '72 180w

Reviewed by R. W. Haney
Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 20 '72 700w

Reviewed by Paul Theroux
Encounter 38:70 My '72 130w

"This tale of Martin, the wistful émigré, and Sonia, his sometime girlfriend, and how Martin's melancholy dreams turn into melancholy reality has a muted charm and a form that meanders its telling way into the middle of romance. We must agree with Nabokov when he says in his foreword that 'Martin is the kindest, uprightest, and most touching of all my young men; and little Sonia . . . the most oddly attractive of all my young girls.' A book it will be a pleasure adding to all libraries." Dorothy Nyren
Library J 96:2793 S 15 '71 100w

Reviewed by D. K. Mano
Nat R 24:226 Mr 3 '72 330w

Reviewed by Mary Borg
New Statesman 83:398 Mr 24 '72 340w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
N Y Rev of Books 18:12 F 24 '72 1250w

Reviewed by Hortense Calisher
N Y Times Bk R p1 Ja 9 '72 2250w

Reviewed by John Updike
New Yorker 48:96 F 26 '72 1200w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:62 Ja 10 '72 550w

"[This book] shares with that attractive work [Speak, Memory, rev. ed, BRD 1970] some of Nabokov's most pleasant qualities: quiet humor; sensuous absorption in moments of stopped time; evocations of childhood's dreamy experiences (snow, train rides, toys); and sympathetically funny descriptions of adolescence with its joint onslaughts of puberty and poshlost. . . . The ending titillates pleasingly. But getting there is more than half the fun, for the old fan and novice Nabokovian alike. Glory offers vignettes of childhood: subtle and sharp perceptions (remember, this is a youthfully exuberant novel, though it comes to us as a mid-winter spring); lovely stylistic tricks and meaningfully enigmatic assertions, and much, much more. It's a glorious novel—better than Invitation of a Beheading (BRD 1957) with which to make converts." J. D. O'Hara
Sat R 55:36 Ja 15 '72 480w

Reviewed by Martha Duffy
Time 99:63 Ja 24 '72 800w
TLS p325 Mr 24 '72 800w

NABOKOV, VLADIMIR. Transparent things: a novel by the author of Lolita and Invitation of a Beheading. 104p $5.95 McGraw

ISBN 0-07-045734-4 LC 72-3989

"The protagonist of this novella, the man who falls in love with a girl as he learns

NABOKOV, VLADIMIR—Continued

about her past, is Hugh Person (sometimes You Person). Person is 40, a rootless American; he pursues through second-class Swiss resorts a girl named Armande—she is hard, bitchy, elusive—and confers with a curmudgeonly expatriate writer, [R.] Person marries Armande, kills her, is jailed and released, embarks on [a pilgrimage] . . . and perishes in a hotel blaze." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 230:141 D '72 420w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
Best Sell 32:444 D 15 '72 450w

"Nabokov's newest novel continues his preoccupation with the escapes from space and time so ecstatically celebrated in Invitation of a Beheading [BRD 1969]; here, such liberation looms as a frightful plunge into deepening gulfs of cosmic confusion. A complete narrative omniscience exposes all human pretenses to order, and shows that human beings are the 'transparent things,' subject to determinism and coincidence, struggling futilely against the universe's lofty disdain of orderly sequences of coherence or time. . . . Seldom has real metaphysical terror been expressed in accents of such graceful elegance. As Nabokov's opus grows toward its conclusion, it becomes more apparent (it also becomes more real) that his books are lessons in the art of civilized survival." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:2753 S 1 '72 500w
New Repub 167:32 N 18 '72 300w

"[This] is Nabokov's first work in English to have no Russian novel peering over its shoulder, waiting for its chance, and this seems to make a large difference in the writing. . . . This is a new shy Nabokov for much of the time, hiding in borrowed language far more than before. The characters in the earlier works were lost among objects, virtually invisible in a world of brilliantly realized and memorialized things. There was hardly room for a person to be human in those novels, and Transparent Things seems to confess this. It is a quest for its own central character, for a person (Hugh Person): a problematic, uncertain pursuit. . . . But Nabokov's answer, even now, is not to return us to humanity but to propose new directions of flight. He finds his person not in his flesh and blood but in his fate, in the design his life yields when it's over." Michael Wood

N Y Rev of Books 19:12 N 16 '72 2850w

Reviewed by Mavis Gallant
N Y Times Bk R p1 N 19 '72 1500w

Reviewed by John Updike
New Yorker 48:242 N 18 '72 1900w

"[Nabokov] has always been a mannerist—elliptical, self-conscious, teasing and digressive—but his early fiction, first written in Russian, pleasingly conveyed romantic, ethereal stories through sensuous and unpretentious prose. His later work grew longer, more difficult of access (Nabokov's most articulate supporters, Edmund Wilson and Mary McCarthy, collapsed before the onanistic concatenations of Invitation). . . . The inkhorn language is oppressive: 'Twin dimples of the crescentic type,' Nabokov writes. Why not 'crescent?' In Invitation, an overpowering book, such pointless mannerisms could be overlooked; a trifle like Transparent Things crumbles beneath them." P. S. P.

Newsweek 80:131 N 20 '72 450w

"One of Nabokov's central imaginative concerns has been to pit art against death in his fiction. . . . His new novella focuses this opposition with a peculiar intensity and with striking virtuosity. . . . The death that is the key to all the others is not that of the protagonist, but that of a novelist, a certain Baron R., who . . . is the most teasing in the gallery of ironic and distinctly partial self-portraits that Nabokov has given us in his many novels. . . . [The book] confronts an ultimate question within a highly restricted narrative compass. Because of its compactness, one cannot really compare it to the more elaborate, less distanced rendering of character and event in Nabokov's longer works. This book remains, however, a beautiful instance of Nabokov's mastery—definitely controlled, amazingly inventive, and finally poignant through all the complexities of its intellectual design." Robert Alter

Sat R 55:72 N 11 '72 2400w

Reviewed by Martha Duffy
Time 100:116 D 11 '72 650w

NADEAU, MAURICE. The greatness of Flaubert; tr. by Barbara Bray. 307p $9.95 Lib. press

843 Flaubert, Gustave
ISBN 0-912050-09-8 LC 77-161408

This "account of Flaubert's life and career . . . [includes] an interpretation of his novels—Madame Bovary, Salammbô [and] Sentimental Education." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. First published in French under the title Gustave Flaubert, écrivain, essai.

"Nadeau's work as editor of the eighteen volumes of the complete works of Flaubert has gained him a rare intimacy with his subject. His book does not put forward any specific thesis, declaring itself instead a work of admiration. Still there is a convincing line of interpretation running throughout which deals with Flaubert's frustrated quest for an Absolute." A. J. McKenna

America 126:410 Ap 15 '72 450w

"Bray's translation, while it reads well and does justice to the original, seems at times to show evidence of undue haste. However, all direct quotations from Flaubert are given in both French and English—and this is occasionally done to make sure that Nadeau has not been misrepresented. . . . Nadeau's work provides a worthwhile and stimulating introduction to one of France's outstanding 19th-century writers."

Choice 9:821 S '72 180w

"[This book] bristles with critical insights. . . . Alternating periods of bleak despair with bursts of terrifying exaltation, [Flaubert] threw himself into his writing like a madman. Each work, according to critic Nadeau, was a new discovery, a voyage into his private unknown, 'anchors aweigh' in the pursuit of identity." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 6 '72 400w

Reviewed by Wallace Fowlie
Nation 215:341 O 16 '72 1600w

"Nadeau points out that Flaubert may be a good deal more complicated than he at first appears. . . . [This work is] for anyone wishing to get an over-all, commonsensical view of the writer's life and achievement. . . . Nadeau does not actually try to place the writer on any scale of relative eminence by comparison with other novelists, either French or foreign. He tends to take the interest . . . [in Flaubert's] books for granted. . . . He makes judicious incidental remarks about all the novels, but his purpose is not primarily critical. His aim is rather to describe the Flaubert phenomenon." John Weightman

N Y Rev of Books 18:10 Ap 6 '72 1150w

NADEL, MARK V. The politics of consumer protection. 257p $8.50 Bobbs

380.1 Consumer protection
LC 78-170712

"This volume provides a . . . history of consumer protection policy, a description of the development of current interest in consumer issues, a critical analysis of the role of Congress and executive agencies in consumer protection, and an examination of the role of the press and the new consumer advocates in the policy process. . . . [Included are] case studies of the Pure Food and Drug Act Amendments of 1962, the Consumer Credit Protection Act (truth-in-lending), and the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act. Finally, the author provides . . . discussions of the allocation of costs and benefits in consumer policy, and the problems of representing an unorganized public interest in the policy process." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is fearless and objective on a subject most corporations would prefer to file and forget. . . . Nadel deals frankly and in detail with the many problems faced by and involved in the consumer movement. . . . [and he] has studied his subject exhaustively. . . . We do not understand why this book, which might have become another 100,000,000 Guinea Pigs. [by A. Kallet and F. Schlink, BRD 1933], a popular volume on the consumer movement decades ago, should have been couched in such deadening language. . . . Any able editor could have run this book through the typewriter and made it provocative and readable." E. L. Bernays

Ann Am Acad 403:226 S '72 350w

"Nadel has command of his subject and has presented it in a fashion that has many uses for the professional as well as for the interested layman. I found [his] approach refreshing. . . . [He] is effective in teasing new insights from material and in providing background data that is often missing in this kind of publication. . . . This volume should be very helpful to all students of consumerism, especially those who are primarily interested in the public policy aspects." W. H. Marshall

J Home Econ 64:44 O '72 300w

NADEN, CORINNE J. The Triangle Shirtwaist fire, March 25, 1911; the blaze that changed an industry. (A Focus bk) 58p il $3.95 Watts, F.

974.71 Triangle Shirtwaist Company, Inc., New York—Fire, 1911—Juvenile literature
SBN 531-01023-6 LC 70-137153

The author gives an account of the tragedy in which 146 persons died. She comments on such topics as the fire laws, working conditions, public opinion and the impact of the fire on labor legislation. Bibliography. Index. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

Best Sell 32:98 My 15 '72 80w

"This concise, factual book . . . presents a vivid description of the sweatshop, and carefully outlines the growing power of the unions to improve working conditions. With its particular focus, this title makes a good supplement to more comprehensive views of the development of organized labor—e.g., I. Werstein's The Great Struggle [BRD 1966]." A. M. Skivington

Library J 96:2365 J1 '71 280w

"Written for young people (grades 7 up) . . . [this] title belongs to a series that elaborates on events in American history which, for lack of space, receive little attention in the average text. As supplementary reading [it] will enrich courses in United States history."

Social Studies 63:142 Mr '72 30w

NADER, RALPH. Action for a change; a student's manual for public interest organizing, by Ralph Nader and Donald Ross, with Brent English and Joseph Highland. 118p $5.95; pa $1.85 Grossman pubs.

378.1 College students—Political activity—Handbooks, manuals, etc.
SBN 670-01936-4 LC 73-170617

The authors seek to "show college students how to get involved effectively in social policy making. [They describe how] college and university enrollments in a particular geographic area—a state, for example—can get together and form a Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) which will have an impact on the community outside the campus [in] . . . such vital public issues as discrimination, pollution, graft, etc., which students up until now have been unable to influence significantly. [The book offers information on such topics as fund raising, recruiting a professional staff, advertising, petitioning, and getting faculty support]." (Library J)

"Basically a guide to setting up a . . . Nader's Raiders operation for students. It is reasonably useful as a cookbook for establishing such an operation, giving information concerning funding, organization of the group, and other matters. But the information, even in the limited sense of providing the basic facts, is rather skimpy, and the book offers nothing to the general reader interested in some analysis of discussion of goals of the Nader style of organization and research. Will be of interest to college libraries, but of little use to anyone else."

Choice 9:414 My '72 100w

"The inclusion of the authors' solutions to financial, legal and hiring difficulties involved in forming a PIRG should increase the usefulness of this clearly-written, serious book."

Harry Malm

Library J 97:1184 Mr 15 '72 110w

NADER, RALPH. Old age: the last segregation. See Old age: the last segregation

NADER, RALPH. Ralph Nader's study group report on antitrust enforcement. See The closed enterprise system

NADER, RALPH. Water wasteland. See Zwick, D.

NADER, RALPH, ed. Whistle blowing; the report of the conference on professional responsibility; ed. by Ralph Nader, Peter J. Petkas, and Kate Blackwell. 302p $6.95 Grossman pubs.

329 Lobbying. Witnesses
SBN 670-76224-5 LC 74-170616

"This book, which grew out of the speeches presented before a 1971 Washington conference, celebrates 'whistle blowing'—the act whereby an individual speaks out when the organization with whom he or she is associated deceives the public. The book begins by presenting speeches of four men who encourage whistle blowing—Nader, Senator William Proxmire of Wisconsin, Robert Townsend (author of Up the Organization [BRD 1970]), and Arthur S. Miller, professor of law at Georgetown University. It then goes on to present [profiles] . . . of various whistle blowers [explaining] how and why they blew the whistle, how their organizations reacted, and more." (Library J) The book concludes with a discussion on the changes in laws, in government and corporate practice which will protect the ethical whistle blower. It suggests strategies that whistle blowers might follow. Index.

"The book delivers an important but sad lesson: whistle blowing is often necessary to keep organizations honest. A most valuable book." A. J. Anderson

Library J 97:3146 O 1 '72 150w

"Nader strikes again. . . . [The book] examines such questions as: When does a man owe more to his fellow-citizens than to his company or government agency? Should information be given anonymously? Should a man first resign and then expose? For whistle-blowers, whistle-blowees and Nader-watchers."

N Y Times Bk R p53 S 24 '72 90w

NADER, RALPH. The workers. See Lasson, K.

NAGEL, ERNEST. Observation and theory in science [by] Ernest Nagel, Sylvain Bromberger [and] Adolf Grünbaum; with an introd. by Stephen F. Barker. 134p $6.95 Johns Hopkins press

501 Science—Philosophy. Science—Methodology
ISBN 0-8018-1303-4 LC 72-150043

"The question of whether scientific theories can be proven true or false through observation is examined . . . by three philosophers of science. Ernest Nagel considers the observation-theoretical distinction and offers a defense plus a modified means of construing the contrast. Sylvain Bromberger, rejecting the formalistic view of scientific theory, sketches an alternative approach in terms of the logic of questions of a certain sort, their answers, and their presuppositions. Adolf Grünbaum argues that Duhem's thesis of the impossibility of testing scientific theories by crucial experiments cannot be used to support sceptical claims as to the possibility of providing independent verification or falsification of theories." (Choice)

Choice 8:1342 D '71 140w

"The essays by Professors Nagel and Grünbaum and, to a lesser extent, that by Professor Bromberger are likely to reinforce the regrettable tendency towards separating the philosophy of science from the rest of philosophy and, consequently, towards impoverishing both."

TLS p1269 O 15 '71 250w

NAGEL, PAUL C. This sacred trust: American nationality, 1798-1898. 376p $9.50 Oxford

917.3 Nationalism. U.S.—Civilization
ISBN 0-19-501429-4 LC 78-159648

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:[1379] D '71 190w

Reviewed by C. A. Barker

J Am Hist 59:130 Je '72 600w

Va Q R 48:xxxi winter '72 150w

NAGLER, BARNEY. Brown bomber. 236p pl $7.95 World pub

B or 92 Louis, Joe. Mental illness
ISBN 0-529-04522-2 LC 71-183089

"Here are two stories which alternate chapter by chapter and converge in May of 1970

NAGLER, BARNEY—Continued

with Louis' commitment to Colorado Psychiatric Hospital: one relates events occurring within a few years of the hospitalization; the other gives an account of Louis' earlier life." (Library J)

"Joe Louis' rags-to-riches story is told in a matter-of-fact manner by columnist Barney Nagler. That he went through about four million dollars is less interesting than how he did it. When the money rolled in, Joe lived it up and remembered his family and those less fortunate than himself. . . . What is most worthwhile about 'Brown Bomber' is the picture of Joe as a caring person."

Best Sell 32:139 Je 15 '72 300w

"[The book's] format was no doubt designed to relate Louis' mental illness to his earlier experience, but the connection is tenuous. The 'pilgrimage' of the title is apparently Louis' fight for emotional health, still being fought, according to Nagler. This is probably as good a portrait of Louis as has been done—a highly personal biography with little attention paid to aspects of boxing not touching Louis directly, although Nagler knows the business thoroughly. . . . Recommended." Jerry Cao

Library J 97:1736 My 1 '72 90w

"[The author] shows Louis as a man capable—until time caught up with him—of demolishing powerful physical opponents but unable to cope with the furies of the psyche. The book is mainly of interest for its descriptions of the tragic struggle over the latter. . . . [Nagler also deals with] Louis's insatiable gambling, his sexual affairs, and the illegitimate child born in 1967, his perpetual indebtedness and IRS problems. . . . [which] serve to remind us how particularly transitory is sports glory, how deceptive the easy buck, how fragile an ex-champ."

N Y Rev of Books 18:37 My 18 '72 190w

NAHAL, CHAMAN. The narrative pattern in Ernest Hemingway's fiction. 245p $10 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

813 Hemingway, Ernest

ISBN 0-8386-7795-9

LC 75-131906

"Nahal argues that the moment of passivity rather than the moment of action is the real center of Hemingway's work. . . . asserting that it is qualitatively different from similar moments in other writers, that it places the Hemingway character in fruitful touch with 'the dark mystery that surrounds man,' and links him with the outer cosmos. In support of his argument. . . . [he] assembles examples from the novels." (Am Lit) Bibliography.

"[Nahal's] argument is unconvincing. The diastolic movement, far from being something new, seems like just another way of referring to the act of self-submersion, the interlude of quiet thought that runs all through the work of, among others, James and Conrad. . . . It would appear that Mr. Nahal's claim to an original interpretation is verbal rather than actual. His reading of the novels and stories is often eccentric. . . . His book may not be persuasive in its main argument and is certainly marked by disconcerting judgments. But its occasional insights reflect the presence of a fresh, active, if not altogether controlled intelligence." Leo Gurko

Am Lit 44:165 Mr '72 380w

"Nahal sometimes generalizes too much and fails to make clear how examples illustrate points they are used to support. He under-values earlier critical concern for the inner lives of characters. He presents an affirmative view of Hemingway's universe while seeming to say that it ultimately defeats man, and without directly refuting less affirmative formulation. An interesting book, useful to students who can read Baker, Gurko, Hovey, or Young for alternative perspectives."

Choice 9:215 Ap '72 140w

"[Nahal's] straightforward, story-by-story analysis stays with the texts at most points and, through illustrations of Hemingway's variety of conscious artistic choices, quietly raises significant objections to some generally held theories on the personal motivations in Hemingway's fiction. Recommended for academic collections in modern literature as a sober and thoughtful piece of explication."

C. W. Mann

Library J 96:4096 D 15 '71 100w

NAKANE, CHIE. Japanese society. (Calif. Univ. Center for Japanese and Korean studies. Publication) 157p $5 Univ. of Calif. press

309.152 Japan—Social conditions. Social groups

ISBN 0-520-01642-4 LC 71-100021

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Tosh Lee

Am Pol Sci R 65:1223 D '71 1000w

Reviewed by T. O. Wilkinson

Contemp Sociol 1:433 S '72 650w

Reviewed by Carlo Caldarola

Pacific Affairs 44:618 winter '71-'72 1350w

NAMIER, JULIA. Lewis Namier: a biography. 347p il maps pl $13.75 Oxford

B or 92 Namier, Sir Lewis Bernstein

ISBN 0-19-211706-8 LC [76-852488]

Namier's second wife is the author of this biography. "She met Namier when both were in London in 1942; they were married in 1947. He too was Russian-born." (Economist)

Reviewed by S. R. Graubard

Am Hist R 77:1446 D '72 410w

Reviewed by J. P. Kenyon

Book World p18 S 26 '71 1300w

"Because [Namier] wrote on 18th-century Anglo-American history, the political culture of 19th-century Europe, and 20th-century diplomatic history; because he originated and developed the prosopographical method of historical inquiry and research; and because of his involvement in Zionist politics as well, this biography (the only one thus far) will interest several groups of readers. Being at once vain, a historian, and influenced by psychoanalysis, Namier spent the last 18 months of his life dictating to his wife reminiscences of his childhood and youth. . . . Hence this is actually an autobiographical-biography, an invaluable document. . . . Unfortunately, Lady Namier lacks a sense of proportion or control over detail. And while Namier's quirky personality is fully explained and comprehensible at last, his mind as a historian is left for others to assay and interpret."

Choice 8:1071 O '71 180w

"This book is astonishingly frank in many ways, oddly reticent in one or two others; and it does not bear that meticulous patina of scholarship which characterised Namier's published work. But it does communicate his character; and the vivid and telling account of his childhood is based on long talks between him and the author in the last two years of their remarkable marriage. He was a man . . . of whom anecdotes, mostly malicious, will long be told; and yet a man, on any account, who was outstanding. This book shows him sombre as well as brilliant, wayward as well as incisive; forceful, dogmatic even, in manner. . . . And by his private researches in the 1920's, and his 20 years' tenure of the chair of modern history at Manchester, he revolutionised the craft of history-writing as it is practised in England and America."

Economist 239:53 My 29 '71 600w

"As a personal memoir this is an important document; as a biography of Sir Lewis it is disquieting. His public life is chronicled, and his major scholarly achievements are memorialized. Even some of his severe neuroses are described (but with deliberate naïveté). Thus the man eludes us. This is hagiography, and however carefully done, the genre is disappointing to the modern reader. Lady Namier's fussy and dense style only adds to the difficulties of this 'official' biography. And the book is much too expensive." D. P. Jordan

Library J 96:4003 D 1 '71 160w

Reviewed by John Raymond

New Statesman 81:742 My 28 '71 1450w

"This is an intimate and moving book. Unquestionably, Lady Namier's influence on her husband's last years, though never in the remotest degree self-assertive, was very great, and she gave his life a sheet-anchor which had hitherto been lacking. The whole book is in some sense suffused by this rich experience, and by the meeting of these so different, yet congruent, personalities. . . . Large sections of the book, for which no other witness exists, are pure autobiography, told in the words of an understanding and deeply sympathetic listener. [Namier's] writings are an imperfect tribute to his intellectual stature. His widow's biography attests his stature as a human being."

TLS p577 My 21 '71 2900w

NANRY, CHARLES, ed. American music: from Storyville to Woodstock; with a foreword by Irving Louis Horowitz. 290p $7.50; pa $2.95 Transaction bks; for sale by Dutton

780 Jazz music—History and criticism. Music, Popular (Songs, etc.)—History and criticism. Music, American—History and criticism
ISBN 0-87855-007-0; 0-87855-506-4 (pa)
LC 71-164978

A "collection of essays and articles which stems from the Rutgers University Institute of Jazz Studies conference on 'Jazz and all that sociology,' but which also relies on previously published material. . . . Most of the papers and articles concentrate on sociological aspects of jazz and rock music of the past 25 years. The contributors, most of whom are sociologists, are Morroe Berger, Neil Leonard, Howard S. Becker, Nat Hentoff, Robert A. Stebbins, Richard A. Peterson, Christopher White, Robert R. Faulkner, Howard Junker, Jon Landau, Irving Louis Horowitz, and the editor." (Choice)

"The volume makes for quick and interesting reading, but clearly belongs in the browsing or popular collections of academic libraries."

Choice 9:824 S '72 180w

"[An] uneven collection of articles. . . . They include an interesting look at the life of the seldom considered musician in the square, middle-class dance band by Howard S. Becker and a piece by Nat Hentoff on 'paying dues,' the personal struggle involved in playing jazz. However, the six others in this section are largely a waste of time. The final third includes articles on rock from Rolling Stone which don't match the scholarly tone of the other writings. The book on the whole simply doesn't hang together, and it won't be popular with many YA's." Collin Clark

Library J 97:2495 J1 '72 220w

NAPIER, B. D. On new creation. 114p $4.95 La. state univ. press

261 Christianity. Civilization, Modern. U.S.—Civilization
ISBN 0-8071-0524-4 LC 70-134553

The chaplain of Stanford University relates Biblical materials to present areas of discontent in chapters which were first delivered as Rockwell lectures at Rice University.

"An extended sermon with the limitations of the genre: its rhetoric is oral, not written, communication; its audience is church members, called upon to improve their attitudes; its language is Biblical symbolism used to accord credit moderately radical social thought; its outline is obvious; its originality minor. It identifies the younger generation as a prophetic voice leading a new Israel out of a tired Egypt to an uncertain future with much hope but not much else."

Choice 8:1192 N '71 90w

Christian Century 88:476 Ap 14 '71 40w

NAPOLITAN, JOSEPH. The election game, and how to win it. 300p $6.95 Doubleday

329 Politics, Practical
LC 71-178884

"Using his former wins and losses as illustrations, [the author] shows how to act in promoting one's candidate, what to do, and when and where to do it and places a special emphasis on electronic campaigning." (Library J) Index.

"[This] is a brisk and lively if somewhat repetitious account of how political consultants work and what they do. [Napolitan] lays down three rules for the winning of elections . . . and illustrates their application out of his own experience. . . . He concludes with some eminently sensible recommendations for the Democratic campaign of 1972. He also presents generally sound proposals for reforming the political process. . . . Napolitan is obviously a responsible practitioner . . . and one must commend his initiative in founding the American Association of Political Consultants and co-founding the International Association of Political Consultants. [His book is] . . . astute, useful, and disarming." Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Book World p3 Ap 16 '72 950w

"[Napolitan seems to write] more for prospective employers than for the edification of the layman. For example, in 'How To Beat Richard Nixon in 1972,' the last chapter, the author outlines how he would handle the situation using his ideas set forth elsewhere in the book. . . . While touching on all aspects of campaign management, the book lacks coherence and contains superfluous material. Still, anyone electioneering should sift through the pages." D. A. Bower

Library J 97:1023 Mr 15 '72 130w

"I know the sense that Napolitan has of politics, because I've been in it, as a speechwriter and a consultant. His description of the excitement of the game, the thrill of achievement, is accurate. And that's the problem. Sooner or later a political consultant has to face the same questions any professional does—to what end are skills to be employed? . . . [This book offers] an instructive look at how politics works. It will tell the interested on-looker how the process works. But it will tell him, also, the limits of viewing politics 'professionally.'" Jeff Greenfield

N Y Times Bk R p40 Je 4 '72 450w

NARANJO, CLAUDIO. On the psychology of meditation [by] Claudio Naranjo and Robert E. Ornstein. (An Esalen bk) 248p $7.95 Viking

291.4 Meditation—Psychology. Consciousness
SBN 670-52506-5 LC 76-149270

"The Eastern religions, especially, have many practices that produce states of consciousness unexplainable by traditional Western science, and the psychologist coauthors of this . . . survey emphasize these religions in their examination of the methods and goals of meditation. Control of the body—even the automatic nervous system—is an important factor in some types of meditation. Naranjo and Ornstein survey psychological investigations that link the 'soft' phenomena of religious mind control with the 'hard' results of experimental psychology." (Library J) Bibliography.

"It is necessary first to appreciate meditation not as somebody or other's system for securing some end or other, but rather as our own life, our own consciousness, filling its own felt need. We shall then be in a much better position to understand the chief aim of this important book: which is, to show what meditation is in its real intention, to get beyond this or that technique to some basic and experienceable spiritual need, which those techniques will then be shown, in their different ways, to be meeting. . . . This book is thoroughly worth buying, and reading—with a pencil. We desperately need what the book is talking about and showing to be a real possibility." Sebastian Moore

Critic 30:81 Mr '72 1850w

"This excellent review will interest psychologists and general readers." George Adelman
Library J 96:3145 O 1 '71 120w

NASH, GARY B. Class and society in early America. 205p il $7.95; pa $3.50 Prentice-Hall

301.44 U.S.—Social conditions. Social classes. U.S.—History—Colonial period—Sources
SBN 13-135111-7; 13-135103-6 (pa)
LC 71-110436

"Noting that American historians are in considerable disagreement over the 'social contours and attitudes of colonial society,' Nash endeavors to systematize the ways in which various assessments are made and data are interpreted. . . . By using such new sources as birth, marriage, and death records, tax lists, and census reports, it is hoped to balance more standard accounts resting largely on the opinions and decisions of colonial elites. The book [offers] samples of sources traditionally employed as well as those utilizing newer methods . . . [and includes] a series of articles dealing with such empirical manifestations of social stratification as honorific titles, estate inventories, tax lists, and wealth." (Am Soc R) Bibliography.

NASH, G. B.—Continued

"The problem of evidence and inference in history, in this case of American colonial history, is at the heart of this compact collection of essays and commentaries. The introductory essay by Nash is a model of clarity and substance which sets the tone for the entire volume. . . . A number of extremely interesting questions are raised." Suzanne Keller

Am Soc R 36:1134 D '71 320w

"The author is convinced that the 'literary' interpretations have not exposed an accurate picture of American society, but he seems to believe that modern scholarship will prevail. A provocative volume which bears close scrutiny."

Choice 8:436 My '71 210w

NASH, JUNE. In the eyes of the ancestors; belief and behavior in a Maya community. 368p il $12.50 Yale univ. press

970.3 Mayas
SBN 300-01135-0 LC 70-81425

This study of the "Tzeltal community of Amatenango, Chiapas, located along the Pan American Highway . . . [ranges] from economic activities, political organization and behavior to religious beliefs, rituals and other subjects. This data is the result of eighteen months in the village during four field sessions beginning in 1957, and ending in 1965, with brief visits during the following two years. The author documents the socio-cultural changes that are taking place in Amatenango. . . . She describes points of stress and conflict within the society and the traditional forces that react against or support the new trends." (Am Anthropol) Bibliography. Index.

"The better ethnographies meet at least several criteria: (1) detailed, comprehensive and precise data; (2) a presentation of the data in such a way as to facilitate the testing of the author's interpretations; (3) the inclusion of material that give a vivid sense of the life, goals, values and chief preoccupations of the people; and (4) an absence of ethnographic theme or ethnographic rhetoric. Nash's ethnography of a Mayan community in Chiapas . . . is especially good on the first, second, and fourth criteria, and has some useful third-criterion material. . . . The broader theorizing is kept at a minimum, most of it being limited to a brief discussion of equilibrium characteristics of the town in the last few pages. . . . This book should be most valuable to the Mesoamerican specialist." Benjamin Colby
Am Anthropol 73:1322 D '71 700w

"[This book] offers good ethnographic descriptions of the community's economic, political, and religious systems, as well as the nature of family life. Nash . . . has worked in highland Chiapas for more than a decade, and is well qualified to write this book. . . . [It] can be read in upper level undergraduate and graduate courses in social anthropology, primitive religion, culture change, and the effects of national development in Latin America and is highly recommended for purchase by college libraries."

Choice 7:952 S '70 140w

NASH, OGDEN. The old dog barks backwards; il. by Robert Binks. 129p $5.95 Little 811

ISBN 0-316-59804-6 LC 76-186967

This "collection of seventy-seven fugitive poems . . . is a posthumous volume (Mr. Nash died a year ago). . . . The title subjects range from 'Children Under 12 No Charge, and That's Too Much' to 'I Wonder What They Brought from Ghent to Aix' to, of course, women and their ways (e.g., 'Speak to Me Only With Thine Eyes, and Please, Not Too Fast.' . . . The struggle for liberation is acknowledged . . . and in 'Sexual Politics Farewell: A Memo to Kate Millett, Shulamith Firestone, Betty Friedan, Et Al. (Al Stands for Alice Not Albert),' he offers this happy ending: 'Ladies the war is over, the battle of the sexes is terminated, yours is the victorious gender/Here-with please find my unconditional surrender/

. . . Farewell, a long farewell to marital fuss;/ To the victor belong the spoils, which is us.'" (Sat R)

"[This] collection of verse . . . is as loose and lively as Nash . . . was before in all his years. He comments on the generation gap—at least, the way things are as opposed to the way things were and ought-to-be; he has two sections devoted to creatures one would never-in-the-world think of writing verse about (e.g., a sulphur-bottom whale, a hyena, the coelecanth, the elk, et al.), and some other topics that you should enjoy for yourself without foremention. I like all of them." R. F. G.

Best Sell 32:356 N 1 '72 200w

"The inimitable master of the outrageous pun and audacious rhyme wryly comments on the current scene with a wit that is both gentle and piquant. A delightful collection, this book is recommended for all who enjoy Nash's particular magic with words. Also, it may contain the only recorded instance of 'Mauch Chunk' being rhymed." H. E. Hutchinson

Library J 97:3596 N 1 '72 70w

"Nash's new volume is work from the last three or four years of his life. Some of it is not particularly good Nash; all of it wears thin . . . if read in big hunks; but it is all sufficiently sharp and sufficiently attuned to contemporary occasions to suggest that Nash's feel for the here and now did not diminish in old age. Nor did his wit. There are even some surprising brief pieces in which he abandons his lifelong pose of Look-I-Can-Write-Worse-Verse-Than-You-Can, and easily qualifies as a good comic poet!" Reed Whittlemore

New Repub 167:31 O 21 '72 500w

"The great versifier, Ogden Nash, is back again in this sprightly [collection]."

Sat R 55:88 N 4 '72 170w

NASH, WALTER. Our experience of language. 222p $6.95 St Martins

420 English language
LC 76-165542

"Do ordinary conversations illustrate rules of linguistic behavior? Nash claims that they do, asserting that 'when we speak we demonstrate not only the coherence of our language, but also the coherence of our social system.' The concern with language as a form of social experience is the unifying theme of this book. It considers language, in particular English, from diverse perspectives: as an element in the pattern of daily life, as a form of contract between individuals and society, as the object and instrument of social judgments, as a historical testament to the continuity of human culture, and as the medium of literary art." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"If this volume is caviar to the general semanticist, for some it will become, and is likely long to remain, the most beautiful general book on human speech. . . . Nash (University of Nottingham) is not widely known as a writer on linguistics, but he is sufficiently informed to be reliable, and he evokes the power and beauty of language as the more determinedly scientific phoneme watchers have not. Historical evidence is used mainly to illuminate present-day English, notably in British standard dialects. Nash uses illustration with originality and charm, and some of his epithets are pure delight."

Choice 9:1287 D '72 160w

"Nash speaks about linguistic performance from an obviously knowledgeable background in the import of scientific linguistics à la Chomsky. . . . Three appendixes contain phonetic symbols and terminology, some examples of middle and modern English, and a select bibliography. This volume is much like the hundreds of others that have been written on the subject of language and life within the Hayakawa (general semantics) framework. The advantage this book has over the others is that it has not compromised the position of scientific linguistics while retaining a popular style." E. R. Maxwell

Library J 97:2732 S 1 '72 150w

"In this well-ordered and attractive book Nash . . . is primarily concerned with language as 'the medium, the determinant, the substance, even, of much of our experience; as something we use and respond to, rather than as an object for definition and analysis'. . . . [He] records numerous 'imaginary conversations' between individuals in all kinds of circumstances to illustrate different registers or levels of speech. These may at first blush appear too easy, even naive, but upon closer examination the reader will probably conclude that they show both skill and insight. They will certainly prove to be of special interest and value to contemporary foreign students of English and to future students of sociolinguistics."

TLS p1610 D 24 '71 500w

NATHAN, ROBERT. The elixir. 176p $5.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47175-X LC 73-154936

"An American history professor . . . meets Anne, an English girl, on a midsummer night at Stonehenge. Together they set out on a journey that will take them not only across England but through the centuries, where historical and legendary figures move in and out of time." (Library J)

"Robert Nathan has never been accused of being far out or in deep, and this slender volume, shot through with the sentimentalism that passes for contemporary romance, is no threat to that reputation. A 40-year-old history professor recaptures his youth—no kidding—in the arms of some mythic Lolita returned to this dreary world. A little Eric Segal, a little Tolkien, and a lot of ineffable tenderness—sad to say, the stylistic felicities turn out to be awkward and banal, and the puzzle that includes Merlin, King Arthur, Nelson, King Richard, Druids, Friar Tuck, and a hippie is not worth the solving. . . . Not worth shelf space."

Choice 8:1454 Ja '72 180w

"The familiar Nathan magic is at work once again in this gossamer tale. . . . A line from the book speaks of another novelist who 'created his characters out of fog and rain and flowering bushes . . . and love and memory.' True also of the creator of this gentle, poetic story which has the sentimental appeal of an old ballad. Highly recommended." A. C. Ringer

Library J 96:2544 Ag '71 100w

Reviewed by A. B. Master

Library J 96:3915 N 15 '71 120w [YA]

"Try to imagine what a fantasist like Robert Nathan, who can find pixies in Central Park, could originate in Stonehenge. The mind fairly reels—as the author intends it should—whilst a vacationing history professor uses the monumental Druidical calendar as the launching pad. . . . To find the catalyst of all this, you'll need a drop of the Elixir yourself." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p24 Ag 22 '71 130w

NATIONAL FOOTBALL FOUNDATION. College football. U.S.A., 1869-1971; official book of the National Football Foundation. See McCallum, J.

NATIONAL JOURNAL. Political brokers. See Smith, J. G., ed.

NAVASKY, VICTOR S. Kennedy justice. 482p $10 Atheneum pubs.

353.5 Kennedy, Robert Francis. U.S. Department of Justice
LC 77-145633

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by O. A. Bouise

Best Sell 31:488 F 1 '72 390w

Choice 8:1644 F '72 230w

Reviewed by J. Q. Wilson

Commentary 53:82 Ja '72 1450w

Reviewed by Jack Forman

Library J 97:497 F 1 '72 200w

Reviewed by M. E. Tigar and M. R. Levy

N Y Rev of Books 18:25 Je 29 '72 2250w

NAYLOR, THOMAS H., jt. ed. You can't eat magnolias. See Ayers, H. B.

NEAL, ERNEST. Uganda quest; African wildlife after dark. 125p col pl $7.95 Taplinger 591.96 National parks and reserves—Uganda. Wild life—Conservation. Queen Elizabeth National Park, Uganda
ISBN 0-8008-7923-6 LC 75-158843

"In 1967 Dr Ernest Neal . . . was offered the chance of a four-month spell at Mweya, headquarters of the Nuffield Unit of Tropical Animal Ecology in the Queen Elizabeth National Park, Uganda. . . . [His] object was to investigate the medium-sized carnivores, such as genets, civets, servals and some species of mongoose . . . [which] are largely nocturnal. . . . A chapter describes [his study of the mongoose] and an appendix gives a summary of what he discovered. The other chapters contain . . . vignettes of much of the wildlife found in the park, together with descriptions of habitats and the inter-relationships within them (especially those of the savanna)." (TLS) Bibliography.

"This is an unusual view of African wildlife, ecologically oriented. . . . [It] is a well-written book generously illustrated with Neal's outstanding color photographs. For college and public libraries." E. M. Cole

Library J 96:3770 N 15 '71 140w

"The author, who was voted Wildlife Photographer of the year in 1969, is well known for his zoological and ecological work, and [this book] is essentially a popular account of how much a trained observer can reveal in an unfamiliar environment. . . . The colour pictures are good but not really outstanding."

TLS p1310 O 22 '71 330w

NEARING, SCOTT. The making of a radical; a political autobiography. 308p $6; pa $2.45 Harper

B or 92

SBN 06-090251-5

LC 78-180725

This is an account of the life and career of Scott Nearing, "pacifist, vegetarian, member of the American Socialist party and the Communist party . . . [who] became a radical in an age and in a country that has never willingly accepted dissenters. Fired from his teaching position at the University of Pennsylvania, his writings were 'blacklisted' by the publishing industry. Opposed to America's entry into World War I, Nearing traveled widely throughout the world living out Tolstoy's urgent motto, 'Make peace, love one another.'" (Library J) Bibliography of the author's works.

Choice 9:713 JI/Ag '72 210w

"Nearing, the spiritual father of the modern day back-to-the-land movement and coauthor with his wife of Living the Good Life [BRD 1970] and the Maple Sugar Book [BRD 1950], has finally, at the age of 89, written his own history. . . . His autobiography has a certain fascination for those interested in the history of political unorthodoxy and the socialist movement in early 20th-Century America. However, the book seems to come really alive when he returns to his earlier subject—surviving in a hostile world by living a quiet, simple, harmless, and unharassed life. In many ways this is a very heroic book." Andy Armitage

Library J 97:2181 Je 15 '72 100w

"Nearing has set down his truth without self-conscious artifice. Within the frame of self-as-history, Nearing writes with the directness of Ben Franklin, the moral clarity of Tolstoy (his culture-hero), and the conviction of an Eastern sage—he is, in more than one way, a contemporary Thoreau, or Emerson." H. R. Wolf

Nation 214:765 Je 12 '72 750w

"Quite apart from its prophetic tone, I recommend [this] autobiography as a splendid story of integrity and courage in the face of American rapacity and cynicism at its worst. . . . Next year [the author] will be 90, but there is no sign in this book of any failing powers. The purity of his life and the strength of his personality no doubt have a great deal to do with his longevity. His uncompromising standards shine through at every turn. . . . [Nearing] has just the kind of humorless intensity that so often goes with high ideals. For all I know this may be a completely false impression of the man, but it is what comes through from his book, which contains a certain amount of rather dated whimsy . . . but no humor." Peter Caws

New Repub 166:25 F 5 '72 1050w

NECHELES, RUTH F. The Abbé Grégoire, 1787-1831; the odyssey of an egalitarian. 333p $11 Greenwood pub. corp.

B or 92 Grégoire, Henri. Bp. of Blois.

Minorities. France—Race relations

ISBN 0-8371-3312-2 LC 75-105987

"Necheles' biography traces the efforts of the abbé Grégoire on behalf of minority groups in

NECHELES, R. F.—Continued

France. In the decade of the 1780's, Grégoire championed the emancipation of the Jews of Lorraine. After they received citizenship in 1791, he turned his attention to efforts to win citizenship for free mulattoes and abolition of slavery in French colonies. By 1794 both goals were theoretically attained. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

"In 19th century clerical circles, Grégoire's name was one not cited with approbation, but many of his views have relevance to those of us living in the second half of the present century." Maurice Adelman

America 125:434 N 20 '71 90w

"Grégoire often stood at odds with other egalitarian leaders during the revolution because his belief in equality remained rooted in Christian teaching, whereas they became hostile to both the church and its doctrine. . . . Bibliography reveals extensive research in French and American archives and libraries; chapters thoroughly footnoted; easy-to-use index. The style is clear and uncomplicated. Should be of interest to students of the history of minority groups and to anyone attracted to the egalitarian spirit and laws of the French Revolution."

Choice 9:270 Ap '72 180w

NEEDHAM, JOSEPH. Science and civilisation in China; with the collaboration of Wang Ling and Lu Gwei-Djen; v4, Physics and physical technology; pt. 3, Civil engineering and nautics. 931p il maps $55 Cambridge

951 China—Civilization. Science—History. China—Intellectual life
SBN 521-07060-0 LC (54-4723)

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Kenneth Rexroth
Nation 215:468 N 13 '72 600w

Reviewed by Carrington Goodrich
Pacific Affairs 45:94 spring '72 650w

Reviewed by David Pong
Science 175:50 Ja 7 '72 1100w

Reviewed by N. Sivin
Sci Am 226:113 Ja '72 1700w

TLS p1 Ja 7 '72 2950w

NEEDHAM, RODNEY, ed. Rethinking kinship and marriage. 276p $12.75 Harper; for sale by Barnes & Noble

301.42 Kinship. Marriage
SBN 422-73690-2 LC 72-181744

The papers in this collection cover such subjects as "incest, epistemology, sentiments, linguistics, prescriptive alliance, and methodology, and draw on fieldwork carried out in Burma, Ceylon, New Guinea, Australia, Africa, and South America. The editor, . . . who convened the conference of the Association of Social Anthropologists from which the material derives, has provided [an] . . . introduction. The monograph calls in question many of the received ideas in social anthropology and offers . . . re-evaluations of the work and views of . . . personalities such as Radcliffe-Brown and Lévi-Strauss." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Name index. Subject index.

"The title suggests that editor Needham views [this] as a companion volume or perhaps a follow-up of E. R. Leach's Rethinking anthropology [BRD 1962]. Needham sets the tone in a lengthy 97-page introduction in which he places the papers in context—theoretically, philosophically, and historically. At the same time he berates his predecessors and contemporaries who disagree with him and concludes with avuncular advice to graduate student-readers on how to judge the competence and authority of professional anthropologists. . . . Although the quality of the articles is uneven, this volume constitutes a very important contribution; it will be of interest to specialists in kinship, marriage, and social structure."

Choice 9:1052 O '72 190w

"[The volume's] initial indictment of kinship studies is a forceful presentation of a view which is now being increasingly accepted in anthropological circles. It is a view moreover which can be reached on straightforward anthropological principles without recourse, as in the early essays of the volume, to Wittgenstein, Frege or Tarski. But after the diagnosis the reader will naturally look for the cure, and it is in the final, ostensibly least theoretical papers that this is best discerned. Perhaps there is a moral in this, or perhaps it merely tells us something about the way in which anthropology makes its advances."

TLS p653 Je 9 '72 1900w

NEIDER, CHARLES, ed. Antarctica; authentic accounts of life and exploration in the world's highest, driest, windiest, coldest and most remote continent; ed. with an introd. and notes by Charles Neider. 464p $10 Random house

919.8 Antarctic regions
ISBN 0-394-46831-7 LC 79-37072

This anthology presents excerpts from the accounts of Thaddeus Bellingshausen, James Weddell, Charles Wilkes, Roald Amundsen, R. F. Scott, Ernest Shackleton, R. E. Byrd and others. Chronology. Bibliography.

"An anthology of reports by fourteen explorers of the Southern continent, beginning with Captain Cook poking along the edges in 1774 and ending with Edmund Hillary driving a tractor straight across it in 1958. All of these men were necessarily observant and inquisitive, and most of them were good writers." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:112 My '72 50w

"Neider, who has visited Antarctica twice, tells of life there as it is today and then lets the earliest visitors (and some later ones too) give their impressions. . . . The selections are well chosen and give the reader not only a good idea of Antarctic discovery and exploration, but also of life in that region during different periods." N. T. Corley

Library J 97:874 Mr 1 '72 120w

NEIHARDT, JOHN G. All is but a beginning; youth remembered, 1881-1901; introd. by Dick Cavett. 173p $5.95 Harcourt

B or 92
ISBN 0-15-104604-2 LC 72-78455

"Neihardt, 91-year-old poet laureate of Nebraska, has provided a personal history of his youth, recollections of meaningful experiences written for 'family and friends, and for anybody else who may love me at least a little.' . . . He relates childhood experiences (such as life on a homestead in Kansas), as well as outside influences (family and friends, teachers and education, jobs and recreation) in the development of his life and in his struggle to become a published poet. . . . This volume ends with the publication of his first book (1900)." (Library J)

"Neihardt, largely as a result of the Cavett Show and an inevitable rekindling of interest in his thirty previous books, is well on his way to becoming one of the authentic legendary folk heroes of our time. This book can do nothing less than further that legend. It is a masterpiece of autobiography. . . . [Neihardt's] finely etched portraits of people, places, and events flow from cover to cover with a mastery that defies the reader to describe anything he set down better than he has done it. It simply can't be done. . . . The most amazing aspect of the book is its extremely contemporary feel. The events are from another century, yet has anything really changed? . . . It is hard to believe that a man ninety years old could write with such vivid imagery." Jerry Gallagher

Best Sell 32:357 N 1 '72 500w

"[Neihardt's] command of the language and ability to evoke emotional response from the reader stand out in this autobiography to prove again that Neihardt is a master craftsman. . . . One can only hope for a sequel which carries the reminiscences of this artist's fascinating life beyond the teen years." L. E. Oliva

Library J 97:2722 S 1 '72 140w

"This book is a vivid evocation of the natural setting and the folklore that shaped [Neihardt's] career."

N Y Times Bk R p48 D 10 '72 40w

NEILANDS, J. B. Harvest of death. See Harvest of death

NEILL, A. S. Neill! Neill! Orange peel! an autobiography. 538p il $10 Hart

B or 92 Summerhill School, Leiston, England
SBN 8055-1042-7 LC 76-180998

The author of Summerhill: a Radical Approach to Child Rearing (BRD 1962), here describes his childhood and his student days at the University of Edinburgh. Neill also "tells of those who helped and influenced him—Lane, Wilhelm Reich, his second wife Ena, and daughter Zoë—and his experiences in keeping his unorthodox school afloat. It also expounds his radical ideas about education, sex, politics, psychology, and discusses the future of Summerhill." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The author has a] gift for expounding his convictions in lively fashion and with bold applications. As a young man, Neill was more interested in journalism than in teaching, and the writer in him has served the schoolman very well. . . . Now in his 89th year, Neill [has published] an autobiographical sketch that . . . is frank about the seamier aspects of the subject's life but still leaves the reader feeling that the self-portrait raises questions it doesn't answer. . . . Despite its vigorous prose occasionally punctuated with four-letter words . . . this is the work of an old man. . . . Neill recalls the distant past in detail and then telescopes the account of later years." J. W. Donohue

America 127:344 O 28 '72 700w

"A major motif of this book is the author's abhorrence of physical or psychological violence against children. . . . One reads with fascination of Mr. Neill's theories of education. . . . On only one matter do I find myself in complete disagreement with [him]—his tendency to identify the Roman Catholic Church with its less lovely Irish manifestation and Christianity with Calvinism. . . . In addition to the autobiography itself, we are given in this volume a generous selection from 'A Dominie's Log,' the private journal that Mr. Neill kept during his early years as a teacher and that was published in 1915 under that title; it's still fascinating reading. . . . Neill is Mr. Chips without the sentimentality." J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 32:235 Ag 15 '72 1000w

Choice 9:1330 D '72 170w

"For Summerhillians and laymen alike, this is salient, instructive, and engaging reading. [Neill's] concerns with the student-teacher relationship and the freedom vs. discipline balance are the foci here, for there is no real distinction between the personal and vocational: he truly lives his work, and translates it into this most commendable account—read it." Shelley Neiderbach

Library 97:3902 D 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Benjamin DeMott

Sat R 55:97 S 16 '72 600w

NEIMARK, PAUL. I have changed. See Owens, J.

NELKIN, DOROTHY. Nuclear power and its critics; the Cayuga Lake controversy. 128p $6.50; pa $1.75 Cornell Univ. press

338.4 Atomic power plants

ISBN 0-8014-0634-X LC 70-147316

The author "presents an analysis and narrative of the controversy (1963-1969) arising from a utility corporation's decision to build a nuclear power plant at Cayuga Lake." (Library J) Index.

"The proposed site is significant because it involves the use of a large stratified deep water lake for plant cooling which raises the question of the disruption of the lake ecology. Cornell University scientists and engineers became involved both professionally as researchers and as key members of the public interest groups that formed. The interactions between the emergent citizen groups, the electric utility company, political figures and agencies and other concerned local groups are carefully documented. . . . This well researched, balanced and timely case history should be welcomed by many people regardless of their field or viewpoint."

Choice 8:1198 N '71 170w

"The scene is New York State, but the conflict is of more than local importance. Here is a classic confrontation between those who see their responsibility as the production of more electrical power for domestic and industrial needs and those who are fighting to preserve the environment. The author has gathered a large amount of technical, economic, political, and sociological information—much of it conveniently arranged in tables and charts throughout the book—and she has attempted to give the opposing viewpoints equal treatment. The result does not always make for easy reading, but it will be appreciated by those who are more interested in understanding than in polemics." George Basalla

Library J 96:1723 My 15 '71 190w

NELLI, HUMBERT S. Italians in Chicago, 1880-1930; a study in ethnic mobility. 300p maps $8.50 Oxford

301.453 Italians in Chicago

LC 76-123610

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Edgar Litt

Am Pol Sci R 65:1191 D '71 650w

Reviewed by H. S. Marks

Am Soc R 36:1163 D '71 500w

Reviewed by M. H. Haller

Social Studies 63:137 Mr '72 300w

NELSEN, HART M., ed. The Black church in America; ed. by Hart M. Nelsen, Raytha L. Yokley [and] Anne K. Nelsen. 375p $10 Basic bks.

301.45 Negroes—Religion

ISBN 0-465-00691-4

LC 79-147014

Thirty-three selections arranged "in four groupings—historical perspectives; residence and class differentiation; cult, sect, and church; and black ministers and black power. The selections range . . . from . . . historical and sociological writings (of authors like W. E. B. DuBois, Gunnar Myrdal, Arthur Fauset, Howard Brotz) to standard works of recent scholarship (e.g. Winthrop D. Jordan, Kenneth Stampp, E. Franklin Frazier, Joseph Washington) to contemporary or recent statements of black religious consciousness or concern (e.g. Martin Luther King, James Cone, Albert Cleage). . . . Index." (Choice)

"[This volume is] somewhat lacking in overall unity, with some selections being technical and descriptive while others are eloquently prescriptive. . . . This reviewer would have preferred more historical material, which would better enable the student to place some of the specific and contemporary data into a larger context. . . . The editors . . . argue in their introduction that too much has been made of the 'emotionalism' of black religion, and several of the selections bear this out. The book is carefully done and will be a useful tool for students and teachers." D. D. Wallace

Ann Am Acad 399:233 Ja '72 450w

"This is a collection of excellent and important writings, and it is the only anthology of its kind on the black church as such. Its usefulness is enhanced by the general introduction and the brief introductions for each selection provided by the editors."

Choice 9:828 S '72 150w

NELSON, GERALD B. Ten versions of America. 201p $6.95 Knopf

813 American fiction—History and criticism. Characters and characteristics in literature. U.S.—Civilization—20th century

ISBN 0-394-46610-1

LC 72-171129

The author considers ten writers in this "new work of criticism . . . [which confronts the worlds reflected] in the novels of writers from the twenties and thirties into the seventies. . . . [Among] the characters in the novels . . . [are] Dick Diver [who] has (maybe) raped a five-year-old; Jake Barnes [who] is impotent, banished to the sidelines of conflict; Yossarian [who] takes off in a rowboat into the Mediterranean, aiming for the Atlantic. . . . In each case . . . the American Dream, Nelson concludes, is rendered irrelevant; it is irrelevant because it is dead; and it is dead because the Dream has become nightmarish reality." (Publisher's note)

"[The author] offers a personal view and critique on the whys and wherefores of the failure of the American Dream. . . . Although Nelson is dealing with a problem which has been treated by a host of writers and critics, and although his thesis is not new or original, he does offer a fresh approach and a rather interesting juxtaposition of writers."

Choice 9:646 J1/Ag '72 190w

NELSON, G. B.—Continued

"[This work] is a pure case of the conviction that literature is sufficient to define us. . . . [Nelson's] ten versions are offered by ten characters . . . whose plight he uses to encode his own loathing of 'the American Dream.' . . . I don't suppose that Mr. Nelson would hold that ten or any other number of characters could be used to make a similarly inclusive characterization of England, France, or Italy. But if not, why not? What is clear is that by viewing literature as sufficient evidence Mr. Nelson has acquired the privilege of seeing the national past and the national character en bloc." Quentin Anderson
Commentary 54:84 O '72 800w

"Nelson's critical stance is frequently rhetorical rather than analytical. He sees [P.] Roth's Neil Klugman, for example, as more than a character in Goodbye, Columbus [BRD 1959]: he is 'maybe . . . the end product of all that America has been building for . . . since the 17th Century. Far too frequently, Nelson escalates this kind of rhetoric to a purely impressionistic level. On the other hand, as in his discussion of [S.] Bellow's Tommy Wilhelm in Seize the Day [BRD 1956], he can succeed in conveying a sympathetic, intelligent, and original response to the novels he considers. More such substance and less self-conscious rhetoric would have improved the book considerably." Peter Dollard
Library J 97:1718 My 1 '72 130w

"The title is misleading. In fact the book contains only one version of America, which runs roughly like this: If there was a good American dream of individual freedom and plenty, then (quoting Tom Wolfe quoting Ken Kesey) 'WE BLEW IT.' In effect, Mr. Nelson offers 10 versions of this thesis through biographical outlines of the chief characters in ten novels. . . . [His] method ignores the fact that the characters exist only in fictional space and assumes that the 10 novels are accurate accounts of the state of America. The special complexity of each book is drastically simplified, with the result that the characters tend to run together in one metamorphizing meta-character."

N Y Times Bk R p[29] My 21 '72 180w

NELSON, WALTER HENRY. Germany re-armed. 354p pl $8.95 Simon & Schuster

355 Germany (Federal Republic)—Armed Forces. Germany (Federal Republic)—Military policy. Germany (Democratic Republic)—Armed Forces
SBN 671-21120-X LC 75-184001

"A decade after the end of World War II the Germans began to rearm, and the author examines . . . the genesis and development of the new military structure and the men who comprise the system. [Nelson maintains that] the new Bundeswehr as it has emerged differs greatly from the Wehrmacht of the past. It embodies the concept of a force of civilians-in-arms; it is constitutionally under the control of parliament; within the ranks, an emphasis is placed on 'democratic leadership'; and the soldiers retain most civil rights. The army of the German Democratic Republic is briefly dealt with in the final chapters." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Nelson gives an interesting account of the style and purposes of this second German rearmament. The bulk is on West Germany. . . . He uses extensive interviews with soldiers, officers, and officials of the Bundeswehr to flesh out his story. This is not a scholarly or exhaustive narrative of rearmament. But for a general overview of the basic issues involved, plus some interesting anecdotes of the perils of soldiering in a newly anti-militaristic West Germany, it is a good book. The briefer section on the goose-stepping Red Prussians of East Germany is also good. An interesting journalistic treatment of the subject by a man very sympathetic to the Federal Republic. Recommended for the general reader and nonspecialist."

Choice 9:1205 N '72 180w

"Combining the fruits of considerable research with the insights gained from interviews and direct observation, Nelson presents a thorough and thoughtful analysis of the German military. . . . There are also chapter notes and a lengthy bibliography (consisting of a great many German works, but also containing a sufficient number of works in English to be widely useful)." Topsy Smalley
Library J 97:497 F 1 '72 150w

NEMEROV, HOWARD. Reflexions on poetry & poetics. 233p $10 Rutgers univ. press

808.1 Poetry

ISBN 0-8135-0727-8

LC 74-185396

Twenty-six essays on various topics, including "the technical characteristics of poetry; the works of Yeats, Eliot, Dickey, et al.; 'Two Ways of the Imagination; Blake & Wordsworth'; the fashionable literary scene; the processes involved in creating poetry; and the future of poetry." (Library J)

"The book is both personal and historical. Nemerov gives us glimpses of why and how a contemporary American poet has turned away from the emphases of Pound and Eliot. And in William Blake he discovers a kindred spirit about whom he writes with succinct comprehensiveness. . . . Poetry is 'magical.' Wavering between the holy and the fraudulent, the word handily captures Nemerov's very modern condition of belief-unbelief. He seems to feel that he can only entertain the notion that his calling is sacred, he can never swear to it. As a result, his book reads like the spiritual testament of a true but worldly believer. It is a bracing blend of limits and revelations, urbanity and vision." Edward Duffy
America 127:45 J1 22 '72 450w

"There are three essays in which Nemerov discusses his own work and several other selections make valuable statements on his aesthetic position. The book is padded in the middle with ephemeral reviews, but the flaw is not serious. Nemerov's point of view is traditional and this makes the book distinctive: he is a particularly probing critic of the literary zeitgeist. For all undergraduate libraries."

Choice 9:971 O '72 130w

Christian Century 89:552 My 10 '72 20w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2176 Je 15 '72 40w

"Nemerov likes to wait in the grass for somebody to be stupid, then jump on him. He has been jumping now for more than 30 years and through a dozen or more books, and in this latest volume, a collection of miscellaneous lectures and reviews, he has a number of worthy targets [including] computer poetry; an anthology of 'naked poetry'; complaints about the difficulty of modern poetry; questionnaires . . . extravagant reviews of slim volumes of verse; and bits and pieces of political sagacity. . . . [He] moves gracefully in and out of several worlds of discourse—esthetics, psychoanalysis, even physics—and thereby does honor to the English Department world he inhabits."

New Repub 166:33 Je 24 '72 250w

NEMEROV, HOWARD. Stories, fables & other diversions. 121p $7.50; deluxe ed $35 Godine
LC 75-143388

Eleven pieces are gathered in this book of short fiction.

Choice 9:506 Je '72 250w

"The most successful of [Nemerov's] crafted writings is 'The Nature of the Task.' (It is so successful in fact, that the publisher should quietly arrange to have all copies of Mr. Nemerov's new book cracked so they fall open to page ninety-six). . . . However, the author's craft is not always so effective. His other stories, which, synopsized, would sound interesting, are sometimes tedious. . . . [But then] this collection suddenly gets around to the 'other diversions' of the title. The word diversion expresses the right lightheartedness for the free-flowing tale and thoughts on Joey Crow. . . . It's hard to believe the same man wrote 'Digressions on a Crow' and all the other stories here. If he should ever blend the two styles, we'd never have enough." June Goodwin

Christian Science Monitor pB7 N 11 '71 430w

"Though the fables are occasionally heavy-handed ('The Twelve and the One') or unnecessarily rambling ('The Nature of the Task'), the . . . [pieces] are relatively even; and the most pervasive unifying element is an emphasis on unique characters. Among the most interesting are the woman . . . who sacrifices pleasure by becoming the scientist of her own vice, the alienated addict . . . whose paranoia ends in suicide, and the drunken uncle . . . who feeds his ego and his penchant for nostalgia by relating to his cynical nephew the 'wonders' of the past. But in several 'diversions' Nemerov views reality through his own eyes, and 'The Mudras of Meeting' is a delightful tour de force in which he observes the rituals of meetings. Recommended for all general libraries." B. C. Bach

Library J 96:3160 O 1 '71 160w

"In Nemerov's present collection, there are two stories that expand the mind so effectively that the pages themselves, to all intents and purposes, disappear. 'The Nature of the Task,' [a] 10-page tale [in which] a man named Palen is given the assignment of killing flies in a square-shaped room . . . would make brilliant pantomime. . . . 'The Outage,' while hauntingly evocative as a story, would possibly acquire deeper and wider dimensions as a one-act play. . . . 'The Outage' is barely 8 pages long, and through the voice of a grandfather sitting in the lamplight by an open fire, it recounts the history of the departure of electricity from the world." Kay Boyle
Nation 214:184 F 20 '72 1600w

"[Here] we see a writer who is comfortable and successful when working in a traditional, realistic vein trying to master other, less conventional—one is tempted to say more fashionable—styles and forms. While we appreciate Mr. Nemerov's spirit of adventure, we are not gratified by the results. . . . Nemerov, unfortunately, is not a Beckett. He doesn't work as well with abstract characters. Their thoughts and actions are neither funny nor fascinating—merely tedious. The ideas of the stories are more interesting than the stories themselves. 'The Escapist,' the one first-rate piece in the collection, is perhaps the most conventional—a relatively straightforward character study. Yet what a subtle, beautifully developed story it is." Ronald De Feo
Sat R 54:37 S 25 '71 750w

NEMIRO, BEVERLY ANDERSON. The busy people's cookbook. 203p $6.95 Random house
641.5 Cookery
ISBN 0-394-46228-9 LC 79-102308

The emphasis in this book is on using convenience foods in unusual ways. Recipes are included for contemporary, continental, and international dishes. Index.

Reviewed by Nora Magid
Book World p5 F 13 '72 100w

"[This book] may still find an audience among harried housewives who are definitely not into either organic foods or gourmet cookery. Based on the 'creative' use of convenience foods (canned, freeze-dried, etc.), its short, simple recipes have some interesting ideas about easily available ingredients, although in combinations whose nutritive value is occasionally dubious. And considering Nemiro's infrequent mention of fresh fruits and vegetables, and her inclusion of such ingredients as pre-sweetened cornflakes in cookies, the book may have missed its day." Jill Fischman
Library J 96:2772 S 15 '71 120w

Reviewed by Nika Hazelton
N Y Times Bk R p36 D 12 '71 10w

NERUDA, PABLO. Neruda and Vallejo. See Bly, R., ed.

NERUDA, PABLO. Selected poems; ed. by Nathaniel Tarn; tr. by Anthony Kerrigan [and others]. bilingual ed 509p $12.50 Delacorte press 861
SBN 224-61820-2 LC 71-185016

This selection is based on "the Spanish text of the second edition of the Obras Completas (Losada, Buenos Aires, 1962). . . . [It] is in no sense a critical edition and we have made no attempt to add notes or comments. The Obras are so vast that the establishment of a definitive text will be a task for the future. . . . Our only desire has been to present the English language reader with as adequate a selection as possible, covering the whole field of Neruda's achievement." (Editor's foreword) Some of these poems appeared previously in Neruda's The Heights of Macchu Picchu (BRD 1967). Index of first lines: English; Spanish.

"The current anthology is much more comprehensive than any previous ones. For public libraries this edition would be sufficient as it has generous selections from each Neruda collection. The reader will be impressed by the range of the poems. . . . No book for some time will equal the scope of the material presented here. Needed by all libraries and by readers who keep abreast of current poetry." Choice 9:1137 N '72 180w

"[These] five hundred pages of parallel text are a mere chip from Neruda's monument—the Obras Completas of 1962 ran to 1,800 in Spanish. Many superb poems have been left out—'Triumph of Celery,' for instance, and the marvellous 'Sonata with Some Pines' from Estravagario. But a better based and better executed enterprise could hardly be imagined." Angus Calder
New Statesman 80:61 J1 17 '70 340w

"Neruda's poetry inevitably calls forth Wagnerian language from overwhelmed observers—'force of nature,' 'avalanche,' 'volcano'—that sort of thing. This is understandable, for he has led an epic life as a revolutionary prophet and is now a national hero in Chile. . . . Neruda wouldn't be Neruda were he not a jumble of quality and perversity, all in the service of poetry and political activism. So we shouldn't be surprised if his grandeur is only intermittently visible in any anthology. The selections here offered . . . cannot and should not be any exception. You have to take Pablo whole, both as a verbal galumph and as a sometime master with subterranean and cosmic powers. . . . [This] volume is especially useful; it is a lovely book and contains a generous, even sumptuous, selection from all of Neruda's major phases." Alexander Coleman
N Y Times Bk R p4 My 7 '72 1000w

"This extensive collection of 116 items (all but a handful of which are complete poems) gives a good idea of most of Neruda's wide variety of moods and styles. . . . Each of the four translators has . . . contributed quite distinctively to an anthology which succeeds in bringing out all those aspects of Neruda which most attract the English reader." TLS p1086 S 25 '70 350w

NERUDA, PABLO. Splendor and death of Joaquín Murieta; tr. by Ben Belitt. 182p $7.95; pa $2.95 Farrar, Straus 862 Murieta, Joaquín—Drama
ISBN 0-374-51022-9 LC 70-187696

"This poetic drama is based on the life of a Mexican who came to California in 1849 seeking gold. Chased off his claim by hostile white prospectors, he embarked on a sanguinary campaign of revenge. He was captured and decapitated, and his head . . . was exhibited as a trophy. . . . [Neruda] reconstructs the Murieta legend along contemporary lines of class and color exploitation, culminating in the apotheosis of the murdered hero as martyr." (Library J)

"The author himself described [this] work as not only a tragedy but 'also intended as a melodrama, an opera, and a pantomime,' and urged 'all directors to invent situations and props to their own liking.'" Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 230:110 S '72 160w

"The 'play,' first published in Spanish in 1966, can be viewed equally as opera libretto, cowboy melodrama, or, as Belitt sees it, as 'insurrectionary cantata.' It mixes doggerel dialogue with recitative, interspersing them with flowering barca-role-like passages for quartet or chorus, as if juxtaposing Kurt Weill with Verdi and Mozart. . . . Belitt has taken excessive liberties with the original; his excision of entire passages and wildly divergent rewriting of others contravene Neruda's intent. He gives us richly Swinburnian hexameters in place of the spare, stressed Spanish choruses, and some anachronistic slang ('hunky-dory' and 'right on!' on the same page), but the complete Spanish text is included, and it is bravura entertainment." Rosemary Neiswender
Library J 97:3596 N 1 '72 250w

NESS, FREDERIC W. An uncertain glory. 154p $7.50 Jossey-Bass 378.1 Colleges and universities
ISBN 0-87589-098-9 LC 74-162812

This volume consists of twenty five letters written by a college president, who is fictional. "to a young friend who has asked about the desirability of a career in college administration. . . . The book has three themes, and they intertwine. Why be a college administrator? How can one succeed in administration? Why should an administrator stay in administration?" (J Higher Ed)

NESS, F. W.—Continued

"A delightfully written romp which provides sage advice to eager aspirants to university administration. It affects an 18th-century epistolary (rather quaint) style (itself, an affirmation of Ness' excellent education) and a candor which accompanies the confidential letter. . . . The volume is an invaluable compendium of highly pragmatic advisements to higher education administrators. . . . Hopefully, it will be required reading for those in administrative service."

Choice 8:1495 Ja '72 210w

"Ness introduces a wide range of topics. Scarcely any facet of higher education administration is omitted—from student unrest to life in the president's house, from public relations to financial frustrations. [They are] dealt with cogently, incisively, insightfully, and good-naturedly. . . . A scholar in administration might think of the book as somewhat superficial. The clinician, however, will see it as a collection of wisdom that merits the attention of anyone interested in how the administrator operates, what motivates him, and what part he plays in the ongoing development of higher education institutions. . . . [This] is a useful handbook for the neophyte. It certainly should be on the bibliography for courses in university administration. Trustees should find the book helpful. . . . The anecdotes, the reminiscences, and the drollery make for good reading as well as reflection." D. D. Henry

J Higher Ed 42:772 D '71 900w

NEUBERG, A. Armed insurrection [tr. by Quintin Hoare]. 285p maps $7.95 St Martins 355.4 Revolutions. Communism—History.
Military art and science
LC 76-154287

"A first English translation of a work originally published in German in 1928. . . . Issued under the pseudonym of A. Neuberg, the book actually included the contributions of a number of political and military experts of the Comintern. Designed as a manual of insurrection for the Communist-led proletariat, it was largely based on the practical experience acquired in such uprisings as those at Revel, Hamburg, Canton, and Shanghai. Among the problems considered are the organization of insurrectionary forces, tactics of street fighting, and the conduct of offensive and defensive action." (Library J)

"The work is now mainly of historical interest." Hyman Kublin

Library J 97:70 Ja 1 '72 120w

"As might be imagined, the authors had a difficult furrow to plough. All the insurrections they described and analysed in such detail (with the help of sketch-maps) had failed dismally. . . . Yet the very fact that the Comintern had itself sanctioned the risings and—to the best of its grotesquely inadequate ability—directed them, now inhibited it from subjecting them to a truly objective examination. . . . The hapless German and Chinese communists, therefore, had to take the blame. . . . As a revolutionaries' handbook [this] was hopelessly out of date even at the time when it was written. . . . It is, however, as the publishers say, 'a classic Third Period document', and its republication will indeed 'contribute to the recovery and appraisal of the early years of Soviet and Comintern history.'"

TLS p115 Ja 29 '71 1300w

NEUGARTEN, BERNICE L. jt. auth. Social status in the city. See Coleman, R. P.

NEUHAUS, RICHARD. In defense of people: ecology and the seduction of radicalism. 315p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

301.3 Human ecology
LC 70-165097

The pastor of the church of St. John the Evangelist in Brooklyn contends that "in the absence of a vision, survival is the theme of the ecological myth because of the failure of the intellectuals to provide us with moral direction and goals. Meanwhile the American creed is being reshaped by the augurs of eco-catastrophe. . . . Many of the proponents of the new doctrine have a deep distrust of man, his works, ideals, and institutions. Their goal is to attain liberation beyond technology, the city and politics. To achieve this aim, the philosophers and theologians of the ecology movement recast the democratic values of the Judeo-Christian tradition to equate the 'rights of nature' with those of man." (Best Sell)

"[This book] is bitingly well-written. Perhaps it is too much to hope that all the avid readers of The Population Bomb—[by P. R. Ehrlich, BRD 1969] which I feel comes close to being the most anti-human and anti-Christian book yet written—will somehow retain enough intellectual integrity also to read Mr. Neuhaus. If they do, there may yet be hope. . . . [However] let me say to Mr. Neuhaus that I wish he understood Hannah Arendt better, that he were more sympathetic to Billy Graham, that Vietnam cannot be totally analyzed in American terms, that his few reservations about Paul VI won't hold up either, that is, if he really does believe the essential thesis of his book. To everyone else I say, merely read this book very carefully and take it most seriously. It is already late." J. V. Schall

America 126:48 Ja 15 '72 600w

"[This is] a book that is certain to be controversial. . . . As alternatives, Neuhaus suggests a World Food Council with the United States' cooperation to redistribute the earth's food and a responsible population program coupled with a moral commitment to devote two percent annually of our Gross National Product to the developing nations. This is a book that must be read by all who would seek social problem solutions. What seems weak and undeveloped is the positive proposals." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 31:419 D 15 '71 380w

"Much of what Neuhaus says is insightful, clever and compassionate, but more of it is unfair, uninformed and morally self-indulgent. . . . To reject the ecologically concerned is to reject potentially invaluable allies for any revolution. The path to major social change runs not through self-righteous polemics but through forging an effective coalition for survival and social reform which are intrinsically interdependent." V. C. Perkiss

Commonweal 96:292 My 26 '72 450w

"Neuhaus' volume leaves a great deal to be desired. . . . His style is tiresome, and his argument diffuse. [He] is for people and against political fads. . . . 'The ecology movement,' he says, 'is a seductive diversion from the political task of our time'. . . . This is an arguable case, but Neuhaus simply has not done the homework or the thinking necessary to sustain his judgment. He does offer some intelligent observations, and his arrows at the neo-Malthusians are well aimed. But all in all the book does not bear the weight and the responsibility that Neuhaus means it to." H. J. Steck

Library J 96:3339 O 15 '71 140w

Reviewed by Peter Possell and Leonard Ross
N Y Times Bk R p6 O 17 '71 1700w

NEVIN, DAVID. Muskie of Maine. 238p $7.95 Random house

B or 92 Muskie, Edmund Sixtus
ISBN 0-394-48086-3 LC 72-159361

This is the biography of the Maine Senator who was the Democratic party's nominee for Vice-president in 1968.

"Biographies of prospective Presidential candidates . . . tend to be snappily written and full of human relations material, anecdotes, and remembered conversations. . . . The result is that the reader is put off from appreciating very real talents; a good propagandist must be more subtle. [This biography] gives a more three-dimensional analysis, and therefore is easier for the noncommitted reader to enjoy. . . . [It is] presented more as narrative than as serious political analysis." Hindy Schachter

Library J 97:1422 Ap 15 '72 60w

"Nowadays the campaign biographer makes at least a gesture toward seeing with eyes unblurred by political eyewash. . . . Before we mourn the demise of the hero-worshipful biography, however, we should note that the pendulum has not swung completely to skepticism. . . . Senator Muskie has a 'quiet freshness,' a 'directness and homespun integrity and apolitical candor'—in short, 'He was a relief' from the typical candidate (so much of a relief, evidently, that the voters did not regard him as a candidate at all)." R. R. Lingeman

N Y Times Bk R p1 Je 4 '72 220w

"In his perceptive, candid study of Muskie, Life reporter Nevins sees his subject as one who very much fits the required specifications of Maine politics." L. W. Koenig

Sat R 55:62 Je 3 '72 320w

NEVINS, ALLAN. The war for the Union; v3. The organized war, 1863-1864. 532p il $15 Scribner

973.7 U.S.—History—Civil War
SBN 684-10428-8 LC (47-11072)

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by V. A. Lapomarda
America 126:15451 My 20 '72 100w

Reviewed by D. E. Fehrenbacher
Am Hist R 77:832 Je '72 800w

Reviewed by R. W. Johannsen
J Am Hist 59:426 S '72 600w

NEVINS, ALLAN. The war for the Union; v8. The organized war to victory 1864-1865. 448p il maps $15 Scribner

973.7 U.S.—History—Civil War
SBN 684-10429-6 LC (47-11072)

"With this eighth volume of The Ordeal of the Union series, Nevins completes his . . . study of the American Civil War. . . . [It contains] an analysis of the social and economic effects of the conflict . . . [as well as a description of the] progress of the Union armies to victory. . . . The work closes with an account of the demobilization of the armies and the nation's return to the pursuits of peace which, despite the war, are seen to have widened in scope and to be filled with new opportunities." (Publisher's note) Index. For volumes one and two, The Ordeal of the Union, see BRD 1947; for volumes three and four, The Emergence of Lincoln, see BRD 1950; for volume five, The War for the Union, see BRD 1960; for volume six, The War for the Union, v2, see BRD 1961; and for volume seven, The War for the Union, v3, see BRD 1971. Bibliography to volume seven and volume eight.

Reviewed by R. H. Miller
America 125:410 N 13 '71 600w

"This volume and its immediate predecessor are the best of the [eight]. . . . Its text is superb. It is marred . . . by an index woefully inadequate—both bibliography and index most likely having reached their final forms after Nevins' death. The entire The Ordeal of the Union should be in every library with even a small quota of books on American history."

Choice 8:1507 Ja '72 150w

"One of the most striking features of [the] last two volumes is their breadth. This is no simple tale of battles and military maneuvers. There is graphic description of the politics of wartime. Great emphasis is laid on social and economic conditions as they affected the war and were effected by it. . . . [This volume has been written] so as to command popular attention. The vivid characterizations so evident in all the preceding volumes of The Ordeal of the Union is maintained [here]. Lincoln remains the hero. . . . Davis is judged much more severely. . . . Lesser individuals receive brief, pungent characterizations." G. G. Van Deusen

Sat R 54:59 N 20 '71 550w

"This [volume] . . . marks the culmination of nearly a quarter century of scholarship. Nevins' work will become the standard general survey on the Civil War era of American history. . . . Southern readers may be disappointed at the relatively slight treatment of the Confederacy; some scholars may be concerned that the bibliography does not list recent works, and geographers will be dismayed at the inaccuracy of the campaign maps, but on the whole this volume is a fitting climax to Nevins' magnificent scholarly synthesis."

Va Q R 48:xxx winter '72 140w

NEVINS, FRANCIS M., comp. The mystery writer's art, by Francis M. Nevins, Jr., editor. 338p $3.95; pa $3.50 Beacon press
809.3 Fiction—History and criticism
LC 77-147820

This anthology of essays on detective fiction includes among its contributors "writers of detective fiction (Queen, Carr, Ross Macdonald), academics (Jacques Barzun, Donald A. Yates), film scholars (Robin Wood, William K. Everson), and contributors to detective fiction's amateur fan journals (Robert E. Briney, Charles Shibuk, Frank D. McSherry Jr.)." (Library J)

"Nevins, perhaps the most brilliant of detective fiction's new scholar-critics, has done an admirable job of bringing together some of the best writing on the genre to appear since Howard Haycraft's The Art of the Mystery Story [BRD 1946]. . . . All public and academic libraries should acquire this important anthology." J. L. Breen

Library J 96:2645 S 1 '71 110w

"[This book] is very nearly up to the exalted plane of Mr. Haycraft's work. Here are diversity, and sometimes conflict, of viewpoint; here are stimulation, a broadening of conventional horizons, elucidation and scholarly criticism."

A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p33 F 28 '71 240w

NEVITT, BARRINGTON, jt. auth. Take today: the executive as dropout. See McLuhan, M.

The NEW Century handbook of Greek literature; ed. by Catherine B. Avery. 213p $5.95 Appleton

880 Greek literature—Dictionaries
SBN 390-66944 LC 79-183797

"This handbook includes biographies of poets, historians, orators, and grammarians, and summaries of their works." (Choice)

"[This work] omits the Pre-Socratic philosophers, Plato, Aristotle, and the Sophists. Neophyte users of this book will also need access to a mythological dictionary that explains the identity and traditional role of the gods and heroes in epic and drama. Because of these omissions, this rather elementary handbook cannot replace or supplement [L.] Feder's more comprehensive and sophisticated Crowell's handbook of classical literature [BRD 1965]."

Choice 9:954 O '72 120w

"[This book] consists of entries selected by Miss Avery from her 1962 volume, The New Century Classical Handbook [BRD 1962]. . . . For most of the rhetoricians, résumés are provided, excellent by and large but rarely accompanied by any criticism." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:70 My 6 '72 50w

The NEW Century handbook of Greek mythology and legend; ed. by Catherine B. Avery. 565p $7.95 Appleton

292 Mythology, Greek—Dictionaries
SBN 390-66946-6 LC 75-183796

"Here, in . . . alphabetical arrangement are gods, goddesses, heroes and heroines. Both the popular (Zeus, Medea, Heracles) and the lesser-known figures (Eunomia, Hagno, Minyades) are represented. Twenty-nine . . . line drawings illustrate ways in which the Greeks saw these beings. A major entry chronicles the mythological Trojan War and another tells the tale of the 12 labors of Heracles. The exploits of Zeus, Hera, Dionysus and many more are [also included]." (Publisher's note)

"[This book is] a culling-out of the solely mythological matter from the New Century classical handbook [by C. Avery, BRD 1962]. . . . No quarrel with the quality of information here, only with its accessibility; a handbook gets consulted when one meets up not with Zeus or Dionysus but with Dryas or Eidothea or a Cleopatra not associated with Anthony. Avery's text tells about these, but only someone who already knows enough to get along with any handbook will be able to locate them."

Choice 9:954 O '72 120w

"Though succinctly recounted, the mythical biographies are comprehensive and the pronunciation is given for every entry (with the ôô sound unfortunately represented by ô)."

D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:70 My 6 '72 40w

The NEW Century Italian Renaissance encyclopedia; ed. by Catherine B. Avery; Editorial consultants: Marvin B. Becker [and] Ludovico Borgo. 978p il $29.95 Appleton

914.5 Renaissance—Dictionaries. Italy—Biography—Dictionaries
ISBN 0-390-66950-X LC 76-181735

"The book covers the period from 'the time of Dante (1265-1321) and Giotto (c1267-1337) to about the death of Michelangelo (1565)' thus continuing through the High Renaissance and up to the second generation of the Mannerists. There are over 3,700 entries including biographies . . . definitions of literary, political, and art terms, characters from literature, and résumés of important literary works, together with some longer essays on such subjects as painting, architecture, humanism, astrology, and music." (Booklist)

The NEW Century Italian Renaissance encyclopedia—Continued

"[The book's] emphasis is mainly on Italy and the Italians. However, there are articles on people from outside Italy who were active during the Renaissance, and a few articles on persons of earlier times who influenced the period. The articles are arranged alphabetically and vary in length from short identifying or defining paragraphs to essays of several pages. Most of the material is biographical, covering a wide variety of people. . . . In comparison with the emphasis on the other arts, musicians and music are rather neglected. . . . There is a good survey article on Humanism, but none on Renaissance literature or theater, on politics or religion. Politics can be approached only through long essays about some outstanding event such as the Pazzi Conspiracy, the Black Death, or the Inquisition, or through the very careful and extensive treatment of the great Renaissance families. . . . Religion is approached in the same way through the treatment of specific events. . . . The style of writing is vivid and readable. . . . In general the facts are accurate, and though the articles are written for adults, they can easily be comprehended by high school or even advanced elementary school students. . . . There are three types of pictorial illustrations all drawn from the fine arts. . . . 10 color-plates . . . [and] 175 black-and-white reproductions 'arranged to give a chronological survey of the arts of painting, sculpture and architecture in the period covered.' . . . [This work] contains no bibliographies. . . . The format is attractive. . . . The volume is sturdily bound in cloth and opens well. . . . [The book's] chief virtue lies in the broad scope and the many minor Renaissance figures that can be identified . . . and in the fact that it brings considerable information into a compact, systematically arranged volume. . . . The ready reference section of almost any library will no doubt find use for it. The encyclopedia is, therefore, recommended."

Booklist 69:105 O 1 '72 2000w

"What is most noteworthy about this massive volume is its chronological scope. . . . As a handbook or companion to the Italian Renaissance [this work] will serve well enough." W. J. Roscelli

Library J 97:485 F 1 '72 300w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:70 My 6 '72 90w

NEW YORK (CITY). Metropolitan Museum of Art. Italian paintings; a catalogue of the collection of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Florentine school [by] Federico Zeri; with the assistance of Elizabeth E. Gardner. 234p il $15 N.Y. graphic

759.5 Paintings, Italian. Painting, Renaissance

ISBN 0-87099-019-5 LC 71-127080

"This volume, one of four which will comprise a complete catalogue of Italian painting in the Metropolitan, is limited to Florentine paintings. The paintings are arranged chronologically; for each work there appears a biography of its author, an . . . illustration set within the relevant text, a discussion of the attribution, history, and relationship of the painting to other works, and, finally a list of exhibitions in which the work was shown and a note about its provenance." (Choice) Index.

"Indices of former owners and a general index, including subject headings, are provided. As it stands, this useful and handsome volume is primarily for reference and for scholarly research."

Choice 8:1447 Ja '72 160w

"The number of paintings has grown considerably [when compared to the 1940 catalogue], the reproductions are larger, and the latest attributions and bibliographical references update the work to the most recent state of research. . . . [This is] an attractive guide to the collection." J. L. Dewton

Library J 96:4000 D 1 '71 100w

The NEW YORK TIMES. Drugs. (The great contemporary issues) 757p il $25 Arno press; N.Y. Times co.

613.8 Drug abuse. Drugs
LC 78-169196

"Consisting of reprints of New York Times articles from the period 1903-1971, this . . . volume . . . covers drug abuse; drug traffic; the psychological, physiological, and social effects of drugs; marijuana; and the war on drugs. The arrangement of material is topical rather than chronological. . . . [Included also is] a chart listing drugs and their uses and effects (located on the endpapers)." (Library J) Bibliography. Chronology. Glossary. Index.

"Most of the items are fairly recent, although some date back as far as 70 years. The Times' coverage of the drug scene has been generally thorough and perceptive. The articles reprinted here are subject to the usual limitations and strengths of journalism. . . . Many of the excellent New York Times magazine articles—some by distinguished experts—have been reprinted. The Times articles do, in general, make the subject matter come alive in a way that sober, scholarly studies often fail to do. . . . Editor Fixx, by bringing these articles together and organizing them in sections (e.g. 'War on drugs' and 'Drug culture'), makes them easily accessible to students and scholars."

Choice 9:1208 N '72 200w

"The volume is well bound and should stand up well under frequent use, but the quality of the reproduction of the rather fine print varies. Not all articles are printed in their entirety, but reference to the date of the originals will facilitate location through the Times index."

D. W. Harrison

Library J 97:182 Ja 15 '72 180w

The NEW YORK TIMES. The New York Times guide to business and finance. See Kraus, A. L.

The NEW YORK TIMES. The New York Times international cookbook. See Claiborne, C.

The NEW YORK TIMES. The New York Times report from Red China [by] Tillman Durdin, James Reston [and] Seymour Topping; with phot. and additional articles by Audrey Topping; ed. with an introd. by Frank Ching. 367p $6.95 Quadrangle bks.

951.1 China (People's Republic of China)
LC 78-183191

These articles by correspondents of the first American newspaper permitted to cover life inside the People's Republic of China deal with foreign policy, the transformation of Chinese society, everyday life, government, education and child rearing, science and medicine, and culture. Index.

"Two of the three [reporters], Tillman Durdin and Seymour Topping, were men with much knowledge of China; the third, James Reston, was not but, of course, has a major journalistic reputation as a columnist and editor. . . . Although it includes long dreary passages of pure touristic trivia, the New York Times book has value. Its high point is a long interview between Reston and Premier Chou En-lai. . . . [It] is mainly interesting because of the insight it provides into the Chinese negotiating position with respect to the U.S. as well as into general Chinese thinking about the outside world. The book includes some black-and-white photographs and is aimed at the general educated public rather than specifically academic audiences. On the whole, it is a worthwhile document for college librarians to add to their collections."

Choice 9:130 Mr '72 240w

Reviewed by A. J. Nathan

Library J 97:1301 Ap 1 '72 150w

"This book is a persuasive argument for an independent press. It blends general conclusions with concrete illustrations in such brief compass that the reader is likely to forget the hours of careful observation and the informed comparisons that lie behind a paragraph. . . . A firsthand appreciation of . . . cultural differences and before-and-after contrasts is what puts the New York Times reporters so far ahead of the United States Government in its effort to appraise China's present realities." J. K. Fairbank

N Y Rev of Books 18:3 F 24 '72 1350w

Reviewed by S. R. Schram

N Y Times Bk R p2 My 7 '72 500w

THE NEW YORK TIMES. The Times in review: 1960-1969. See The Times in review: 1960-1969

The NEW YORK TIMES directory of the film: introd. by Arthur Knight. 1243p il $25 Arno press; Random house

791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism

ISBN 394-47419-8 LC 70-112777

"Contains lists of (1) The New York Times '10 Best Films' since 1924, (2) the winners of the New York Film Critics Award since 1935, and (3) Academy Award winners since 1927. The reviews of all these listed films through 1970 are reprinted from the Times. There is a 'mug shot' gallery starting with 'Abbott, Bud' and ending with 'Zetterling, Mai' (containing 1836 photographs. . . . The largest portion of the Directory (nearly 900 pages) is devoted to a personal name index of all the names which have ever appeared in a New York Times film review. Under the name of each writer, producer, actor, or whatever, is listed all of the reviewed films with which he, she, or it was associated. Also noted is the Times issue, page, and column in which the original review of the film appeared." (Choice)

"[The personal name index] was originally the index to The New York Times film reviews, 1913-1968 [BRD 1971], but it serves admirably as a fascinating, self-containing filmography of 18,000 films. . . . The serious academic film collection should have The New York Times film reviews. For those libraries without the requisite $425.00 worth of seriousness, The New York Times directory of the film is a highly recommended alternative."

Choice 9:196 Ap '72 150w

Library J 97:61 Ja 1 '72 130w

NEW YORK walk book; 4th ed. completely rev. under the sponsorship of the New York-New Jersey trail conf. and the Am. geographical soc; pen sketches by Robert L. Dickinson and Richard Edes Harrison; with an introd. to the geology of the region by Christopher J. Schuberth. 326p maps $9.95 Doubleday; Natural hist. press

917.47 New York (City)—Description—Guide books. New York (State)—Description and travel—Guide books. New Jersey—Description and travel—Guide books
LC 70-150876

The first edition of this guide was published in 1923 under the editorship of R. H. Torrey (BRD 1923). This new edition has been completely rewritten and updated. The areas covered range from the Palisades, Bear Mountain, . . . the Catskills, Westchester County and nearby Connecticut, . . . the perimeter parks of New York City, . . . all of Long Island, down into and across New Jersey. For the second edition see BRD 1935. Bibliography. Index.

Library J 97:61 Ja 1 '72 90w

"This fourth edition of New York Walk Book is written proof that areas of great natural beauty are available to New Yorkers willing to use their feet. Wilderness trails within fifty to one hundred miles of the city, easily reached by car or bus, are sketched for the would-be hiker. . . . Tips for beginning hikers are given, plus information on the difficulty of the proposed hike, the amount of time needed, and what to see along the way." C. B.

Natur Hist 81:96 Ag/S '72 110w

NEWFIELD, JACK. A populist manifesto: the making of a new majority, by Jack Newfield and Jeff Greenfield. 221p $5.95 Praeger 330.973 U.S.—Economic conditions. U.S.—Social conditions. Power (Social sciences)
LC 71-181695

"The work derives its title from the populism of the late nineteenth century. As outlined by [the authors] . . . the new populism is a philosophy grounded on the self-interest of individuals. Its premise is the simple notion that 'wealth and power are unequally and unfairly distributed in America today,' and that this condition corrupts the political process. America can recover its authentic democratic heritage, the authors claim, only if a political coalition, out of common economic distress, between blacks and low- and moderate-income whites, seizes political power and alters society." (Sat R)

"The new populism, ■■ Newfield and Greenfield see it, would be ■ synthesis of many radical and some conservative ideas. They depict a united group which mistrusts the technocrats and which demands participation in decision-making on the domestic level, and on the foreign policy plane is anti-imperialist. It also embraces the insights of the conservatives on law and order, the failure of the welfare system, and the human values of the ethnic groups. . . . The difficulty with the authors' proposals seems to rest in a replot of human nature because the perfectibility of man is ■ prerequisite for venal man to ■ his venality. Another basic flaw in the manifesto is the purported ease of the coalition of the poor blacks and whites. Still, the suggested guidelines . . . may be useful in pointing up new directions in our national goals." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 32:18 Ap 1 '72 400w

Reviewed by Samuel Kaplan

Book World p13 Ap ■ '72 600w

Reviewed by Dennis Hale

Commonweal 96:433 Ag 11 '72 750w

Reviewed by Anthony Hartley

Encounter 39:35 Ag '72 1100w

"This is no shrill polemic from the Left, but rather, a rational account of corporate excess and privilege, vested government interests, blatant plutocracy, and more generally, the demise of a humanistic laissez faire. Reasonable solutions are prescribed, and a rising level of national consciousness is predicted. Perhaps even in this election year, the vanguard of a new populism will begin to create 'the rebirth of a sense of fairness in our economic and political system.' Probing, and highly recommended." M. R. Yerburch

Library J 97:1000 Mr 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Glenda Hooper

Library J 97:2974 S 15 '72 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Peter Barnes

New Repub 166:32 Ad ■ '72 1150w

Reviewed by Christopher Lasch

N Y Rev of Books 19:15 Jl 20 '72 4500w

"[This volume] is valuable for its thorough exposition of the populist agenda. It offers proposals for what to do about taxes, regulatory agencies, land reform, the media, crime, unions and work and political processes. Much of it is sound and useful, some of it inchoate, and some dubious. . . . In addressing one of its basic concerns, size, the 'new populism' is not very different from the old populism. Its essential approach, still, is 'bust up the biggies.' The issue of economic concentration has two components: one is the effect on the goods and services we receive for our money; the other is power. The issues of efficiency and competition are real and difficult and must be dealt with. But breaking large units into small ones would not necessarily result in less political power." Elizabeth Drew

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 4 '72 650w

New Yorker 48:79 Jl 22 '72 60w

"[This book] provides the first systematic groundwork for new thinking in the Democratic Party in many years. Brimful with ideas, spilling over with intriguing proposals, crammed with facts, this Manifesto should be required reading for Presidential candidates of all persuasions. . . . The book frequently makes one's blood boil at the venality of 'free enterprise' in collusion with a putative 'public-interest' government; moreover, the authors' marshaling of facts illustrative of the pernicious social and economic forces at work suggests that none of these basic issues will be touched on by any of the Presidential candidates in the coming election." Stephen Schlesinger

Sat R 55:78 Mr 11 '72 900w

NEWHALL, NANCY, jt. auth. Tetons and the Yellowstone. See Adams, A.

NEWHOUSE, JOHN. U.S. troops in Europe: issues, costs, and choices; [by] John Newhouse; with Melvin Croan, Edward R. Fried, and Timothy W. Stanley. 177p $6.95; pa $2.95 Brookings

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Europe. U.S.—Military policy
ISBN 0-8157-6046-9; 0-8157-6045-0 (pa)
LC 71-179325

"The authors present a . . . review of . . . American policy and the possible alternatives. Relying on scholarly papers, public documents, and news media releases, they discuss at some length such major topics as 'Pressures Against the Status Quo,' 'Soviet Policy,' the 'Military Balance,' 'Why Europe Doesn't Do More,' and the 'Financial Cost of Alliance.'" (Library J) Index.

"Newhouse and his fellow collaborators associated with the Brookings Institution address themselves to four inquiries. Is the military-political threat to Western Europe significantly diminishing? Is there a militarily stable balance between NATO and Warsaw Pact forces in Central Europe? Can Western Europe assume a greater share in NATO defense? What are the budgetary and foreign exchange costs of United States forces in Europe, and how could they be reduced? These are complex issues which require and which receive complex treatments. . . . The thrust of the argument in the Brookings study is . . . that there is a continuing need for the present number of United States forces in Europe." M. S. Stedman

Ann Am Acad 402:155 J1 '72 200w

"A solid, well researched, structurally sound analysis. . . . The critical reader who maintains that problems of European security have radically changed over the past 25 years, however, will find, in fact that the stated 'Case against the status quo,' is the weakest single paragraph of the text."

Choice 9:718 J1/Ag '72 200w

"Unfortunately, the writing is turgid, and the discussion of alternatives is so speculative that it offers the reader little upon which to formulate a choice. On the whole, the study is somewhat disappointing." R. T. Redden

Library J 97:506 F 1 '72 100w

"Newhouse and a group of American experts . . . arrive at a conclusion which will confirm the theories long held by many European observers—namely that 'any acceptable major revision of the status quo will require movement toward both closer organization in Western Europe and détente at several levels throughout Europe, combined with a limited but clearly perceived identity of interest between the United States and the Soviet Union.' They suggest, in effect, a Western Alliance composed of two groups—North America and Western Europe . . . as the only way of perpetuating the American military commitment to European defence. This is a proposition of some significance to this country, since much of the future of British external policy is bound up in the way in which Europe develops."

TLS p734 Je 30 '72 400w

NEWLON, CLARKE. Famous Mexican-Americans; foreword by Uvaldo H. Palomares. 187p il $3.95 Dodd

920 Mexicans in the U.S.—Biography—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-396-06489-2 LC 79-178224

Here are the biographies of "Henry Ramirez, who heads the Cabinet Committee on Opportunities for the Spanish Speaking; Lee Trevino, champion golfer; Cesar Chavez, labor leader; Anthony Quinn and Ricardo Montalban, actors; Henry B. Gonzalez, U.S. Congressman; Joe Kapp and Jim Plunkett, pro football quarterbacks; Joseph Montoya, U.S. Senator; Vikki Carr and Trini Lopez, singers; Reyes Tijerina, visionary; Hilary Sandoval, businessman; Pancho Gonzales, tennis star; Lupe Angulano, educator; and others." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Ages eleven to fourteen." (Sat R)

"This book meets a need to present the background and contributions of one of America's notable minority groups. Newton handles his subject well. . . . The biographies are all twentieth-century people." S. M. C.
Best Sell 32:93 My 15 '72 80w

"These brief, vigorous biographical sketches are written in an informal style that is punctuated only occasionally by banalities. The foreword by Uvaldo Palomares, a psychiatrist and teacher, gives some historical background and discusses the derivation of the word 'Chicano.' Books about Mexican-Americans have been scarce, so this collective biography should be welcomed by both Anglos and Chicanos." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:82 My 20 '72 60w

NEWMAN, DAISY. A procession of Friends; Quakers in America; ed. by Charles W. Ferguson. (Religion in America ser) 460p $10 Doubleday

289.6 Friends, Society of
LC 79-160875

The author examines the "activities of individual American Quakers, without regard to chronological order, as they have fostered international goodwill, worked for social justice, and sought to alleviate human suffering in all parts of the world." (Library J) Index.

"As vivid events follow one another in rapid succession, the reader becomes a part of the torrent of Quaker faith and practice seeking the fulfillment of the divine will in the daily life of individual Friends. Newman utilizes a vast amount of material by bringing together in vignettes related events separated in time as though the historical data were a past and future print-out from a sophisticated retrieval system covering 300 years of Quaker history in America. Footnotes and references represent a current bibliography, and the comprehensive index makes this excellent book unusually useful to the scholar and general reader. All liberal arts colleges and university libraries will want [it]."

Choice 9:829 S '72 210w

"[This] is an enthralling, personalized history of the Quakers. [The author] has the happy faculty of associating incidents of early days with those of modern times, demonstrating that, in spite of inconsequential changes in the Quaker way of life, there is a remarkable continuity of the simple faith of the founders. . . . Here is an inspiring record of how Quakers, motivated by a sense of the presence of God in their lives, have contributed to religious freedom, established the principle of trial by jury, undertaken countless missions of mercy, goodwill, and sometimes protest, and exercised a practical Christianity, often at personal sacrifice." R. W. Henderson

Library J 97:690 F 15 '72 160w

"There is a story to be told here (as readers of Jan de Hartog's fiction know). Unfortunately Miss Newman, a novelist trying her hand at history, has not told it. She flits back and forth between past and present, skimming the surface, totally uncritical, with no attempt to describe Quakers' beliefs, what kind of people they are, how they live (some are extremely wealthy, but there is no hint of that). A curious mishmash that a few of the faithful may read but none will be enlightened or satisfied by."

N Y Times Bk R p36 Mr 26 '72 120w

NEWMAN, ELMER S. Lewis Mumford: a bibliography, 1914-1970; with an introd. by Lewis Mumford. 167p $10 Harcourt

012 Mumford, Lewis—Bibliography
ISBN 0-15-154750-5 LC 72-160407

This record of Mumford's publications is presented in ten sections: Books and pamphlets; writings in periodicals; book reviews; writings in cooperative works; letters to the editor; prefaces, forewords, etc.; works edited; other works; British editions; and foreign-language editions. Index.

"At 75, Lewis Mumford is one of the grand institutions of American culture. A prolific writer on such diverse topics as social issues, architecture, literature, and history, he is a figure whose works will have to be taken into account in interpreting and recording the achievements of the first half of the 20th century. . . . Because there is no work of this magnitude on Mumford, libraries should have this volume. Containing a finding-list for his manuscripts and a full index, it gives its user access to almost the entire canon of this remarkable scholar."

Choice 9:492 Je '72 130w

"This fine example of systematic bibliography by Newman, reference librarian at Freiburger Library, Case Western Reserve University, is welcome for two reasons. The 1076 items, arranged chronologically by form and covering most of Mumford's varied publications, are precise, though unannotated except for indications supplied if the work had a prior appearance or to show some other bibliographic relationship. And the introduction by Mumford is a charmingly informative essay which points out, among other things, some of the difficulties bibliographies face. . . . An appendix shows locations of manuscript collections of Mumford's writings and correspondence. . . . Recommended for all larger libraries because of Mumford's unusually wide-ranging interests and activities. Smaller libraries should consider in light of clientele needs." J. E. Kephart

Library J 96:3114 O 1 '71 150w

NEWMAN, KARL J. European democracy between the wars. 475p $12 Univ. of Notre Dame press

320.5 Democracy. National socialism. Fascism
ISBN 0-268-00426-9 LC 70-98904

The author analyzes "the conflict of political ideologies in Central Europe. . . . [He discusses] the struggle between the democratic forces on the one side and National Socialism and Fascism on the other." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Written in German academic style, packed with a mass of historical examples and theoretical concepts, the book will be heavy going for all but the best of American undergraduates. The translation is adequate but numerous minor editorial faults mar this admirable book. Thorough bibliography and index. An excellent companion for the works of Carl Friedrich, Hannah Arendt, and Ernst Nolte."

Choice 8:1502 Ja '72 140w

"This is a profoundly important book. Its contemporary message could be overlooked behind the scholarly apparatus and the erudition shown throughout. . . . It makes chilling reading, and whatever the special conditions in Germany and Austria after 1920, we are reminded that democratic institutions do not survive merely on a basis of vague faith and highest utterance. It is this grim reminder that gives Professor Newman's book its special message and relevance today."

Economist 238:53 F 6 '71 350w

"Newman does not hesitate to point out the basic errors of Social Democrats and the Catholic Center; they failed to recognize in good time the threat of totalitarianism. He also makes interesting observations on the internal conditions of Austria and Czechoslovakia in the interwar period. This carefully documented volume will be valuable to students of comparative government, even though it does not contain any startling revelations. Recommended for larger academic libraries." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 96:1612 My 1 '71 180w

"[This] is not a work of original research, but . . . [the author's] use of other scholars' researches is profound and comprehensive. The title, however, is somewhat misleading. The area of investigation is not Europe but Central Europe; and the theme is therefore not so much democracy as its total breakdown. Because that is the theme, there is hardly a word about democracy in those countries where it worked reasonably well, such as Scandinavia; and even the United Kingdom and France appear only on the periphery. . . . In another sense [Newman's] view is wider than the title implies. The roots of corruption go deeper than the interwar period, and Professor Newman traces them in the history of the peoples concerned, principally in that of the great multinational autocracies and the narrow aristocracies which preceded national independence."

TLS p286 Mr 12 '71 1250w

NEWMAN, THELMA R. Creative candlemaking. 212p il col il $7.95; pa $3.95 Crown

745.59 Candles. Handicraft
LC 77-185071

This book on the science and art of making candles offers an additional chapter on the history of candlemaking, a section on candle holders and a list of suppliers. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"A book for milk-carton beginners and RTV silicone mold experts alike. 'Creative Candlemaking' covers many candle-related subjects. Mrs. Newman's carefully structured explanations, with pictures on almost every page, take the reader step by step—from selecting a simple wick, to concocting spooky-looking icecube candles."

Christian Science Monitor p10 My 31 '72 70w

"This comprehensive book . . . is a welcome addition to the craft shelf of every hobbyist and professional in the field. Newman applies her sound knowledge of plastics to present an ancient craft from a fresh point of view. Her book . . . exudes practised thorough research and careful choice of words and illustrations; it is designed for use by everyone, whether rank amateur or professional artist. The author's 'Candle Clinic' (for diagnosing and remedying problems) will be most welcomed by those who have dabbled in the craft. Standing head and shoulders above other books available on the subject . . . [this] will be a must for even the smallest craft sections of school and public libraries." Anne Woodsworth

Library J 97:2718 S 1 '72 180w

NEWMAN, WILLIAM S. Performance practices in Beethoven's piano sonatas; an introduction. 100p il $6 Norton

786.5 Beethoven, Ludwig van
ISBN 0-393-02157-0 LC 70-129383

Newman "concentrates on the problems of style and authenticity in the sonatas. [He explores the way the composer] . . . intended his works to sound. . . . To the purist who demands a return to a piano of Beethoven's own period, one may ask which piano and for which work? How far can ear-witness accounts of Beethoven's own playing be trusted? Should his trills begin on the main note or the note above, and can his pedalmarks be observed literally on a modern piano? These and . . . other questions prompted Professor Newman's book, which he admits is only an introduction, [and he notes the] . . . need for further, extensive and intensive studies into Beethoven performance practices." (TLS)

"This book will most likely be of greater service to the performer than to the scholar. It is written in a rather conversational tone. . . . This reviewer found hardly a page where he didn't wish the author would go further. The chapter which will probably prove most surprising to many is the chapter 'Beethoven's Piano vs. his Piano Ideals,' which is a condensation of Newman's article of the same title in the Fall 1970 issue of JAMS. . . . The book is somewhat disappointing on two counts. First, . . . too many aspects of performance practice problems are only touched upon. . . . Second, [some of Newman's opinions] would be open to disagreement. . . . [Nevertheless, I hope] conservatories and music schools will make this book required reading for all their aspiring young pianists." Malcolm Bilson

Music Lib Assn Notes 28:677 Je '72 1100w

"Professor Newman at least sets us thinking that an Urtext edition is not enough to guarantee authenticity. We still need to read between and behind the lines. . . . The art of performance still retains an intangible, unanalysable element, and a player of genius will reveal new facets of a composer's greatness even when he appears to break the rules. Professor Newman does less than justice to Schnabel. Even the great names of the more distant past were unpredictable. According to Berlioz, Liszt completely revised his view of the first movement of the 'Moonlight' Sonata between 1830-1837. Or did he succumb to the whim of the moment? That cannot be discounted and it is held by some, composers included, to be the performer's prerogative."

TLS p893 Jl 28 '72 700w

NEWMANN, FRED M. Clarifying public controversy; an approach to teaching social studies by Fred M. Newmann, with the assistance of Donald W. Oliver. 356p $6.95 Little 371.3 Social sciences—Study and teaching

LC 75-112754

"Based upon experience in the development of case studies for students and in experimental teaching at the secondary level, this book provides both theory and application for . . . the discussion of public controversies in the classroom." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[In this book] much of the chaff that surrounded the jurisprudential technique has been cleared away and a method is promoted on how-to-teach the legal ethical dilemmas that pervade American society on the secondary school level."

NEWMANN, F. M.—Continued

Choice 7:1712 F '71 130w

Reviewed by Frederick Mulhauser

Harvard Ed R 41:364 Ag '71 3000w

"Newmann [is] associate professor in the department of curriculum and instruction in the School of Education at the University of Wisconsin, and Oliver [is] professor of education at Harvard. Two chapters on the discussion process are followed by a number of substantive problems. The section on implementation treats problems in classroom application and selected techniques for teaching discussion skills. The many case materials included and the theoretical analysis make this volume an important addition to the literature of citizenship education." E. P. Stickney

Library J 95:4170 D 1 '70 160w

"This book's sub-title . . . helps to clarify the purpose of the volume which focuses largely on a single means of organization and instruction in the social studies. This central approach grows out of the jurisprudential techniques now currently associated with [the authors] . . . and the Harvard Social Studies Project which gave birth to the popular series of High School Case Study booklets now being distributed by the American Education Press. This volume is not a substitute for an overall methods book on the teaching of the social studies [but] . . . is more properly identified as a most helpful explication or a handbook for teachers who wish to use AEP paperbacks and the related inquiry and decision-making stressed therein." R. E. Gross

Social Studies 62:227 O '71 290w

NEWTON, HUEY P. To die for the people; the writings of Huey P. Newton; introd. by Franz Schurmann. 232p il $7.95 Random house

322.4 Black Panther party
ISBN 0-394-48085-6 LC 72-529

In a compilation of articles, including speeches and interviews, the founder of the Black Panther party describes the group's aims, history, practices and struggles.

"[This collection] reveals the Black Panther leader to be intelligent and articulate. He discusses movingly the needs of his people, the oppressed people of the United States, and indeed of other nations as well. The work also shows, however, that Newton and some of his followers have many simplistic notions about the nature of America and about the nature of the American people. [He makes] constant reference to Marxist analogies. The doctrine of the oppressed and the oppressors becomes an all-consuming concept with him. . . . Newton should be read because he is intelligent [and] because he does represent one point of view that is important today." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 32:139 Je 15 '72 400w

"[In these] position papers, Newton describes and explains at length the important changes that have been effected by the Black Panthers over the past several years. . . . Several of the articles thoroughly lambaste Eldridge Cleaver for being one of the leaders of the misdirected faction within the party. Newton makes it clear that the Panthers have not completely disarmed themselves. . . . [He] is an excellent polemicist, and his arguments are well worth reading." Norman Lederer

Library J 97:2170 Je 15 '72 250w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 97:2974 S 15 '72 190w [YA]

"[The author of these articles] dating from the party's formation to the present . . . does not have Eldridge Cleaver's gifts for language, and the book cannot rival the literary qualities of Soul On Ice [BRD 1968]. For all that, it is a more authentic representation of the moods and ideas of Panther activists—Newton's has been the authoritative voice of the movement from the start. Although he feels the need to establish himself as a political theorist in keeping with the communist tradition, his mind runs along didactic and tactical rather than scholarly lines. . . . The compilation, however, is an indispensable source for understanding the Black Panther Party and its recent evolution. The message, with all of its crudities . . . cries of defiance, second thoughts, changes of front, is belted out straight from the inner sanctum." Bert Cochran

Nation 214:822 Je 26 '72 2550w

"[This is] a badly written Marxist interpretation of Afro-American life that few readers will want to finish. . . . [The author] is disappointing as a speaker—many of these political writings were delivered as speeches—and, as a theoretician, he is worse. . . . The most lucid writing is the section on the Panthers' Ten-Point Program, a straightforward document expressing the basic goals of the party. Elsewhere the opacity and sheer number of Newton's words obscure his meaning. Newton never uses one word when he can use two." C. C. Ware

Sat R 55:52 Jl 1 '72 350w

NEWTON, NORMAN T. Design on the land; the development of landscape architecture. 714p il $25 Harvard univ. press

712 Landscape architecture
ISBN 0-674-19870-0 LC 70-134955

"Newton, Charles Eliot professor of landscape architecture, emeritus, at Harvard University, here describes the growth of professional practice as well as the development of the art itself. One third of the book is devoted to the history of landscape architecture in Europe and the Near East from ancient times to the present, while the greater part covers developments in the United States." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"More than half the book deals with the last 100 years; the U.S. is emphasized. The last chapters include reviews of American town planning (really, suburb design), the development of national and state parks, and the occupations of landscape architects. Extensively illustrated; several illustrations of many individual projects allow a greater familiarity with each. The point of view is that of a cultivated practitioner who values excellence and wishes to reveal it wherever it is to be found. Well written; . . . excellent for general readership and for reference; extensive bibliography. It fills a real need, and belongs in almost every kind of library." Choice 8:1325 D '71 120w

"This work, which complements the small number of good existing general histories in architecture and city planning, . . . examines many of the same historical monuments from the perspective of landscape design. . . . [It] is an important book in the design fields. The breadth of the author's view allows him to demonstrate the relatedness of landscape architecture and of architecture, and even more so of city planning." E. B. Murphy

Library J 96:2485 Ag '71 140w

NICHOLLS, ANTHONY, ed. German democracy and the triumph of Hitler; essays in recent German history; ed. by Anthony Nicholls and Erich Matthias. (St Antony's College, Oxford. Pubs. no3) 271p $12.95 St Martins

943.08 Germany—Politics and government—1918-1933. Hitler, Adolf
LC 75-170146

These essays by British and German scholars examine "a number of problems associated with the failure to produce a lasting parliamentary democracy in Germany between the wars." (Publisher's note) Index.

"There is some internal unity to at least groups of the essays, and the book covers a wide, fascinating range of subject matter, with a discernible emphasis on social and internal policies without becoming too narrowly specialized. . . . Brief biographical notes on contributors, good translation of some of the German essays, and some thought-provoking conclusions in the articles. Should be in every good library."

Choice 9:869 S '72 190w

"[This volume] breaks new ground on almost every page . . . and it demands some prior knowledge of the subject. It seeks to present the latest research on recent German history, mainly as sponsored by the University of Mannheim and St Antony's College, Oxford; it succeeds brilliantly. . . . The theme of the essays is what Erich Matthias terms 'the permanent structural crisis of the German state'; that lack of consensus, originating in the violent creation of the Second Empire and the uncertain development of its institutions, which placed every important group in the country in a dilemma of loyalties. The problem emerges clearly in the first of Professor Matthias's essays."

TLS p1169 O 1 '71 250w

NICHOLLS, C. S. The Swahili coast; politics, diplomacy and trade on the East African littoral 1798-1856. 419p maps $18 Africana pub. corp.

967 Africa, East—History. Oman—History
ISBN 0-8419-0099-X LC 78-150670

The author "deals with a sixty-year period in which Arabs from Oman in Arabia extended their influence over the East African coast from Mogadishu in the north to Cape Delgado in the south. . . . This book illuminates the reasons for this extension of Arab influence in the western part of the Indian Ocean, and shows the growing involvement of Western Powers with the politics of the Sultanate of Zanzibar. Attention is also focused on the development of trade on the Swahili Coast, as well as the reaction of the local populace to Arab and Western pressures." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"When Sir Reginald Coupland wrote his pioneer study (East Africa and its invaders [published in England in] 1938), . . . he concentrated more on the rivalries of the European powers than on the affairs of the peoples of the East African littoral. This deficiency has now been erased by Nicholls in Swahili coast which is based on a range of documentation, particularly that found in India Office files, much wider than that employed by Coupland. In addition, she demonstrates a surer control of the Muscati dimension of Omani hegemony and provides the best available analysis of the early slave trade on the coast. . . . Although Nicholls fails stylistically to rise above her rich material, and employs a largely narrative methodology, her book is certain to supersede Coupland . . . as the standard source for the immediate pre-colonial period in coastal East Africa."

Choice 9:701 JI/Ag '72 280w

"Having spent most of her life in East Africa, [C. S. Nicholls] brings to the historical records, a sense of actuality derived from her knowledge of the indigenous people. Her scholarly work will be welcomed."

TLS p1029 S 1 '72 60w

NICHOLLS, WILLIAM, jt. auth. I AMness.
See Kent, I

NICHOLS, BEVERLEY. Father figure. 215p il $6.95 Simon & Schuster

B or 92

ISBN 671-21370-9 LC 72-82217

The author gives an account of the miseries he, his brothers and their mother suffered from a drunken father.

"Since he is normally anything but savage in his writing, Mr. Nichols' angry account . . . is even more startling than most domestic horror stories. And it is a horror story, running to attempted murder, calculated revenge, and hate that sizzles on every page." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:135 O '72 60w

Reviewed by Eileen Kennedy

Best Sell 32:325 O 15 '72 600w

Reviewed by Anne Fremantle

Commonweal 97:255 D 15 '72 480w

Reviewed by Andy Armitage

Library J 97:3702 N 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 83:215 F 18 '72 550w

"[Nichols] is a prose stylist of considerable skill, and tells his appalling story with detachment and humility. . . . Though this book is called an 'uncensored autobiography,' it is a case history of a sensitive and gifted young man growing up in the blighting shadow of a cruel and disgusting father. We learn a great deal of Beverley Nichols's personal history by innuendo and hint. He is artist enough to say little and mean much. A roughshod reading of this painful but wholly interesting confession can lead one to miss Mr. Nichols's compassion for his father." Guy Davenport

N Y Times Bk R p2 O '72 1150w

"The melodramatic intensity of the writing is in conflict, all the way through, with most people's idea of autobiographical truth-telling, not to mention the sympathy that might be expected to go with it. Mr. Nichols has no time or space for sympathy. Father was an unmitigated beast, and he is remembered with hate. . . . We are expected to believe three real-life attempts by young Nichols to do away with his father. . . . What are we to make of it all? Even monsters, assuming one believes in them at all, have their rights. The author does show a touch of uneasiness, though only momentarily, about the way readers may react to his lack of compassion. Any twinges of pity, he tells us, had to be suppressed because they veiled the truth. The result is that the reader finds himself in a curious situation, giving the book a unique impact which can hardly have been planned. The more disgust and hatred Mr. Nichols projects, the more sympathy gathers round the object of it, rising to a climax at the final revenge scene."

TLS p272 Mr 10 '72 650w

NICHOLS, DAVID. The Oxford book of invertebrates. See Whiteley, D.

NICHOLS, H. L. Cooking with understanding [by] H. L. Nichols, Jr.; drawings by Joseph A. Romeo. 826p $12.50; examination guide $2.50 North castle bks.

641.5 Cookery

ISBN 911040-09-9 LC 74-150684

This book "covers methods of handling food, the cooking process, basic foods, combined foods (such as meat mixtures and sauces), preservation, nutrition, kitchen cleanliness, equipment, and seasonings." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Experts could well profit from exposure to this book: its unique approach to cooking may be just the stimulus needed to turn students on in the classroom. 'Cooking with Understanding' is not just another cookbook. This reviewer not only believes that every teacher of a foods course should have this book as a reference but also recommends that it be given serious consideration as a basic college textbook. . . . [The author] has successfully developed a most unique tome that combines coverage of most foods, most situations, and most kitchen equipment in a simple, clear, and understandable fashion. The book tells how to cook almost everything. . . . Of particular value are . . . a guide to spices, and over 750 illustrations. . . . Many valuable insights provided by the author cannot be found in other references." A. C. Magee

J Home Econ 64:62 N '72 400w

"This text is very detailed and pedantic, but basics are so important in cookery. . . . Nichols offers very few recipes, yet he tells you how to cook, with the practical why of processes. In effect, he explains other cookbooks' recipes." Dean Tudor

Library J 97:198 Ja 15 '72 70w

NICHOLS, JACK, jt. auth. I have more fun with you than anybody. See Clarke, L.

NICHOLS, JOHN. Minor lives: a collection of biographies; annotated and with an introd. on John Nichols and the antiquarian and anecdotal movements of the late eighteenth century; Edward L. Hart, editor. 367p $12.50 Harvard univ. press

920.042 Great Britain—Biography

ISBN 0-674-57630-6 LC 73-131470

"John Nichols (1745-1826)—printer, editor, author . . . wrote and published more than forty books of his own, the most important of which are the seventeen volumes of Literary Anecdotes of the Eighteenth Century and Illustrations of the Literary History of the Eighteenth Century. . . . In the present single volume Edward L. Hart has collected twenty-eight of Nichols' biographies of antiquarians, booksellers, illustrators, and designers. He has enlarged the basic sketches from Anecdotes and Illustrations by gathering . . . the pertinent information scattered throughout Nichols' other writings. . . . [His] introductions and annotations, including Nichols' original notes, relate the biographies to each other and to the life, thought, and manners of the day. Nine portraits and over fifty previously unpublished letters augment the text." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Nichols knew personally many of his subjects, yet these short sketches are notably unbiased. While the facts are there and some interesting anecdotes bring the characters and the times alive, Nichols is no literary stylist. His phrasings are seldom felicitous, and his narrative skills are weak. Though these lives . . . will hold little interest for the general reader, for the scholar they will be invaluable." H. G. Hahn

NICHOLS, JOHN—Continued

Library J 96:2489 Ag '71 140w

"Hart's work has been well and indeed lovingly done. He has fetched out the immense corpus of Nichols's work and pieced together a series of portraits which will be most valuable to any student of the eighteenth-century literary world. Such books provide the much-needed element of depth and richness in a landscape which is traditionally dominated by a few towering figures about whom almost more than enough is known."

TLS p450 Ap 21 '72 490w

"Nichols does not gloss over the weaknesses of his subjects . . . [and the] facts that he records are, so far as he can judge, true. How important these facts may be is a different matter. . . . Nichols cannot be dismissed cavalierly. Admittedly the reader will at times yawn while turning 'these desultory pages' (Nichols's own phrase), but Professor Hart's selection and arrangement constitutes a book that will prove convenient for specialists and that makes readily accessible to others information concerning the antiquarian movement that flourished in this area." F. W. Hilles

Yale R 61:109 O '71 750w

NIC LEODHAS, SORCHE. Twelve great black cats, and other eerie Scottish tales; ill. by Vera Bock. 173p $5.95 Dutton

398.4 Folklore—Scotland—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-525-41575-0 LC 73-135855

"Ten Scottish tales of the supernatural published posthumously, with a biographical sketch of Sorché Nic Leodhas by her greatniece who completed the last two stories. Told in Scottish dialect these stories involve shepherds, seamen, lairds and lassies, and clansmen. . . . Grades five to eight." (Library J)

Reviewed by Jane Yolen

Book World p4 (children's issue) N 7 '71 80w

"What a fine memorial it is: a large, handsome volume, with sly humor as well as chills and tragedy and a lifting style. One of the most interesting chapters of all is the 'remembrance' telling who the gifted storyteller, Sorché Nic Leodhas, really was." E. M. Graves

Commonweal 95:180 N 19 '71 70w

"[These tales] have their roots in Scottish folklore and were collected by the author from 'ten Scottish towns lying between the Border and John o' Groats, north, south, east and west.' They are told with a fine feeling for the dramatic as well as for the eerie, and with a rhythm and swing that makes them excellent for storytelling. The title story [is] perfect for Halloween. . . . [The] tales are varied, readable, and tellable." B. R.

Horn Bk 47:608 D '71 190w

"Some of the stories, like 'Twelve Black Cats and the Red One,' are spine-tingling; others, like 'The Lass and Her Good Stout Blackthorn Stick,' are characterized by rowdy humor. All are the work of an accomplished storyteller. . . . Vera Bock's black-and-white wash drawings accented in charcoal and pencil perfectly set the mood for each story." M. B. Mason

Library J 96:4186 D 15 '71 140w

NICOL, C. W. From the roof of Africa. 361p pl $10 Knopf 916.3 Ethiopia—Description and travel.

Simien Mountain National Park
ISBN 0394-41459-4 LC 72-154917

The author recounts his experiences as a game warden hired by the Ethiopian government to establish a national park "in the 11,000-foot high Simien mountain area near Lake Tana. . . . Nicol [is] a 26-year-old Welsh game warden with experience in the Canadian Arctic." (Book World)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:109 F '72 80w

Reviewed by William Schweder

Best Sell 31:558 Mr 15 '72 360w

"Nicol—and this is one of the virtues of his book—is a totally candid, if not introspective, reporter of his trials and tribulations. . . . He bulled the beginnings of Simien National Park through for two years [1967 and 1968] (it is still not operational) largely by force of his personality and his monumental rages. He describes them well, as he does the natural beauty of the countryside. And, of course, he is very good at the wild, violent, and venal life of Ethiopia. There is never lack of adventure. Nicol is a brave man, a stubborn man, a righteous man, a dedicated man. But this combination, however worthy, is dated. These days it is the 'natives' who ginger up their Western saviors. Inadvertently, Nicol's book tells why." Alden Whitman

Book World p12 Ja 2 '72 550w

"This is an earthy, plainly written account. . . . Nicol had to cope with superstition, corruption, and crime, as well as primitive living conditions, poverty, and disease. A less tenacious, vigorous, and idealistic man would have resigned. This account of his . . . years of travail makes extremely interesting reading. The details of the struggle to establish the park and to initiate even the simplest conservation practices are interspersed with passages of an almost lyrical quality describing the mountain scenery, the plants, and the wildlife." Lola Dudley

Library J 96:4088 D 15 '71 100w

N Y Times Bk R p14 F 13 '72 70w

NICOLSON, IAIN. Astronomy; ill. by Gordon Davies. 159p $3.95 Grosset

520 Astronomy—Juvenile literature
LC 71-120607

Nicolson "discusses astronomical instruments, the solar system, stars, galaxies, some historical happenings and recent discoveries, the role of the amateur astronomer, simple home-made equipment, and star charts. [Bibliography. Index]. Grade six and up." (Library J)

"Many clear color illustrations will help hold interest [in this] . . . brisk clear text . . . The book is up to date, with references to the Apollo 13 flight. No reader background is assumed; projects plus a list of suggested reading and journals are included. This is a suitable title for updating astronomy holdings." P. W. Alley

Library J 96:1523 Ap 15 '71 80w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 54:40 Ap 17 '71 80w

NIEBUHR, RICHARD R. Experiential religion. 143p $5.95 Harper

234 Faith
ISBN 06-066173-9 LC 70-163163

This book is concerned with "the relation between religion and faith in the life of contemporary man. . . . Niebuhr begins with the situation of contemporary man in his world, moves on to discuss the possible meaning faith and religion could have for such an individual then investigates the ways in which the experience of faithfulness finds content in the life of Jesus of Nazareth." (America) Index.

"Niebuhr's latest book represents neither a fundamentalist tract nor a 'greening' of the churches. [He] manages to combine enough intellectual stimulation and verbal bafflement to fill several larger books. . . . The title provides the key to the book's method and scope. It is a descriptive work concerned with experience; in fact, it might almost be called a schematized autobiography. . . . [Niebuhr's insights] frequently illuminate an area of experience with the intensity of a lightning flash." J. B. Breslin

America 126:297 Mr 18 '72 900w

"Like so many other works, this stresses individual experience and relationships more than an analysis of the values of both tradition and the thinking about life which springs from modern technology. . . . While there is much valuable comment here, one needs to examine what will most likely produce and stimulate modern faith and religious action in terms of the kind of personality and citizenship desired. . . . This work may raise far more questions than it answers, but it is still worthy of serious study."

Choice 9:662 JI/Ag '72 200w

"Of all the recent attempts to express the role of faith in the modern world . . . Niebuhr's is as perceptive and sensitive a statement as I have read. In managing to avoid the obvious and often superficial observations of so many 'secular theologians,' he has at the same time provided rich insight into the complex and ambiguous nature of life today."

Prof. Niebuhr has sometimes sacrificed linguistic clarity; many of his paragraphs are expressive rather than simply descriptive; but in my judgment this is a price worth paying to get at that elusive creature, modern man. . . . I heartily recommend this book as an invaluable resource for the Christian's struggle to make both a faithful and a sensible response to the challenges of our age." Daniel Cobb

Christian Century 89:427 Ap 12 '72 500w

"This short work [is] for the most part 1966 Cambridge University lectures. . . . [Niebuhr] seems to argue, apparently highly influenced by his work in Schleiermacher, that even secular man is implicitly a man of faith. Not all will be convinced, even among the specialists who will be the major readers of this book." D. W. Dayton

Library J 97:2108 Je 1 '72 130w

NIELSEN, WALDEMAR A. The big foundations. (A twentieth century fund study) 475p $10.95 Columbia univ. press

361.7 Endowments
ISBN 0-231-03665-5

LC 72-3676

"The author was commissioned by the 20th Century Fund to conduct an . . . analysis and appraisal of foundations. . . . Nielsen reviews the foundations in order to come to an understanding of the role they have played in the institutional structure of the culture and argues that those who hold responsibility for the foundations—the trustees and officers—should initiate procedures for reform and self-renewal. He covers . . . the largest foundations and offers . . . capsule histories of them and evaluations of where they have been and where they seem to be headed." (Library J) Index.

"This [is an] important and interesting book, written in a lively style. . . . Essentially, the author is optimistic about the potential of foundations and reasons that they deserve to be encouraged to assault more vigorously the problems facing society. The work is a serious policy document which will be of wide interest." Paul Wasserman

Library J 97:2422 Jl '72 150w

"The author would like the big foundations to organize their charity along lines he approves of—and what's more natural than that? So he writes a book that was financed by the Twentieth Century Fund and gives no space to an analysis of the work of that Fund—perfectly natural, what? And the lines he approves of are routine left-wing do-goodism. So what. But the alliteration is nice. Carnegie is the Emergence from Elitism. The Rockefeller philanthropies are a Formidable Fleet. Danforth and Kellogg are Fine but Flawed. The Du Ponts are Ducal. Fleischmann and Commonwealth are Intriguing Aberrations. In Pittsburgh who is it but the Middling Millions?" W. F. Rickenbacker

Nat R 24:1258 N 10 '72 110w

"[Nielsen writes about] the 33 largest philanthropic foundations, roughly those with assets of over $100-million in 1968. 'The majority, he concludes, 'are unprofessional, passive, ameliorative institutions. . . . [He surveys them] one by one, from the crack Carnegie and Rockefeller operations to the . . . various du Pont philanthropies which when not using their special status for economic advantage, are largely dedicated to monumentalizing the du Pont family. . . . Nielsen examines the Ford giant . . . identifies foundations suffering from arrested development,' discovers a distinct Texas style of philanthropy, traces the risks of foundation ties to family businesses, considers the impact of foundations emphasizing local and regional philanthropy, [and] evaluates the good and bad effects of donor family direction. . . . If the [survey] is brisk and filled with sharp judgments—some of them impossible for an outsider to verify—the analytic chapters which follow are more instructive." Peter Steinfelds

N Y Times Bk R p2 N 26 '72 2000w

NIEMEYER, GERHART. Between nothingness and paradise. 226p $8.95 La. state univ. press

320.1 Political science. Philosophy
ISBN 0-8071-1713-1 LC 74-134554

"In a brief historical sketch [the author] locates the roots of contemporary radicalism in those 18th- and 19th-century writers who took as their motif either nature or history, or . . . a possible combination of the two. But all this led to a 'dissent from existence.' Ontology, therefore, is the one sure basis and the only satisfactory answer to a 'total critique.' Niemeyer sketches this in a 'philosophy of limits' which would restore the broken bond between the orders of politics and being." (Choice)

"Although Niemeyer writes well and has some interesting things to say, the book falls considerably short of the expectations generated by the preface . . . which [alludes] to new insights on totalitarianism, Nazism, and the New Left, among several other items. . . . Throughout, Niemeyer advances a sensible enough view that those who criticize existent societies in a root-and-branch fashion are apt to negate man himself, at least man in all his historical, particular, social, and cultural concreteness. . . . If the author is to be judged mainly by the objective stated in his conclusion 'to foment a process of returning awareness of what it is that feeds the widespread disorder of our age and what and where are the sources of our order,' then . . . his efforts have borne some fruit." A. J. Groth

Am Pol Sci R 77:1025 S '72 1250w

"[This study] utilizes the familiar notion of polarity to identify those ideologies, whether nihilistic or utopian, characterized by what Niemeyer calls 'the total critique of society.' Nor, claims Niemeyer, is the bland acceptance of current society an agreeable alternative. . . . Even wholesale attacks on a society . . . need not result in its 'logical murder.' . . . In an all too brief compass, Niemeyer has offered within a much needed ontological framework a valuable essay to the growing literature on social criticism. Engaging in style, well printed, and constructive in tone, the book offers guidance in the present bewildering maze of political philosophies."

Choice 8:1593 F '72 160w

"[The author] provides both an incisive analysis of the key sources and configurations of contemporary disorder and a resourceful exploration of the principal experiential and symbolic structures foundational to ordered human existence. The writing, despite its technicality, is generally crisp and clear, the range of empirical materials surveyed vast. In short, this is a meaty and important book . . . which addresses the issues of political existence confronting the contemporary generation of men. . . . Niemeyer is concerned to trace the antecedents of Marx' reductionism and total critique. He pursues this by establishing 'archetypes' of axiological and teleological total critique . . . as these emerge from the writings of Meslier, Morelly, Mably (with considerable qualification) and Babeuf and Buonarroti, on the one hand, and from those of Turgot, Condorcet and Fourier, on the other." Ellis Sandoz

Nat R 23:875 Ag 10 '71 1600w

NIETZSCHE, FRIEDRICH WILHELM. Nietzsche: a self-portrait from his letters; ed. and tr. by Peter Fuss and Henry Shapiro. 196p $8 Harvard univ. press

193

ISBN 0-674-62425-4 LC 73-134953

"Through excerpts from 168 letters written 1866-89, this book provides a portrait of Nietzsche through the most creative years of his life—beginning at the age of 21 . . . and ending two days after his collapse in Piazza Carlo Alberto on January 5, 1889." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The collection betrays Nietzsche's style within the intimate framework of personal correspondence. . . . The editorial decisions regarding the choice of letters are arbitrary, but on the whole mature. . . . As a story of Nietzsche's life, this is a readable book. . . . The biographical sketches of the major correspondents and the chronological sketch of Nietzsche's life are also helpful."

Choice 8:1336 D '71 190w

"[The editors] provide a sort of nonfiction epistolary novel of Nietzsche's life. . . . Much of the personality, but curiously little of the philosophy, of this most personal of philosophers is evident here. The translations read well, and the sense of a developing life and intellect, as well as of Nietzsche's crushing psychic burdens, comes through. This selection is a handy source of light and sidelights on various important or near-important people. It is not, obviously, intended as a mine for scholars." P. W. Cummings

Library J 96:2490 Ag '71 100w

NIEWYK, DONALD L. Socialist, anti-Semite, and Jew; German social democracy confronts the problem of anti-Semitism, 1918-1933. 254p $8.95 La. state univ. press

329.943 Social democratic party (Germany). Jewish question
ISBN 0-8071-0531-7 LC 79-137123

This study is concerned with the Socialist "party which represented the most German voters (from 1890 till 1932) [and which] was 'anti-anti' on the Jewish question." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This study] exhausts the materials of a vast array of party organs, newspapers and journals, and draws on a thorough search of memoirs and personal reminiscences. The style of presentation seeks an effect of cogency through succinct summaries of the evidence, sometimes presented quantitatively, followed and/or preceded by a narrative account of an endless stream of individual items. Both a generalized logic and a concrete persuasiveness are conveyed through this method." Ben Halpern

Ann Am Acad 402:156 JI '72 600w

"Suffers from overkill. The reader gets the message early in the game, and thereafter the rest of the book seems an excessively belabored documentation of the theme—especially since it is hardly controversial. One wonders whether Niewyk's findings could not have been presented more economically (in both senses) in a lengthy article or two. Still, these findings are definitely worth having; amidst all the bigotry of the Weimar years the largest political party, the Socialists, consistently denounced anti-Semitism in both theory and practice. . . . Niewyk's massive documentation of this constitutes an important corrective to the inverse-racist notion that Germans are by definition anti-Semitic. A large, rather indiscriminating bibliography."

Choice 8:1077 O '71 170w

"Niewyk says, quite correctly, that the socialists underestimated the political impact of Judeophobia. This may have inhibited them from developing their opposition to anti-semitism into a 'major part of their organized campaign against Nazism'. But since anti-semitic moods were widespread and popular it is extremely doubtful whether a left-wing campaign against antisemitism would have had much (if any) political effects."

TLS p81 Ja 28 '72 600w

NIGHTINGALE, PAMELA. Trade and empire in Western India, 1784-1806. (Cambridge, England. Univ. Centre of South Asian studies. Monograph, no9) 264p maps $11.50 Cambridge

382 East India Company (English). India—History
ISBN 521-07651-X LC 76-98698

This book describes "the role played by British commercial interests in the extension of British control in western India. . . . Dr. Nightingale's thesis is that British imperialism in western India was not imperialism primarily for political gain and that the economic considerations of both the company and the private traders led to the consolidation of British authority over Malabar and Gujarat." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"With clarity and style Dr. Nightingale discusses her findings and in so doing not only has accomplished the affirmation of her thesis but has differentiated two types of economic imperialism: imperialism for a commercial monopoly and imperialism for the creation of stable conditions that allow for the pursuance of commercial goals. . . . The only noticeable deficiency in [her] work is the absence of a glossary." A. B. Radwan

Am Hist R 77:824 Je '72 350w

"[The author] provides a lucid demonstration of the complexity of events leading to direct British rule in Malabar and Gujarat. Commercial ambitions for both the [East India] Company and for its servants in roles of private traders. . . . played the crucial part in annexation. . . . Considerable emphasis is given to personalities. There is a revealing reassessment of Jonathan Duncan's later career. The work is characterized throughout by intensive use of English documentation, including the first extensive reference to the valuable Alexander Walker papers in the National Library of Scotland. Where explanation or description carries into the Indian side of the story the results are less satisfying. . . . These reservations aside, this book will be welcome as a careful and illuminating study." F. F. Conlon

Pacific Affairs 44:129 spring '71 350w

NIMMO, DAN. The Texas political system [by] Dan Nimmo [and] William Oden. 166p $5.95; pa $2.95 Prentice-Hall

320.9764 Texas—Politics and government
ISBN 13-912477-2; 13-912469-1 (pa)
LC 72-146740

This "study uses systems analysis to cover political culture, gubernatorial and legislative activities, as well as voting [in Texas]." (Ann Am Acad)

"Whether [this] slim volume . . . finds favor with today's political scientist may depend upon whether the reader regards systems analysis as the legitimate frame of reference. . . . The authors devote little attention to the often bloody election battles between conservatives and liberals. . . . This neglect is obviously dictated by the emphasis on comparative systems analysis and by the brevity of the work. . . . The authors apparently conclude that elections and candidates are rather irrelevant in Texas (except perhaps for the legislature) because pressure groups representing the upper economic classes dominate state policies. They also emphasize that the power of the governor is relatively slight. This may be so, but the authors need more evidence to support their findings than is offered in this book. . . . The sketchy outline of the political policy picture in Texas which emerges here is intriguing, but the limitations impose upon the work an exceptionally tentative quality." J. L. Bernd

Am Pol Sci R 66:214 Mr '72 340w

"[This book is] informative and provides a good picture of state politics. To use the system approach forces careful research of the many areas that make up the whole and requires solid documentation of inferences. . . . We would welcome an analysis of the political system of each of the fifty states, if they could be done as well as Nimmo and Oden's." P. H. Howard

Ann Am Acad 400:163 Mr '72 500w

NIMS, JOHN FREDERICK. Sappho to Valéry; poems in translation. 326p $15 Rutgers univ. press

808.81 Poetry—Collections
ISBN 0-8135-0669-7 LC 73-127051

This volume contains "translations from poems in nine languages: Catalan, Provencal, French, German, Galician, Spanish, Greek, Latin, Italian. The book is made up of seventy-one poems by twenty poets. Each poem is printed in the language in which it was written; on the page facing it is John Nims's translation." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Nims's opening discussion of the subtle art of translation is brilliantly perceptive and persuasive; therefore it is the more distressing that his cogently argued precepts are often not borne out by example. . . . One of Nims's maxims is that all translations should be distinctively true to the spirit, if not to the letter, of the original. However, when his Catullus addresses Lesbia as 'honey,' and when their attitude toward senility is rendered as 'guff of the grumpy old harrumph!-ers'—well, it is difficult to imagine even improvisors like Pound or Robert Lowell taking that sort of license. . . . The odd thing is that all the poets, from Sappho to Paz, sound alike—slangy, prosy, and rather ragged." Rosemary Neiswender
Library J 96:3140 O 1 '71 300w

"[Nims's book] is handsome and impressive. . . . All of the poems are presented . . . with a brilliant commentary and informative introductions illuminating the problems and the solutions of a modern translator. Nims is not only on the side of the angels, he is on the side of the seraphim. Casual translators of poetry may well feel intimidated by Nims's remarkable introductory essay, which after a single page moves to the back of the book. But it should be read first. . . . [This is a] generous and exciting book. Rarely in the translator's art have such knowledge, skill, sensitivity and breadth of interest coincided so felicitously in a single hand." Philip Murray

Poetry 120:306 Ag '72 1750w

NISBET, ROBERT A. The social bond; an introduction to the study of society; consulting ed; Charles Page. 425p $10.95 Knopf 301 Sociology. Social change
LC 76-105344

The author deals with "what he conceives to be the basic elements of the social bond: social interaction patterns, social groups and aggregates, authority systems, roles and statuses, norms that denote common foci for the social bond, and threats to the social bond (deviance, alienation, and anomie)." (Social Studies)

"The book excels because of the author's descriptive talents, his broad horizon, and, last but not least, his elaborate reading suggestions although it falls short of analytical precision." G. H. Muller

Contemp Sociol 1:165 Mr '72 650w

"Rarely does one come across a book intended to introduce students to the bare bones of a discipline that is a pleasure to read. This is such a book. Written with elegance, Nisbet's work provides a lucid and economical exposition of most, though perhaps not all, of the major ideas and issues that are at the center of present-day sociological inquiry. . . . The last part of the book, which is devoted to social change, seems to me less satisfactory than the rest. . . . This is a book for beginners, yet it never talks down to the reader. It seeks to involve him in a dialogue by stimulating his sociological imagination so that he can ask questions that really matter. I hope that it will find many readers." L. A. Coser
Pol Sci Q 86:727 D '71 600w

"This book tries to steer a course between a textbook treatment and an organized overview of sociology for the general reader. As a focus for either audience, Nisbet has chosen the key notion of the social bond, which, he never defines directly and which he conceives as the fundamental problem or concern of sociology. This is an old and very useful approach, one which deserves a well-argued revivification. As a consequence, this book merits reading in a manner that is inappropriate for the usual 'introductory' text. . . . A sizeable portion of the book is devoted to social change. . . . [The work] is an engaging overview, which consciously emphasizes a simple conceptual scheme rather than explanatory principles or patterned data on specific sociological problems." Alvin Boskoff
Social Studies 62:271 N '71 390w

NISSENSON, HUGH. In the reign of peace. 157p $5.95 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-17657-4 LC 71-179794

"Of the eight short stories in this book, six are set in Israel at the time of the Six-Day War of 1967, one on New York's Lower East Side in the year 1912, and one deals with a Quaker family in contemporary America. All are concerned with the plight of modern man, who has lost his religious faith without finding an adequate replacement for it." (Library J) Some of these stories have appeared in such periodicals as Harper's Magazine, and The New Yorker.

"Of particular interest is the author's treatment of the theme of secularism in contemporary Israel as it conflicts ideologically with traditional Judaism. Written with restraint but capable of moving the reader deeply, the stories are simple and straightforward in style, and the message stays with you after you have finished reading." S. M. Batzdorff
Library J 97:1035 Mr 15 '72 130w

"[Nissenson] possesses what can be called the theological imagination. . . . The strength of [his] prose is not in what he puts in—the clean dialogue avoids idea-mongering, and there is no luxuriant visual or verbal surface to this fiction—but in how he omits. . . . He is the first American Jewish writer to step beyond social observation, beyond communal experience, into the listening-places of the voice of the Lord of History. . . . His stories might almost be recent translations from the Hebrew; some of them suggest a kind of Sabra mimicry." Cynthia Ozick
N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 19 '72 900w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:90B Ap 10 '72 440w

"Though occasionally marred by a pat coda, these stories are laconic and wise. Their silences refresh the ear, as their unabashed moral searching refreshes the mind."

Time 99:92 Ap 17 '72 140w

NITSCHKE, ROLAND. Money. (Int. lib) 128p 11 col il $4.95; lib bdg $4.72 McGraw 332.4 Money—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-70-46837-0; 0-70-46838-9 (lib bdg)
LC 73-129490

"What is money? Why is money made of paper more valuable than coins made of metal? In addition to answering questions such as these, this . . . book describes the work that money does and the function it performs. [The author] . . . has been on the editorial staff of daily and economic newspapers in Austria. . . . Edward R. Mayers, who adapted the English language edition of [the book] is an economist." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"This is a fairly complete, lavishly illustrated history of money and banking in the western world from the forerunners of money (weapons and tools) in prehistoric times to complicated systems of finance today. Nitschke emphasizes that national wealth is based on goods not gold. Originally published in England, this includes some terms which will be unfamiliar to American children—e.g., things are sent 'by post' and checking accounts are called 'current accounts.' These are not major flaws, but the omission of wampum in the discussion of shells as a means of exchange is more unfortunate. . . . [The book has] . . . numerous, imaginatively chosen photographs, reproductions of art works, and diagrams which greatly enhance [the] text." M. R. Sive
Library J 97:1618 Ap 15 '72 90w

Social Studies 63:142 Mr '72 20w

NIVEN, DAVID. The moon's a balloon. 380p il $7.95 Putnam

B or 92
LC 78-175270

These are the memoirs of the English actor who became a Hollywood star. Niven writes "I apologize for the name-dropping. It was hard to avoid it. People in my profession, who, like myself, have the good fortune to parlay a minimal talent into a long career, find all sorts of doors opened that would otherwise have remained closed. Once behind those doors, it makes little sense to write about the butler if Chairman Mao is sitting down to dinner." (Introd) Index.

Reviewed by James Byrne
Best Sell 31:558 Mr 15 '72 320w

"[It is for] peeps at the great and near-great that one first looks in a book of this kind. Niven gives his share . . . Churchill (of whose conversation he remembers surprisingly little), Fairbanks senior, Sinatra, Bogart, Chaplin, Olivier, Coward, et al.; he does it well. . . . But as is often the case with actors-by-accident, the best stuff is not to do with the show business merry-go-around . . . but with the author's earlier life. Niven was designed for an Army career, and on his years in a Highland regiment he is often first-class. . . . [Despite] four-letter words and some fairly robust living . . . by the last page [he] is still a likeable man, and has given evidence . . . of more character and sensitivity than his fans probably ever gave him credit for." G. M. Fraser

Book World p4 Ja 16 '72 480w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 9 '72 100w

Reviewed by Jerry Cao
Library J 97:1006 Mr 15 '72 60w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall
New Statesman 82:624 N 5 '71 180w

"In between the peacock displays of virility and the celebrity shopping lists, Niven strings together a daisy chain of moderately amusing anecdotes that provide occasional glimpses of what must have been an exceptionally interesting life. He should write a book about it someday." Donald Goddard
N Y Times Bk R p[30] Ja 30 '72 750w

Reviewed by Brad Darrach
Time 99:86 F 7 '72 480w

NIVEN, SIR REX. The war of Nigerian unity, 1967-1970. 175p maps $5 Rowman & Littlefield

966.9 Nigeria—History. Nigeria—Politics and government
ISBN 0-87471-028-6 LC 74-27492

This "book is in two parts. Part I, Background . . . [serves] as a first introduction for the lay reader. It covers . . . [such] topics [as] the development of constitutions, regional differences [and] census controversies. . . . Part II, Rebellion [describes the] area where the war was fought . . . and three chapters (plus five maps) cover the process of the military campaigns, 1967-69." (Choice)

"Niven, who spent 40 years in Nigeria's colonial service, has, as expected, written from the Nigerian point of view. The book carries the pedigree of being official. There is a preface by the Nigerian Federal Commissioner for Information and a cover bearing the Nigerian coat of arms, 'Unity and faith.' . . . There is, however, no conclusion, no documentation, and no bibliography. Recommended with reservation for college libraries, if students have access to more sophisticated materials."

Choice 9:118 Mr '72 190w

"This slim volume, written for young adult or general collections, is an overreasoned presentation of the Lagos view of the conflict. For a more thorough study of the complexities involved see A. H. M. Kirk-Greene's Crisis and Conflict in Nigeria [BRD 1972]." H. K. Flad
Library J 96:3755 N 15 '71 130w

NIZAN, PAUL. The watchdogs; philosophers of the established order; tr. by Paul Fittinoff. 185p $7.95 Monthly review

194 Philosophy, Modern. Right and left (Political science)
SBN 85345-182-6 LC 79-158923

"In his youth Nizan was part of the first Marxist philosophical group in France. [This book expresses his] . . . surrealist or existentialist Marxism in . . . protest against the established rationalist philosophies of the 1930's." (Library J) Glossary. Originally published in France in 1932 entitled Les Chiens de garde.

"In the English-speaking world philosophy has never had the cultural importance it has had in France or Germany, and Nizan's tone is likely to strike the Anglo-American reader as being unnecessarily impassioned. . . . Nevertheless, [the book] . . . is an important part of the literature of the New Left ideology. . . . Nizan's intellectual ancestors can be traced back through the French Jansenists and Calvinists to Savonarola, to that long Puritan tradition which claimed that only salvation mattered and that philosophical speculation was an idle luxury and a hindrance to salvation. Nizan says the only thing that matters is the salvation of the workers through political revolution. So he has a very different understanding of what salvation means. But he has the same reason for wanting, as he says, to 'kill philosophy.'" Maurice Cranston
Book World p9 Ap 23 '72 1000w

"[The author,] a friend of Sartre and a leftist critic who deserves to be mentioned in the company of the Sartres, Debrays and Fanons, has long been neglected in the English-speaking world. . . . [Nizan's book is written] on the creative historical 'impurity' of good philosophy and on the corruption of 'pure' philosophy when it does not know the truth about itself."

Christian Century 89:427 Ap 12 '72 30w

"A renegade from the Communist party, Nizan represented an early form of a French combination of cultural and political radicalism which has become notorious everywhere since the late 1960's. . . . At times incisive but at other times adolescent, [his book] has nevertheless lost none of its currency, as present-day positivism and analytical philosophies come under Marxist and phenomenological scrutiny. The translation is highly readable." Mark Poster

Library J 97:1441 Ap 15 '72 110w

"The real combat in Nizan's essay is between those satisfied with the status quo and those with every reason to want it changed in the name of common justice. It is the intellectual dogfight that Nizan mainly writes about here."

His general argument, that a standardized educational system is designed to castrate any will to change in the French people. . . . [is not] easy to refute. . . . There is little intellectual show-off in this [book] even the extensive footnotes are strictly functional. Nizan here asks all the awkward questions: Why do we let ourselves live so badly? Who does our thinking for us, and why? . . . [The book] suffers from the references (in 1932) to the 'healthiness' of the Soviet experiment, and rants rather prematurely of the death-warrant issued against the moribund, bourgeois West. . . . [The translator has] done a very thorough . . . job and supplies in addition a useful glossary of names."

TLS p998 Ag 25 '72 850w

NOAILLES, R. H., Jr. auth. A fern is born. See Guilcher, J. M.

NOBEL SYMPOSIUM, 12th, UPPSALA UNIVERSITY, 1969. Radiocarbon variations and absolute chronology; proceedings; ed. by Ingrid U. Olsson. 652p maps $45 Wiley

539.752 Radiocarbon dating—Research. Radioactivity
LC 79-24731

This volume is concerned with trends in dating research and includes such topics as "radiocarbon and archeology, pottery analyses, radiocarbon and varve chronology, radiocarbon and dendrochronology, ice core analyses, exchange rates and radiocarbon in different reservoirs, radiogenic isotopes in the atmosphere and in meteorites, and causes of secular variations in  $^{14}\text{C}/^{12}\text{C}$ ." (Science)

"[This] is an excellent assemblage of papers. . . . Contributors represent a broad range of disciplines from chemistry and physics to geology, archaeology, and geophysics, thus assuring comprehensive treatment of the problems discussed. . . . Individual papers are well illustrated, and are enhanced considerably by the discussions at the end of nearly every contribution. Significant references are also included with each paper. This rather comprehensive work . . . provides workers from a host of related sciences with an extremely valuable reference text."

Choice 8:1349 D '71 200w

"The proceedings contain valuable contributions not directly in the mainstream of radiocarbon dating research but nevertheless closely related. . . . [This book] should be indispensable to the modern archeologist, ecologist, geochemist, geophysicist, and radiochronologist." Rainer Berger
Science 173:620 Ag 13 '71 600w

NOBILE, PHILIP, ed. The new eroticism; theories, vogues and canons. 238p $6.95 Random house

176 Sex. Sexual ethics
SBN 394-43806-X LC 70-102319

This is an "anthology of description and criticism of American sexual mores in the late Sixties. [Among the authors are] . . . Herbert Marcuse, Norman O. Brown, Dorothy Kalins, and Kenneth Tynan. [The articles] are concerned primarily with eroticism in literature, art. . . . the mass media . . . [and] recent clinical description of human sexual behavior." (Choice) Some of these pieces appeared in such periodicals as The Antioch Review, The Humanist and Ramparts Magazine.

"These 23 essays, although most of them have previously appeared in print either in periodicals or in books by their authors, make up an excellent [collection]. . . . One thing is clear: . . . our Victorian inhibitions are gone, like the bustle and the button-hook. What is less clear and exceptionally interesting is the question of whether such essays as these, still a little racy as well as skillfully written, would sell (because they are a little racy) in another decade."

Choice 9:290 Ap '72 130w

"Nobile, an editor of Commentary, has put together a curious collection of what are not so much 'theories, vogues and canons' as points of view or, in some cases, mere exercises in journalistic frippery. It begins with two rather dull and pedantic variations on Freudian themes by Norman O. Brown and Herbert Marcuse, includes a sparkling clash of opinion between George Steiner and Kenneth Tynan, and ends up with a decent piece of pop behavioral science called 'Sex: Instinct or Appetite?' One or two other pieces are interesting, but few are revealing or new. But, then, eroticism is hardly very new, is it? . . . [This is] an anthology of occasional mild interest but not much significance." Eric Moon

Library J 96:200 Ja 15 '71 150w

NOLEN, BARBARA. Ethiopia. 88p il maps $3.75 Watts, F.

916.3 Ethiopia—Juvenile literature

SBN 531-00733-2 LC 70-131149

The author discusses the importance to modern Ethiopia of its geographical features, its long history, its religion, and its varied ethnic groups. Included also are discussions of the Ethiopian family, national dress, foods, housing in the countryside and city, agriculture and industry, education, sports, . . . and the arts. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"Barbara Nolen has very obviously done her homework on this fascinating land and has come up with a good, accurate, descriptive study of Ethiopia and its people. [She] describes the progress she feels Ethiopians have made under the leadership of Haile Selassie I." Barbara McKee

Library J 96:1828 My 15 '71 110w

"Of particular interest to teachers of the social studies in elementary and junior high schools, [is] this new [First Books] series, . . . [which] introduces the young reader to other lands and peoples as well as to important chapters in history. Each volume is attractively illustrated."

Social Studies 63:140 Mr '72 30w

NOONAN, D. P. The passion of Fulton Sheen. 182p il $6.95 Dodd

B or 92 Sheen, Fulton John, Bp.

ISBN 0-396-06438-8 LC 70-173885

A biography of the American Roman Catholic priest who was a radio and television personality, National Director of the Pontifical Society for the Propagation of the Faith, briefly bishop of Rochester and is now retired. Index.

"One turns to the reading of this biography with uneasy feeling. Its title, naming the most publicized American Roman Catholic priest, is itself dramatic; the photographs catalogue much of this man's hypnotic personality—are we going to be subjected to another example of ecclesiastical adulation? . . . Since I was enamoured quite early of the power of Sheen, I turned the pages with curiosity blended with dread. Although I found digressions multiplying with perhaps an unconscious desire to pad the book, I still find its reading to be an authentic honest portrayal of the archbishop as one man sees him. I commend Fr. Noonan for a job well done and I recommended this book as a true insight into man and Church and world." E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 31:558 Mr 15 '72 330w

Christian Century 89:176 F 9 '72 60w

"Sheen, according to Noonan, is 'a consummate egocentric' and his two chief woes—Spellman and Rochester—frustrated that ego. . . . The chapter on Sheen's brief stay in Rochester is accurate enough. . . . Noonan vastly overplays all this, however, by calling Rochester Sheen's 'calvary' and implying by the very title of the book that Sheen had to endure a 'passion' there as if he were some kind of Yankee Jesus with piercing eyes. There are others besides Father Noonan who've seen Sheen day-to-day too. They tell of a man of hour-long prayer before Mass, impetuous generosity, a desire to right all wrongs. . . . But 'the real Bishop Sheen' behind all the facts and legends, who is he? Noonan hasn't told us. Maybe even Sheen can't do that." H. A. Atwell

Commonweal 96:89 Mr 31 '72 600w

"[The book is] simple and naive, cloying and at the same time carping, cliché-ridden and factually unreliable. . . . [Noonan] considers Sheen a very important personage. He predilects his strengths, notably his efforts for the poor (abroad, as distinct from at home). . . . [But he] cannot rise above gossip and pettiness, and these bring the book crashing down on his head. That and his own meager writing talents. . . . So Noonan is mistake number one. Mistake number two is in making Fulton Sheen a book-length study. He isn't that major or complex a figure. . . . He's a feature for a family magazine or a sociological article in the Catholic Historical Review years hence, not a book in 1972." John Deedy

Critic 30:73 My '72 440w

NORDOFF, PAUL. Therapy in music for handicapped children [by] Paul Nordoff and Clive Robbins; with a foreword by Benjamin Britten. 144p il $4.95 St Martins

781 Music—Psychology. Music—Physiological aspects. Handicapped children
LC 70-174646

The authors 'summarize their clinical experiences with handicapped children and discuss how music may encourage growth and enrichment in the lives of children. . . . [Included is a] chapter on the rationale of group music therapy [which] deals with the philosophy of the authors' work.' (Choice)

"All of the activities described are very practical because the illustrations are actual case histories of [the authors'] most challenging work with severely handicapped students in England and Pennsylvania from 1959-67. The appendix illustrates individual and group music therapy procedures with some inspirational photographs of the children and authors at work. Portions of this book were previously compiled in 1965. Will be valuable to teachers, musicians, therapists, and students since it answers many questions concerning the benefits of music therapy."

Choice 9:885 S '72 180w

"Techniques are original and described in detail. The authors' enthusiasm that reaches the children and makes them increasingly aware of their surroundings is also communicated to the reader, and methods are described for group and individual therapy. In his foreword, Britten directs attention to the value of this book for composers, as well as for those engaged in the habilitation of the handicapped. Recommended." J. H. Di Leo

Library J 97:1025 Mr 15 '72 210w

NORMAN, EDWARD. A history of modern Ireland. 330p $7.95 Univ. of Miami press

941.5 Ireland—Politics and government. Ireland—History
ISBN 0-87024-205-9 LC 78-160166

"The major events in Irish political history from the Act of Union to the present are discussed in this volume . . . [which also includes material] on the personal and public eccentricities and foibles of the parties involved." (Library J)

"[This] work is more an historical essay, despite its length, than a history. It is full of personal opinions, unsupported statements, and trenchant observations. But Norman is unquestionably widely read in Irish history, and there is considered reflection behind much of what he has to say. This is not a book for beginners; but for those who know Irish history well, it suggests many fruitful lines of thought. Special Irish collections will want to have it, and since it is full of opinions, undergraduates, using it with care, may find it stimulating."

Choice 9:425 My '72 130w

"The interpretation is an exercise in apologetics in which English imperial policy emerges as essentially benevolent. The point of view of the author, a clergyman of the Church of England, is sufficiently indicated by noting that he considers modern Ulster to be 'a liberal democracy' and Bernadette Devlin to be a proponent of 'Trotskyite anarchism.' The style is lucid, fluent, and wittily donnish. The author has an almost malicious eye for what is ridiculous in Irish politicians and public opinion, and he uses it to reinforce his interpretations. Those who sympathize with Irish republican aspirations will find some of these barbed observations both unjust and carping." M. M. Reik

Library J 97:1433 Ap 15 '72 160w

NORMAN, GURNEY. Divine Right's trip; a folk tale. 302p $7.95 Dial press

LC 78-37455

"The novel, previously serialized in The last whole earth catalog, is called a 'folktale' by its author, an editor of that Catalog. The hero, David Ray Davenport, assumes the name Divine Right, or D. R. for short, after a particularly vivid drug trip. The 'trip' of the title has at least three meanings: D. R.'s actual journey across the U.S. in a day-glow-painted

NORMAN, GURNEY—Continued

VW microbus; an account of his hash-induced hallucinations; and his emotional and intellectual odyssey from being a freakish kid on the loose to having settled down on his uncle's farm in Kentucky and making progress toward reclaiming the ruined land. There is a girl, Estelle, and a would-be villain, The Lone Outdoorsman." (Choice)

"There is humor in the group portrait of a St. Louis commune hooked on watching TV, and there is genuine feeling in D. R.'s relationship to his sister and her family. The first part occasionally repels through its meandering and foul language; once the hero gets to Kentucky, however, real emotions are aroused by the villainy of strip mining and D. R.'s and Estelle's heroic plan to save the land through organic gardening. Thus the novel becomes Love story [BRD 1970 by E. Segal] with a happy ending. The greening of America [BRD 1970 by C. A. Reich] with a plot, interesting, for differing reasons, both to the counterculture and to aware readers everywhere."

Choice 9:971 O '72 200w

"Davenport, his old lady, Estelle, and their microbus, Urge, bring together into one place and one time what [Whole Earth Catalog] is all about—in fact, what life can be about after the disorder and the chaos of the Sixties. . . . Betrayed by drugs, conned by mystics, benumbed by violence and death, [D. R.] drifts across America, his bus and his life full of the debris and mess that had collected for over a decade. Finally, his trip ends where it had started—back in the mountains of his youth."

Like Raymond Mungo's Total Loss Farm [BRD 1971] and Stephen Diamond's What the Trees Said [BRD 1971], this is a rare and a hopeful book." Andy Armitage

Library J 97:2433 J1 '72 270w

Reviewed by Jerry Griswold
Nation 215:376 O 23 '72 1500w

Reviewed by John Deck
N Y Times Bk R p17 J1 2 '72 430w

"When, midway through, 'Divine Right's Trip' hits Kentucky, the book sheds its shimmering snakeskin of fantasy and becomes a stout celebration of the clan, of native soil and hard work and pastoral goodness. Yet it rings less true than in the first, weirder half. Not that the Kentucky voices are not lovingly and amusingly rendered; not that the blasted coal land isn't a cunningly appropriate territory for D. R.'s Dark Passage and Recovery of the Grail. The trouble is the marriage that Mr. Norman . . . makes occur, between the rural proletariat of Trace Fork and the young would-be gods of the dome communes. The idyll becomes cute. . . . A doubt remains whether D. R.'s love affair with rabbit dung and the blisters that come with digging fence-post holes amount to much more than another 'trip.' . . . Agriculture, after all, is not an intrinsically virtuous enterprise." John Updike

New Yorker 48:115 S 9 '72 1100w

NORMAND, MARJORIE WEINER, jt. ed. We the Vietnamese. See Sully, F.

NORTH, DOUGLASS C., jt. auth. Institutional change and American economic growth. See Davis, L. E.

NORTH, ELIZABETH. Summer solstice. 211p $5.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47304-3 LC 79-171144

This novel portrays "a modern woman who has just begun her struggle for personal freedom. In her early 30's, Hannah Green lives on a picturesque farm in southern England with her husband and three children. During one traumatic summer, she realizes her marriage is collapsing and desperately searches for some means of achieving an independent identity, separate from that of wife and mother." (Library J)

"The heroine of this first novel looks at life through a fog. The reader may find himself in a fog as well. . . . As a picture of contemporary England, the book has some positive values. Menus are interesting, automobiles are mentioned, clothing, daily living habits and aspirations are examined. Miss North has a feeling for locale and she enjoys describing Bournemouth in the summer season. She has a feeling for nature and reveals it poetically."

Readers of English novels of the calibre of those of D. E. Stevenson or Elizabeth Cadell will miss the lively romantic plots that distinguish them. There is no clear plot here. The readers will also be disappointed in the stream-of-consciousness techniques with flash-back. . . . Recommended for anyone who has nothing else to do." L. G. Crane

Best Sell 32:57 My 1 '72 240w

"This novel has a certain programmatic tendency (the men are doltish and infantile almost to the point of special pleading) but it isn't merely a funnel for complaints. The situation of the woman who wants out but doesn't know exactly out of what or where to go is certainly familiar, but is here treated in a way that, at least for a male reader, makes it seem new. . . . [The book] is a tense, engrossing, highly admirable first novel." Alan Hislop

Book World p5 My 21 '72 360w

Reviewed by M. L. Porter
Library J 97:902 Mr 1 '72 90w

"Hannah Green is that archetypal heroine of English fiction, the sensitive victim of a male-dominated society. . . . Miss North peels away her heroine's identity like the layers of an onion, till nothing is left but emptiness and tears. It is a finely-controlled performance, shifting beautifully between irony and anguish." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p38 Ap 30 '72 140w

Reviewed by Joseph Catinella
Sat R 55:68 My 27 '72 150w

NORTH AMERICAN Indians in historical perspective; ed. by Eleanore Burke Leacock & Nancy Oestreich Lurie. 498p il maps $14 Random house

970.1 Indians of North America—History.
Indians of North America—Social conditions
ISBN 0-394-46816-3 LC 70-130187

This anthology "is a collection of anthropological papers with emphasis upon recent Indian history and its exemplification of constantly emerging ways of dealing and adapting to new circumstances." (Commonweal) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"These essays are united by a common concern for reintegration of American Indian cultures, in the light of regional reviews. This sets [the volume] apart from others which treat the acculturative process. . . . The essays are mostly well knit in their historical perspectives but differ in their conclusions. . . . [The book] should have a wide readership. . . . [It represents] an important effort to ~~illuminate~~ a complex set of problems and will generate numerous discussions."

Choice 9:141 Mr '72 160w

"The anthology resulted from extended American-Soviet cooperation and is a prime example of the merging of diverse methods, viewpoints, and styles into a book which creates a remarkably clear picture of the Indian. The book contains just the right amount of the general and the specific, the modern and the historic. The well-balanced editorial scheme makes the work ideal . . . for the individual who is a serious student of Indian life." Jack Gregory and Rennard Strickland

Commonweal 96:288 My 26 '72 140w

NORTHEDGE, F. S. A hundred years of international relations [by] F. S. Northedge [and] M. J. Grieve. 397p maps $11.50; pa $4.50 Praeger

327.09 International relations
LC 76-172080

This is an "account of a century of change in the institutions, organizations, and political and diplomatic processes that make up the system of relations among nations." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The book clearly reflects the biases of a European perspective. . . . The authors seem less skilled in dealing with economic issues than with political and military questions. . . . But . . . the book is evenly paced, smoothly written, and entertainingly readable. Although doubtless intentionally avoiding the works of most contemporary American political scientists who specialize in international relations, the authors are solidly grounded in the works of most acclaimed—and especially the British—historians. The book should be equally acceptable—or unacceptable—to traditionalists and revisionists alike." Vincent Davis

Ann Am Acad 403:168 S '72 600w

"[This is] a rather well done standard account. . . . [And is] an admirable source for those who wish to find out what went on without reading a large number of books. There are, however, some ways in which this book might have been improved. First, it contains no organizing theme, and consequently it often appears to be summarizing material without a clear purpose. Secondly, relatively little attention is devoted to the non-European sectors of the world. Thus while attention is devoted to Africa, it is given to the competition of the European states over colonies in Africa. Information on Latin America and the nations of Asia as international actors is also rather short. . . . Well indexed.

Choice 9:699 JI/Ag '72 140w

"The aim of the authors is not simply to write another account of international history through the past century (though incidentally they have made a highly competent job of doing just that) but also to examine the applicability of contemporary concepts of political science to events before 1914 as well as since 1918. Superficially, it cannot be denied that the attempt is not, and perhaps cannot be, a unqualified success. It generates a few telling phrases but no deep reappraisal. . . . Essentially the book is a vindication of the international system of sovereign states and the balance of power. . . . The authors show a marked nervousness about commenting on such truly current events. But they have made a valuable and scholarly contribution to establishing the continuity of past and present in the longer perspective."

TLS p1483 N 26 '71 1600w

NORTON, ANDRE. Dread companion. 234p $4.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-224201-5 LC 72-115758

"Kilda c'Rhyn, in order to escape a life of boredom, signs on as house aide to a family bound for the colonial planet of Dylan. Her task is to care for and tutor the two children, and she soon discovers that the older girl is smart, difficult, and far too knowing about matters that should not concern her. Despite her suspicions, Kilda is trapped and drawn through a time gate to another, completely alien world. The book concerns her struggles to return to Dylan, and is replete with strange monsters and fantastical events. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Reviewed by P. M. Canham

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 12 '70 100w [YA]

"A skillful intertwining of unlikely elements—folklore and spacelore, sorcery and science—generates an engrossing adventure that begins in the year 2422. . . . Despite its elaborate setting, this science-fiction fantasy boils down to a suspenseful and satisfying teen-age romance; for, of course, when all the spells have been broken, Jorth, [a part-beast,] turns into a handsome red-headed young man." D. F.

Horn Bk 46:483 O '70 340w

"Miss Norton's contributions have ranged from virtually pure SF to almost equally pure fantasy. This latest volume leans heavily toward the latter and is somewhat below her usual high standard. . . . [Her] skill at style and characterization give the book readability and interest, but the plot has a murky vagueness at times. However, female protagonists are rare in juvenile SF, and even a below-average Norton is better than much of the SF/fantasy floating around today." Elizabeth Haynes

Library J 95:4366 D 15 '70 200w

"[This] is as compulsive and relentless as a nightmare—a hideous nightmare to which the reader would not return if the author once allowed him to wake up; but Andre Norton binds her spell tight. Bartare, a planetary child, is possessed by an evil power and leads reluctant brother and [Kilda] . . . into a land of monsters and mirages where touch, smell and taste of the indigenous vegetation, affect vision and dimension, where age and time take on new and terrifying meanings."

TLS p484 Ap 28 '72 100w

NORTON, G. G. The Red Devils; the story of the British airborne forces. 260p il maps $7.50 Stackpole bks.

356 Great Britain. Army. Air Corps
LC 74-150396

This history of parachute troops extends from its "formation in 1940 to the Mid-East crises of 1967. . . . [Norton] is the curator of the Aldershot Airborne Forces Museum." (Choice)

"Copiously and outstandingly illustrated, this book tries and fails to recount the history of the British Airborne Forces. . . . [The] volume lacks footnotes and bibliography; it seems to be written entirely from 'unit' histories, which always put a gloss on even bitter failures. Norton tries to defend the airborne concept, but his book shows that whenever parachute forces have been dropped in more than company strength, disaster is the usual result. The Airborne's best moments—and there have been many—have come when they have been marched or trucked into battle."

Choice 8:1077 O '71 150w

"On January 15, 1943, General Browning (GOC Para and Airborne Troops) sent the following signal to the parachute troops in North Africa: 'General Alexander directs that I Para Brigade be informed that they have been given name by Germans of 'Red Devils'. . . . General Sir Brian Horrocks, in his foreword, . . . asserts that he would rather have them under him in war than anyone else and that he considers them to be among the best troops in the world. Major Norton records not only the famous airborne landings over the Normandy beaches, at Arnhem, and the crossing of the Rhine, but countless other actions by airborne units which even now are only some thirty years old. This book has been very well done and makes absorbing reading."

TLS p830 JI 16 '71 150w

NORTON, MARY BETH. The British-American Loyalists; the Loyalist exiles in England, 1774-1789. 333p il $12.50 Little

973.3 American Loyalists. U.S.—History—Revolution
ISBN 0-316-61250-2 LC 72-401

This study of "the position of American Loyalists during the Revolutionary War [concerns] those Loyalists who chose to flee to England. . . . It traces the Loyalists (mostly officials, merchants, and ministers) from their early differences with the American patriots, through their decisions to flee the growing rebellion, their adjustment to life in England, and their attempts to gain payment for their losses. to their gradual disillusionment as the war ended." (Library J) Index.

"One long chapter and parts of others are devoted to detailed descriptions of the activities of various Parliamentary Boards and Commissions set up to study and administer relief to these refugees. The book will have a limited appeal; it contains little new information; the main facts will be found in any text book on American History and most of the minor details in any extensive treatment of the Revolutionary period. Its prosaic style does not make the factual narrative exciting or dramatic. There are some forty pages of footnotes with an index and an Essay on Sources at the back. It is hardly worth the excessive price." F. J. Gallagher

Best Sell 32:379 N 15 '72 250w

Reviewed by Guernsey Le Pelley

Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 10 '73 160w

"Adding little in the way of new facts or original interpretations to the several books that have been recently published on the Loyalists, this well written and scholarly study pays attention to minor figures, as well as those better known." F. D. Johnson

Library J 97:2839 S 15 '72 100w

"[This study] deserves an honored place on the Loyalist bookshelf. . . . Though a reviewer might criticize this book as addicted to a plethora of quoted material, some of it repetitious in nature, such a feature may actually contribute to the over-all strength in terms of depth. Miss Norton reveals a remarkable degree of insight into her subject and mastery of her sources. She has made a distinguished contribution to the historical literature about the American Loyalists." W. M. Wallace

N Y Times Bk R p4 N 12 '72 1050w

NOSSACK, HANS ERICH. The d'Arthez case; tr. from the German by Michael Lebeck. 313p $7.95 Farrar, Straus

SBN 374-1-3504-5 LC 76-148711

This novel provides an "exploration of the character and conduct of Ernst Nasemann, the black sheep of a wealthy [German] industrialist family (NANY, for Nasemann Nylon, Inc.), who has become a comic actor, a cabaret and TV performer under the nom d'artiste d'Arthez. . . . The fact that a Nazi collaborator with a checkered past and forged papers who also bore the name of d'Arthez has been murdered in Paris triggers a farcical investigation by . . . Chief Inspector Glatschke of German National Security. Dr. Glatschke suspects the enigmatic d'Arthez of being the mastermind of an international conspiracy of negativists and nihilists." (Sat R)

NOSSACK, H. E.—Continued

"The everyday world of social significance—of family, schools, careers, politics—loses its reality in the fiction of . . . Nossack. A major postwar West German novelist, Nossack has advanced to the frontiers of the modern consciousness, probing beyond alienation and nothingness. [This work] constructs taut metaphysical puzzles that seem to promise some secret knowledge. In trying to solve them, the reader becomes an active conspirator in the systematic stripping away of the compromises and certitudes by which most of us live." R. A. Gross

Book World p7 D 26 '71 470w

"Nossack's fiction is untraditional in structure, mingling the techniques of monologue and a kind of verbal cinema vérité. In the words of a contemporary German scholar, Nossack has produced a 'monologische Kunst.' [The narrator's] monologue, sustained throughout the novel, is a virtuoso performance, but produces a curious feeling of unreality, like a heavily filtered camera shot. We are aware of the time (1945-1965) and the places (Frankfurt, Wiesbaden), but the actors are as formalized as d'Arthez' mimed clowns, and the settings as remote as in [the film] Last Year at Marienbad. The entire question of d'Arthez' guilt and the reason for his interrogation are left enigmatically unresolved. This is congenial fare for readers of Kafka or Beckett, though not as distinguished as their works." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 96:2793 S 15 '71 240w

"[The author] achieves some marvelous effects by rescoring myth as a nightmare for contemporary voices. Yet those very voices in the end betray him; truth may be platitudinous, but not all platitudes are true. 'The D'Arthez Case' is a parable half-heartedly fleshed out with a plot. . . . [We] are left with a book brilliant in parts, large chunks of it alive with scintillating prose and brittle absurdities, but ultimately top-heavy, sunk by the clutter of arcane symbols, irrelevant props and the dead weight of portentous clichés." Ernst Pawel

N Y Times Bk R p4 N 14 '71 1050w

Reviewed by Harry Zohn

Sat R 54:50 O 30 '71 1100w

NOTEHELPER, F. G. Kōtoku Shūsui: portrait of a Japanese radical. 227p $16 Cambridge

R or 92 Kōtoku Shūsui (Denjiro)
ISBN 0-521-07989-6 LC 76-134620

This is a study of a Japanese "left-wing thinker at the turn of the century whose career and ideas . . . [influenced] subsequent radical movements in Japan and also in China. Kōtoku was [an] opponent of aggressive Japanese nationalism and militarism, foreseeing as early as 1906 that its ultimate consequence would be conflict with the United States. Implicated in a plot against the life of the Meiji Emperor in 1910, Kōtoku was executed early in 1911 on the charge of 'high treason'." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"The first study in a Western language of a leader in the early Japanese socialist movement, but a man more important dead than alive. Kōtoku became a symbol of protest against the increasingly oppressive Meiji state. . . . Notehelper has done an admirably thorough piece of research."

Choice 8:1374 D '71 130w

"[In this] admirably written first full-length study of Kōtoku in English, . . . one finds evidence that in Japanese eyes the act of rebellion per se, irrespective of its aims, can acquire instant prestige."

TLS p983 Ag 20 '71 150w

NOTESTEIN, WALLACE. The House of Commons, 1604-1610. 598p $18.50 Yale univ. press 328.42 Great Britain. Parliament. House of Commons. Great Britain—Politics and government—Stuarts, 1603-1714
ISBN 0-300-01356-6 LC 72-118733

This study deals with "the shifts and turns in the relations of Crown and Commons, and the development of the various issues which arose between them during the first seven years of Stuart rule. . . . [Included also] are political character studies of Robert Cecil, Sir Edwin Sandys, the King himself, and many others . . . [as well as a] disquisition on Francis Bacon's political attitudes . . . [and] estimates of the size of the House and the proportion of members who spoke." (Engl Hist R)

"Notestein proceeds at a leisurely pace, with the sure tread of one who is thoroughly familiar with every inch of territory that he passes. The judgments ring true again and again, the chronology is lucidly laid before us, and in two analytic sections the committee system and the role of the speaker are given definitive treatment. The one subject that is missing is the election of the House, and one could have wished for more detailed treatment of the relations between Commons and Lords. But there can be no doubt that this is a worthy opus ultimum." T. K. Rabb
Am Hist R 77:705 Je '72 1800w

"A work obviously of scholarly depth, [this] classically reflects Notestein's humanistic gentility, focusing not on parliament the institution, but on parliament the rich assemblage of vibrant, tough-minded gentry and burgers. Notestein's vivid reconstruction of the debates—his main concern—reads like Shakespeare turned scholar, for the abundantly quoted material is chronologically presented almost as in a play. . . . Though Notestein develops the theme of an emerging opposition to the crown, he fails to place the powerfully significant first parliament of James I in relation to the coming of the English Civil War."

Choice 8:896 S '71 100w

"This posthumous volume [has been] lavishly produced and piously, as well as constructively edited by two [of the author's] former pupils. . . . [The achievement] perhaps lies less in exploring issues and analysing trends than in re-creating an atmosphere—bringing to life a political microcosm which will soon be 400 years away from our successors. In a sense, Notestein has here combined in a single volume—and for only one parliament—what Sir John Neale did for the whole reign of Elizabeth in two different books comprising three volumes [Elizabeth I and her Parliament, BRD 1954; The Elizabethan House of Commons, BRD 1950]." G. E. Aylmer
Engl Hist R 87:363 Ap '72 1150w

NOTT, KATHLEEN. Philosophy and human nature. 239p $8.95 N.Y. univ. press

192 Philosophy. Analysis (Philosophy)
LC 70-559945

This is an "evaluation of linguistic and conceptual analysis. While acknowledging the merits of the high standard of clarity and precision introduced into our thinking and expression by this form of philosophy, the author has endeavored to illustrate its dependence upon the scientific standards of accuracy and to demonstrate its adverse effects upon human understanding. According to Nott, the linguistic philosopher is attempting to philosophize in abstraction, to divorce theory from practice as well as to reduce life and all forms of conceptualization to a form of language. The result, she . . . argues, is that such a philosopher neither investigates nor takes a stand in regard to the real problems of human existence." (Library J)

"Nott's foremost intention in [this book] is to call for a reestablishment of relevance in British and American philosophy—where the heavy hand of Wittgensteinian linguistic analysis has held a firm grip for over forty years. Miss Nott would like to make it into Moral Philosophy. . . . What [she] says about establishment philosophy is not particularly new. There have been critics of the unrealistic premises of linguistic analysis for as long as that approach has been around. Miss Nott herself acknowledges indebtedness to more professional writers: to Michael Polanyi, for instance; and, to dig back a bit into the past, to Charles Peirce and R. G. Collingwood. Hers is a synthesis of their approaches." Alan Goldfein
Commentary 54:110 D '72 1100w

"[This] a spirited indictment of contemporary Anglo-Saxon philosophy, both in the academic and in the popular sense of the word. . . . Other writers have challenged the sovereignty of science, but Miss Nott's book . . . [stands out because it is] based on a thorough knowledge of what has been done in recent years in academic philosophy and in general scientific theory, so even those readers who are not persuaded by her argument will at least acquire a good inkling of what the behaviourists, psychoanalysts, linguistic philosophers, ethical evolutionists and the rest of us are up to. She is, at the very least, a marvellous teacher, with a witty tongue and a powerful cane, and one cannot help feeling sometimes rather sorry for the worthy liberal and progressive backbones on which her blows fall." Maurice Cranston

Encounter 36:79 Ap '71 450w

"There are shortcomings in Nott's approach. She has provided few (other than negative) indications of the relationship between language, philosophy, and science. She neither tells us how the philosopher should distinguish real philosophical problems from those resulting from linguistic confusion, nor once genuine problems are identified, how they should be investigated. This book's contribution, however, lies in its attempt to evaluate this predominant form of philosophy prevailing in the United States and England." M. L. Collins

Library J 97:1813 My 15 '72 150w

"[This] is a connected and closely written account of . . . [the author's] attitude to the main problems in which she is interested, and could serve as her political testament."

TLS p150 F 5 '71 150w

NOUWEN, HENRI J. M. Creative ministry. 119p $4.95 Doubleday 250 Pastoral work
LC 73-139050

The author "explores the need to infuse the daily pastoral work of the minister with a new creative spirituality in order to make it . . . meaningful. . . . [He discusses] five areas which he considers the primary responsibilities of the priest and minister—teaching, preaching, counseling, organizing, and celebrating." (Publisher's note)

"[The author] offers priests, and especially counsellors, deep insights into the life and ministry of the modern priest who wants to help modern men face realistically their human situation and celebrate it in all its awesome reality." E. S. Stanton

America 125:437 N 20 '71 50w

"First published in serial form in the National Catholic Reporter's 1971 Lenten series, Creative Ministry defines that vague term 'spirituality' by presenting some of the real articles rather than by theorizing about it. . . . The chapters which best exemplify Nouwen's insights are those on teaching and individual pastoral care. The weakest is the one on organizing. 'Community organization' is a specialized term referring to direct social action generated by a group's awareness of its own power and the injustice it suffers. . . . The overall contribution of this small work is impressive." Gerald Weales

Commonweal 95:527 Mr 3 '72 850w

"'Ministry in no way is a privilege,' Father Nouwen writes in this byproduct of a Notre Dame summer school lectureship. 'It's the core of the Christian life.' . . . [The] book is more than a manual for the ordained; it is a book about the lifestyle of every Christian." John Deedy

Critic 30:89 Ja '72 150w

NOVACK, GEORGE. Understanding history: Marxist essays. 160p $5.95 Pathfinder press 901 History—Philosophy. Dialectical materialism
LC 75-186684

In this 'collection of six previously published essays . . . the first two . . . are a general critique of various theories of history and an exposition of the Marxist view on the subject. The third essay deals with the problem of the role of the individual in history 'from Lenin to Castro,' the fourth and fifth deal with the 'law of uneven and combined development' in history, and the sixth centers on the issue of 'permanent revolution.' " (Choice)

"Except for the first two, the essays have a polemical character and are to a large extent an exposition and defense of Trotsky's views.

The book is marginal from a scholarly point of view but may be of some use in a seminar on Marxism. No index and only a few notes."

Choice 9:1042 O '72 130w

"All of the pieces are of interest, from 'Major Theories' to the concluding essay on 'Permanent Revolution.' . . . These essays are part of the literature of Marxism that every student should explore; to fail to do so was costly in the past. Novack's writings are rewarding not only for their subject matter, but also for the author's lucid style and fine command of Marxist polemics." George Charney

Library J 97:2591 Ag '72 130w

NOVAK, MICHAEL. All the Catholic people; where did all the spirit go? 201p $5.95 Herder & Herder 248 Catholics in the U.S.

LC 76-165498

What is it to be a Catholic today? This book represents the author's attempts to locate himself and other American Catholics in "a Church where religious renewal . . . has preceded, and gone on somewhat independently of, ecclesiastical reform." (America) The last two chapters entitled From belief to politics, and Bringing up children Catholic are new. The other twelve chapters are revised or altered versions of material previously published in books and periodicals. Index.

"Novak obviously loves the Church as both a people and as an institution. He, like many others, is more at home with the people, but his love and basic honesty prompt him to prod the institution." E. S. Stanton

America 125:437 N 20 '71 50w

Reviewed by Gabriel Fackre

Christian Century 89:582 My 17 '72 420w

"Novak's main value is as a religious journalist, an interpreter and critic of other more detached scholars' discoveries. . . . He is working toward a more adequate descriptive definition of what it is to be Catholic. It is 'to belong to a historical people.' It is style, prayer, the presence of God. . . . Novak has also become a severe critic of the hollowness of American culture, its invisible civic religion, its evasive amoral desiccated intellectuals and its flabby counter-culture. . . . I think a lot of his statements are off the mark; in spite of his erudition he offers little evidence for some of his assertions other than his own intuition and experience. But . . . he has helped transform the church." R. A. Schroth

Commonweal 95:474 F 18 '72 350w

Reviewed by Desmond O'Grady

Critic 30:85 Mr '72 850w

"[Novak writes] with a clarity, honesty, and sophistication that never fail to reward his readers. . . . For its competence, its spirit of dedication, and its lively style, this book recommends itself to Catholics struggling to discern the competing spirits within the church."

J. W. Heisig

Library J 97:886 Mr 1 '72 150w

NOVAK, MICHAEL. The rise of the unmeltable ethnics: politics and culture in the seventies. 321p $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

301.45 Minorities. U.S.—Race relations. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century
LC 70-185143

"America is not a melting pot, says Novak. It is long past time for her to understand and appreciate the diversity of her ethnic elements, to stop feeling that she can assimilate individuals but not groups of individuals. [He contends] . . . it is time for a new cultural pluralism and a politics that . . . [is based on] this new cultural pluralism." (Publisher's note)

Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by T. H. Clancy

America 126:575 My 27 '72 500w

"A book that is characterized by sweeping generalizations, polemic, and the polarization of groups of human beings necessarily must be filled with contradictions. The contradictions in Professor Novak's book are almost as numerous as are his generalizations. . . . This [study] parades, if not flaunts, and attempts to justify, the hostilities between groups of white Americans and blacks, yet at the same time proclaims that 'lower class ethnics and blacks . . . are allies.' . . . Novak not only rejects the humanity of WASPs, intellectuals and blacks.

NOVAK, MICHAEL—Continued

He rejects the humanity, the dignity, the individuality, of the white ethnics whom he purports to explain and defend." K. B. Clark
Am Scholar 42:156 winter '72-'73 1300w

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 32:66 My 1 '72 380w

"Novak deserves to be read carefully, but skeptically. . . . Strong opinions swirl the surface of his prose. He likes the 'pagan quality' of Slavic Catholicism. He finds democracy 'extremely fatiguing, inefficient, and a vast nourisher of illusions.' He believes that 'rational' authority weighs as heavily as liberty in the humanistic scale. . . . Sometimes he bursts into arbitrary fantasies of a new order. . . . an educational system which admits intellectuals' children only to agricultural colleges; and many more that defy fair summary in brief space. Novak is a humane man [and] . . . he is sophisticated enough to see flaws in his arguments. . . . Yet it seems to me that in the end he is unfaithful to historical truths, often by implication." B. A. Weisberger
Book World p6 My 14 '72 1150w

Reviewed by R. S. Kennedy

Christian Century 89:1041 O 18 '72 450w

"Novak author of such books as The Open Church [BRD 1964] and Belief and Unbelief [BRD 1966] is especially good at dispelling the myth that ethnic politics is fundamentally racist; for this alone, his book deserves a place in most libraries." Hindy Schachter
Library J 97:1815 My 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by Nathan Glazer

Nat R 24:903 Ag 18 '72 1500w

Reviewed by P. J. Ognibene

New Repub 167:27 N 25 '72 2800w

"There is something dismaying about an immoral book written by a very moral man. And very well written at that, full of bright aphorisms and seductive phrases, all put to baneful use. . . . This book is part of a rapidly growing literature on the social uses of hatred. . . . On the one hand, we are told that there is underlying opposition between the WASP and the ethnic sensibilities, [and] that economic alliance only disguises this opposition. . . . On the other hand, we are told that the more strident cultural conflict between blacks and whites will just die away when their economic interests are seen to coincide. Mr. Novak cannot have it both ways. . . . First on [his] agenda . . . is getting the ethnic vote for the Democratic party." Garry Wills
N Y Times Bk R p27 Ap 23 '72 1850w

"Michael Novak promises to become this season's Charles Reich [The Greening of America, BRD 1970, 1971]. He has written a kind of 'Multicoloring of America' with his book about the various subcultures of white ethnics (excluding the Irish)—the millions of American Poles, Italians, Greeks and Slavs. . . . That [he] has so brilliantly explored ethnic angst and charted a pragmatic course for 'a new cultural pluralism' could well signal an important change in American politics. . . . Novak, a philosophy professor at the State University of New York . . . offers some thoughtful—and controversial—proposals: if blacks replace Jews in the New York School system, reward must be made to those displaced; . . . if blacks demand 'open admissions' to universities, ethnics should also be invited to participate. No one could write such a tough-minded, provocative book as this without indulging in a few impracticable fantasies. . . . [Nevertheless] Novak deserves a careful reading." Arthur Cooper
Newsweek 79:96 Ap 24 '72 700w

NOVOTNY, ANN. Strangers at the door: Ellis Island, Castle Garden, and the great migration to America. 160p il $12.50 Chatham press

301.32 U.S.—Immigration and emigration.
Ellis Island, New York
ISBN 85699-025-6 LC 70-137989

In this history of immigration to the United States "the author begins with Ellis Island in 1907 and describes 'the peak of the greatest mass movement in human history.' . . . Novotny then discusses immigration up to 1855, beginning with the migrations of the ancestors of the American Indians from circa 50,000 B.C. to 20,000 B.C. There is a . . . chapter on Castle Garden, which was a receiving station from 1855 to 1890, and Ellis Island is portrayed before 1907, from 1915 to 1932, and thereafter." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Novotny (a free-lance writer) has assembled an interesting collection of picture essays which, despite their unevenness, offer the general reader an informed understanding of this particular aspect of immigration history. The book is well researched and usually readable. Obviously intended for the general reader, it deserves to stand on the shelf of every public library in the nation. Undergraduate libraries with limited holdings in immigration history might well add it to their collection. . . . The format is exemplary." Choice 9:250 Ap '72 110w

"After years of neglect, Ellis Island has been the subject of two books in the last few months. The focus of the present work is somewhat different from that of Ellis Island [BRD 1972], by Wilton Tift and Thomas Dunne [as it] embraces the whole history of immigration to America from Leif Ericson to the present day. The pictorial matter has been well chosen. There are drawings and lithographs, and the photographs of Ellis Island are as moving as those in Tift and Dunne's book. There is a more detailed textual account, and the author has included an interesting chapter on famous immigrants and one on the economic conditions encountered by new arrivals." T. E. Smith
Library J 97:872 Mr 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by Virginia Borland

Library J 97:1184 Mr 15 '72 150w [YA]
N Y Times Bk R p10 Ap 23 '72 160w

NOWLAN, KEVIN B., ed. Ireland in the war years and after 1939-51; ed. by Kevin B. Nowlan and T. Desmond Williams. 216p $8.50 Univ. of Notre Dame press

941.5 Ireland—Civilization. Northern Ireland—History
LC 74-98905

These essays are concerned with "foreign affairs, wartime neutrality, economic problems, social changes, church-state relations, Ulster, education and the language question, domestic politics, and literature." (Choice)

"[These essays] are thoughtful and well-written presentations of important subjects. Some of them are of exceptionally high quality, particularly Augustine Martin's discussion of Irish literature. Nowlan and Williams have presented an important analysis of the development of Irish society at a critical time in the postrevolutionary period." L. J. McCaffrey
Am Hist R 76:1555 D '71 550w

"[These are] 'popular' but informative essays (mostly by professional historians). . . . Most are around 15 pages long, and while this is fairly adequate for the discussion of some subjects, others call for more extended treatment. . . . The book is part of the Thomas Davis Lecture series, and like several of its predecessors, it partly fills one of the many gaps in Irish historiography." Choice 8:1239 N '71 160w

NUNN, FREDERICK M. Chilean politics, 1920-1931: the honorable mission of the armed forces. 219p $10 Univ. of N.Mex. press
320.983 Chile—Politics and government
ISBN 3263-0195-9 LC 70-129808

"This book chronicles the events leading up to and following the seizure of power by Chile's armed forces—the 'Honorable Mission' of regeneration led by Colonel Carlos Ibáñez del Campo to end the economic stagnation and political disorder following World War I. Dr. Nunn's purpose is to describe the widespread thrust of the military into Chilean politics in the critical decade of the 1920s after a tradition of civilian rule had become established [and] to show that this intrusion was justified by political instability in the country. . . . [He] challenges the myth that there had been participatory democracy in Chile before the military came to power." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has surveyed an impressive array of historical materials in an effort to piece together an important period in Chilean political history. . . . The book is likely to be widely read by confirmed Chileanists. Its useful bibliography on the period will also enhance its utility for students of Chilean politics. . . . As an analysis of the events described, it is less than convincing. Specialists on Chilean politics will probably find themselves turning to it for essential historical information, but scholars with a wider comparative or theoretical orientation are unlikely to find much that would make it required reading." R. L. Ayres

Am Pol Sci R 66:661 Je '72 900w

"A study of this depth is needed as no work is specifically dedicated to the subject. . . . Nunn's analysis is broad in scope and concise. The citations illuminate and add to the value. . . . It will be an asset to junior and senior undergraduates and graduate students researching modern Chilean history or the role of the military in Latin America."

Choice 8:464 My '71 180w

NUNN, G. RAYMOND. Asia; a selected and annotated guide to reference works. 223p $12.50 MIT press

016.016915 Asia—Bibliography

ISBN 0-262-14015-2 LC 77-169004

"Consisting of approximately 980 . . . books and periodicals, the volume covers various categories of reference materials such as bibliographies, encyclopedias, biography, year-books, atlases, statistics, chronology, and other sources of information written in Oriental as well as European languages. Arranged by country, each entry carries a description of the scope of work with a brief value judgment." (Choice) Index.

"Oriented principally to the problems of concern to modern Asia, [this] can be supplemented by and complemented with another new reference book, [Eleazar] Birnbaum's Books on Asia from the Near East to the Far East (1971), which concentrates on retrospective aspects with emphasis on the Islamic world. One of the features of the present volume is its computerized text which would ease the task of publishing new updated editions at regular intervals in the future. Both the index of author-title-English translated title and the list of characters for Chinese, Japanese and Korean titles afford maximum facility for users. An essential tool which belongs on reference shelves in all college and research libraries."

Choice 9:626 J1/Ag '72 250w

"At long last an annotated guide to selected reference tools dealing with Asia is available. . . . Unfortunately corporate entries are not always correct, and some works have author entries whereas standard bibliographic tools use corporate entries. The work, however, represents a milestone in bringing together the significant reference works on Asia—from Pakistan to Japan—and providing annotations for them." D. C. Johnson

Library J 97:1306 Ap 1 '72 150w

"The annotations are informative, especially in indicating the size and scope of the works cited. A limited number contain value judgments, mostly well founded, and more of them would have been welcome. . . . Two-thirds [of the entries are] in English and 138 in Japanese. The rest of the world's languages are represented in only a couple of hundred titles, including a high proportion in Chinese. Books in other major languages, such as French and German, are disproportionately few. The author's Asia excludes all of western Asia . . . and the vastness of Soviet Asia. . . . Some indication of this should have been given on the title page. There is a striking shortage of references to Islam. . . . Within the limits which Professor Nunn has set for his work, he has produced a very helpful book and it is good to learn from the preface that revised editions will appear from time to time. They will put librarians and scholars further in his debt." Eleazar Birnbaum

Pacific Affairs 45:413 fall '72 450w

NURGE, ETHEL, ed. The modern Sioux: social systems and reservation culture. 352p $12.50 Univ. of Neb. press

309.1701 Dakota Indians

ISBN 0-8032-0715-8 LC 71-88039

"Eleven essays by people with field experience among the present-day Sioux fall but one of which were originally prepared for the Conference to Explore a Theoretical Framework for Study of the Modern Dakotas, Chicago, 1965. After a short preface by Nurge, Ruth Useem and Carl Eicher look at the Rosebud Reservation economy. Selections on the Dakota diet, the changing society of the Tetons, culture change among the Lower Brule, on representative government, political and religious systems, and the Dakotas in Saskatchewan follow. . . . Robert A. White, S.J., [argues] that the Indian culture is really lower class—a culture of excitement—' . . . the only experiences that have real meaning are the bursts of excitement.' . . . Essays on cultural identity, familial and extrafamilial socialization, and Oglala music and dance complete the [volume]. (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Some of the eleven articles in this book are interesting and illuminating; the others are obfuscating or just plain dull. Thus, the sensitive depiction by Robert E. Daniels of the complex social and cognitive aspects of Sioux identities . . . serves to counterbalance the parochial value judgments and soapy misstatements that mar Useem-and-Eicher's work on 'Rosebud Reservation Economy.' . . . In much the same manner, Luis S. Kemnitzer's unassuming but accurate descriptive study of what happens to young Sioux who migrate to San Francisco helps to reveal the shortcomings of Robert A. White's study of Sioux migrants to Rapid City . . . his superficial understanding of the 'culture of excitement, and his invalid conclusions that peoples who follow this pattern of social organization are automatically doomed to 'failure' in 'the dominant society.'"

R. H. Wax

Am Anthropol 74:31 F/Ap '72 450w

"The conference failed to develop any unified theoretical framework with which to approach [the contributors] varied concerns. But three strong emphases stand out: (1) problems are examined historically, and historical causes are suggested for current situations; (2) ultimate explanation of modern reservation conditions is often ascribed to processes of child rearing and socialization; (3) the modern Sioux are approached as a new, or 'third' culture, the outcome of the interaction between dominant Anglo-American society and the native culture. Their problems can thus be merged with other American minorities. It is evident that a great deal more work needs to be done. . . . Dr. Nurge has enhanced the present volume with maps and bibliographies of both published and unpublished materials that will be useful for those continuing the study of the Sioux." R. J. DeMallie

Am J Soc 77:625 N '71 950w

Choice 8:299 Ap '71 200w

NUTTING, ANTHONY. Nasser. 493p $10 Dutton

B or 92 Nasser, Gamal Abdel, President United Arab Republic. Near East—History
SBN 0-525-16415-4 LC 74-189474

This biography traces Nasser's political career from 1952 to 1970 and analyzes its impact on Egyptian, Arab, and world history. A biographical dictionary of principal figures is included. Index.

Reviewed by J. A. Robbins

America 127:243 S 30 '72 500w

Reviewed by R. P. Savitt

Best Sell 32:325 O 15 '72 450w

"An illuminating, sympathetic but critical political biography. . . . Strongly recommended for all collections as a standard work."

Choice 9:1347 D '72 100w

Economist 243[i.e.-234]:61 Je 17 '72

600w

Reviewed by R. M. Burrell

Encounter 39:69 J1 '72 200w

Reviewed by R. W. Howe

New Repub 167:24 S 16 '72 1600w

Reviewed by Geoffrey McDermott

New Statesman 83:830 Je 16 '72 250w

"[The author,] Britain's Minister of State for Foreign Affairs during the Suez crisis of 1956, . . . is an objective and intelligent man who runs his own life according to his conscience. . . . Unfortunately, his conscience (e.g. his concern for such matters as the British Official Secrets Act, and his desire not to have his sources of information thrown in jail) has stood in the way of his giving explicit and detailed answers to those questions that continue to worry political analysts, but his 'Nasser' is such a beautifully three-dimensional 'case history' of Nasser, Nasserism and the Nasser entourage that it will enable an astute reader to figure out the answers for himself. . . . [This] is currently the 'in' book of London's diplomatic corps. . . . It should be invaluable to our own diplomats." Miles Copeland

NUTTING, ANTHONY—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p17 Ag 6 '72 1050w
New Yorker 48:126 S 9 '72 160w

"The author's criticisms are the more impressive for his avowed sympathies and his generous tribute to Nasser's virtues and achievements. . . . [The failures] are notorious, but Sir Anthony uses his familiarity with Nasser and his entourage to reveal the personal defects from which these failures partly sprang. . . . Sir Anthony's narrative, as one would expect from a practised writer, is gripping . . . and tells many little known stories, notably concerning Nasser's relations with his subordinates. . . . The absence of bibliography and references . . . is regrettable; and there are quite a number of avoidable mistakes."

TLS p676 Je 16 '72 950w

NYBERG, DAVID Tough and tender learning.
186p $4.95; pa $2.95 Nat. press

371.1 Teaching, Learning, Psychology of
ISBN 0-87484-185-2; 0-87484-184-4 (pa)
LC 71-142371

"This book is about how people treat one another in classroom situations, with some implications for how people could (or should) treat each other in such situations. It explores, in the light of contemporary scientific and social theory, workable ideas and theoretical bases for developing a more effective (and tolerable) educational environment. It treats, in a nonlinear way, the need to combine the terms 'humane' and 'human' into one, chiefly through the connection of thought and feeling." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Nyberg is most interested in the relationship established prior to and during the learning process. His primary attention is focused on developing such a relationship through increased self-understanding and empathy. He makes little or no attempt at suggesting organizational innovation, but rather emphasizes personal development within its framework. Admittedly biased toward a more humanistic, cognitive-field orientation, as opposed to any conditioning theory of learning, Nyberg offers the teacher or prospective teacher some provocative thoughts in a most readable style."

Choice 8:1230 N '71 140w

"While much of this book on how small-group relations can be applied to the teacher-student 'conversation' is very readable, it does require close attention. The author quotes extensively from John Dewey and other philosophers in an attempt to clarify the interrelatedness of thought and feeling. . . . There have been more pragmatic presentations of the uses of small-group techniques in the classroom; this is a literate, thought-provoking explication of 'why' rather than 'how.' Recommended for academic and special libraries, and for public libraries serving educators, psychologists, and/or philosophers." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 96:3129 O 1 '71 120w

O

OATES, JOYCE CAROL. The edge of impossibility: tragic forms in literature. 259p $8.50 Vanguard

808.8 Literature—History and criticism
SBN 8149-0675-3 LC 77-188692

In this study, the author examines "such writers as Shakespeare, Chekhov, Melville, Dostoevski, Yeats, Thomas Mann, and Ionesco, and such themes as 'The Tragedy of Existence,' 'The Tragedy of Imagination,' and 'The Tragedy of Nihilism.'" (Publisher's note)

"The central subject of these essays is the new shapes which the impulse to create tragic art—defined as growing out of 'a break between self and community, a sense of isolation. At its base is fear'—has evolved in modern times. The examples range from Troilus and Cressida, always a very strange play, to the works of Beckett and Ionesco, and the argument is intricate and provocative."

Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:112 My '72 80w

"These are difficult essays on difficult works. They are sometimes obscure, often awkwardly phrased. A phrase like 'the actual valuelessness of the contextual world' does much to explain why in reading her fiction, the content holds our attention while the language encourages us to skim. . . . Oates is not after elegance, however; urgently, doggedly, she goes after communicating what she comprehends—and apprehends—in [the authors she examines]. . . . Her criticism grows out of intense caring about their great fictions, and the tensions of mind and heart that they embody. Obscurity and coagulated abstraction are incidental; her urgent concern pressures her into them and past them to report what she has seen." C. C. Park

Book World p10 Ap 23 '72 700w

"[This work] contains nine formally constructed critical essays previously published in scholarly journals, and it's a definite, if uneven, success. . . . Most of the book is quite sound and readable, but the remarkable introduction, with its concluding statement that tragedy 'begins as a pencil mark, the parody of a crack,' creates expectations that something of Oates's mature power as a fiction writer will come through, which it does in the two essays on Yeats and in the examination of [T.] Mann's Dr. Faustus [BRD 1948] (the source of this volume's title). Oates's ideas in themselves are extraordinary. . . . One doesn't just appreciate these three essays, one feels them; Oates has felt the crack give way, the abyss widen, and she forces you to share the horror and joy of her perceptions."

J. A. Avant

Library J 97:1718 My 1 '72 290w

Reviewed by Roger Sale

N Y Times Bk R p23 J1 9 '72 1500w

"[This book] lacks the intellectual coherence required for persuasive elucidation of the author's view of Western literary tragedy's changing nature from Shakespeare to Ionesco. The discourse in The Edge of Impossibility is lucid chiefly when Miss Oates is explicating a play, novel, or poem. Drawing on her own technical expertise and responding concretely to a particular work, she can be valuably acute and direct, as when she finds Melville's art lagging in The Confidence-Man and Billy Budd. It is when Miss Oates mistakenly assumes that she can rely upon a body of belief shared by her reader that the book's argument and credibility become dubious."

Brom Weber

Sat R 55:63 Je 10 '72 700w

OATES, JOYCE CAROL. Marriages and infidelities; short stories. 497p $7.95 Vanguard
SBN 8149-0718-0 LC 72-83348

A collection of short stories previously published in the Atlantic Monthly, Southern Review, Virginia Quarterly, McCall's and other periodicals.

Reviewed by P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 32:335 O 15 '72 290w

Christian Century 89:928 S 20 '72 20w

"Oates's fourth story collection and her 12th published book since 1964 is perhaps less impressive than her last collection, The Wheel of Love [BRD 1970], because the new volume has fewer successful stories: only 13 of these 24 stories seem really good, although some of the 13 are as fine and strong as anything she has written. . . . Surprisingly, Oates is still capable of the traditionally well-made story, as in 'The Sacred Marriage' and 'By the River' . . . but in two stories she enters new areas with gratifying success, and the achievements are spectacular [in] 'Night Music' . . . [and] 'The Turn of the Screw.'" J. A. Avant

Library J 97:2754 S 1 '72 650w

Reviewed by C. L. Markmann

Nation 215:566 D 4 '72 1750w

Reviewed by Ronald De Feo

Nat R 24:1307 N 24 '72 500w

"These stories display variously diminished people at various moments of crisis and crack-up, but the diminishments and the crack-ups don't go together as often or as well as they should. . . . Miss Oates has technical worries too: she experiments with a split-page parallel narrative keeps insisting on the element of invention in all writing. . . . There are five or six good stories in this book ('Love and Death,' '29 Inventions,' 'The Children,' 'Wednesday's Child,' 'The Metamorphosis,' 'Where I Lived, and What I Lived For') and one marvelous one ('Problems of Adjustment in Survivors of Natural/Unnatural Disasters'). . . . But the successes make the failures seem self-indulgent, a refusal by the writer to know what she knows." Michael Wood

N Y Times Bk R p6 O 1 '72 1200w

"[This volume] confirms what has already been evident for some years: In the landscape of the contemporary American short story Miss Oates stands out as a master, occupying a preeminent category of her own. . . . A story such as 'The Dead,' which tells with the utmost conviction of a young woman writer going gradually to pieces, is not only harrowing to read but unfaltering in its control. . . . The chosen stories, though differing widely in style and form—and there are some notable experiments in technique here . . . conform in most cases to the themes suggested in the title of the volume. . . . [Miss Oates] sees her subjects piercingly and writes about them plainly, in short sentences, accelerating phrases, and drab recognizable particulars that gain in conviction for their very freedom from rhetorical splendor." William Abrahams

Sat R 55:76 S 23 '72 1050w

Time 100:109 O 23 '72 380w

OATES, JOYCE CAROL. Wonderland; a novel.

512p $7.95 Vanguard

ISBN 0-8149-0659-1 LC 72-155669

"Jesse is a poverty-stricken 14 at the beginning, when his father murders his family and tries to kill him before killing himself; and when we last see Jesse, a wealthy doctor of 46, he is drifting in a boat with the perhaps dead body of his freaked-out daughter." (Library J)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 228:148 N 1 '71 600w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p4 O 10 '71 1500w

Reviewed by J. B. Gordon

Commonweal 95:449 F 11 '72 1350w

"Some of the people in Wonderland could have been imagined by Dostoevsky. . . . Although Oates has depicted poverty powerfully, she is not a naturalistic writer. . . . Wonderland reaches its peak early and sustains it for almost 400 pages; but . . . the novel finally collapses and ends in shambles. The book begins to fail when Oates tells us that her characters are emotionally shaken and their lives changed by JFK's assassination. . . . Wonderland, the most involving, the most poetic, the greatest of Oates's novels so far . . . [is] the most deeply flawed of her long works, because it has reached a higher plane than her other books and therefore must fall through a longer distance. Its ultimate failure seems inevitable and even admirable, since anything that exists at this degree of heat must burn itself up if it keeps going, and Oates isn't one to quit when she's ahead." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:2545 Ag '71 750w

Reviewed by Roger Sale

N Y Rev of Books 17:3 O 21 '71 850w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wolff

N Y Times Bk R p5 O 24 '71 1300w

"[This novel] is as impressive, as admirable, as [Oates's] other fiction, but perhaps those who will admire it most will be those who don't know her other work. For those of us who do, a certain sameness, certain patterns, are beginning to come clear. The connecting themes and images in 'Wonderland'—of personality and the possession of one's self, of the devouring father and the parricide—recur throughout the novel without development. A suspicion grows: perhaps the truth of Joyce Oates's novels is no more than the truth of journalism; perhaps the anguish behind the melodrama, for all the talk of fate and destiny, has not yet found a full articulation. Partly for this reason, 'Wonderland's' parts seem greater than the whole." P. S. P.

Newsweek 78:100 O 11 '71 900w

"[The author] tells what happens to her characters and what their experiences—usually terrible—do to them but she rarely explains what they are thinking about their plights. . . . Her new book surpasses even Them [BRD 1969], which in . . . [1970] won a National Book Award. In Wonderland the author has allowed her technique to become wholly empirical. Like a scientist who feels he must eliminate his own judgments from his experiments, Miss Oates has retreated to a vantage point well outside her story, and she relates only what she can be sure of from that aspect. . . . She has Tolstoy's sense of history as it overwhelms the individual, and she reveals a classical affinity for fatalism and lost innocence." B. P. Hayes

Sat R 54:38 O 11 '71 1000w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard

Time 98:89 O 18 '71 600w

"Virtually any page taken at random from Joyce Carol Oates's new novel would almost certainly put the majority of readers of this journal off exploring further. . . . The ingredients of Wonderland appear at first glance to be calculated to appeal to what may be crudely called the sensation-mongering American market. . . . Yet waded through the gore and guts and passion the suspicious English reader should, if only because this is possibly the nearest thing yet to an impressionistic exposure of what is wrong with American society today."

TLS p765 J1 7 '72 600w

OATES, WHITNEY J. Plato's view of art. 81p $4.95; pa $1.95 Scribner

111.8 Plato, Esthetics

ISBN 684-12751-2; 684-12839-X (pa)

LC 74-37202

The author has written this "book to correct what he shows to be a mistaken view of Plato's philosophy of art. In doing so he is able to provide a . . . reexamination of Platonic thought, particularly insofar as it relates to values. . . . Oates also provides the reader with a brief survey of Greek literature from Homer to Plato." (Publisher's note)

"The topics treated in this book have been the subject of interminable study, and it cannot be said (in spite of his claims) that the author sheds any new light on them. The treatment of the basic texts is largely superficial, and Plato's most dogmatic (and depressing) statements—in the Laws—are not even mentioned. Much is made of Plato's views on the form of beauty, but this has next to nothing to do with his views on art as such. . . . All in all, an unhelpful and disappointing book." T. M. Robinson

Library J 97:1720 My 1 '72 230w

"[The author's] summary (in Chapter I) of classical Greek tragedy ignores the fact, made clear by Aristotle, that such dramas are actually essays in experimental ethics. Altogether, a very unsatisfactory, though charmingly written, series of footnotes to Plato."

Va Q R 48:clvi autumn '72 120w

"It is Whitney Oates's contention that Plato's mind was not set against all art and that the proscription in the Republic has been too absolutely interpreted. Basing his argument primarily on the Phaedrus and the Symposium, Oates asserts that Plato indeed held a positive view of the function of art, bound up with what Oates calls the philosophical creative artist, the man who can, through his art, hold up a standard of value to men's souls for emulation. . . . The evidence from which Oates argues is seldom explicit, but his main suggestion, that Plato was not prepared to ban all sorts of art, but actually viewed certain types as creative, is intelligent and sensitive." Carroll Moulton

Yale R 62:135 O '72 500w

OBER, HAROLD, jt. auth. As ever, Scott Fitz—. See Fitzgerald, F. S.

OBOJSKI, ROBERT, jt. auth. Illustrated encyclopedia of world coins. See Hobson, B.

OBOLENSKY, DIMITRI. The Byzantine commonwealth; Eastern Europe, 500-1453. 445p pl maps $15 Praeger

914.95 Byzantine Empire—History. Byzantine Empire—Civilization. Byzantine Empire—Foreign relations
LC 73-137892

"This book is concerned with two themes. The first . . . is the history of Byzantium's relations with the peoples of Eastern Europe. These relations—political, diplomatic, economic, ecclesiastical and cultural—will be considered both in the light of the Byzantine Empire's foreign policy, and from the point of view of the East European peoples. . . . [The second theme is that] through the relations established by these peoples with the empire during the Middle Ages, their ruling and educated classes were led to adopt many features of Byzantine civilisation, with the result that they were able to share in, and eventually to contribute to, a common cultural tradition." (Intro'd) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

OBOLENSKY, DIMITRI—Continued

Reviewed by P. J. Alexander
Am Hist R 77:1433 D '72 1450w

Reviewed by R. A. Pierce
Ann Am Acad 403:191 S '72 300w

"[Obolensky's] superb command of the sources—learning worn easily—and well made style make this an indispensable tool for scholars and graduate students, the best detailed overview ever written of this highly diverse area in a highly complex millennium."

Choice 9:122 Mr '72 160w

"That a commonwealth did indeed exist is a complex story pieced together from fragmentary evidence, and it is clearly presented and well written. . . . [The author] presents an original and careful examination of Byzantine cultural, political, and religious influence. Each chapter is a well-defined unit indicating the central historical problem, the evidence, and the author's conclusions based on it. The result is an eminently readable text that gives us the best discussion of Byzantium in Eastern Europe. The photos are handsomely reproduced and provide some excellent views of the principal areas under discussion, and the bibliography is exhaustive and demonstrates a familiarity with all the languages of the region. The study is a superb contribution to the field." Martin Chasin

Library J 97:498 F 1 '72 170w

"The author's wide knowledge, the clarity of his analyses, and above all his skill in interpreting the true meaning of the texts, even when they have become overcharged with later interpolations, are outstanding. The story he tells is often hard to follow, for there are so many sidetracks, so many interlinkings, that make it necessary for the narrative to be broken off and taken up again at a subsequent stage. But it must have been even harder to put some sort of order into it; Professor Obolensky has provided what must, for many years, remain the most authoritative and comprehensive textbook on the history of eastern Europe. [It] is not easy reading, but it is a major work . . . [and] must be accorded an honoured place in every specialist library."

TLS p1423 N 12 '71 700w

"Professor Obolensky of Oxford has admirably accomplished here an imperatively needed task, one that has been attempted before but never with so much profound understanding and genuine success. . . . He depicts with assurance and sympathy the underlying cultural heritage that, in spite of vast changes over the centuries still gives cohesion and basic cultural unity to the successor states of the Byzantine commonwealth of nations."

Va Q R 48:1xxii spring '72 180w

O'BRIEN, CONOR CRUISE, jt. auth. The story of Ireland. See O'Brien, M.

O'BRIEN, D. B. CRUISE. See Cruise O'Brien, D. B.

O'BRIEN, D. P. J. R. McCulloch: a study in classical economics. 452p $16.50 Barnes & Noble

330 McCulloch, John Ramsay. Economics
ISBN 0-389-04046-0 LC 76-19569

This work is concerned with J. R. McCulloch as an "author, speaker, teacher, and active public servant . . . [and also deals with his] economics, including his theory of value, money, trade, growth, distribution, and public finance." (Choice)

"O'Brien's work . . . attempts to remedy . . . [the] unfavorable view of the man long regarded as the word of the 'dismal science' made flesh. This is a scholarly, conscientious compilation of McCulloch's views upon almost every aspect of political economy, which draws upon virtually everything that this extraordinarily prolific journalist wrote. The book should prove a considerable boon for specialists in the history of economic thought. The non-specialist reader, whether economist or historian, is probably less well served because the author is reluctant to part with any fact that has come his way: many of these are to be found in footnotes, which occupy more space than the text. Even specialist readers may feel that O'Brien has waged too much of an up-hill fight to prove that McCulloch was not merely an undeviating disciple of Ricardo, which has been more or less the common view." Bernard Semmel

Am Hist R 77:145 F '72 470w

"[This is a] well written and thoroughly researched work which will be considered the definitive edition on McCulloch. . . . [The author's] analysis justifies the claim that McCulloch . . . was probably the first professional economist in the sense of one who lived by means of his learning on the subject."

Choice 8:116 Mr '71 240w

O'BRIEN, DAVID J. The renewal of American Catholicism. 302p $7.95 Oxford 301.45 Catholics in the U.S. Catholic Church in the U.S.

ISBN 0-19-501601-7 LC 72-85825

This work is an "interpretation of . . . recent developments among American Catholics. . . . O'Brien contends that the election of John F. Kennedy to the presidency and the assembling of the Vatican Council by . . . John XXIII inaugurated a new phase in American Catholic history—a coming of age marked by an end to minority self-consciousness and defensiveness. . . . The author describes and analyzes tensions within the church . . . [and] concludes with a chapter on 'New Directions for American Catholicism.'" (Christian Century) Index.

"[O'Brien] approaches his topic with the solemnity of a doctoral candidate gearing up to drain any lingering traces of literary style or personal flair from his dissertation prose. . . . Don't, however, let his overly long discussion of various contemporary schools of historiography discourage you. Plod through them to reach O'Brien's thoughtful and challenging examination of current Catholic views on the true nature of church renewal and its relation to social or political action. . . . He is always respectful in outlining the views of others, faithful to his training in the complexities of American history and, above all, anxious to contribute to the process that, he dutifully records, Peter Maurin and Dorothy Day named 'clarification of thought.'" D. R. Campion

America 127:400 N 11 '72 450w

"This volume is a valuable summary of Catholic history of the past several decades. It is also valuable for what it tells us about Catholics like O'Brien. . . . He does not argue as a Roman Catholic; he argues as a Christian and in an ecumenical spirit. . . . O'Brien, as one of the youthful pioneers in writing a fresh kind of Catholic history, is trying, within the church, to tell the truth about the church. He embodies in himself much of the spirit of Catholic renewal about which he has a vision. There are many among American Catholics who will not be sympathetic to O'Brien's generous and compassionate outlook—as O'Brien well knows as he issues this invitation to renewal." J. H. Smylie

Christian Century 89:1132 N 8 '72 450w

O'BRIEN, JUSTIN. Contemporary French literature; essays; ed. and introduced by Leon S. Roudiez. 300p $12.50 Rutgers univ. press

840.9 French literature—History and criticism

ISBN 0-8135-0661-1 LC 77-127052

These essays examine the work of Proust and Gide and "the literary relationships of these writers with Camus, Beckett, Cocteau, Valéry Larbaud, and others. . . . O'Brien's topics range from a search for Gide's sources in Vergil's Bucolics and Lautréamont's Chants de Maldoror to analyses of Proust's characters and his use of various literary devices." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Contains some 20 of O'Brien's best critical essays. O'Brien himself chose these essays from among the many he had written in the course of three decades. . . . [His] authoritative scholarship and clarity of style are evident throughout these pages. Extensive notes. . . . Highly recommended for college and university libraries."

Choice 8:1590 F '72 130w

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ag 29 '71 80w

O'BRIEN, MAIRE. The story of Ireland [by] Máire O'Brien and Conor Cruise O'Brien. (Eng title: A concise history of Ireland). (A Studio bk) 192p il $12.95 Viking

941.5 Ireland—History
SBN 670-67475-3 LC 76-183930

This "historical survey of Ireland from the earliest times to the present . . . concentrates on highlight aspects, events, and personalities." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"The authors' extensive experience with life in America and Africa enables them to draw illuminating parallels between the various stages of the Irish struggle for freedom and more recent independence movements on other continents. These parallels reveal that the authors have shared the experience of many Irish who move in liberal circles. . . . [This] is a balanced, well-proportioned and straightforward narrative, written from the nationalist viewpoint, by two authors who know both their Irish history and how to write it in clear and pleasant English. As far as this reviewer can judge, they make every effort to be fair and just in the popularization." G. A. McCool

America 127:345 O 28 '72 490w

"One [wishes] that more detail and information could have been included but, restricted by space limitations, the book could not achieve depth. [Its] finest aspect is the almost two hundred illustrations which augment and beautify in a truly impressive manner. Starting with photos of artifacts of the earliest civilizations and ending with some pictures of the present turmoil in Ulster, the illustrations are apt, well-chosen, and informative. . . . Many readers may find the text often determinedly eager to explain away injustices to Ireland. . . . At times the O'Briens seem to be so anxious not to be considered pro-Irish that truth must suffer when they deliberately take a reverse stance. All in all, then, this is a mixed bag, primarily of interest for the illustrations." P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 32:272 S 15 '72 240w

"This is the 'story' (as opposed to the 'history') of Ireland in the sense that it makes no pretense to either in-depth analysis or scholarly research. It wants to be, and is, an accurate and adequate introduction to Irish history. . . . The text is quite brief—even skimpy in places—and contemporary events in particular are badly short-changed. . . . The text is for people who know nothing at all about Irish history; the illustrations are for everyone." M. M. Reik

Library J 97:2592 Ag '72 120w

New Repub 167:31 O 28 '72 290w

"[This is] a highly professional piece of work—articulate, humane and knowledgeable. Its conciseness, however, is so concise that one must suppose it to be directed mainly towards the outsider who will have instant history or none at all. As instant history it is, naturally, far above the common run and for anyone who still may want to visit—or even to try to understand—Ireland, this book will be a useful tool."

TLS p850 J1 21 '72 140w

O'BRIEN, ROBERT C. Mrs. Frisby and the rats of NIMH; il. by Zena Bernstein. 233p lib bdg $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

Mice—Stories. Rats—Stories
LC 74-134818

"What is a poor widow to do when her home is demolished and she has a sick child? Poor Mrs. Frisby! As a mouse she did not enjoy the thought of seeking advice from a wise owl, but as a mother she needed help, and that was how Mrs. Frisby was led to the lair of the rats of NIMH, who—the owl had said—could solve her problem. And that was how the strange story of a super-intelligent race of rats, distressed by their reputation as ne'er-do-wells and scavengers, disclosed how they had learned, as laboratory rats, the communication and engineering skills that set them apart." (Sat R) "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. F. Smith
Christian Science Monitor p4 My 2 '72 100w

"[This] talking-beast tale which blends scientific probability and fantasy is an unusual addition to the stories of animal communities which have fascinated children for generations. . . . [It] becomes an intriguing adventure made plausible through vivid descriptive prose and meticulous selection of detail. The fine pen-and-ink drawings are at once interpretive and decorative." M. M. B.

Horn Bk 47:385 Ag '71 250w

"[A] thoroughly engrossing, thought-provoking fantasy by the author of The Silver Crown. . . . More cohesively plotted and without the gory details and sense of horror of O'Brien's earlier title, this book ends with the rats' departure, leaving readers to speculate on—and hope for—the success of the rats of NIMH, and to applaud as well the desire of the Frisby children (who have likely inherited the superior species traits of their father) to join the rats in the future." Frances Postell

Library J 96:4186 D 15 '71 200w

"The story is fresh and ingenious, the style witty, and the plot both hilarious and convincing. . . . Ages nine to eleven." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:49 S 18 '71 130w

TLS p1317 N 3 '72 200w

O'BRIEN, ROBERT C. A report from Group 17. 210p $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

LC 76-175291

"A young girl climbs a tree overlooking an estate near Washington belonging to the Russians. There she sees an ape in a tetanoid spasm. At the same time Fergus O'Neill, a brilliant youth biologist, is enlisted by a group of important U.S. government officials to find out what is going on in this Russian villa. Within the villa, Dr. Schutz, an ex-Nazi scientist kidnapped by the Soviets, is performing unspeakable experiments involving genetics." (Library J)

Best Sell 32:99 My 15 '72 120w

"There are some not very menacing dramatic moments in the book, and the children's relationships are well enough defined despite the oddly flattened prose, but it does seem as if O'Brien wrote himself into a confectioner's corner and walked away." Steven Kroll

Book World p7 Mr 19 '72 240w

"Make no mistake about it, Robert O'Brien is out to make our flesh creep, our spines turn icy, and our hair stand upright. 'A report from Group 17' is a science fiction type mystery that reads as if Mr. O'Brien were peering out of every page, wondering if he is being scary enough and upping his dreadfulness accordingly. . . . O'Brien borrows Henry James's 'turn of the screw' device. The use of children really does make our blood turn cold. It makes us faintly resentful too. But resentful or not there is no escaping from 'A Report from Group 17.' It is a compulsive book, impossible to leave unfinished. Even the pseudo-science jargon could only slow down this reluctant reader—not release her." F. M.

Christian Science Monitor p18 Mr 11 '72 220w

"[This is] an almost unbearably suspenseful thriller of biological warfare. . . . [The] strands are excitingly wound together in the understated and realistic conclusion." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:1351 Ap 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 97:1954 My 15 '72 100w [YA]

Reviewed by J. R. Coyne

Nat R 24:700 Je 23 '72 180w

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p41 Ap 9 '72 140w

Newsweek 79:84 Ap 11 '72 380w

O'BROIN, LEÓN. Fenian fever; an Anglo-American dilemma. 264p il $7.95 N.Y. univ. press

941.58 Ireland—History. Great Britain—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—Foreign relations—Great Britain. Irish in the U.S.
ISBN 0-8147-6151-8 LC 76-165471

This "study of Fenianism from the viewpoint of the British government . . . focuses upon the 1867 rising. . . . 'Fenian fever,' as government saw it, was a secret disease in Ireland, affecting . . . the troops, and a public one in America, embarrassing already uneasy Anglo-American relations. Amateurish leadership in Ireland, factionalism among American Fenians, extensive use of reformers and continuous vigilance by government and skillful British diplomacy in America, all contributed toward calming the fever." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Among surprising revelations is the fact that General Millen was a government spy. Fenian fever makes a definite—and topical—contribution towards the history of Ireland, of Irish-Americans, and of Anglo-American relations. Although well written, illustrated and with a useful bibliography, the book has an inadequate index and there are too many misprints. Notes are relegated to the back."

Ó'BROIN, LEÓN—Continued

Choice 9:861 S '72 160w

"Ó Broin adds new perspective to the study of Fenianism through his access to archives of the British administration in Ireland and the papers of some of its principal actors. He is particularly good on the nuances and clashes of Irish bureaucratic life. . . . [The author however,] is weak on the broad historical analysis which a study of this sort demands. Irish problems seem to change little and the book has extraordinary echoes in our own time."

Economist 240:68 S 25 '71 500w

"Mr Ó Broin describes . . . [the Fenians with] objective thoroughness . . . [and he brings] to light much buried material. . . . [He] disentangles the threads of this involved story . . . with a patient hand. He is least satisfying in dealing with the British Army. More is needed to show just how deeply the troops were committed to Fenianism and why in the event no unit mutinied. . . . An examination in depth of the regiments involved would be illuminating and it is a pity that so shrewd a researcher as Mr Ó Broin has not attempted it."

TLS p1176 O 1 '71 1850w

O'CASEY, EILEEN. Sean; ed. with an introd. by J. C. Trewin. 319p pl $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

B or 92 O'Casey, Sean
LC 78-179028

This memoir of the Irish playwright was written by his wife. Appendix: Works of Sean O'Casey. Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:109 F '72 20w

Reviewed by S. P. Ryan
Best Sell 31:463 Ja 15 '72 600w

Reviewed by D. H. Greene
Book World p5 F 6 '72 650w
Choice 9:370 My '72 190w

Christian Century 89:150 F 2 '72 30w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell
Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 27 '72 800w

Reviewed by Brooks Atkinson
Critic 30:74 My '72 1000w

"A well-written memoir of almost 40 years of marriage between the famous playwright and his Irish actress wife. Mrs. O'Casey's book will stand with her husband's autobiography as the best record of his character and his activities as a man of the theatre. Despite grinding poverty, the O'Caseys lived a life of integrity and insuppressible joy. The emphasis of the book is on the O'Caseys' domestic relationship: their entertainment of famous visitors (most notably Shaw), [and] their grief over the death of their oldest child. . . . An affecting story of human dauntlessness." R. J. Thompson

Library J 97:66 Ja 1 '72 90w

"The opening chapter recaptures the strange Victorian nastiness of Eileen's childhood; a compound of neurosis, lovelessness and genteel poverty. Mother was odd with a vengeance, appearing at her daughter's wedding in mourning black and prefacing the poor girl's confinement with a cheerful declaration about family insanity. Yet . . . Eileen is too honest to make her mother into a monster; and honesty is one of the book's best features." Miles Donald

New Statesman 82:513 O 15 '71 600w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
N Y Times Bk R p5 Mr 12 '72 1550w

"[Written] in cheerful, garrulous prose . . . the book's final effect is disappointing. Everything is there and yet, curiously, nothing is there I referred earlier to Mrs. O'Casey's vagueness about dates. The truth is that she is vague about everything—above all, about her beloved husband. Naturally, she provides some fascinating insights, particularly about his working habits. . . . Fascinating as these snippets of information are, they fail to add up to a portrait of the man. . . . Mrs. O'Casey never manages to convey any sense of his bristling linguistic presence. One would never even know that he was regarded as a brilliant talker. Nor is there any trace of the fire and humor that made him, above all, a great satirist." A. Alvarez

Sat R 55:57 Ja 29 '72 2300w
TLS p1383 N 5 '71 240w

OCHSNER, ALTON. Smoking: your choice between life and death. 224p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

613.8 Smoking
ISBN 0-671-20693-2 LC 74-130484

"Dr. Ochsner is a cancer specialist who has long been convinced that smoking constitutes a health hazard. In this book he gathers the evidence against smoking in relation to the circulatory, digestive, and respiratory systems and he finds tobacco guilty." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Ochsner, renowned surgeon and president of the Alton Ochsner Medical Foundation in New Orleans [here continues] his crusade against smoking [and sets out to show that] clinical and scientific evidence supports the thesis that smoking increases the incidence and death rates from cancer. . . . The reader cannot help but be impressed with some of the statistical data regarding the morbidity and mortality associated with smoking. Ochsner also enumerates the annual costs not only in terms of deaths but also work lost, disability, sickness, and restricted activity. . . . A bibliography of over 100 references from professional journals provides additional source material for further study. The index provides a ready reference for topics presented in the text including both subject and the names of clinicians or researchers. Should have particular appeal to the potential smoker—the teenager as well as to the adult smoker or nonsmoker."

Choice 8:1353 D '71 280w

"The techniques for stopping smoking and the reasons for never starting are convincingly presented. The style is clear and simple. Recommended for most collections." S. B. Hesselien

Library J 95:4187 D 1 '70 70w

O'CONNELL, JEFFREY. The injury industry and the remedy of no-fault insurance; foreword by Daniel P. Moynihan. 253p $8.50; pa $2.95 Univ. of Ill. press

368.5 Insurance, No-fault automobile. Insurance, Automobile
ISBN 0-252-00236-9 (pa) LC 76-183914

The author "is codesigner of one of the basic no-fault plans. In this . . . book, he makes [an] attack on the present system of liability insurance, then goes on to discuss the various no-fault and combination no-fault/liability proposals, including his own. In appendixes 1-3, Robert E. Keeton of Harvard Law School and the author present modifications of their original plan." (Library J)

"O'Connell's informative response to the insurance industry's unhallowed Jekyll and Hyde relationship with its clients and large numbers of tort-engrossed members of the bar should be required reading for every lay maker in the land—and this includes most of us in principle." G. F. Mott

Ann Am Acad 402:197 J1 '72 450w

"The work discusses shortcomings of the 'fault' system in the automobile injury field . . . [O'Connell] exposes legal fictions and fabrications in determining who is at fault. He points to the corruption of lawyers and of personnel in the insurance industry of a 'fault' system which operates wastefully, is inequitable, and harmful in many ways to the victims of automobile accidents. In this connection contingent fees are especially well handled. The work is well annotated, written in a readable and nontechnical but expert fashion."

Choice 9:106 Mr '72 160w

"Most libraries should have a collection of books and pamphlets presenting the various viewpoints [concerning no-fault insurance], and The Injury Industry merits inclusion in such a collection. . . . Research collections will want the hardcover edition; the paperback is recommended for general collections." David Cooley

Library J 96:4005 D 1 '71 200w

O'CONNOR, RAYMOND G. Diplomacy for victory; FDR and unconditional surrender. 143p maps $6.50; pa $1.95 Norton

940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Peace. World War, 1939-1945—Diplomatic history. U.S.—Foreign relations
SBN 393-05441-1; 393-09765-X (pa)
LC 70-155986

This is an "examination of the policy of unconditional surrender which Franklin D. Roosevelt proclaimed at a press conference at the Casablanca Conference on January 24, 1943. O'Connor challenges the critics who contend that this policy encouraged enemy resistance and thus prolonged World War II." (Best Sell) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This is] an interesting and concise [study]. . . . At the conclusion of his essay, Professor O'Connor has included an excellent bibliographic review of books dealing with the diplomacy of World War II." B. D. Williams
Best Sell 31:508 F 15 '72 300w

"Unconditional surrender, once viewed as the major blunder of World War II diplomacy, has found a persuasive defender in Raymond G. O'Connor. Carefully tracing the origin, announcement, and execution of the policy, O'Connor concludes that unconditional surrender was thoughtful and intelligent strategy that permitted the Allies to defer potentially divisive issues during the war and thus enabled them to concentrate on defeating the Axis nations. . . . [He] is most successful in placing unconditional surrender in the context of World War II, pointing out how it accorded with both domestic political reality and the needs of coalition diplomacy. . . . He is less convincing in arguing that unconditional surrender reflected Roosevelt's overriding commitment to a new world organization, a conviction more characteristic of Cordell Hull who is barely mentioned." R. A. Divine
J Am Hist 59:477 S '72 250w

O'CONNOR, RICHARD. Ernest Hemingway. 143p $4.72 McGraw

813 Hemingway, Ernest
ISBN 0-07-047555-5 LC 74-178929

This "account relates Hemingway's experiences to his fiction and brings out the high points of his life . . . [recounting] his skirmishes with war, his four marriages, his adventurous travels, and his intense love of writing. Hemingway's last days and his suicide are [also] . . . communicated." (Library J)

"If a biography of Hemingway is desired for young readers, this one is simple and interesting enough. However, it will not tell them how to write, how to live or how to die." S. M. C.
Best Sell 32:98 My 15 '72 30w

"[This is] a readable, informative biography. . . . Hemingway's stubborn individualism comes through clearly. . . . Carlos Baker's longer, comprehensive biography of the famous author, Ernest Hemingway: a Life Story [BRD 1969], is more suitable for research assignments; however, O'Connor's book effectively presents a valid, credible portrait of Hemingway." Jack Forman

Library J 97:2966 S 15 '72 150w [YA]

O'CONNOR, ULICK. Brendan [Eng title: Brendan Behan]. 328p il $6.95 Prentice-Hall
B or 92 Behan, Brendan
SBN 241-01776-9 LC [72-518793]

The author "traces the life of Brendan Behan from his birth in ■ North Dublin tenement down to his . . . death in the Meath Hospital, Dublin. . . . [Included also is an] analysis of Behan's literary output. . . . Many of the less accessible items from the Behan canon, including many of the poems, originally written in Irish [are] here translated by Mr. O'Connor." (Best Sell)

"The portrait which emerges is that of ■ strange human contradiction. . . . [Of particular interest] is the chapter which treats of Brendan Behan's nearly two years in the Borstal Institution at Hollesley Bay in Suffolk, where he had been committed after being found guilty of the possession of explosives, after his arrest in Liverpool in 1939. He was then 16 years old and a member of the I.R.A. [Irish Republican Army]. . . . The biographer's insistence that Behan was an active homosexual . . . introduces ■ new dimension to Behan's career. . . . We owe Mr. O'Connor ■ nod of thanks for his biography; but one has ■ few reservations. We suspect that the biographer did not really like Behan; there is a sort of veiled hostility which occasionally reveals itself. Therefore, we feel that we must be cautious in our acceptance of Mr. O'Connor's 'facts.' Time may or may not give us the correct answers to some of the questions raised in this generally admirable book." S. P. Ryan

Best Sell 31:61 My 1 '71 850w

Reviewed by Patrick Boyle
Book World p16 Je 6 '71 650w
Choice 8:853 S '71 150w

Reviewed by J. F. Moran
Library J 96:2490 Ag '71 200w

"This is no work of hagiography. . . . The strength of Mr O'Connor's book is that he does not forget that Behan was first and foremost a poet. The pity of it is in the poetry, not the pothouse. . . . O'Connor is shrewd and clear in his treatment of Behan the writer." Christopher Wordsworth
New Statesman 80:123 JI 31 '70 550w

"[This] biography is long on hearsay, heavy with platitudes and dangerously slipshod in those small instances where one can, oneself, verify the facts. . . . But, for all that, the book is fascinating, especially when it deals with the little-known early years." Brian Moore

N Y Times Bk ■ p35 Ap 25 '71 1200w

Reviewed by Tom MacIntyre
Sat R 54:37 My 1 '71 650w

"[This is] an engrossing and altogether convincing book. It is important in its own right as a study in the pathology of alcoholism. And, if that sounds an unpromising theme, it has to be recognized that little can be understood of Behan's life or his writings unless the dominant effect of his malady is always borne in mind. But sympathy for his sickness can be no substitute for a critical account of what he was free to do and say. Mr. O'Connor keeps an exact balance between the narration of what is known and speculation about the hidden springs of motive and desire. He quite properly sees Behan's writings as the public evidence of much of the private man. The stories are told, the jokes repeated, but throughout his book there runs a steady stream of intelligent understanding."

TLS p850 JI 31 '70 1000w

O'CONNOR, WILLIAM E. Economic regulation of the world's airlines; a political analysis. 189p $15 Praeger

387.7 Air lines—Economic aspects
LC 76-155217

"This study seeks to show that economic regulation of world airline service is essential, yet is hampered by an insufficient degree of international cooperation . . . [and] explores possible changes in [the] method of economic regulation. . . . Attention [is] paid to attempts over the years to substitute a multilateral agreement for the plethora of bilaterals. Two chapters analyze these efforts, and their failure over the quarter century since 1944. Another chapter analyzes national and world aviation interests, broken down into political, psychological, and economic. . . . The concluding chapter analyzes several systems of world economic airline regulation which have been proposed in the past and selects one of them, a draft agreement prepared by an international body in 1946, as the best choice." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"One of O'Connor's persistent complaints is with the level of air fares for international travel, for which International Air Transport Association (IATA) is partly faulted. The recent rebellion among IATA members, which appears to have led to a trans-atlantic round-trip fare of $190-200, has dropped prices to almost exactly the level advocated by O'Connor." R. E. Miller

Ann Am Acad 401:220 My '72 600w

"Originally a doctoral dissertation (School of International Studies) at American University, O'Connor, at the time of its writing, was an 'official of the Civil Aeronautics Board.' [The book's] focus is historical. The tools are those of political science. The conclusions are not striking or new, although as an historical summary this volume has merit."

Choice 9:106 Mr '72 70w

O'CONOR, JOHN F. The Sokolov investigation of the alleged murder of the Russian Imperial family; a tr. of sections of Nicholas A. Sokolov's The murder of the Imperial family; tr. and commentary by John F. O'Connor. 257p il $8.95 Speller

947.08 Nicholas II, Emperor of Russia. Russia—History—1917-
ISBN 0-8315-0110-3 LC 66-29506

This is a translation of "passages from the investigation by Russian Whites of the murder of Nicholas II and his family by the Bolsheviks. But in addition the translator presents . . . [an] argument: that the Tsar and his family were not murdered in Ekaterinburg in July 1918 but were allowed to escape into German hands." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"O'Connor's position hinges on the lack of positive identification of the bodies, the inefficient (and O'Connor thinks) intentionally misleading job done by the Bolsheviks in concealing the crime, and finally, the prevarications of the Bolsheviks as to the responsibility for the murder. A jury would have to agree with O'Connor that the evidence for the execution of the Tsar is circumstantial. But it would also have to find that the evidence for believing the Tsar lived after July 1918 is even less persuasive. The book adds little except gory details and an interesting legal argument to the literature on the death of Nicholas II."

Choice 9:569 Je '72 160w

"While the [Sokolov investigation] report has generally been accepted as official and authoritative, a number of questions are left unanswered. O'Connor has translated the parts related to the 'murder' and has written a commentary describing inconsistencies, contradictions, and conflicting evidence. [He] believes the Sokolov thesis is definitely unacceptable. A complete translation of Sokolov's report would have been preferred, but this abridgment must suffice for the present. The illustrations and commentary are useful, if not imperative, for a clear understanding of the study. Recommended." E. A. Engeldinger
Library J 97:874 Mr 1 '72 130w

O'DANIEL, THERMAN B., ed. Langston Hughes: Black genius. See Langston Hughes: Black genius

ODEGARD, HOLTAN P. The politics of truth: toward reconstruction in democracy. 439p $13.50 Univ. of Ala. press

350 Public administration. Democracy. Political psychology
ISBN 0-8173-4719-4 LC 70-104935

"Odegard presents a new approach to democracy in the administrative state. He believes that 20th-century conditions have made obsolete concepts of representation and majority rule with focus on the legislative branch. . . . He describes a theory of public administration which will ' . . . reach down into the stuff of which power is composed, down into the conflicts of value and purpose, and when it handles the conflicts in such a way that progressively richer, more satisfying resolutions are achieved.'" (Choice) Index.

"[This] work is a major achievement, just because it is the beginning of, and provides a foundation for, the achievement of new truth as, and in, politics." T. I. Cook

Ann Am Acad 402:180 Jl '72 750w

"This book which is addressed to both administrators and theoretical social scientists offers many new insights into the theory of administration and discusses topics which are not adequately covered in the current literature. Recommended for the college library."

Choice 9:281 Ap '72 130w

"Mr Odegard is a spiritual heir of Henri de Saint-Simon. He presents what he calls 'the first indigenous American full-blown philosophy for planning' as 'the key tool of democratic experiment' and asserts that there must be a new alliance between the doer and the knower, that social science must begin working experimentally with human material in administrative laboratories." Peter Lyon
Encounter 29:73 Jl '72 140w

ODEN, WILLIAM, jt. auth. The Texas political system. See Nimmo, D.

O'DONNELL, LILLIAN. The phone calls. 192p $4.95 Putnam

LC 77-175251

"In New York, an anonymous caller has been responsible (perhaps) for the deaths of several lonely and recently widowed women. The police, including a . . . young policewoman, get involved in the case. Through her stubbornness the case is finally solved." (Library J)

Best Sell 31:494 F 1 '72 50w

"[This novel] is perhaps not a complete success, but it is a rather pleasant and honest combination of sentiment and suspense . . . agreeable to read and not unduly sensational."

Library J 97:87 Ja 1 '72 110w

"The writing is competent, though there is a final confrontation that has all the suspense of the multiplication table. Backgrounds and routines, however, are authentic, and [the book] is a good average work of its kind." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p24 Ja 30 '72 60w

"Mrs. O'Donnell's mystery is a real page-turner, as the publishing trade call those books the reader won't want to put down." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:73 Ja 29 '72 70w

O'DONNELL, ROBERT E., jt. auth. The how-not-to-miss-the-cocktail-hour cookbook. See Lowman, E. W.

O'DRISCOLL, ROBERT, ed. Theatre and nationalism in twentieth-century Ireland. See Theatre and nationalism in twentieth-century Ireland

ODUM, HOWARD T. Environment, power, and society. 331p il $9.95 Wiley-Interscience

301.3 Ecology. Human ecology. Force and energy
ISBN 0-471-65270-9 LC 78-129660

This book "begins with a macroscopic view of the world's ecosystem. The author then defines power and shows how power works as a component of ecological systems. Subsequent chapters discuss man's power basis, power for order and evolution, power and economics, power and politics, an energetic basis for religion, and prospects for the future." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The book has many brilliant generalizations, insights, and analyses; is often unsupportably dogmatic, fuzzy, and narrow; varies in the background (particularly in elementary physics) required on the part of the reader (especially as between the figures, tables, and text); and yet contains much that should be familiar to various students of human and other systems. . . . Verdict: A mixed bag, with numerous valuable tidbits for the discerning and critical, but hardly either a bible [nor] the definitive introduction the extremely important and basic subject deserves." William Haddon

Am J Pub Health 61:2142 O '71 190w

"[This] is a most maddening work, which at first sight seems totally undisciplined, a chaotic mixture of the asinine, the banal, and the brilliant, with random observations, often in conflict with the available evidence, on nearly everything under the sun. . . . The first half of the book seems a jeremiad against our dependence on fossil fuels; the second half hymns the complexity of the industrial society these fuels maintain, identifying as God the system of energy flows linking nature and industrial man, and articulating rules of worship for this Antichrist. But in this wealth of confusion, there are themes of very great interest indeed." E. G. Leigh

Science 172:664 My 14 '71 1450w

OF microbes and life; Jacques Monod and Ernest Borek, editors. 312p il $12.50 Columbia univ. press

576 Lwoff, André Michael. Microbiology. Molecular biology
ISBN 0-231-03431-8 LC 71-133382

This festschrift for the scientist André Lwoff includes "essays, articles, or reviews from a majority of those who have known [him] . . . and who have worked with him. . . . [Some] of the articles] are personal in nature . . . [while some contributors have] attempted a general speculative and historical view of an area of biology of particular interest to themselves and to Lwoff. . . . The volume [also] includes papers . . . allied with the present scientific interests of the authors." (Science) Chapter bibliographies. Bibliography of the works of André Lwoff.

"No comparison with standard or recently published works in the field is possible because this book is totally unique. It is a collection of essays, all of which were written especially for the book; none of them has appeared elsewhere. . . . Although excellent, [the collection] will probably have little relevance to the limited undergraduate library collection for two reasons: (1) It will be of interest to a relatively specialized and limited audience, (2) Nearly a third of it is in French. The latter point makes for an extremely different and interesting approach, but it does mean a portion of the book will be unavailable to much of the monolingual audience."

Choice 8:1203 N '71 120w

"The list of contributors and contributions to this volume commemorating Lwoff's 50 years in science reads like a who's who and what's what. It is indeed rare to find a book that includes articles written by scientists of eminence in such a wide spectrum of fields and covering such a range of subjects. . . . As it stands, the book will certainly be of interest to those who know Lwoff and who have known Roscoff, Banyuls, or 'the Pasteur,' for the personal touch is always there, the respect and love for André. For the general reader, it will be necessary to pick and choose from what seems at first glance a myriad of subjects and approaches. He will find it difficult to place all of this in proper historical perspective." Louis Siminovitch

Science 176:271 Ap 21 '72 750w

OFARI, EARL. Let your motto be resistance; the life and thought of Henry Highland Garnet. 221p $7.95 Beacon press

B or 92 Garnet, Henry Highland. U.S.—Race relations
ISBN 0-8070-5430-5 LC 72-75543

This is an account of the life and career of Henry H. Garnet who "was one of the antebellum precursors of modern black nationalism. Born in slavery, he rose to become a well-known preacher, abolitionist, writer, and editor, and a champion of selective black emigration to Africa." (Library J)

"[This] biography is brief and adequate, and it serves to introduce some notable sermons by Garnet."

Christian Century 89:962 S 27 '72 20w

"Ofari's study is very much a life-and-times account, noticeably lacking information concerning Garnet's personal life. Evidently the destruction by fire several years ago of Garnet's personal papers made this approach necessary. However, there is a good deal of padding here (including copious excerpts from the writings of other black leaders and extraneous data concerning the times) which could have been eliminated in favor of a greater in-depth analysis of the significance of Garnet's thought both for the times and for the black experience as a whole. While Ofari covers Garnet's pre-Civil War career fairly well, he passes over his subject's later life in a rather hurried fashion. . . . Ofari's plodding, prosaic style is far outshone by the excerpts from Garnet's speeches and writings which occupy roughly the second half of the book." Norman Lederer

Library J 97:2832 S 15 '72 190w

OGLEY, RODERICK. The theory and practice of neutrality in the twentieth century. (The world stud. ser) 217p $8 Barnes & Noble

341.6 Neutrality
ISBN 389-04026-6 LC [73-534419]

The editor is concerned with various shapes and forms of neutrality and such as "neutralization, traditional neutrality, ad hoc neutrality and non-alignment. Each of these terms is . . . defined and illustrated by documents running from the beginning of this century to the late 1960's." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a most useful endeavor to present the student of international affairs and of modern history with an up-to-date picture of the law and practice of neutrality. . . . Among Ogley's somewhat haphazard selections from books and magazine articles, some provide a well balanced picture of particular situations of neutrality. . . . Others are of altogether different quality . . . [being] partisan [while] others plead . . . a specific cause. . . . In his own parts of the text, the author gives an excellent account of the strategic conditions of neutrality." Urs Schwarz

Am Pol Sci R 66:286 Mr '72 900w

"[This book] provides a useful basis for any analysis of the efficacy of neutrality. It is largely historical, drawing most of its material from the events of this century, and it concentrates mainly on European countries. . . . Many of the texts in the book, as well as the commentaries, speculate why neutrality should have proved so vulnerable in this century. . . . In places this book . . . intended for sixth-formers upwards, has a slightly elementary tone, and one might wish that it had been a larger and more complete volume."

TLS p1244 O 30 '70 1300w

OGNALL, LEOPOLD HORACE. See Carmichael, H.

O'GRADY, ROHAN. Bleak November. 246p $5.95 Dial press

LC 75-120466

"Amy Burton, having supported her husband's years of work on his epic novel, moves gratefully into the Canadian manse her mother-in-law's unexpected inheritance has bought for them. Boarders are taken in—including a disturbed child, who seems to have loosed the spirits of murdered tots who once romped through the house." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 95:3811 N 1 '70 20w

"A move seems afoot to add some of the classical elements of the supernatural to the gothic, as witness [this novel]. . . . Miss O'Grady leads us surely through a quagmire of psychosis, guilt and spiritualism—though she falters a bit before wrapping the package." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p10 Ja 11 '71 100w

"It's creepy time up North, or it should [be in this] . . . well-plotted yarn . . . that didn't raise a single hackle on this reader." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 53:40 N 28 '70 50w

"We don't get enough Canadian thrillers over here yet to be able to distinguish genres. Those that do arrive seem generally fresh and original, as is this self-told story of a married woman moving into a moved house in which horrors, she gradually discovers, are real and not, or not only, her sick imaginings. A clever and very readable exercise in ghoulishness."

TLS p17 Ja 7 '72 60w

O'HARA, FRANK. The collected poems of Frank O'Hara; ed. Donald Allen; with an introd. by John Ashbery. 586p $17.50 Knopf

811

SBN 0-394-43901-5 LC 70-111237

The subjects of this collection "are lunchtime strolls past construction workers and bargains in wrist watches, the lives of artists (whether distant heroes or close friends), the distractions of city life, . . . homosexuality, . . . headlines glimpsed on newstands. . . . Some [are] . . . about friendships, occasional pieces written for a marriage or a departure." (Newsweek) Index of titles. Index of first lines.

Choice 9:972 O '72 130w

Reviewed by Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p9 F 17 '72 500w

"The poems collected here are very uneven. Some are major; some are very minor. Some have been worked and reworked; some are a moment's whim. Nevertheless, a new picture of O'Hara emerges that makes it possible for us to begin to realize why his personality and work have had so much impact on the New York school. We can be grateful for Allen's gathering of the material and for his chronology [of O'Hara's life], notes and index." Dorothy Nyren

Library J 97:201 Ja 5 '72 140w

"Along with his brilliant intellect and his wide-ranging knowledge of music, dance, art, history, and philosophy, O'Hara had an ability to fantasize himself to be almost anybody, anything, anytime, anywhere; and he also had an unusual gift for friendship and for love, for identifying himself with, and for transforming other people and their concerns. . . . The Collected Poems shows those qualities better than a shorter volume could; the range of Frank O'Hara's enterprise as a poet is so important a part, finally, of his work's value. It is a great experience to read it all." Kenneth Koch

O'HARA, FRANK—Continued

New Repub 166:23 Ja 1 '72 2200w

"As is perhaps inevitable in such a bulky gathering, there are a few masterpieces, several good poems and a majority of middling verse in which O'Hara, like Emily Dickinson in her many minor poems, writes lightly off the top of his head. There are no radical changes in style or subject matter, no slopes or collapses. . . . A Pan piping on city streets, he luxuriates in the uninhibited play of his imagination. . . . The pleasures of [this volume] confirm his place as one of our best minor poets." H. A. Leibowitz

N Y Times Bk R p7 N 28 '71 1900w

"[O'Hara] who became a curator at the Museum of Modern Art and a critic for Art News, wrote his poems swiftly at odd moments. . . . He died at 40 in 1966 in a freak accident, run over by a beach buggy on Fire Island. . . . 'To the Harbormaster,' 'In Memory of My Feelings' and others of his more ambitious poems explore complex states of indecision, anxiety and fears of death and dissolution, but he found it 'Grace to be born and live as variously as possible.' His work as a whole is a record of his buoyant reliance on keeping in motion from instant to instant, modestly turning what comes his way into poems." W. C.

Newsweek 78:95 D 20 '71 650w

O'HARA, JOHN. The Ewings. 310p $6.95 Random house

ISBN 0-394-47404-X LC 78-31494

This novel is set in "Cleveland and the main characters are lawyers and their wives. The period is the First World War. Bill Ewing gets married, turns down a law job in New York on his honeymoon and comes home just in time to see his lawyer-father die. . . . The couple lose one child in the diphtheria epidemic, otherwise everything is clear sailing. . . . Bill's mother, widowed in her early fifties, rich and handsome and lonely . . . discovers the discretions of lesbianism and goes off to live in California with another rich widow." (New Repub)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:110 Mr '72 50w

Reviewed by W. R. Evans
Best Sell 31:530 Mr 1 '72 650w

Reviewed by L. J. Davis
Book World p15 F 20 '72 550w
Choice 9:647 J1/Ag '72 230w

"A posthumous novel [which] . . . is only second rate-O'Hara. . . . Likely to be read; less likely to be liked." R. H. Donahugh
Library J 97:215 Ja 15 '72 50w

Reviewed by D. K. Mano
Nat R 24:226 Mr 3 '72 600w

Reviewed by Stanley Kauffmann
New Repub 166:25 F 26 '72 1550w

Reviewed by Barry Cole
New Statesman 84:99 J1 21 '72 160w

"[This] novel is filled with some of the most excruciatingly boring dialogue imaginable. . . . By contemporary standards, the sex in [it] is not shocking or even particularly explicit. Aside from the fact that the hero's mother turns out to be a lesbian, most of the characters do the usual and expected things. Nonetheless, heterosexual and homosexual alike, the sex in this book is obscene. . . . The question naturally arises: Is this a satire on the lives of dull and dirty people or is it just a dull and dirty book? One wishes that the question were easier to answer. . . . Though there are moments of genuine satire, control and sympathy are too often lacking." Robert Kiely
N Y Times Bk R p48 F 27 '72 1050w

"As a substitute for the historians and the picture books The Ewings does not achieve very much; it is lacking in that richness of detail which has sometimes reconciled one to O'Hara's accumulations. The historico-social touches have, instead, a thin over-obviousness. We hear how rich people in the fatty heart of America were busy making money during the war, how Anglo-Saxons felt about other ethnic groups, how important college fraternities were. . . . what were the petting practices of the young and the significance of 'going all the way, and how people defined perverted sex. It all, as it was intended to, dates. But still one searches vainly for O'Hara's motive in writing this record in the form of a novel." Millicent Bell

Sat M 55:80 Mr 4 '72 1050w

OJIGBO, A. OKION, comp. Young and black in Africa; comp. with introd. notes by A. Okion Ojigbo. 107p il $3.95 Random house

920 Africa—Biography

ISBN 0-394-82304-4

LC 70-158382

Through episodes from their own lives, eight Africans describe the experience "of growing up in Africa. Two of the contributors are from Kenya, two from Nigeria, and the others [are] from Ghana, South Africa, Guinea and Malawi." (Publisher's note)

"Eight short selections from books by Africans have been brought together with editorial comment in an attempt to acquaint both young Africans seeking cultural identity and non-Africans with life as it is and has been in Africa. The focus is on youth. A village youth's first experience with a city, another's capture by slave traders, and two others' encounters with apartheid and colonialism are especially well described. The least successful selections concern feelings at the time of Independence in Malawi and the contrast between generations in Kenya. . . . This book is an additional purchase item, useful for readers unwilling to tackle the more extensive works and as a stimulus to further reading." E. T. Dresang

Library J 96:4192 D 15 '71 160w [YA]

"The selections pivot on a startling, sometimes shocking, occasionally appalling encounter of cultural conflict. . . . Peter Abrahams—whose books . . . are widely read in America and elsewhere for their accounts of apartheid—relates the appalling features of said system as they affect daily life. And Charity Waciuma . . . discusses the land issue or, more specifically, the theft of land, providing excellent background for students of African nationalism in general, and the Mau Mau Movement in particular. . . . We see the painful questions young people must raise in order to map out a sensible route to personal and national liberation. And it is both vital and significant, for it is the African, not the safari expert or the sundowner or the know-nothing scholar, who speaks to us." T. C. Bambara

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p45 N 7 '71 300w [YA]

OLD age: the last segregation [Ralph Nader's study group report on nursing homes] Claire Townsend, project director. 229p $6.95 Grossman pubs.

362.6 Nursing homes

ISBN 0-70-52198-1

LC 73-149319

"Six senior girls and one instructor from a . . . school in Connecticut responded to Ralph Nader's suggestion that American nursing homes should be investigated, and this book is their report on the conditions they found." (Best Sell) Index.

"The report arouses melancholy rather than anger, for the abuses described are caused by stupidity and lack of planning more often than by greed or illegality. One gathers that a nursing home could be run with the most conscientious obedience to the requirements of state, federal, and medical authorities and still be a miserable death trap." Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 228:96 Ag '71 90w

"[This book] makes for sad and even dreary reading. . . . The prying and probing young ladies unearthed many a scandalous situation, and Ralph Nader has plenty of ammunition for his onslaughts against current business practices. . . . The book has a fine appendix of all pertinent laws that channel aid to the needy. . . . The author has blocked out the names of most homes that were studied, and properly so, too, because conditions bordered on the outrageous in them. Two Catholic homes in New York and Connecticut rate high praise in the book, because they have a truly wholesome atmosphere as well as good social programs for their residents. . . . This book may be only a voice crying in the wilderness, but it is a good voice, and the young ladies and the author deserve a merit badge for giving it to the public." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 31:231 Ag 15 '71 750w

"Hardly anywhere in this book is there thought about the underlying causes of the way we mistreat our old people, or an indication that those economic and social factors might be changed. . . . You should read this book and be upset by it. We are doing terrible things to decent people who have grown old. Something must change that situation; perhaps Ralph Nader can. At least he and his students give us no excuse for forgetting this shameful inhumanity." Edward Edelson
Book World p20 S 26 '71 1100w

Choice 8:1387 D '71 170w

Christian Century 88:937 Ag 4 '71 60w

Reviewed by Marie Ponzo
Library J 96:2756 S 15 '71 130w

Reviewed by Leonard Ross
N Y Times Bk R pl Ag 8 '71 300w

OLDENBURG, CLAES. Notes in hand. unp 11 col il $6.95; pa $2.95 Dutton

741.9

SBN 0-525-16905-9 LC 73-166166

"Fifty color plates reproduce pages selected from Oldenburg's personal notebooks. The works originated between 1960 and 1970, and Oldenburg provides his own catalog notes on each drawing or clipping." (Library J) Bibliography.

"All the sketches are printed in full color but not in the artist's original colors; Oldenburg, in a bow to modern printing technology, has recolored them to suit process printing colors. Nevertheless, the book is a gem. The plates contain sketches, plans for soft sculpture, collage-diagrams of proposed monuments and buildings, elevated doodles, and other Oldenburg fun." S. N. Antupit

Harper 243:129 D '71 170w

"The real interest of the book is seeing the way in which objects (especially those pictured in commercial reproductions) strike the artist, and then how his nervously, constantly ranging and metamorphic imagination connects and transmutes their basic forms into further objects. Not only the artist's notes on his own work, but also the handy pocket size . . . the binding of orange silk (?) and red ribbon marker, the photographically reproduced marble end papers, the cheaply commercial coloration, and the typography, all make this book itself an Oldenburg object. Thus, a bargain." Andrew Robison

Library J 97:66 Ja 1 '72 140w

"[Here] is the perfect anti-coffee-table picture book. Roughly six inches by four it miniaturises 50 of Oldenburg's notebook pages and is so extraordinarily faithful to the originals that they look like facsimiles. Even the words scribbled round the images can easily be read, but have been set in type on the facing pages to make sure that we don't look at them simply as peripheral decoration. A typical page, made with pen, crayon and two magazine clippings, and bearing the words deux and dieu, discovers a relationship between a couple of pork chops and breasts in a brasserie." Robert Melville

New Statesman 82:865 D 17 '71 160w

OLDERMAN, RAYMOND M. Beyond the waste land; a study of the American novel in the nineteen-sixties. 258p $7.95 Yale univ. press

813 American fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 0-300-01543-7 LC 73-182210

This is a "survey of some recent novels that reflect the dominance of fable over realism. The author . . . finds the pattern of the Grail Knight's quest—his immersion in and escape from the 'waste land' (of Eliot's landmark poem)—in novels by Ken Kesey, Stanley Elkin, John Barth, Joseph Heller, Thomas Pynchon, John Hawkes, Kurt Vonnegut Jr., and Peter S. Beagle." (Library J)

Christian Century 89:698 Je 14 '72 50w

"The wasteland motif fits the novelists surprisingly well, and Olderman produces some expert incidental criticism in what is surely the best work on this general subject since Ihab Hassan's Radical Innocence [BRD 1962]. The innovative fiction of the Sixties hasn't yet been taken seriously; this excellent book is an indispensable corrective." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:2400 Jl '72 250w

"[The author's] unifying idea, clever if not unique, [of comparing the modern hero with the Grail knight] gets him both into and out of analytical trouble as he follows the implications through Barth, Heller, Kesey, et al. In a chapter entitled 'The Waste Land as Conspiracy,' Pynchon is compared to Eliot, both creating worlds 'where love and mythology have failed.' Good bibliography for students of American contemporary directions."

Va Q R 48:cxixii autumn '72 110w

OLIVER, DONALD W., jt. auth. Clarifying public controversy. See Newmann, F. M.

OLIVER, JANE. The blue heaven bends over all. 384p $6.95 Putnam

Scott, Sir Walter, Bart.—Fiction
LC 70-173290

This biographical novel portrays the poet and writer Sir Walter Scott. The book's title is taken from his Journal, 17th March, 1831.

"This posthumous novel . . . is actually less a novel than a biographical narrative with a few brief fictional conversations sprinkled among a mass of carefully researched detail. Though emphasizing such well known traits as Scott's astounding capacity for work, his generosity, and his love of the border country, the book provides little depth of characterization. . . . [However, it] is gracefully written and well paced; and for those who do not mind its superficiality, it can be a refreshing change from a diet of somber, footnote-laden 'standard' biographies of literary figures."

Choice 9:506 Je '72 100w

Reviewed by Yvette Schmitt

Library J 97:791 F 15 '72 70w

"This is a warm and comfortable fictionalized biography. . . . It has sentiment, irony, courage, melancholy, and not a little quiet humor—elements most readers will easily recognize. The prose is good, and the feel of Scotland is enhanced by the use of such colorful expressions as dirled, lime-harled, and auld ruckle of banes, in narrative as well as dialogue. Its weaknesses as a novel are such as are often found in biographical fiction: an occasional choppy transition and a confusing array of minor characters, many of whom seem inadequately developed. But Scott himself and most of the major characters are convincing, and the historical background, including the Napoleonic Wars, is excellently tied in. Should have wide appeal." Phyllis Karr

Library J 97:902 Mr 1 '72 120w

"[This] last of a long series of historical novels written by Jane Oliver . . . is one of the best. . . . So much has been recorded by Scott himself, so much has been written about him by his contemporaries and later men . . . that it is possible to reconstruct his life, his opinions, even his conversation in great detail; and this is what Jane Oliver has done, without in any way making the book laboured or tedious. . . . She finds her way unerringly through the maze of Scott's financial troubles. Perhaps the only part of him she does not show clearly is his enormous prestige."

TLS p1166 O 1 '71 430w

OLIVER, PAUL. Aspects of the blues tradition [Eng title: Screening the blues]. 294p $6.95 Oak publications

784.7 Blues (Songs, etc.) Negro musicians
SBN 8256-0012-X LC 75-93960

Oliver "discusses the influence of the phonograph record as a conveyor of blues culture, thematic material (Santa Claus, Joe Louis, and John Henry), imagery and symbolism, and aspects needing further study. Bibliographic notes . . . are included." (Library J) Index of blues and song titles. Name index.

"[The author] takes an intensive look at some relationships between the blues and church music, sex and/or pornography, political activism, gambling, and hero worship. [He] takes a primarily social, historical, and cultural view in his carefully documented study. He also has a firm understanding of the musical aspects of his subject. . . . The shortcomings are easily outweighed by the quantity of information and the sensitivity of the author."

Choice 8:844 S '71 200w

"An important book for black literature and music collections." Allen Cohen

Library J 95:3474 O 15 '70 150w

OLIVER, PAUL, ed. Shelter in Africa. 240p 11 maps $15 Praeger

301.5 Houses. Architecture, African
LC 77-151805

The editor "provides a . . . 20-page introduction to this . . . work which contains 16 original contributions by architects, anthropologists, a sociologist, town planner [and] political scientist. . . . Their research ranges from tents and bidonvilles in Morocco to the domed dwellings of Zulus and from traditional dwellings in Ethiopia to the diamond city of Koidu in Sierra Leone. The theme is a regional presentation of vernacular architecture and construction techniques, of associated behavior patterns and their changes through modernization and urbanization and . . . of African houses and their sites in the context of the various societies." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies.

"Clear drawings of details, historical illustrations to document provenance and meaning of house arrangements and settlement patterns interchange with informative, soft, not glossy, photographs mostly contributed by the authors and with some excellent maps. This book is as likely to arouse as it is to satisfy interest in African peoples and their way of life in which shelter is essential, though often presented incidentally in general books on Africa. Each chapter has a serviceable bibliography. . . . Strongly recommended for all colleges and public libraries and to students from most fields including non-Africanists."

Choice 9:1008 O '72 230w

"The architectural forms reviewed in this volume are very little known in either Europe or America. In addition to the text, the many illustrations provide a fascinating glimpse into a rich and varied architectural scene, an understanding and awareness of which will substantially enrich our appreciation of numerous aspects of African society and the art which it has produced." David Gebhard

Library J 97:864 Mr 1 '72 130w

OLIVER, R. A., jr. ed. Papers in African prehistory. See Fage, J. D.

OLLMAN, BERTELL. Alienation; Marx's conception of man in capitalist society. (Cambridge stud. in the hist. and theory of politics) 325p $10.50 Cambridge

301.6 Alienation (Social psychology). Capitalism. Marx, Karl
ISBN 0-521-03086-X LC 75-158547

In this "account of Marx's theory of alienation . . . Professor Ollman reconstructs the theory from its constituent parts and offers it as a vantage point from which to view the rest of Marxism. The book further contains an . . . examination of Marx's philosophy of internal relations, the much neglected logical foundation of his method, and provides a systematic account of Marx's conception of human nature." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"By incorporating material from the 1844 Manuscript and the Grundrisse, as well as traditional Marxist writings, the author has written the most balanced work in the current literature on Marxist humanism. Highly recommended."

Choice 9:281 Ap '72 70w

"A scholarly work with an original approach on the philosophy of Marxism and the subject of alienation. On the first point Ollman makes a cogent argument against the critics of Marx of the past generation that reduced the 'materialist conception of history' to a form of economic determinism that distorted its meaning. . . . On alienation, he traces the evolution of Marx's ideas from the 1844 manuscripts to their culmination in his great work, Das Kapital, where Marx lays bare the conditions of man's alienation under capitalism. . . . Ollman's final comment that there are no data by which to judge Marx on his concept of the 'new man' under Communism may be valid." George Charney

Library J 97:686 F 15 '72 200w

"I now have a much clearer idea of . . . Marx's contribution, thanks to [this] remarkable book. . . . [Ollman] solves the puzzle of Marx's language by explaining its dialectic purpose, but what sets his book apart is that he has found a way of doing so [by his clarification of] the philosophical problem posed by [Marx's] relational conception of the world. . . . For what Professor Ollman has provided, above his substantive contributions to the interpretation of Marx, is a translation of Marx from the obscurities of his ill-understood language into terms that present the complex intention of his thought. . . . Perhaps one of the most salutary effects of [this] brilliant and illuminating book is to prove that an intolerant religiosity is not a necessary characteristic of Marxist thought." R. L. Heilbroner

N Y Rev of Books 18:9 Mr 9 '72 1150w

"It ought to be counted to Professor Ollman's credit that one never feels that he is trying to patch up Marx's work. He concludes with some perfectly sensible criticisms of Marx's economic presuppositions. . . . [However] his defence of the theory of alienation is extremely limited; often he claims no more than a certain utility for it, as a theory which will bring together commonly felt discontents within one coherent weltanschauung. But then such a result is a strikingly meagre one to emerge from such complex wrappings as he has earlier woven for it."

TLS p185 F 18 '72 470w

OLNEY, JAMES. Metaphors of self; the meaning of autobiography. 342p $12.50 Princeton univ. press

809
ISBN 0-691-06221-8 LC 71-173758

"By tracing several autobiographies Olney propounds the thesis that a lived life, more than a book which reflects on that life, serves as the intended autobiography of a great person." (Christian Century) Index.

"Novel, refreshing rewarding literary studies." Christian Century 89:307 Ag 2 '72 40w

"This is an unusual and thoughtful meditation on the double relationship between literature and life in the experience of the autobiographer and of his eventual reader." Mary McBride

Library J 97:2843 S 15 '72 200w

"In a finely written and unusually thoughtful work . . . [the author] discusses a variety of autobiographical forms as Metaphors of Self. . . . He divides his study into autobiography duplex (Montaigne's Essays, [C. G.] Jung's Memories [BRD 1963] and [T. S.] Eliot's Four Quartets [BRD 1943]) . . . and autobiography simplex (the memoirs of Fox and Darwin, Mill and Newman). . . . [Montaigne], Jung and Eliot . . . receive most of his best insights and certainly almost all of his most persuasive expository prose. Fox, Darwin, Mill, and Newman on the other hand represent the lesser realm of the 'synthetic realization' of self. Professor Olney is always meticulous in his analyses, but it cannot be said his interest is unflagging when dealing with these latter figures. . . . The book has an overearnest strain here and there, but it is a notable and highly individual contribution to humanistic scholarship."

N Y Rev of Books 19:33 Jl 20 '72 270w

OLSEN, IB SPANG. Smoke; tr. by Virginia Allen Jensen. unpag. col. il $4.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

LC 78-171614

"The Danish writer who has just been awarded the Hans Christian Andersen Medal [relates] . . . this tale of a family that goes out to enjoy the country air only to find smoke in one place after another. In each spot they give their all to stop the smoke. The chimneys of a factory are capped by Auntie's hat, a coffee-pot, some stockings, etc. The family has its own car fixed so it won't make smoke, and they all can enjoy fresh air and sunshine at last. . . . Ages five to eight." (Sat R)

"[Olsen's] fancifulness in depicting the problems prevents the picture book from being didactic. The members of the family and their dog Sniff are sprightly characters. . . . Gay three-color drawings (red, green, and black with multi-toned overlays) fill the marginless pages with the lively actions of animals as well as of human beings. The translation of the brief text is smooth and lively." V. H.

Horn Bk 48:364 Ag '72 270w

"A useful tale to introduce the problems of air pollution to primary graders. . . . Although the text is too difficult for beginning readers, the colorful, detailed illustrations will amuse youngsters and teachers will find the book a useful kick-off for class discussions." A. D. Ehler

Library J 47:2940 S 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:80 My 20 '72 120w

"Olsen is unashamedly didactic, bringing the theme of environmental pollution into the juvenile arena.... The story is more than half fantasy.... But the message is clear—almost too clear from the aesthetic point of view, although Mr Olsen's funny and vigorous pictures do sugar the pill—that pollution is a problem involving us all and that we must do our bit in the fight against it."

TLS p488 Ap 28 '72 190w

OLSEN, JACK. The girls in the office. 447p $7.95
Simon & Schuster

301.41 Woman—Social conditions. Single women
SBN 671-21156-0 LC 74-185771

This book deals with fifteen "girls who [came] to get a superjob in the big city.... Olsen has interviewed them.... and recorded their.... assessments of themselves and each other, their.... observations on the men they work for, sleep with, cover for, despise." (Publisher's note)

"[This book] reads like a very naughty novel but it is really very naughty truth.... If you want to be shocked and if you wish to reassure yourself that the Peter Principle really exists in the corporate structure, 'The Girls in the Office' may agree with your reading taste. Frankly, I felt only pity for each of the women involved and profoundly wish they all were fictional." P. J. Earl

Best Sell 32:220 Ag 1 '72 170w

"Despite biographical data intended to distinguish each woman from the other 14, the effect is of a single voice registering various pitches on the Krafft-Ebing scale and whining about life in New York City. It's as though Olsen gave them a check list to respond to: married men, subways, cab drivers, crimes, cops, pollution, high rents, single men. Several duplications of phrasing suggest that the 15 women may be no more than five after all.... This book is in a real sense, a feminist tract. That is why the 15 women sound alike. Because the commonality of the female experience overwhelms the (male) author's attempt to create recognizable stage characters. And because the pathetic cry that issues from each woman's chapter springs from the same well of pain." L. C. Pogrebin

N Y Times Bk R p4 J1 2 '72 800w

"Olsen never seems to have decided whether he wanted to write a serious book or a slick one. So much of the book is devoted to sour sexual confidences that one is forced to the conclusion that the author's eye was really trained on the bestseller list. Worse, he does not trust his own material, which finally makes it impossible for anyone else to do so." Martha Duffy

Time 100:60 J1 31 '72 400w

OLSEN, JACK. Slaughter the animals, poison the earth; drawings by Laszlo Kubinyi. 287p $6.95 Simon & Schuster

333.7 Wild life—Conservation. Pesticides. U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
SBN 671-20996-5 LC 70-156160

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 9:82 Mr '72 100w

Reviewed by Judy Faria

Library J 97:1184 Mr 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by Gerald Carson

Natur Hist 81:97 Je '72 650w

OLSON, ALISON GILBERT, ed. Anglo-American political relations, 1675-1775; ed. by Alison Gilbert Olson and Richard Maxwell Brown. 283p $10 Rutgers univ. press

973.2 U.S.—Politics and government—Colonial period, Great Britain—Colonies
SBN 8135-0624-7 LC 73-108758

"This book is the outgrowth of the Twentieth Conference on Early American History held at Rutgers to observe that university's bicentennial in 1966.... [It deals with] the men who made Anglo-colonial politics work—the governors, agents, and private businessmen." (Am Hist R) Bibliographical essay. Index.

"The editors of this volume are adherents of the C. M. Andrews school of thought that the colonial period of American history is Anglo-American and that the mother country therefore must be brought to the forefront.... The most effective features of the book are the vignettes of various colonial governors and agents.... An excellent bibliographical essay by Joseph E. Illick points out that the interest in institutions and policy shown by the imperial historians of Andrews' generation emphasized gradual development and continuity whereas today's concentration on political, economic, and social roots leads to more emphasis on change and conflict." A. G. Pan-nell

Am Hist R 76:1518 D '71 650w

"[This is the] first book-length statement on the newly emerging field of Anglo-American politics in the colonial era.... Most of the scholars working in the field are represented here, and a number of different types of problems are discussed in the 10 essays. Most of this work is unavailable elsewhere.... A significant and original contribution to scholarship, it ought to be purchased by all college libraries."

Choice 8:452 My '71 100w

OLSON, CHARLES. Archaeologist of morning. $12.95 Grossman pubs.

811

ISBN 0-206-61880-8 LC [70-135124]

This book "presents over 100 [of the author's] poems arranged in a near-chronological order with a.... list of initial dates and places of publication for each." (Library J)

Choice 9:61 Mr '72 170w

"Containing 'all the poems Olson authorized for publication in his lifetime' (but excluding the Maximus sequence), this volume is sure to be a major contribution. No review can do its contents justice, and the book itself (11" x 8") is handsome, spacious, pleasing to hand and eye. The late Charles Olson's stature as the American poet/man of letters midcentury seems assured.... Until now many of the poems have remained hidden in little mags or small-press editions. We thus have all of Olson's poems except the Maximus Poems (for IV, V, VI see [BRD 1969]) integrated into 'the body of his life's work,' reflecting upon and refracting from the great prose essays and letters.... Most highly recommended for all poetry collections." H. C. Burke

Library J 96:2516 Ag '71 250w

"To view the collected poems as this volume forces us to do is to get a confused sense of subject. There are poems that weave classical images through contemporary instances: poems that burst upon the tide of an established myth and seem to vivify it;.... poems written in the heat of Olson's dig among the Maya, unfolding his theories of body (and eye), against his enmity for modern civilization, and its usury of spirit; poems that try to place everything in a happy parataxis of Sumerian drift, that root out beginnings to beginnings, pre-logic, pre-liminary; broadsides directed to The Gloucester Times against the dismantling of old houses to make way for the plastic and the new; poems on what America was, meant, like his 'West' series.... The best poems are delicate conjectures of the self caught in the thicket of its own awarenesses." Matthew Corrigan

N Y Times Bk R p6 J1 18 '71 1250w

O'MALLEY, C. D., ed. The history of medical education. See The history of medical education

OMARI, T. PETER. Kwame Nkrumah; the anatomy of an African dictatorship; with a foreword by Nii Amaa Ollennu. 229p $8.50 Africana pub. corp.

966.7 Nkrumah, Kwame. Ghana—Politics and government
SBN 8419-0036-1 LC 74-103939

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by V. M. Smith

Am Hist R 77:814 Je '72 170w

Reviewed by Leslie Rubin

Ann Am Acad 402:174 J1 '72 400w

Reviewed by Jack Goody

Pol Sci Q 87:491 S '72 300w

ONE life—one physician; an inquiry into the medical profession's performance in self-regulation; a report to the Center for Study of Responsive Law, by Robert S. McCleery (and others). 167p $5 Public affairs press

610 Medical care. Medicine—Practice. Medicine—Laws and regulations
LC 76-155138

This volume is a "review and assessment of the recent history of self-regulation of medical practice and its relative failure to favorably affect the quality of medical care." (Am J Pub Health)

"While deploring the ineffectiveness of medical organizations, [the authors] credit the American Medical Association, the American Hospital Association, the American College of Surgeons and others for policies and principles, for the development of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, and for encouraging peer review. However, they point out the prevailing failure of effective implementation of policies at the local and state levels. They deplore the lack of uniformity of State Licensure. They note the need for continuing education and relicensure. . . . There is a valuable bibliography, but . . . [no] index. Despite its shortcomings, this report from Nader's Center for Study of Responsive Law is welcome. We can hope it will be widely read and that it will stimulate others to tackle the broader and more basic problems these investigators have avoided." R. V. Sager

Am J Pub Health 61:1919 S '71 500w

"The judgment of the project team, headed by Dr. McCleery, is based upon an evaluation of how well the profession's systems of quality control perform. The authors conclude that the medical profession has failed to merit society's trust." A. R. Kovner

Ann Am Acad 400:211 Mr '72 550w

"This volume is . . . well documented and well worth reading. It places strong emphasis on the failure of medicine to police its own house, a conclusion that [H. R. and M. E.] Lewis' The medical offenders [BRD 1971] also came to. They make excellent companion volumes because they are complementary. Will be of interest to students of social forces, law, education, and hopefully, of medicine."

Choice 8:1040 O '71 120w

Reviewed by W. K. Beatty

Library J 96:2333 J1 '71 200w

"[This book] unlike all the other Nader books, is not a substantial work of original research. It pastes together other people's observations on the high frequency of butcher-shop medicine in America. The crucial conclusion is the need for a new National Board of Medicine, 'in the style of the Federal Reserve Board.' Members installed for seven-year terms would dictate rules for utilization and quality control in all Federal health programs. We are never told why this new 'relatively non-political' independent regulatory agency would turn out any better than all its good-for-nothing siblings." Leonard Ross

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ag 8 '71 300w

O'NEILL, GEORGE, jt. auth. Open marriage. See O'Neill, N.

O'NEILL, NENA. Open marriage; a new life style for couples, by Nena O'Neill & George O'Neill. 287p il $6.95 Evans, M.&co.

301.42 Marriage
LC 75-164550

"Open marriage means an honest and open relationship between two people, based on the equal freedom and identity of both partners. It involves . . . the right of each to grow as an individual within the marriage." (Library J) The authors, both anthropologists, discuss their concept at length. Bibliography.

Reviewed by I. C. Schick and Tom Schick
America 127:214 S 23 '72 270w

"Closed marriage, of course, involves all the old-fashioned values of sexual fidelity, children, and total commitment. Open marriage, on the other hand . . . seems open to all sorts of growth of human potential and, indeed, open to all but self-sacrificing love and children! . . . It is marriage described in the one dimension of companionship, and its suggestions for happiness could be used by any number of companions in any enterprise. . . . [The book nevertheless] has many valid and helpful suggestions for those religious men and women who still think that marriage involves the total commitment of vows, is oriented to children and family life, and demands fidelity and even (be it whispered) sacrifice." H. V. Sattler

Best Sell 31:541 Mr 1 '72 320w

Reviewed by Doris Grumbach

Commonweal 97:305 Ja 5 '73 700w

"The O'Neills, generally writing more like Sunday-supplement free-lancers than anthropologists, offer no substitute for the structured, in-depth, monogamous relationship, which they feel man still needs. They do redefine this relationship—mainly for the benefit of middle-class marrieds, who, when they are not out buying walnut bedroom sets, are owning, restricting, and demanding each other to death in the name of love. Again and again, the authors contrast open, synergistic relationships with the parasitic, untrusting, self-shriving types of marriages we all know and loathe. These tedious comparisons will nevertheless trigger some marvelous and therapeutic discussions around the house—especially on open sex. Give your patrons a fighting chance to be free though married." Art Plotnik

Library J 96:4081 D 15 '71 130w

"The authors go to great pains to write straightforwardly, and not to present a technical document. Yet when they draw upon the insights provided by their own professional field, anthropology, the result is disappointingly sketchy. . . . There is no discussion of recent developments in psychology and psychoanalysis, or the relevance (or irrelevance) of professional therapy. . . . The authors suggest that the application of 'flexibility' to our roles is going to uproot deeply set conditioning. However that 'closed' relationship they wish us to transcend is based upon the need for dependency. It is no simple matter to arrive at a decision to break out of role patterns. . . . There are other limitations. The authors talk as if only white middle-class Sues and Toms make up the population. . . . And although their book presents a sound discussion of emotional monogamy the O'Neills have colder feet when it comes to sexual monogamy. Open Marriage leaves this reader unsatisfied. The project is ambitious, but I doubt that the book alone could be helpful to a couple with a rigidly role-oriented marriage." M. K. Lichtenberg

Nation 214:537 Ap 24 '72 1600w

O'NEILL, WILLIAM L. Coming apart; an informal history of America in the 1960's. 442p pl $12.50 Quadrangle bks.

973.92 U.S.—Politics and government-1961-. U.S.—Civilization. U.S.—Social conditions
SBN 8129-0190-8 LC 79-152098

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by H. A. Silverglade

Ann Am Acad 400:174 Mr '72 900w

Reviewed by B. A. Weisberger

Book World p6 Ja 16 '72 900w

Choice 8:1640 F '72 140w

ONG, WALTER J. Rhetoric, romance, and technology; studies in the interaction of expression and culture. 348p $8.95 Cornell univ. press

808 Public speaking. Communication. Rhetoric

ISBN 0-8014-0645-5 LC 74-153722

The "relationship between verbal performance and cultural evolution is the focus of this . . . collection of essays. . . . The book traces knowledge storage and retrieval devices through evolving communication techniques from Cicero to Simon and Garfunkel. Father Ong discusses memory as art, associationist critical theory, the close relationship between romanticism and technology, popular culture of the 1970's, and the current crisis in the humanities. In addition, he offers the first complete account of Tudor writings in English on rhetoric and literary theory, and includes essays on Latin language study as Renaissance puberty rite, Ramism in the classroom and in commerce, Jonathan Swift's notion of the mind, and John Stuart Mill's poetries." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This [is a] scholarly, provocative and often witty . . . collection of essays. . . . Ten of them were previously published in learned journals, while three others appear in print here for the first time. . . . Some of Fr. Ong's interpretations of cultural history, such as the chapter on romanticism, are clearly controversial. . . . [The book's] great value to the scholar lies in its erudite and careful researches into particular cultural phenomena such as the comprehensive survey of Tudor writings on rhetoric, or Fr. Ong's study of the nature and influence of Ramism. Its value to anyone interested in the history of western culture springs from the breadth of perspective and depth of insight which Fr. Ong brings to these recondite matters. A rewarding book." Justin Kelly

America 126:213 F 26 '72 700w

"Ong seeks to 'give rhetoric still fuller meaning by relating it to larger cultural and psychological developments concerned with the evolution of the media of communication.' Great care must be taken, in pursuit of such an objective, with definition, and there is sometimes room, in these . . . essays, for clarification of assumptions, distinctions between hypotheses and conclusions, and definition of terms. Nevertheless Father Ong is provocative. He is perhaps a better critic of the use of the ironic cliché in contemporary pop culture than of Swiftian hyperbole."

Choice 9:49 Mr '72 140w

The ONGOING evolution of Latin American populations; ed. by Francisco M. Salzano. 717p maps $25.25 Thomas, C.C.

301.3 Latin America—Population
LC 70-119384

This volume "presents the papers given by the 22 participants at a conference sponsored by the Wenner-Gren Foundation in August, 1969 [at Burg Wartenstein, Austria] on the . . . topic of evolution in Latin-American populations. . . . The papers are grouped under five main headings: 1. demographic and social background, 2. population structure, 3. morphology, nutrition and growth, 4. physiological adaptation and disease patterns, and 5. genetic polymorphisms." (Choice)

"Salzano has put together a volume which is unique. It is, by far, the most comprehensive and integrated treatment of the contemporary human biology of a single geographical area that I have encountered and is so superior to anything already in print as to make any comparisons ridiculous. Readers will find a wide variety of biomedical topics of evolutionary significance in which there is a conscious effort to relate them to cultural behavior in a way seldom seen. Although the efforts are not completely successful, it is noteworthy that they are made at all and especially so since they go far beyond the mere lip service to the unity of our discipline characteristic of many of the 'theoretical' works on the subject." F. E. Johnston

Am Anthropol 74:972 Ag '72 1300w

"Outside of an introductory chapter and a summary, both written by Salzano, it is difficult to see the worth of this highly priced book or imagine to what audience it is directed since all the material is available in scholarly journals. It has perhaps some limited appeal for advanced students specializing in Latin-American physical or cultural anthropology."

Choice 8:1046 O '71 160w

ONORATO, RICHARD J. The character of the poet; Wordsworth in The prelude. 435p $12.50 Princeton univ. press

821 Wordsworth, William—The prelude
ISBN 0-691-06049-5 LC 74-131126

"Arguing that Wordsworthian scholars have too often accepted the surface statements of The Prelude uncritically, Onorato, . . . submits that the long autobiographical poem reveals more about Wordsworth's character than it states explicitly. The implicit meanings are revealed through the recurrence of certain experiences and metaphors, and these amount to a consistent pattern amenable to psychoanalytic interpretation." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Baldly stated, the thesis of his prolix but factually thin study is that Wordsworth suffered a severe trauma when his mother died. The bereft eight-year-old thereupon transferred his affections to Mother Nature, and the mature poet's mystical absorption with her is really an analog of the suckling infant's bliss. These and related assumptions inevitably lead to some rather startling readings of The prelude. . . . Recommended for affluent graduate libraries only."

Choice 8:1330 D '71 160w

"Onorato rejects the 'intuitive' psychology of literary humanists and fully admits his attempt to apply Freudian concepts of human experience. . . . [He] acknowledges his debts to earlier Wordsworth scholarship and psychological criticism, specifically discussing in an appendix the relationship of his study to those of Herbert Read, F. W. Bateson, David Ferry, Geoffrey Hartman, and Wallace W. Douglas. Though many readers will perhaps object to the searching out of mother fixations and separation traumata in The Prelude, Onorato has applied his Freudian vantage intelligently and skillfully." F. P. Riga

Library J 96:2645 S 1 '71 160w
TLS p162 F 11 '72 700w

"This [is a] striking but uneven study. . . . What remains after the [author's] naïve psychoanalytic infrastructure is cast aside—some impressive close readings—commands admiration from the specialist and general reader alike."

Va Q R 48:xxvii winter '72 100w

"There are indications that, as a scholar, the author is something less than a completely equipped Wordsworthian. . . . The book tends to be repetitious, and it is decidedly too long. Nevertheless, these deficiencies are countered by the sophistication of the author's psychoanalytical knowledge. That knowledge, though impressively deep and authoritative, is applied with a kind of casual unobtrusiveness that makes it the more useful. The heavy machinery of psychoanalytical technicality is left outside the book; the poetry always comes first. The analyses are suggested by the words of the poems rather than being super-imposed upon them. Indeed, the author is sometimes so skillful and suggestive in isolating the elements he wishes to discuss that the psychoanalytical interpretation follows almost without the need for argument." Thomas McFarland

Yale R 61:279 D '71 1200w

Oraison, MARC. Chance and life; faith as the living reality; tr. by Bernard Murchland. 103p $4.95 Doubleday

128 Life. Man
ISBN 0-385-06694-5 LC 72-76194

The author examines the limitations of various branches of science in defining life. He doubts that 'man's knowledge of himself, and . . . of human relationships, can be reduced to a series of propositions. . . . Awareness [of life] Father Oraison maintains, is not knowledge but a quality that goes beyond science to Faith and Love.' (Publisher's note)

Christian Century 89:1078 O 25 '72 20w

"In this long essay the controversial French physician-priest explores the kinds of research and scientific knowledge, chiefly in biology, which are changing the ways in which we think about ourselves . . . and the frontier areas of insight and speculation which scientists call chance. . . . This is an intelligent, reflective, unassuming little book, revealing a mellow and well-furnished mind. Most of Oraison's allusions are to French scientific literature, but his deep faith in the primacy of love and in the reality of a God of ultimate meaning transcend cultural and national differences. Intelligent adults should welcome this graceful addition to the literature of scientific evolution." G. M. Casey

Library J 97:2854 S 15 '72 120w

Oraison, MARC. Morality for moderns; postface by R. Simon; tr. by J. F. Bernard. 117p $4.95 Doubleday

241 Christian ethics
LC 70-181480

The author's concern "is the development of a moral perspective for the young. . . . With the help of psychology and psychoanalysis, Oraison concludes that the basic moral value and ultimate motive in human behavior is the search for and the development of interpersonal relations, of love. . . . In a final chapter [he reflects] . . . upon new interpretations of biblical and theological questions such as original sin, natural/supernatural, hope and the love of Jesus Christ." (America) Originally published in French as Pour une Education Morale Dynamique in Paris, 1971.

"In this all too short but very readable book, Fr. Oraison once again reveals the wealth of his understanding of human behavior. . . . The serious student of moral development will ask for fuller treatment of Oraison's ideas, especially in the area of sexuality. Also his approach reflects a tendency toward an individualistic view. [This book] might well explore the social implications of man's existence and the corporate structure of reality. In this sense, Oraison is disappointing. Nonetheless he breaks new ground in Catholic moral thinking and unearths fresh insights." G. L. Chamberlain

ORAISON, MARC—Continued

America 126:578 My 27 '72 500w

"After some initial bewilderment, I concluded that this book . . . was written for people who have never read any books on psychology, sexual relations, or the 'new morality.' It is simple to the point of naïveté, and its patient explanations of basic positions in psychology since Freud are breathtakingly banal. . . . [Moreover, the author] falls into a dangerously naïve optimism in describing the moral situation of young people, as well as the tools of his own trade. He refers to the 'rigorous honesty of scientific observation,' in the field of psychology. God help us. Well, maybe his own is. . . . The biblical part of the book—the last few pages—is valuable, but it does not really compensate for . . . [some of the other passages such as the one] about marriage as the last stage in the search for full relationship." Rosemary Haughton

Commonweal 96:483 S 8 '72 550w

ORAISON, MARC. The wound of mortality: a meditation on the human condition; tr. by Bernard Murchland. 119p $4.95 Doubleday

248.4 Christian life
LC 70-157614

The author seeks to show "why man's past ideologies have failed him, and why his current civilization, with all of its technological gadgets and frantic attempts to communicate, still fails him. . . . What is the answer? Love, says Oraison. Complete, unquestioning, all-accepting love. In a . . . final meditation he describes Christ as the source and reality of love, the cohesive force for human unity." (Publisher's note)

"This meditation of the noted French priest-psychologist, Marc Oraison, has to be the sleeper 'spiritual' book of the year (1971). Rooted in the psychological reality of Jesus Christ, this practically unreviewed book of self-discovery is like a 'Catholic' Kierkegaardian leap into faith. It is a leap, however, which requires a high degree of maturity. Strong stuff, not for casual weekend retreats." D. J. Thorman

America 126:152 F 12 '72 80w

"[If this book] says anything, it says badly . . . that the human condition has nothing going for it except Christ, in Whom Oraison believes because 'He loved and took everything else as a joke.' Otherwise, science has failed, there is no definitive knowledge about anything, no reliable ideology, no human writer, philosopher, theologian worth reading, no 'hypothetical all-knowing' being extant (whatever that means), no organized religion worth bothering with. It's difficult to find anything to credit in this jumble, except maybe to suggest it as a gold mine for the Logic professor in search of howling fallacies." Edward Gannon

Best Sell 31:403 D 1 '71 320w

"[The author is concerned with] the personal, psychological and social consequences of accepting the 'myth' of Jesus as Christ in the Gospels and particularly the 'myth' of the Incarnation as extended through every man. Oraison is a French priest-psychiatrist and apparently orthodox Freudian analyst. . . . [But his book] is hardly a book at all—more an inchoate assemblage of obiter scripts, studded with italicized meaning and portentous 'unanswerable questions.' 'Does language create man or does man create language?' he asks. 'I would say both: man creates language and language creates man, in that order.' One is grateful for the order." N Y Times Bk R p10 Mr 5 '72 120w

ORDISH, GEORGE. The great wine blight. 237p il pl $7.95 Scribner

634 Phylloxera. Wine and wine making
SBN 684-10438-5 LC 72-537

The author recounts how the European wine industry was almost destroyed by the ravages of the phylloxera aphid in the years 1860-1890, and describes the methods used in controlling the blight. Bibliography. Index.

"Mr Ordish is very good and clear on the botanical family history of the vine, and on the nasty little pest (one of the greenfly tribe) itself. He worked on pest control in the French vineyards himself as a young man. . . . [His] book is a slight jumble, as a formidable and fascinating amount of information is packed into digestible chapters, but he possesses understanding, shrewdness and a quaint wit. And unlike some of his fellow entomologists, he does not discuss wine as if it was some kind of protein-building animal fodder; he does seem to remember what it tastes like." Economist 243[i.e.234]:61 Je 24 '72 450w

"This is a somewhat technical but, nevertheless, readable account of the phylloxera infestation which ravaged the wineproducing countries of Europe and the U.S. . . . Along with offering technical insight, [Ordish] also considers the social and economic effects. . . . This book is recommended for the special collection." B. E. Vayrek

Library J 97:3324 O 15 '72 90w

Reviewed by Edward Hyams
New Statesman 84:25 Jl 7 '72 850w
TLS p975 Ag 18 '72 800w

ORDWAY, FREDERICK I. Dividends from space [by] Frederick I. Ordway III, Carsbie C. Adams [and] Mitchell R. Sharpe; introd. by Werner Von Braun and S. Fred Singer. 309p il $10 Crowell

500 Space sciences. Technology
ISBN 0-690-24134-3 LC 70-170997

The authors maintain that the space program has benefited mankind in various ways. They describe the improvements to be expected in the next decade "in the fields of medicine and health, in communications, and in the monitoring and survey of our land, sea, and air resources. . . . [They seek to show that] the same 'systems concept' that sent men to the Moon and returned them safely to Earth can be focused on many of the problems that plague society, ranging from urban development and transportation to such Earth resources as agriculture, geology, hydrology, and forestry." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The most complete attempt to date to catalog the technological achievements of the space age. All three authors have credentials denoting intimate involvement with the space program and obvious competence for compiling the work at hand. . . . Examples cited range from advances in medical technology (i.e. telemetry to monitor physical condition of a patient) to mapping of shipping lanes in the arctic. Further development will lead to improved flood control, improved fishing, improved air traffic control, and a variety of other results of effective satellite deployment. This well written book is a valuable reference. It presents a very convincing argument in favor of continued efforts in space exploration."

Choice 9:526 Je '72 140w

"This book is particularly timely because its assessments can be of significant value in choosing goals for the future of space research after the Apollo program ends this year. Although the many present 'dividends from space' are thoroughly covered, much of the book is devoted to possible future benefits based upon what has been learned about space and space flight. While many of these real and possible gains are obvious only to the specialist who works with the new technology, this book is ostensibly written for the layman, the indirect beneficiary of the gains. The writing is clear, and the conclusions are well documented in an extensive bibliography." R. L. Hough

Library J 97:1335 Ap 1 '72 100w

O'REILLY, ROBERT P., ed. Racial and social class isolation in the schools; implications for educational policy and programs; pub. in coop. with the Office of res. and evaluation, N.Y. state educ. department. 401p $17.50 Praeger 370.19 Segregation in education. Minorities.

Education—New York (State)
LC 70-128105

"This is a compilation and interpretation of what is known about school segregation, especially with reference to New York State.

Background is provided by a review of factors influencing school desegregation, such as legal landmarks. Demographic trends are then explored to provide a picture of the ethnic composition of the schools together with an up-to-date (1969) look at integration in the state. . . . Research is reviewed, relating social class and ethnic status to such variables as intelligence, school achievement, self-esteem, and anxiety. There is a critique of nationwide and local studies, and an examination of compensatory education. The study concludes with a . . . chapter devoted to 'implications and recommendations.' (Library J) Bibliography.

"Reading [this book] is a melancholy experience. It is not that O'Reilly and his colleagues have failed to prepare a useful review of the literature on school segregation and integration. Quite the contrary, their work is careful, balanced, and intelligent. What is depressing is that one comes away from their work with the conclusion that we know very little about facilitating the educational progress of minority groups and that most of the solutions currently available to us promise nothing more than very slow progress. . . . The authors suggest various helpful notions for both research and policy though there is at least the implication that the whole educational approach in primary and secondary schools needs to be rethought if substantial progress is going to be made in improving the educational performance of minority groups." A. M. Greeley

Contemp Socio! 1:147 Mr '72 600w

"First published in December 1969 by the New York State Education Department [this study is] now presented in an edited and slightly revised version. . . . Still timely in 1971, the book gives a useful overview of an important subject. Unfortunately, the ponderous presentation will limit the audience mostly to students and educators. Excellent bibliography." Frank Cinquemani

Library J 96:1973 Je 1 '71 200w

OREM, R. C. Montessori today. 237p pl $6.95 Putnam

371.9 Montessori method of education
LC 74-136812

This book presents a "survey of Montessori education as well as a description of its practice in the United States, showing both the similarities and the differences in the various schools. [The author] presents only the arguments for this type of schooling and does not attempt an overall evaluation." (Library J) Annotated bibliography of works by Dr. Maria Montessori. Index.

"[The author of] 'Montessori and the Special Child' [BRD 1970], . . . offers a review of the programs, innovations, and successes of more than 100 Montessori schools.' One could be forgiven for asking, 'Why do we need another book on the Montessori system—especially, another one of uncritical adulation?' Maybe we don't. Anyway, we've got it. . . . Like most texts that rely partly on sentiment to sell themselves, this one is generously stocked with pictures of small children. One relatively novel feature of this book is that it tries to look ahead to 'Montessori in the Seventies' . . . It is like most Montessori literature, however, in that the author tends to overwrite and overgeneralize." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 31:420 D 15 '71 410w

Choice 9:260 Ap '72 140w

"Orem, who has visited over 700 schools using the Montessori approach to early childhood education, offers a well-organized and concise survey. . . . Parents will welcome the chapter covering Montessori practices in the home and the one on the transition from the Montessori to the traditional school. Appendixes describing Montessori organizations, teacher-training programs, and Montessori schools in the U.S. will make this useful as a reference tool. For any library where there is an interest in the subject." R. W. Barber

Library J 96:4005 D 1 '71 140w

OREN, NISSAN. Bulgarian communism: the road to power, 1934-1944. 293p $12.50 Columbia univ. press

320.9 Communist party (Bulgaria). Bulgaria—Politics and government
ISBN 9-231-03457-1 LC 75-147127

This is a "survey of the Bulgarian Communist party during the decade preceding the establishment of its rule in Bulgaria. . . . Oren describes in his opening chapters the peculiarities of Bulgarian politics and the specific conditions of the Communist party during its long underground existence, and then turns to the interrelationships between Bulgarian Communist leaders in exile and the Communists in Bulgaria, the purges of the left opposition, the impact of Soviet diplomacy on Bulgarian Communism, the party during the war, armed resistance, etc." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[Oren] bases his book on extensive research in different places in the U.S., Bulgaria, and Israel and presents a very detailed picture of the subject. [This] is an excellent complement to J. Rothschild's The Communist party of Bulgaria [BRD 1961] . . . [and is] a very useful book for all students of Central and Eastern European history and for all students of Communism. Recommended to all college libraries in which courses in these subjects are taught."

Choice 9:270 Ap '72 150w

"The history of the Bulgarian Communist party . . . receives here a fine scholarly treatment. . . . The author's striving for authenticity has led him to draw perhaps too exclusively on party sources, thus narrowing his perspective somewhat." S. Z. Pech

Library J 97:1433 Ap 15 '72 80w

ORIOLE, LAURENCE. A murder to make you grow up little girl; tr. from the French by W. G. Corp. 128p $5.95 World pub.

ISBN 0-529-04519-2 LC 78-184050

"Eight-year-old Sophie is summering on the Riviera with her parents and their adult friends. One night, Sophie witnesses a murder on the beach." (Sat R)

"Sophie really doesn't grow up by reason of the murder, although she is put through enough to mature any eight-year-old. It is an attractively written little—and short—mystery which should not surprise too many fans with its enigmatic denouement."

Best Sell 31:580 Mr 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit

Library J 97:1352 Ap 1 '72 60w

"As in so much French fiction, the emphasis is on relationships of people. Dialogue is terse, a good deal is left unsaid, and a great deal is conveyed by a single gesture or a tiny bit of description. . . . Oriole pulls cards out of the air very nicely. Some readers may find that she takes a little too long to get things moving, but those who give the book a chance will find it rewarding and exciting." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk ■ p22 Ap 2 '72 180w

"Since [Sophie] likes the murderer she won't reveal who it is—and neither will the author until she gets good and ready. The book, though short, is too long for its content, and the title—despite its missing comma—is the high point." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:86 My 13 '72 70w

ORNE, JERROLD, ed. Research librarianship. See Research librarianship

ORNSTEIN, ROBERT, E., jt. auth. On the psychology of meditation. See Naranjo, C.

ORR, JOHN, ed. & tr. An introduction to Romance linguistics [2d ed]. See Jordan, I.

ORR, ROBERT T. Mammals of North America. 250p il col il $9.95 Doubleday

599 Mammals. Animals—North America
LC 70-147356

Orr investigates "the habits of our dwindling wildlife, covering the thirteen orders of mammals that still exist on this continent." (Sat R) Bibliography.

"[This is one of] a six-volume series on the Animal Life of North America and a handsome series it is. Each volume is written by an expert in his particular field and is copiously illustrated with fascinating photos in both color and black and white. The series is technical enough to be of real service to the professional yet presented in such a way as to be of great interest to the amateur naturalist, sportsman or just plain lover of beautiful books. . . . A sparkling addition to anyone's library." F. J. MacEntee

ORR, R. T.—Continued

Best Sell 31:349 N 1 '71 30w

"Orr is nontechnical and does not aspire to cover all of the continent's species, but wise choices have been made of those described in text or shown in photographs. This is a book for someone who wishes to learn more than the names of the mammals of North America." Nelson Bryant

N Y Times Bk R p60 D 5 '71 110w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 54:49 D 4 '71 90w

ORTEGA Y GASSET, JOSÉ. Meditations on hunting; tr. by Howard B. Wescott; introd. by Paul Shepard; il. by Lewis S. Brown. 152p $9.95 Scribner

799.2 Hunting

SBN 684-12774-1

LC 76-37216

The author, a twentieth century Spanish philosopher, "examines hunting as an activity that has had its own development, and considers what that activity has meant to men in the various stages of evolution. . . . [The essay] was originally written in Lisbon in 1942, as a prologue to Veinte Años de Caza Mayor [Twenty Years as a Big-Game Hunter] by Ortega's friend Edward, Count Yebes, which was published in Madrid in 1943. This is its first appearance in English." (Translator's pref)

"Ortega was a beautifully lucid writer, even in a relatively minor work like this analysis of the enduring attraction of the hunt. Although some of the assumptions about prehistoric man from which he worked have since been questioned, Ortega's argument still holds, and every page glitters with quotable sentences and provocative ideas." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:96 J1 '72 80w

"[Ortega's] essay is arranged in ten sections: Hunting as Diversion, Hunting and Happiness, Polybius and Scipio Aemilianus, the Essence of Hunting, The Scarcity of Game, Suddenly We Hear the Sound of Barking, the Ethics of Hunting, Hunting and Reason, Vacations from the Human Condition, the Hunter—the Alert Man. . . . What I found difficult to accept is the author's basic contention that hunting is a majestic enterprise in which man is at his most noble. . . . Nevertheless, though other readers may also reject the essay for similar reasons, they may well take pleasure in the translation which conveys the style, learning, and humor of a fine mind. . . . [There are] ten double-page pencil sketches of hunting scenes at various times in history. . . . [This is] a book to provoke you to admiration and thought." F. L. Ryan

Best Sell 32:175 J1 1 '72 650w

"Ortega's anthropological-philosophical glorification of man as quintessential predator . . . propounds a controversial thesis in this age of ecological awareness, that man's highest pleasure lies in the gratuitous acts of hunting and ritual killing, where he is most true to his primordial instincts. Ortega's idealization of the hunter as 'the totally alert man' may appeal to the bullring aficionado or safari devotee, but the statement that 'hunting has perpetually occupied the highest rank in the repertory of man's happinesses' is open to scrutiny. . . . This quirky excursus will be of interest primarily to students of Ortega's more serious social and political writings." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 97:1813 My 15 '72 130w

New Yorker 48:79 J1 22 '72 200w

ORTIZ, ANTONIO DOMÍNGUEZ. The golden age of Spain, 1516-1659; tr. by James Casev. (The history of Spain, v 1) 361p $10 Basic bks.

946 Spain—History. Spain—Civilization

SBN 465-2690-7 LC [70-167765]

"After tracing the political and territorial advances that carried Spain into her great age of empire . . . [Ortiz presents] chapters that treat the central elements of a heterogeneous and changing society . . . the economic structures reacting to the powerful thrusts of demographic growth . . . the complex dialectic of religious orthodoxy and heterodoxy and the . . . achievements in learning, literature, and art. . . . [The] book concludes with . . . chapters on the American colonies, which are viewed . . . as the political, economic, spiritual, and cultural extension of Spanish society to the New World." (Va Q R) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"English readers will welcome this relatively brief interpretive survey of the period of Spain's hegemony in European affairs. . . . As with many surveys, quality is uneven: chapters on socioeconomic institutions and trends are excellent . . . while the chapter on the overseas empire is shallow with a correspondingly sketchy bibliography. College libraries should regard this book as a useful complement to the more detailed study of the period by J. H. Elliott, Imperial Spain 1469-1716 [BRD 1964]. Well indexed; useful . . . bibliography; translation generally successful."

Choice 9:270 Ap '72 130w

"It is both a disappointment and a pleasure to say that the Spanish authorship [of this book] makes no difference; a disappointment, because one had hoped that a native historian might supply perspectives unavailable to the non-Spanish historian; a pleasure, because it becomes abundantly clear that even on the most controversial issues—the character of Philip II, the Spanish record in the Netherlands, the Inquisition—there is no longer any perceptible difference of approach between Spanish and non-Spanish scholars. . . . The most original and stimulating chapters are those on the towns, for instance, or on the rural world—where Professor Domínguez Ortiz's profound knowledge illuminates neglected aspects of the subject. . . . For all its good qualities [however] . . . [this book] supplies no existing need, either scholarly or educational."

TLS p243 Mr 3 '72 900w

"This latest panoramic view of the monarchy of Charles V, Philip II, and the latter's two immediate successors of the same name, comes from the country's foremost living authority on Spanish social history in the early modern centuries; and it possesses the visible advantage of insights into Spanish religious, psychological, and sociological attitudes and values that only a Spaniard who is also a first-rate historian can possibly muster."

Va Q R 48:lxi spring '72 270w

OSBORN, FREDERIC J., jr. auth. Letters of Lewis Mumford and Frederic J. Osborn. See Mumford, L.

OSBORN, JAMES M. Young Philip Sidney, 1572-1577 [pub. for the Elizabethan club]. 565p il $25 Yale univ. press

B or 92 Sidney, Sir Philip

ISBN 0-300-01443-0

LC 77-151584

This account of Sir Philip Sidney centers on his "career as a diplomat in Europe during the vexed years of the 1570's as revealed in 100 . . . hitherto unpublished Latin, French, and Italian letters written to or by Sidney between 1573 and 1576 when the poet was only 18 to 22." (Library J) Index.

"Osborn's meticulous scholarship reaches beyond Sidney to the panoramic European scene, with vivid accounts of the St. Bartholomew's Day massacre, Queen Elizabeth's Kenilworth entertainments, meetings with the Holy Roman Emperor, long and intimate correspondence between Sidney and his mentor-friend Hubert Languet, etc. Osborn's book is a labor of love—detailed and accurate, judicious, eloquent. . . . [It] is recommended for making the letters accessible in English, for filling in lacunae in Sidney's short heroic life, and for the excellent historical overviews of 16th-century Europe. Full index, headnotes, and footnotes."

Choice 9:972 O '72 200w

"Osborn has had to combine a telescopic picture of Europe with previously and newly published correspondence. He demonstrates the breadth Sidney had to develop to keep abreast of the complex religious and political strife in Europe when Christians were repelling Turks, Protestants were warring with Catholics, and Lutherans were bickering with Calvinists. . . . As usual, these letters provide no glimpses of everyday or personal life in Elizabethan times. But what comes out of them is the potential greatness of Sidney as 'the expectancy and rose of the fair state.'"

W. H. Magee

Library J 97:2385 J1 '72 170w

"[This book] is substantial and handsomely presented. . . . The correspondence, it must be admitted, is not very lively, in spite of an interchange of rather heavyhanded jests. For Sidney it fulfilled a number of functions. It supplied him with European news and speculation thereupon. It gave him practice in reading and writing foreign languages. It poured over him praise so fulsome that one wonders how anyone, could maintain his integrity under the saccharine flood. Alongside this there are expressions which suggest genuine affection and concern. Above all it kept him in contact with persons who hoped to be useful to him or to use him. What there is little or nothing of is political realism, as distinct from humanist compliment, and rumour-mongering as a spectator sport."

TLS p799 J1 14 '72 1350w

"[This] extremely readable book is one of the dozen or so important contributions to Elizabethan scholarship this year. . . . [It] is liberally illustrated with more than a dozen carefully chosen reproductions, whose presence enhance its text. . . . For all its political focus, this study, perhaps more than any other on Sidney, goes farther to show his inexhaustible capacities as a man, and in the process offers new insights into the kind of energetic genius behind his poetry."

Va Q R 48:cxl autumn '72 170w

OSBORNE, CHARLES, ed. Letters of Giuseppe Verdi. See Verdi, G.

OSBORNE, JOHN. The naturalist drama in Germany. 185p $8.75 Rowman & Littlefield

832 German drama—History and criticism.
Realism in literature
ISBN 0-87471-027-8 LC 71-28948

"The early history of Naturalism and the German theater is . . . presented, and Osborne provides [an] . . . analysis of the relationship of Naturalism and its proponents with German Socialism and the political leaders of the Social Democratic Party. The second part of this volume stresses the literary position in Naturalism of the early plays of Gerhart Hauptmann . . . but there is also a consideration of the dramatic and novelistic work of other writers of the time—Holz, Schlaf, Sudermann, Halbe, Kretzer, etc. . . . Appendices include a listing of plays performed by the Freie Bühne and by the Volksbühnen from 1890-95. . . . Bibliography." (Choice)

"Draws together many worthwhile things, especially for undergraduates. [The] discussions of Hauptmann's plays in their social as well as literary context are helpful for the undergraduate student. . . . Many proofreader's errors mar the text . . . and there is an uneven effect in the handling of translations from German and French into English. Nevertheless, recommended for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 9:228 Ap '72 170w

"[Readers] will not find any very clear justification of the term 'Naturalism,' and may well have difficulty grasping what the social and cultural context of the movement was. But . . . Osborne's scholarship proves to us that the subject-matter is itself partly responsible. . . . [However], one regrets the author's decision not to treat a sufficient range of plays, restricting his book (except for some plot-summaries and the predictable inclusion of Holz and Schlaf's Die Familie Selicke) to Hauptmann as alone substantial enough to warrant intensive critical analysis. A proper treatment of the plays of some minor Naturalists would, on account of the tendency of minor works to overstate, have made the emphasis of the ism all the clearer."

TLS p825 J1 14 '72 350w

OSBORNE, JOHN. The third year of the Nixon watch; il. by Pat Oliphant. 216p $6.95 Live-right

973.924 U.S.—Politics and government—1961- Nixon, Richard Milhous, President U.S.
ISBN 0-87140-551-2 LC 73-184101

"Forty essays reprinted from his column in the New Republic for 1971. Osborne "details the background to the Supreme Court nominations, the Administration's 'Southern Strategy,' the Nixon-Reagan welfare deal . . . Leon Panetta's departure from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. . . . [He also discusses] how Mr. Nixon and his staff live with a Democratic Congress . . . the reasons behind the recent China trip . . . and the President's relationships with such disparate figures as Senator Edmund Muskie and the Reverend Billy Graham." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by T. H. Scully

Best Sell 32:189 J1 15 '72 320w

"A must for thorough Presidency collections and good topical journalism for the browsing collection."

Choice 9:1205 N '72 110w

"[These articles] deal with the Nixon Presidency from the liberal point of view and merely provide the reader with the impressions and views of one observer. The Nixon who emerges is a politician who looks ahead to the next election and whose principles become either flexible or nonexistent on issues such as school integration. . . . However, to get a balanced view of the Nixon Administration one needs more time and documentation." S. D. Nerboso

Library J 97:1724 My 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by M. F. Nolan

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ag 27 '72 250w

"[This book is] attentive to detail, subtle and reasonable. . . . [It includes Osborne's] definitive analysis of the roles of Henry Kissinger and Secretary of State Rogers in the Nixon Administration; his funny humane contrast of the Nixon and Johnson styles at the dedication of the LBJ Library. . . . [It is one of] the most perceptive accounts we have of a President 'who, in defensive response to the negative view,' Osborne says, 'has constructed a false image of himself and has persuaded himself that it is the true image.' Osborne doesn't pretend to know the 'true Nixon.' He concentrates on political performance, noting that the President's announced conservative principles didn't prevent him from moving, in 1971, toward liberal domestic reforms. He takes Mr. Nixon's foreign policies seriously." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:85 My 29 '72 210w

OSGOOD, CORNELIUS. The jug and related stoneware of Bennington. 222p il col pl maps $15 Tuttle

738.3 Pottery, American. Norton family
ISBN 0-8048-0888-0 LC 73-152111

This is an historical account of "stoneware jugs and other salt-glazed pottery, including churns and pitchers, produced during the nineteenth century at the Norton potteries in Bennington [Vermont]. . . . Illustrated with 38 figures, 8 color, and 23 black-and-white plates depicting over 100 stoneware objects, this book [includes] identification and analysis of the Norton designs . . . as examples of American folk art. It also reviews the manufacture of pottery from the earliest times and throughout its development in New England." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"An anthropologist's view, 'the verifiable demonstration of the change in the shape of an artifact in time,' is taken by Osgood . . . in studying salt-glazed stoneware. . . . He is not concerned with the shiny brown pottery normally called 'Bennington,' but applies his academic scholarship to the common Vermont jug. By scholarly (unfortunately pedantic) writing he covers every aspect of his subject; the history of pottery, technical aspects of ceramics, manufacturing processes, and the complex genealogy of the Norton family. All is documented in footnotes. Conclusions are drawn from his collection and that of the Bennington Museum. This book will be the source of Norton's ware."

Choice 8:1578 F '72 150w

"[Osgood] was attracted by chance to the Vermont salt glaze pottery, and, as might be expected, the scholar's casual interest led to a thoroughly researched work. . . . Recommended for larger collections." Paul von Khrum

Library J 96:3119 O 1 '71 110w

OSMOND, HUMPHRY, jt. ed. Psychedelics. See Aaronson, B.

OSSENBERG, RICHARD J., ed. Canadian society: pluralism, change, and conflict. 214p $5.50; pa $3.50 Prentice-Hall

309.171 Canada—Social conditions
ISBN 0-13-113290-3 LC 76-134454

"This collection of nine essays grew out of a series of lectures given at the University of Calgary in 1967. . . . The four themes covered are the clash of hinterland and metropolis, urbanization and industrialization, ethnic pluralism, and the mass media." (Library J)

"This small volume might well be rated among the top of the recent sociological studies of Canada. . . . The authors, all Canadian scholars . . . have provided historical perspectives relevant to their subjects and frequently use comparative materials (the U.S. and other countries). Injustices and problems are labeled as such. Well written and makes for exciting reading. Highly recommended."

Choice 9:250 Ap '72 160w

"Although the quality of the contributions varies widely, and all are introductory surveys of their subjects, the paucity of scholarly studies on Canadian society makes the volume a welcome one. It offers a useful introduction to some concerns of Canadian sociology. . . . A healthy absence of jargon makes the book readily accessible. While some essays are of little value . . . others are highly provocative. Especially worth attention are P. Cartens and F. G. Vallee on the native peoples, and an exciting, if confused, investigation of the hinterland-metropolis dichotomy by A. K. Davis. Regrettably, the book is unattractive in physical appearance and marred by frequent misprints." M. S. Cross

Library J 97:694 F 15 '72 150w

OSTERGAARD, GEOFFREY. The gentle anarchists; a study of the leaders of the Sarvodaya movement for non-violent revolution in India [by] Geoffrey Ostergaard and Melville Currell. 421p $17.75 Oxford

301.24 India—Social policy. Agriculture, Co-operative. Reformers
ISBN 0-19-827179-4 LC 70-853805

This study is an "attempt to evaluate the nature, scope, and results of the [Sarvodaya] movement [total development of society through truth and nonviolence] in terms of its revolutionary goals and leadership. . . . The authors begin with the history of the movement, its philosophy, and the social and psychological background of its leadership. They then deal with the actual working of the movement in its organizational, tactical, and achievement aspects, and study . . . problems of perspectives within a very diverse leadership." (Library J)

"There is less emphasis on nationally known figures than on 450 district and state organizers, mostly from rural landholding families. These men are essential for implementing and sustaining voluntary land reform catalyzed by Vinoba Bhave. The authors include a balanced analysis of the movement's understanding of its own organizational weaknesses, and its ambivalence toward government and ideological nationalism. Contains 36 useful tables. Highly useful for collections on southern Asia or political and social change."

Choice 8:1632 F '72 120w

"[This work] will stimulate a great deal of critical attention among political and social scientists. . . . [It] is one of the most important contributions to the general subject of Gandhism in recent years, and it is far superior to other available works devoted specifically to Bhoodan [cooperative agricultural associations]. Based on exhaustive and painstaking research, it is invaluable for political scientists interested in non-Western political movements and philosophies, and is also of interest to the informed layman." B. G. Gokhale

Library J 96:3767 N 15 '71 230w

"The opening chapters provide a useful summary of the origins, development, and ideology of the Sarvodaya movement. . . . The study must be commended in general as thoughtful, informative, balanced, and well-written." M. W. Fisher

Pacific Affairs 45:294 summer '72 380w

OSTROVSKY, ERIKA. Voyeur voyant: a portrait of Louis-Ferdinand Celine. 398p pl $10 Random house

B or 92 Destouches, Louis Ferdinand
ISBN 0-394-46524-5 LC 76-159362

The author of this study of the French author's life traveled "to France to confer with Céline's widow, study his home, gather rare tapes, records and journals, interview his friends and enemies. She treats many facets of the great French writer's stormy existence (including) the women he knew (and) the comfortable life he . . . abandoned to become one of the century's . . . rebels." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography.

Reviewed by Lael Pritchard
Best Sell 31:508 F 15 '72 550w

Reviewed by Paul West
Book World p3 Ja 30 '72 500w

"This nonsense is recommended only for major research libraries that wish to maintain a complete collection of Céline criticism, for, unfortunately, the work does contain some information that is available nowhere else."

Choice 9:652 J1/Ag '72 190w

Reviewed by Renee Winegarten
Commentary 53:88 Ap '72 1500w

"[This book] is a montage of images, interspersed with quotations from the works of the great misanthrope, describing Céline with the vigor and intimacy of fiction. A fascinating glimpse of this strange, dynamic, controversial, and deeply cynical man, driven all his life either across oceans in search of exotic diseases or into flight with the pack at his heels, healing by day and writing by night some of the most powerful and influential novels of this century. For all modern literature collections." Arthur Curley

Library J 96:4089 D 15 '71 110w

"Ostrovsky tries to arrange the facts of Céline's life as elements of a modern novel written by a disciple of Céline. She invents details when she needs them, and she refuses to submit to common standards of grammar or chronology. Unfortunately, she likes to indulge in hyperbole—another of Céline's traits—which in her hands simply lessens the credibility of her story and at times turns ridiculous. . . . In trying to keep her book interesting, the author avoids tedious scholarly debate but runs to the other extreme of superficiality. Though hindered by her style, it achieves its limited purpose of sketching Céline's life and giving an emotional defense of this lonely doctor-writer."

New Repub 166:30 Ja 29 '72 260w

Reviewed by Nigel Dennis
N Y Rev of Books 18:3 F 10 '72 700w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 79:81 Ja 31 '72 320w

"Mrs. Ostrovsky knows her subject well. . . . Unfortunately, her 'chronological leaps' . . . more often obfuscate than clarify, and a tendency to write purple prose too often darkens rather than clarifies her complex subject. . . . [She] has a terrible habit of never using the Anglo-Saxon if any Latin derivative can be found. . . . Despite these shortcomings, anyone interested in Céline the man, or in his writing, will find [this book] valuable. The author . . . punctures some of the many myths that accompanied him throughout his stormy life. . . . Admittedly, hers is not an unbiased 'portrait,' nor does it pretend to be. But it is a step toward understanding one of the major writers of our time about whom still today, far too little is known." Richard Seaver

Sat R 55:57 F 5 '72 950w

Va Q R 48:xc summer '72 200w

OTT, HEINRICH. Reality and faith; the theological legacy of Dietrich Bonhoeffer. 456p $11.50 Fortress press

230 Bonhoeffer, Dietrich
ISBN 0-8006-0059-2 LC 78-165513

"This book is a translation of Volume 1 of the author's Wirklichkeit und Glaube. . . . [Ott] endeavors to think Bonhoeffer's thought after and beyond him. He wants a dialogue with the elusive martyr, to position his genius within the context of contemporary theological enterprises and to channel his insights into a future focus for the study of Christology's relationship to faith and reality." (Library J)

"The great strength of this book is that it not only acquaints the reader with Bonhoeffer's thought but also brings fresh insights to the problem of relating the gospel to a world which no longer assumes those 'givens' upon which earlier preachers built a case for the Christian faith. Perhaps it is too much to put all of Bonhoeffer's thought under the umbrella concept of 'reality,' but the author does so in such a masterful and expansive way that his interpretation does not seem strained—perhaps because he is speaking to the major question of modern times. Ott has taken a significant step for modern theology by laying a theological foundation for spelling out in detail the relation to the Christian faith of our experiences in the modern world as described in the sciences, humanities and social sciences." David Bourquin

Christian Century 89:1077 O 25 '72 650w

"The net effect [of this work] is a creative interpretation, and its usefulness lies perhaps as much in discovering Ott himself at work as in expanding the field of English language Bonhoeffer studies." Robert Dvorak
Library J 97:2413 J1 '72 120w

OTTO, HERBERT A., ed. Love today; a new exploration. 287p $9.95 Assn. press
152.4 Sex (Psychology). Love, Emotions
ISBN 0-8096-1839-7 LC 70-167387

"This book had its beginnings when the American Psychological Association . . . took 'Love as a Growth Experience' for the theme of a recent annual meeting. Twenty . . . psychologists, analysts, social and behavioral scientists and philosophers were invited to examine the meaning of love from their special perspectives. It is from that meeting that these chapters come. 'Love, Sex and Pleasure,' 'Love as an Adventure in Mutual Freedom,' 'Love and Life Goals,' 'Love and Women's Liberation,' 'Homosexual Love,' 'Love and the Youth Culture' are some of the subjects discussed." (Publisher's note)

"[These essays] are held together by no more than the idea that love is worthwhile and worth inquiring about. From there on, everything scatters often in fruitful directions." Christian Century 89:346 Mr 22 '72 30w

"The articles vary widely in their literary quality and in their ability to analyze the potential for growth through love without killing the concept or making it banal. The editor, well known as an individual and group therapist, emphasizes the importance of understanding love's creative power as a condition for human survival. He lists growth centers around the country in an appendix. There is real value in several of these essays." C. E. Wadsworth
Library J 97:1816 My 1 '72 120w

OTTUM, BOB. All right, everybody off the planet! a novel. 241p $5.95 Random house
ISBN 0-394-46914-3 LC 70-159363

The hero is a "creature from a nearby planet who has been disguised as a human being and transported to earth in a space ship disguised as a Fedders air conditioner. . . . His earth name is Bing Walker. He has a tape recorder in his bellybutton and a laser beam in his chest. . . . His mission is to secure a job in the science section of Time and prepare the world for the impending invasion with a splashy cover story." (Book World)

Reviewed by C. J. Keffer
Best Sell 31:531 Mr 1 '72 320w

"While [this book] may really lay them in the aisles up there at editorial headquarters in Rockefeller Center (although one wonders), its relevance to the rest of us is, at best, marginal. . . . There may exist less interesting reading matter than a lot of ingroup jokes about a weekly news magazine, [but] I am hard put to think of any." L. J. Davis
Book World p11 Mr 12 '72 330w

"The plot is tenuous; there is no explanation of why the aliens are coming and they do not order anybody off the planet. But this is an entertaining spoof on publishing, advertising, academia, and just about everything." B. J. Smith
Library J 97:1350 Ap 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by M. S. Liddy
Library J 97:2970 S 15 '72 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Theodore Sturgeon
N Y Times Bk R p20 S 3 '72 160w

"[Ottum] has a natural talent for gentle satire and a knack for getting large laughs from small jokes. Indeed, this is a very funny book, an insider's book, but a hilarious one nonetheless. But, is it really fiction?" Arthur Cooker
Sat ■ 55:73 F 19 '72 430w

OWEN, H. P. Concepts of deity. (Philosophy of religion ser) 174p $7.95 Herder & Herder

211 Theism. God
ISBN 0-333-01342-5 LC 72-150307

This book is "an examination of classical theism, with special reference to Aquinas." (Critic)

"[Owen's discussion] of classical Christian Theism . . . takes its inspiration if not all of its conclusions from St. Thomas Aquinas, pantheism, Neo-Platonism, various finite gods, Pringle-Pattison, Barth, Radhakrishnan, Tillich, and others. Perhaps in order to simplify the discussion, the author is strongly polemical, arguing tirelessly for the superiority of his interpretation of Christian Theism. In the process, he not only oversimplifies problems related to his own views, but also fails to represent adequately the views of his opponents. . . . Must be used with caution." Choice 9:72 Mr '72 130w

"[This study is] ideal for college classroom and the serious discussion club." John Deedy
Critic 30:89 Ja '72 60w

OWEN, HAROLD. Aftermath. 199p il $9 Oxford

B or 92
ISBN 0-19-211195-7 LC 73-537524

With this volume Owen provides an addendum to his biographical trilogy Journey from Obscurity, BRD 1964. The current book "brings the author up to the present, but it is largely concerned with his hardscrabble struggles in the twenties and thirties—years in which he almost starved as an art student in London, years in which (when his art-school money ran out) he almost died of overwork as a farm laborer, years in which a succession of clearly war-related (five years at sea) psychosomatic ailments (muscular weakness, inability to eat, dread of tomorrow) led him to the edge of incapacity." (New Yorker)

"Aftermath has little essentially new to add to what, as gently as possible, the author had let us know already. Every penny must still be counted twice. The painful delicacy of the father continues to contrast with the apparent unfeelingness of the mother, who had spent her tenderness on the eldest son, and her quiet but efficient domestic tyranny. . . . On what are correctly called 'personal matters' Harold Owen is reticent, as was the custom of his generation. And how pleasing that is—and, indeed, how informative! Incidentally, Aftermath, the book, is a beautiful object, aptly garnished with attractive etchings by the author." D. J. Enright
Encounter 36:80 My '71 600w

"This is a moving, distressing, and beautifully written account of Harold Owen's post-war poverty in London and of his struggles as an art student. . . . The horrifyingly bleak years are described without self-pity. Modern art students, feeling hard done by, might cheer themselves up by reading what could have been their lot. And yet, appalling though conditions in the Twenties were for many, there was a feeling in the air that lifted the heart. One senses it strongly even in Mr Owen's darkest moments. Can it, incredibly, have been hope for the future?" Arthur Marshall
New Statesman 80:536 O 23 '70 190w

"Owen is a strange, muted, oblique kind of writer: his narrative moves straight ahead, but its meanings, probably unconsciously, are multi-layered. He pictures his mother, without a single unkind word, as a trial; he shows himself revering the memory of his famous brother but driven (remembering Wilfred's coolness toward him) to achieve a competitive fame; he seems to wish to tell us very little and ends by telling us almost too much for comfort. Illustrated (characteristically) with photographs only of early paintings and etchings—none of himself, his wife, his family, or his friends." New Yorker 46:99 Ja 16 '71 220w

OWEN, WILFRED. The accessible city [by] Wilfred Owen with the assistance of Inal Bradfield. 150p il $6.50 Brookings

388.4 City planning. Transportation
ISBN 0-8157-6770-6 LC 76-36698

This study concerns the "solution to the transportation problem in cities. Based on . . . analysis of the critical transportation problems in existing cities, it concludes that neither the automobile nor mass transit can provide the answer. . . . The proposed solution is better city planning and urban design to minimize the need for urban movement when building new cities and improving existing ones. This solution is based on . . . research and personal observations in new towns in Europe and Asia. (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

OWEN, WILFRED—Continued

"The author is a noted authority in the transportation field. The book is well documented, well written, and easily readable. It should appeal to a broad range of students, faculty, and professionals in the fields of city planning, transportation engineering, and public policy. A must addition for university libraries."

Choice 9:847 S '72 120w

"Owen's message is communicated in his typical hard, fast, telegraphic style of writing. The reader is treated to a breathless tour of the world's traffic jams and new transit systems in the first 50 pages of text. Statistics abound. . . . Finally, Owen offers a $60 billion plan which would simultaneously improve the urban transportation systems of the United States and the environment. One-third of the money would go to public transportation systems and the remainder to improvements in streets and parking. Owen is at his best when his evangelical prose highlights some critical misconceptions. . . . But the book has some disconcerting weaknesses. There is little discussion of the important forces that have motivated urbanites to flee the central cities. One looks in vain in the index for the words 'drugs,' 'crime,' or 'schools.' . . . In summary, [the] . . . book provides an excellent overview of the urban transportation problem for the layman, but transportation specialists . . . may find it less satisfactory." L. M. Schneider

Science 177:783 S 1 '72 400w

OWENS, JESSE. I have changed [by] Jesse Owens with Paul Neimark. 160p $5.95 Morrow

301.45 U.S.—Race relations. Negroes—Civil rights
LC 71-182956

The Black athlete "discusses how he has changed, personally and politically [during the last two years], . . . how he has come to greater self-knowledge and how he has grown into militancy." (Publisher's note)

"This slim book is subtitled 'A shockingly personal statement in a tragically impersonal time.' There is no doubt about our time; but I fear that this book does not do its own job. . . . For a reader who remembers the fame of our Olympic star just before the tragedy of World War II, it is especially disappointing. . . . The book seems padded. There is little one can bite into in order to enjoy the social meal which the author wants to offer. . . . The format of the book is to open with letters either to or from our author. Out of that scheme a little chapter unfolds. Much of it is interesting, but this reader feels that the writer intrudes overmuch." E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 32:260 S 1 '72 430w

Christian Century 89:853 Ag 30 '72 20w

"A few years ago when black militants tagged him an Uncle Tom, Owens retaliated with Blackthink [BRD 1970], an impressive synthesis of autobiography and moderate racial affirmation. . . . Although most of the autobiographical appeal of [the earlier volume] is lacking, and many terms and reflections are not completely clarified, there is an honest soul-searching here which provides a meaningful sequel and, at least, a small indication of a convergence of black voices." Charles Farley

Library J 97:2386 J1 '72 130w

OWUSU, MAXWELL. Uses and abuses of political power; a case study of continuity and change in the politics of Ghana. 364p il maps $11.50 Univ. of Chicago press

966.7 Swedru (Ghana)—Politics
ISBN 0-226-64240-2 LC 73-121354

The author "examines politics in Swedru (a town in Southern Ghana) . . . [as based on] economic self-interest." (Choice)

"Owusu's book is a solid contribution to the urban anthropology literature, but I found most stimulating the juxtaposition of his explanation of Ghana's modern political history and that of David Apter presented in The Gold Coast in Transition [BRD 1955]. This juxtaposition is made explicit in Apter's critical eight page foreword to Owusu's book. . . . The author's evidence convinces me that economic self-interest was clearly a factor in the political actions of many Swedru residents during the nationalist period and after; but a convincing case is not made that it is the primary factor." W. J. Hanna

Am Anthropol 74:1431 D '72 800w

"A micro study with macro implications. . . . Owusu draws upon his Ghanaian background, including eight years in Swedru, to ensure full authenticity. Although details occasionally may overwhelm the casual reader, they provide valuable material for the social scientist. Of value for research collections."

Choice 8:291 Ap '71 160w

"This seems a rather limited area for a case study, yet Owusu's work is well documented, using oral sources to test the applicability of theoretical models of political change and policy formation. The historical period extends from the end of the 17th Century to the fall of Kwame Nkrumah. . . . The author makes a strong case for the consideration of political relations as 'extensions' of primary dimensions of economic relations. Future political scientists on Africa will have to be cognizant of this work. Recommended for highly specialized libraries." H. K. Flad

Library J 95:4268 D 15 '70 190w

OXFORD. UNIVERSITY. Ashmolean Museum. Catalogue of the ancient Persian bronzes in the Ashmolean museum. See Moorey, P. R. S.

The OXFORD dictionary of English proverbs; 3d ed. rev. by F. P. Wilson with an introd. by Joanna Wilson. 930p $16 Oxford

338.9 Proverbs—Dictionaries
ISBN 0-19-869118-1 LC [75-18203]

This edition contains "new material in the form of both additional proverbs and earlier references to proverbs included in previous editions. The revision draws on a number of scholarly reference works published since the second edition appeared in 1948, in particular M. P. Tilley's monumental Dictionary of the proverbs in England in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries [BRD 1951] to which the entries are keyed by a system of supplementary cross references." (Choice) For the first edition compiled by W. G. Smith see BRD 1936.

"The late F. P. Wilson, a noted Elizabethan scholar, directed the extensive revision and modernization of this standard guide to the literary sources of more than 10,000 proverbial and near-proverbial phrases. This third edition . . . is a much improved version of a basic reference book which will be a valuable addition to every library serving students of English history, folklore and literature."

Choice 8:48 Mr '71 120w

Economist 237:xxviii N 21 '70 50w

Reviewed by Richard Boston
New Statesman 80:459 O 9 '70 1200w
TLS p1203 O 16 '70 260w

OXFORD economic atlas of the world; prepared by the Cartographic dept. of the Clarendon press; advisory ed: D. B. Jones. 4th ed 239p $25 Oxford

330.9 Geography, Commercial—Maps. Atlases

"The arrangement of the atlas has two main parts: maps grouped into thirteen sections, and the Statistical Supplement arranged in alphabetical order by country. The maps include eight sections based on commodity groups, one introductory section of physical geography and summary maps, and four sections providing background information on demography, disease, social and political factors, and communications. . . . Commodities were chosen mainly on the basis of their importance in world trade. . . . Most maps are based on the period 1963-5. . . . Major sources of information are listed. . . . The projection is a modified Gall." (Introd) Subject index. For the first edition see BRD 1954; for the third edition see BRD 1966.

"In this fourth edition, while the editors have included relatively recent information where it was available—in sectors ranging from chemicals and computers to air transport—they have had to revert to the year 1965 or the period 1963-65 in a rather depressingly large number of cases. One should hasten to add that this atlas not only remains unique in its field but has been expanded, in both dimensions and content, in a very welcome way. . . . The page size has been doubled. . . . In addition to commodities and manufacture, the atlas now covers such topics as birth control, employment, tourism and foreign aid. . . . [A further addition] is a useful gazetteer that will facilitate location of many places of specialist interest . . . such as mines, nuclear plants, centres of computer production, and even vineyard regions."

Economist 244:69 J1 8 '72 300w

"Forty-six full-page maps of the world, some 15 inches by eight, many in handsome color lithography, make up the bulk of this [volume]. . . . On each map is plotted some economic distribution of interest. These include data on the physical environment, crops, minerals, energy use and manufacturing and trade in many specific commodities (not only iron ore and bananas but also aircraft and computers), plus social information such as . . . estimates of education and medical resources. There are maps of transport nets on land, sea and air and an economic gazetteer. . . . Symbols for quantitative data are hard to make truly graphic. . . . Color and form are artfully used to help distinguish the wide ranges most economic quantities require. . . . No work of the kind in English is better, and surely none is more attractive in maps, letterpress and binding." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 227:121 Ag '72 550w

OXFORD English dictionary. A supplement to the Oxford English dictionary, v 1, A-G; ed. by R. W. Burchfield. 1331p $50 Oxford

423 English language—Dictionaries

This is the first in a projected three volume supplement to the thirteen volume Oxford English Dictionary. "Volume I contains between 17,000 and 18,000 Main Words divided into some 30,000 senses. There are just under 8,000 defined Combinations within the articles and a similar number of undefined Combinations. The illustrative quotations number 130,000." (Intro) "When completed, the Supplement will contain about 50,000 main words (some new, some newly employed) that have become part of the language since 1834. . . . In the current A-G Supplement about 25 per cent of the words are new to the O.E.D. (bebop, boogie-woogie, Emmy, Frisbee, cliffhanger, closeup, freeway) and 75 per cent are older words that have acquired new meaning (e.g., 'continuity,' from screen writing)." (Sat R)

Reviewed by J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p19 D 6 '72 380w

"Burchfield has proved a brilliant and lively editor, and this supplement is a triumph. The range of words is wider than that of the OED; it gives older as well as newer citations of many words in the OED; so far as novelties are concerned, it is as up to date as any work so massive can be. The citations are well and wittily chosen, from all sources down (or up) to Oz. Where possible, they serve as extended definitions, and they demonstrate changes in use and meaning."

Economist 245:68 O 14 '72 600w

Reviewed by George Steiner

N Y Times Bk R p1 N 26 '72 5550w

"The present volume . . . is fascinating, essential for those who own the preceding [set], and a convincing and long-needed attempt at modernization. According to its editor, this Supplement incorporates 'the vocabulary of the great modern writers,' meaning Kipling, Joyce, Lawrence and Yeats. But it does more than that. Slang, neologisms and scientific terms are here in abundance and from many disciplines. Still, the reader who does not already own the full OED should approach this book with caution: it is not an independent dictionary. Most of its entries assume, that the reader has access to the material in the parent volumes." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 80:105D N 13 '72 700w

"The present Supplement was put together by a dozen editors and twenty other full-time editorial people under Burchfield's direction (including one each permanently in London and Washington for uninterrupted access to the British Museum and the Library of Congress), aided by about 100 workers in the field, many of them academicians or their spouses, who read new books and current journals and send in new words, complete with context, at a present rate of about 50,000 a year for editorial winnowing. . . . There are more new words coming from North America than from anywhere else in the world, and the fields of science and entertainment are especially lucrative and lush providers." Alan Green

Sat R 55:89 N 4 '72 450w

"As well as new words . . . and new uses of older words. . . . [the Supplement] takes in older words in current use which had not been included in OED and carries the history of these back to their beginnings. . . . [It also includes] the taboo sexual words. The method is essentially historical: a high proportion of the space is devoted to dated and referenced quotations covering the whole recorded history of the word or use. The Supplement attempts also to take in the standard vocabulary of all regions of overseas English. . . . Clearly the new Supplement is a major event in the history of English lexicography and will be of enormous value, to the popular dictionaries among others, in establishing the vocabulary of the language as it exists today."

TLS p1209 O 13 '72 400w

The OXFORD history of South Africa; 2v; v2, South Africa, 1870-1966; ed. by Monica Wilson and Leonard Thompson. 584p il $8 Oxford

968 Africa, South--History
LC (74-77602)

"Second of two volumes . . . surveying South African history as the interaction among all its population groups rather than the activity primarily of the whites, this book is organized in three broad thematic divisions. Studies of economic development, modernization, and the growing interdependence of white and black communities in farming and urban context focus on the emerging character of South African society as a whole. Next are surveys of the political process by which independent African chiefdoms were subjected to white control in the 19th century and the Afrikaner republics were subdued and embraced through the Union of 1910 in the British imperial framework. Finally comes analysis of the dominant and competing forces of Afrikaner and African nationalism and of South Africa's international relations in the 20th century. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Choice) For volume one see BRD 1970.

"A conceptual index completes this as the best general history of South Africa now available. Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 9:419 My '72 130w

"The eight contributors have amply fulfilled the promise of the first volume. . . . There are notable omissions in the work taken as a whole: the Boer war, for example, the apotheosis of the Afrikaner soul and the driving force behind the republicanism that has moved Afrikaner nationalism all this century, gets scant treatment; there is no detailed account of the role of English-speakers in the interaction, nor of white opposition to what has been called 'the rise of the South African Reich.' . . . But this book is a very considerable achievement, indispensable to anybody with more than a superficial interest in what has been called, perhaps justly, in view of the world's inability to stop fretting at it, 'the most interesting country on earth.'"

Economist 239:63 My 15 '71 750w

"The most remarkable feature of this second volume of South African history is that readers in South Africa are to be prevented from seeing Leo Kuper's chapter on African nationalism. Because information on those organisations through which African views have been mobilised or about the leaders who have risked their liberty to express such views might infringe the laws of the white regime, a separate edition, omitting this chapter is to be published in South Africa. . . . It is a major distinction of both volumes that, in contrast to most previous historical writing on South Africa, the presence of the black masses who comprise the vast majority of the country's inhabitants is never forgotten." John Hatch

New Statesman 82:306 S 3 '71 700w

OZ, AMOS. My Michael; tr. from the Hebrew by Nicholas de Lange in collaboration with the author. 287p $6.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47146-6 LC 70-171158

This novel is in the form of a "journal, covering roughly the decade of the 1950s, of Hannah Gonen. . . . A student of literature, with a predilection for romantic novels, Hannah tells us how she met Michael, a geologist. Michael is stable, ambitious, honest—a good Jewish boy—and so she marries him. But he is also unimaginative, humorless, rigidly methodical. . . . Hannah is turned off by her Michael . . . precisely because he is a devoted husband, dutiful son, and after their child is born, responsible father. Hannah retreats into dreams. . . . She dreams of the twin Arab boys with whom she played as a little girl and with whom she imagined herself engaged in exotic and violent adventures." (Sat R) Originally published in Israel under the title Mikha'el sheli.

OZ, AMOS—Continued

Reviewed by A. C. Foote
Book World p8 My 28 '72 450w

Reviewed by S. M. Batzdorff
Library J 97:1461 Ap 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards
N Y Rev of Books 19:21 O 5 '72 700w

"Oz at 33 has clearly established himself as one of Israel's most gifted and original writers. . . . [He exhibits] a growing artistic control over the hallucinatory vision of spiritual and sexual unrest that is his hallmark as a novelist. 'My Michael' is his first full-length work to be published in English, and in [this] admirable translation it should give English readers a good sense of Oz's special, haunting power. . . . No one until Amos Oz has so strikingly realized the potential of [Jerusalem] as a correlative for isolation and alienation. . . . [This is] the study of a minutely felt process of psychological erosion, rendered with uncompromising consistency in an imaginatively wrought prose rich with suggestive imagery. It bespeaks a talent that should command growing attention in the years to come." Robert Alter

N Y Times Bk ■ p5 My 21 '72 1000w

"In Israel in the 1950s—puritanical, sober, zealous, beset—romantic passion was, for the time at least, an extravagance, an aberration to be concealed. Hannah is the opposite of all we have heard about young Israelis: uncommitted to any of the nation's causes. Although her dreams are tame by the standards of American fiction, and sometimes rather adolescent, her craving for violence, for sexual relations with passionate Arab youths, has evidently scandalized and fascinated Israeli readers. The book has been a best seller in Israel for several years. . . . [However], the lusts that move marauding Crusaders in a novella [by Oz] published in Commentary last year border on the demonic. Next to the primitive force of that story, Hannah Gonen's condition is only another instance of the neurotic discontent with which our age is strewn." Milton Rugoff

Sat R 55:60 Je 24 '72 400w

Reviewed by A. T. Baker
Time 100:63 Jl 3 '72 400w

"Mr Oz is able to control the first-person narrative to encompass the cultural background, the ambiguities of a failed marriage and the intricacies of a mental breakdown. But the interior monologue, by its very nature, provides little opportunity for the development of characters outside the specific focus of the central consciousness. As a result a number of initially interesting figures remain sketchy outlines. And though the background may create possibilities for new variations it is impossible to disguise the fact that the theme is not a new one."

TLS p851 Jl 21 '72 260w

P

PACE, TOM. Fisherman's luck. 246p $5.95
Harper

SBN 06-013260-4 LC 77-156580

"Ben Garden is police chief of a Florida Gulf Coast town that is plagued by corruption and housing developments and the perennial disagreement between native and tourist. When Billy Carter, mate on Tommy Kelley's charter boat, falls from the bridge when Tommy is bringing the boat up the inlet, everyone assumes Billy is drunk as usual. Then, the sheriff's divers bring in the body with a bullet hole in the head. Now Ben has to find the murderer, while he tries to placate the town council and keep his job." (Library J)

Best Sell 31:435 D 15 '71 50w

Reviewed by John Thompson
Harper 243:120 O '71 250w

"A swiftly moving picture of political infighting." M. K. Grant

Library J 96:3162 O 1 '71 100w

"Pace is an excellent performer. He keeps his plot in motion without padding—but he is as interested in people as he is in action. Minor characters are equally well-drawn; the book breathes life. One of the year's best." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p23 D 19 '71 100w

PACHMUSS, TEMIRA. Zinaida Hippisus; an intellectual profile. 491p il $12.50 Southern Ill. univ. press

B or 92 Hippisus, Zinaida Nikolaevna
SBN 8093-0409-0 LC 70-86187

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Simon Karlinsky
Nation 215:117 Ag 21 '72 850w

Reviewed by Helen Muchnic
N Y Rev of Books 18:37 Mr 23 '72 1650w

TLS p134 F 4 '72 750w

The PACIFIC rivals, a Japanese view of Japanese American relations, by the staff of the Asahi Shimbun; with a foreword by Edwin O. Reischauer. 431p $10 Weatherhill 301.2952 U.S.—Relations (general) with Japan, Japan—Relations (general) with the U.S.

ISBN 0-8348-0070-5 LC 70-183521

"The Asahi Shimbun, Japan's largest and most influential newspaper, organized a task force of 17 editors, analysts, and reporters to carry out an investigation in depth of Japanese-American relations—from background to current state to probable future. The study, serialized four times a week beginning January 3, 1971 . . . ran for seven months [and] was then published as a book. . . . [It] traces the changes in Japanese and American perceptions of each other, beginning . . . in 1854, and going on to the Russo-Japanese war, the Oriental Exclusion Act, the China Crisis, Pearl Harbor, Japan's defeat, and the . . . occupation which followed it. The atom bomb, America's cold war policies, and growing entanglement in Vietnam are [also] evaluated." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[This volume] expertly translated into English by Yoshio Murakami and Perer Grilli . . . is still timely and readable. . . . There is an underlying tone of prickly self-righteousness about some of the commentary. The book has one major defect which . . . illustrates the limitations of most newspaper series. Its subject-matter is squeezed into one-thousand word chunks, which is about all a daily newspaper can take. Strung out into a tome of more than 400 pages, these chunks collectively do not pack the punch the best of them have as separate articles." Takashi Oka

Christian Science Monitor p13 Jl 5 '72 600w

"The articles are meaty, provocative, interesting and generally well-written. . . . We must remember that the 'Big Three' of the Japanese newspaper world (the Yomiuri and the Mainichi, in addition to the paper whose staff authored this volume) have generally been slanted to the left and have taken great delight in pulling Uncle Sam's whiskers over the years. But, on the whole, the presentation is a fair representation of Japanese views. . . . The volume makes clear the great number of misconceptions which Japanese and Americans have of each other. The ignorance on both sides is astounding—the Japanese have been educated by American movies and many Americans by the same stereotypes. . . . The need for more balance and knowledge of Japan here in the United States is vital. . . . [This book] is a good place to start." R. L. Walker

Nat R 24:1013 S 15 '72 2600w

"[This] book is perhaps the most refreshing and accurate English-language version ever published of what real Japanese write for other Japanese about the tragic, amusing, confused, stumbling efforts of two totally different civilizations to accommodate to their mutual needs and to realities of the second half of the 20th century. . . . To find out what Japanese—or, at least, significant public-opinion leaders—are really thinking about us . . . this book is uniquely revealing and timely." G. R. Packard

N Y Times Bk R p2 O 29 '72 1850w

PACKARD, VANCE. A nation of strangers. 368p $7.95 McKay

301.32 U.S.—Social life and customs. U.S.—Social conditions. Migration, Internal LC 72-35755

"In recent years mobility and rootlessness have become pervasive phenomena in the United States, according to Packard, who examines these . . . developments and concludes that they have a lot to do with what ails American society. He finds that despite some advantages, high mobility and rootlessness (caused by the mushrooming of 'quickie communities' in the suburbs, the spread of mobile home parks, the existence of towns which are dominated by round-the-clock factories, etc.) have affected our behavior, our emotional well-being, and the functioning of our communities." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by P. J. Reiss

America 127:344 O 28 '72 550w

"Packard, in this, his seventh venture into pre-packaged pseudo-sociology, is attempting to analyze the tendency toward 'rootlessness' that Americans are developing, to consider the possible effects of such geographical instability, and to suggest some possible solutions. The book fails on all three counts, and manages to be boring in the process." J. J. Gustainis

Best Sell 32:273 S 15 '72 700w

Christian Century 89:905 S 13 '72 20w

Reviewed by Richard J. Cattani

Christian Science Monitor p12 S 13 '72 460w

Reviewed by Michael McCauley

Critic 31:82 N/D '72 2300w

"In graphic detail Packard describes the problems faced by individuals and families adjusting to being on the move so much and the new social institutions that have been developed to serve these 'high mobiles.' But in proposing ways of reducing the fragmentation of community that has come with high mobility, Packard falls back on some ineffectual suggestion such as strengthening neighborhood stability and encouraging a greater sense of community. His book, however, is well worth reading because of the fresh material it presents on mobility in the U.S. and its lively and highly readable style." Harry Frumerman

Library J 97:2629 Ag '72 160w

"Packard latches on to the most obvious and superficial signs of these times—that Americans move around a lot, more than any other people—and treats it in the most obvious and superficial way. The problems of the book principally are that Packard has no real feeling for or understanding of his subject and that his methodology is simplistic and anachronistic. . . . The book has no commitment, and therefore lacks either moral center or dialectical energy. Why? It appears that Packard simply does not want to deal with the big business and corporate mentality that causes much of the 'high mobility' and social 'fragmentation' with which he is concerned. The one unequivocal thing that emerges from his study—and for this he should be credited—is that high mobility Americans don't move, they are moved." Peter Michelson

New Repub 167:25 O 7 '72 2300w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

N Y Times Bk R p2 S 10 '72 1100w

"Packard is at his best in describing the 'curious life styles' of our loosely rooted Americans. . . . Although highly readable [this] is a solemn and thoughtful book. Packard humanizes his sociological data with oddities culled from local papers and with quotations—mostly overheard remarks . . . that suggest a novelist's ear. This is an important book, one that should be read by personnel directors, corporation presidents, and community leaders. But most of all, it should be read and studied by anyone who is contemplating packing up and moving on to the next town. With every move, it seems, you lose a little of yourself." Harriet Van Horne

Sat R 55:71 S 9 '72 1150w

PADMORE, GEORGE. Pan-Africanism or communism; foreword by Richard Wright; introd. by Azinna Nwafor. 439p $8.95 Doubleday

320.159 Pan-Africanism LC 71-164438

"Beginning with the earliest efforts to resettle black slaves in Africa, Padmore traces the growth of Pan-African consciousness up to the nationalist movements of the 1950's. The book was written when independence movements and the cold war were growing in strength, and was both a plea and a warning to the colonial powers. Padmore saw Pan-Africanism as an alternative to Communism; but he warned that if the nationalists found no sympathy in the West, they would look elsewhere." (Library J) For reviews of the first edition see BRD 1956.

"Padmore's account is of unique interest because of the author's long association with international Communism in the 1920's and 1930's and his subsequent prominent participation in the Pan-Africanist movement until his death in 1959. In the perspective of time Padmore's analysis has not lost its sharpness, although militants of the 1970's may find some of [his] prescriptions of the 1950's quaintly moderate. Remains a seminal document of the Pan-Africanist movement; for this reason alone belongs on the shelves in any general collection."

Choice 9:418 My '72 170w

"Padmore is well known as one of the prime movers in the development of Pan-Africanism. He was also a historian of Pan-Africanism, and this book displays the unique vitality of the work of 'a participant as historian.' . . . This new edition includes the original foreword written by Wright in 1956 and a new introduction by Nwafor, who offers an excellent analysis of Pan-Africanism from the perspective of 1971." N. R. Northrup

Library J 97:681 F 15 '72 150w

"It is a major limitation of [this work] . . . that it was not updated to include the extraordinary and, perhaps, courageous Nkrumah policy. . . . The introduction [by] an assistant professor of Afro-American Studies at Harvard, makes the exaggerated claim that the book has something in common with the historical works of Thucydides, Machiavelli and Trotsky. It is actually a pedestrian work, lacking a theoretical focus, poorly organized and limited in the intellectual dimension that Padmore's own participation in the anticolonial movement might have provided. Padmore, a West Indian radical who advised Kwame Nkrumah on foreign policy in 1957-59, died in 1959, a couple of years before Nkrumah embarked upon his Pan-African adventures." Martin Kilson

N Y Times Bk R p27 Mr 12 '72 750w

PADOVER, SAUL, ed. On revolution. See Marx, K.

PADYKULA, HELEN A, ed. Control mechanisms in the expression of cellular phenotypes. (Symposia of the Int. soc. for cell biology, v9) 285p il $16 Academic press

574.8 Cells. Biology

ISBN 0-12-611909-0 LC 72-23325

This volume "deals primarily with the phenotypic expression of plant and animal cells in culture. . . . Holtzer deals with the differentiation of muscle and cartilage cells, Whitaker with melanin-forming cells. Two papers deal with neurons in culture and immunoglobulin-forming cells. There are four papers on the genetic analysis of human cells or human somatic hybrid cells in culture. Three . . . articles are concerned with differentiation of plant cell cultures. Sonneborn discusses the inheritance of surface structure in Paramecium, and Mintz uses her studies of allophenic mice as a model for an hypothesis of the clonal origin of phenotypic variability." (Choice)

"The 13 contributions are in large part summaries of the work being carried out in the laboratories of the authors. . . . This book will be most interesting to graduate students in genetics and developmental biology, but undergraduates taking courses in these areas should be able to handle many of the articles."

PADYKULA, H. A.—Continued

Choice 8:572 Je '71 170w

"As Morgan Harris states in the foreword, this symposium was designed to bring together investigators from a variety of disciplines each of whom is approaching from his own special direction the common problem of phenotypic expression at the cellular level. . . . There is no obvious organizational theme running through the volume. Papers are clustered to some extent—for example, the plant cell papers are grouped together, as are those on cell fusion and on chicken embryo cells—but few of the authors make any serious attempt at unification. . . . On the whole, this book is a collection of stimulating, timely, and well-written articles." J. R. Coleman

Science 173:414 J1 30 '71 600w

PAGE, MARTIN. The yam factor; and other insights into the lives and customs of the executive tribes of America. 293p $7.95 Doubleday

301.5 Corporations
LC 75-180096

A British journalist draws a parallel between the behavior of Trobriand Islanders who store up an excess of yams for purposes of conspicuous consumption, and that of "civilized" man who "is motivated by the same urge but substitutes other symbols of wealth—fancy clothes, jewelry, expensive cars—for yams. He goes on to develop the thesis that most of the accepted business practices of 'sophisticated' Western man, such as his hierarchical structure, his methods of advertising, his policies of hiring and promoting employees—his methods for solving most of his problems—have their origins and counterparts in the tribal customs of 'primitive' man." (Library J) Glossary of tribological terms.

Reviewed by G. F. Mott

Ann Am Acad 404:310 N '72 800w

"In addition to offering a glimpse into the peculiar behind-the-scenes operations of some of the major businesses in the Western world, there are some interesting accounts of life in the jungles of Africa, Asia, and the Pacific islands. The result is a sometimes fascinating, but unfortunately disjointed and often meandering fusion of observation, research, and gossip anecdotes. In spite of its rambling tone, however, the book makes good reading." A. J. Anderson

Library J 97:1805 My 15 '72 200w

"[The author] has spent considerable time doing firsthand research in those two great laboratories of primitivism, Africa and the United States. His anthropology is casual, but his information is voluminous and his enthusiasm for his subject boundless. His amiable tone falls uneasily between a scientist's cool objectivity and a popular writer's parody of a scientist's cool objectivity. . . . [It is] all very good fun, in a parlor-game sort of way. . . . [but] the idea of it is far from being new." John Brooks

N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 25 '72 900w

PAHL, R. E. Patterns of urban life. 152p maps $4.50; pa $2.25 Humanities press

301.3 Cities and towns—Great Britain. Great Britain—Social conditions. Sociology, Urban
LC 70-12526

This work is "about the sociological structure of urban Britain, dealing . . . with the early history of urbanization . . . and bringing the reader up to date with its later manifestations, such as commuter communities in villages. Pahl's own conclusion is that the most useful contribution a sociologist can make to the planning process is to question its ideologies." (TLS)

"In just 137 pages . . . Pahl manages to consider, analyze, reject or modify the most revered canons of urban sociology. . . . [This book] does more than its job. Little David has slain Goliath almost. . . . [The author] shows in this short work that being a debunking and reflective sociologist goes a long way in one's ability to organize and evaluate critically the plethora of data and verbiage on urban life. . . . Because the purpose of the book is to reach a broad public, Pahl uses theories to organize his material rather than the usual data or problem-oriented approach." F. M. Silvert

Contemp Sociol 1:334 J1 '72 800w

TLS p950 Ag 28 '70 190w

PAISH, F. W. How the economy works, and other essays. 238p il $13.50 Humanities press 330.942 Great Britain—Economic conditions.
Great Britain—Economic policy
SBN 333-11067-6 LC 76-520413

"Paish, formerly professor of economics (London School of Economics) and now consultant on economic affairs to Lloyds Bank Ltd., has brought together eight of his more recent papers and articles published between 1964-69. Each essay deals with a different aspect of the economic situation. . . . The papers are concerned with the impact of government monetary and fiscal policies on the rate of interest, investment, employment, foreign trade, inflation, and the balance of payments." (Choice)

"Prepared initially as separate articles or lectures, there is considerable overlap in the background material . . . but this does not detract from the quality of the overall collection. In some instances the more recent articles have complemented earlier articles and in three essays Paish has provided postscripts which add to the quality of the essay. All of the essays are supplemented with statistics and statistical analyses which require rather close reading. . . . Any reader interested in 'political economy' or students of monetary and fiscal policy will find these essays of considerable interest. Should probably be included in any graduate school library which caters to graduate students of economics, and it will prove valuable for the monetary and fiscal policy specialists."

Choice 8:1364 D '71 230w

Economist 236:63 S 5 '70 70w

"[The author's recipe for] managing the economy . . . boils down to maintaining a higher level of unemployment than in the twenty years after the end of the Second World War, as indeed there has been during the past three years. What is the acceptable level of unemployment is very much a political question. . . . In these days when . . . every man is his own economist, the main ideas of leading specialists in the field are well known, and the present collection of essays adds little to Paishist doctrine. . . . Before asking us to pay so much, the publishers ought to have asked Mr. Paish to recast the material into a cohesive whole and bring it more thoroughly up to date than the three short postscripts manage to do."

TLS p895 Ag 14 '70 550w

PALADILHE, JEAN. Gustave Moreau [by] Jean Paladilhe and José Pierre; tr. by Bettina Wadia. 171p il col il $30 Praeger

759.4 Moreau, Gustave
LC 71-183385

Paladilhe analyzes "the paintings in chronological order and relates them to Moreau's life and thought. There follows a study [by] José Pierre of the very different strains—Romantic, Symbolist, Fauve, and Tachiste—that determined the artistic character of this . . . painter. [A sampling of Moreau's art] is provided by the 106 illustrations, 23 of which are in color." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Pierre offers an orderly survey of Moreau's aesthetic principles and some fairly persuasive speculations about the psychological roots of Moreau's art. He is impressed, as well he might be, by Moreau's obsessive return to destructive females, like Salome. Where Paladilhe notes naively, with almost paternal approval, that Moreau 'adored his mother, who lived to a ripe age, his faithful companion and confidante. . . . No son could have been on more intimate terms with his mother,' Pierre, armed with the same information—unpublished notebooks and little-known paintings—essays a psychoanalytical interpretation that seems to correspond with the evidence Moreau's pictures provide. Useful and plausible as his argument is at this point, it leaves one crucially important question unanswered—was this all?" Peter Gay

Am Scholar 41:660 autumn '72 350w

"This volume adds little . . . to the still slim Moreau literature. Paladilhe, keeper of Musée Gustave Moreau, gives us a rather ponderous, strictly biographical, and highly adulatory essay. Pierre attempts a more insightful and specific analysis of Moreau's work, using both the commentaries of Moreau's students and friends and some principles of modern psychoanalytic theory. His essay, while lively and absorbing, is somewhat marred by the sniping at other Moreau scholars. The reproductions range from the mediocre to the downright bad, and many suffer from careless cropping." Phyllis Andersen

Library J 97:3574 N 1 '72 90w

PALANDRI, ANGELA C. Y. JUNG, ed. Modern verse from Taiwan; ed. and tr. by Angela C. Y. Jung Palandri with Robert J. Bertholf. 207p $9.50 Univ. of Calif. press

895.1 Chinese poetry—Collections
ISBN 0-520-01790-0 LC 79-161994

Palandri translates "poems by 20 poets whom she considers representative of major aspects and directions of recent and contemporary composition in Taiwan. The anthology is preceded by a 20-page introduction, and the selections from each poet are prefaced with biographical information and appreciative remarks... averaging about a page for each author." (Choice) Bibliography. Index of titles.

"Modern poetry in Taiwan has never received serious treatment by scholars in the West, and for this reason alone the present survey deserves our attention. . . . It should be noted that only four of the 20 poets presented here consider themselves at home in Taiwan; 16 are refugees from the Chinese mainland. It is in this light that one must view the loneliness, searching, and despair which seem to be the dominant themes in the poetry of the island. This book is recommended as a supplement to collections which have already developed holdings in modern Chinese poetry."

Choice 9:1139 N '72 160w

"[These poems] provide Western readers with a vivid panorama of the private sensibilities; anguish; passions; dreams; tenets, political or existential; and imagistic experiments of the best known among a flood of authors. Modest as Palandri is about her translations, we can accept them with some confidence since several of the poets themselves assisted her in preparing or revising her versions; also Shih, the noted Chinese critic (at the conclusion of his perceptive foreword) testifies to the translations' accuracy as 'a marvellous achievement' which 'catches the original mood and conveys it deftly in the original cadence.' Yet many of the poems tend to blur together as one turns from one poet to the next, I'd like to have seen the original Chinese poems across the page from the English versions in at least two or three instances for each poet. This book remains a milestone volume nevertheless." B. W. Fuson

Library J 97:2189 Je 15 '72 180w

PALMADE, GUY P. French capitalism in the nineteenth century; tr. with an introd. by Graeme M. Holmes. 256p $12 Barnes & Noble 330.944 France—Economic conditions. Capitalism. Entrepreneurs
ISBN 0-389-04166-1 LC 72-181632

In this study of nineteenth century French economic development, the author reviews the "backwardness of French entrepreneurs . . . [and] finds major defects both in French financial institutions and in attitudes towards business." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] an able translation of Capitalisme et capitalistes français au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle and [includes] . . . an interpretive introductory essay by the translator which synthesizes the main points of debates concerning French economic development. . . . A valuable addition to all collections in French and economic history; suitable for undergraduates as well as specialists."

Choice 9:854 S '72 220w

"This little book, originally published in 1961 [in French], had the merit of presenting a convenient summary of what was then known about French economic history, with particular reference to the entrepreneurs. The picture, though quite stylishly executed, was a rather blurred and hesitant one, for the very good reason that the detailed study of France's economic history was still only just beginning. Graeme Holmes, the translator, traces in an introduction the progress of research in the past decade and shows how the subject is a very rapidly changing one. Palmade was unable to use some very important theses which have raised the level of discussion both in precision and in scope. Mr Holmes shows that there is a need for a new general synthesis, but reveals also how difficult it will be to produce."

TLS p610 My 26 '72 300w

PALMATIER, ROBERT A. A glossary for English transformational grammar. 207p $8.95 Appleton

410 Grammar. Language and languages
SBN 390-69109-7 LC 79-187737

"The volume brings together the terminology employed in the field of generative theory during the first fourteen years of its development (1956-1969). It catalogs, defines, classifies, documents, and cross-references the technical terms in seventy-two major works on transformational grammar from this period. The works represent both 'first-generation' and 'second-generation' transformational grammar and include English-language books, monographs, and anthologies. . . . The material relates to: Grammatical theory, Syntactic theory, Semantic theory, Phonological theory, The philosophy of language, The psychology of language, Historical linguistics, Dialectology [and] The writing of grammars." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[The author] has produced the reference work that most graduate students, many teachers, and some linguists, have been waiting for. . . . The Glossary constitutes an interesting record of the recent development of current linguistic thought through the evolution of its terminology. Palmatier's selection of terms derives from some 72 sources (this corpus is provided in a bibliography), but the most extensively used are about two dozen works in Chomsky, Katz, Postal, Jacobs, Rosenbaum, and Lakoff. Glossary is extensively cross-indexed (perhaps too extensively for some tastes) to allow readers to locate related terms, and it is accompanied by a complete list of symbols. One caveat: high school English teachers may not find in the Glossary a panacea, since the selection of terms and their definitions is based solely on their technical nature and importance in transformational linguistic theory, and has little if any orientation toward pedagogical applications."

Choice 9:1115 N '72 200w

"Unfortunately, structural terms, even though much (or even solely) used by transformationalists (e.g., 'biuniqueness'), are not included. This is a much needed and quite helpful guide not only to an at times bewildering terminology, but also to an important body of work on English grammar and transformational-generative theory." W. L. Ballard

Library J 97:2377 Jl '72 100w

PALMER, ALAN. Metternich. 405p 11 maps $12.50 Harper

B or 92 Metternich—Winneburg, Clemens
Lothar Wenzel, Fürst von
SBN 06-013261-2 LC 70-190094

This is an account of the life and political career of Prince Metternich who between "the defeat of Napoleon and . . . [his] own downfall in 1848 . . . guided the fortunes of Europe. . . . Palmer shows that Metternich was not . . . a stereotyped reactionary but a . . . complex personality whose policies and decisions can only be understood by an . . . appreciation of the political and social context in which he operated." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] well-researched, sprightly life provides new insight into Metternich's kaleidoscopic character. Over a third of the book is devoted to the period before 1815, which saw Metternich emerge from a leisurely existence as a frivolous dilettante to assume a role at the heart of European affairs. . . . A balanced work which reveals both the private and public aspects of Metternich's life in the context of an age of autocratic decline, this biography becomes the standard on the subject." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:3702 N 15 '72 140w

"Will this biography create a new trend in scholarly appraisals of Metternich? It is safe to assume that it probably will not. It undertakes no major reinterpretation of Metternich's work, nor does it present any documents hitherto unpublished. What it does offer, however, is a gracefully composed narrative accompanied by a set of useful references. Palmer's writing is descriptively rich, evoking scenes and events in a way that reveals a flair for relevant detail. . . . Despite the abundance of Palmer's literary talents, there are interpretive flaws in his book." Paul Gottfried

Nat R 24:1253 N 10 '72 1300w

"Palmer seems to devote as much attention to Metternich's sexual as to his diplomatic triumphs. The index lists eight known mistresses, pretty good for a man with three wives, and also recounts occasions when French spies tailed him as he visited certain 'houses.' . . . Palmer, like most Metternich biographers, attributes his outlook to his experiences in the wake of the French Revolution, which cost him his family estates in the Rhineland. . . . Other men were moved in their youth by the idealism of the French Revolution and then alienated by its excesses. Metternich saw it with aristocratic contempt from the start." I. F. Stone

PALMER, ALAN—Continued

N Y Rev of Books 19:12 O 19 '72 1100w

"Palmer has done very creditably in research and in writing, to make something of the life. His book is skillfully constructed, so that events do not obtrude too much; it is a great improvement on [A.] Cecil's old book [Metternich BRD 1933]. Mr Palmer might have made more of the Vormarz period than he has done; but on the Napoleonic period he is very good. He is perhaps less than just to Emperor Ferdinand—is it fair to describe as 'cretinous' a man capable of saying, twenty years after his abdication: 'You didn't have to make me abdicate to lose so many battles and provinces'? Mr Palmer's book will be enjoyed for some years to come."

TLS p912 Ag 4 '72 130w

PALMER, EUSTACE. An introduction to the African novel; a critical study of twelve books by Chinua Achebe [and others]. (Stud. in African lit) 176p $8 Africana pub. corp.

809.3 African fiction—History and criticism. Authors, African

ISBN 0-8419-0112-0 LC 76-183208

"The seven authors whose works [Palmer] discusses represent both East and West Africa, both French- and English-speaking countries. . . . Their novels are analyzed . . . as works of art. . . . [The] effects of social dislocation, the individual quest for a moral center, the vicissitudes of love and pride, sterility and corruption . . . are numbered among the themes . . . realized in the African novel through, as shown here, varied forms of comedy and tragedy, picaresque adventure and symbolic fable." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"One of the few books of literary criticism on the African novel; its approach is evaluative rather than simply informational. Palmer treats novels . . . in the kind of depth that gives insight into their style, structure, and what Arnold Kettle calls 'pattern' (or moral focus and coherence). It is perhaps because many of these novels hold up rather well under this analysis that Palmer advocates using the full arsenal of Western critical methodology rather than adopting a condescending 'idolatry' towards the supposedly 'native' (or sociological) qualities of African writers. Nonetheless, the book is written without critical jargon, clearly and straightforwardly. . . . Indispensable addition to any collection of African studies and, at the same time, a real contribution to international literary criticism."

Choice 9:976 O '72 170w

"Palmer, a Sierra Leonean, looks at the [novels] freshly and clearly; he has a distinctive point of view, assesses flaws as well as merits, criticizes their critics, and stimulates further student reading and analysis." Louis Barron

Library J 97:2604 Ag '72 60w

PALMER, J. J. N. England, France, and Christendom, 1377-99. 282p il $9.50 Univ. of N.C. press

942.03 Hundred Years' War, 1339-1453. France—History—House of Valois, 1328-1589. Great Britain—History—Plantagenets, 1154-1399.

ISBN 0-8078-1189-0 LC 79-179658

The author "re-examines English foreign policy towards France in the reign of Richard II. . . . [He] establishes the existence of two opposed attitudes to the war [with France] in English government circles, the determined peace policy of the king himself and his close servants . . . and the more aggressive thinking of Gloucester and Arundel. He traces a good many of the shifts of emphasis in policy to the alternation of the two groups in power in England. . . . [Palmer also demonstrates] the crucial importance of finance in deciding the course of the war . . . [and considers] the relations between the two countries at the time. . . of the Turkish advance into Europe and the Great Schism." (Economist)

"[Palmer] believes that English policy [during this period] was far more rational, coherent, and far-sighted than previous historians have suggested, and he produces an impressive amount of evidence to support his point of view. . . . The most interesting new idea in the book is Dr Palmer's contention that from a very early stage of Richard's reign the English government was consciously trying to cut through the Gordian knot of the problem of Gascony by converting it into a perpetual fief for the cadet branch of the royal house, John of Gaunt and his heirs. There are occasions when Dr Palmer's conclusions seem a little strained, and his account of internal English politics oversimplified, but for the most part his arguments carry conviction. They are also exceedingly well-expressed, with a nice balance between narrative and analysis."

Economist 242:59 Mr 25 '72 600w

"Like the diplomacy it describes this book is an intricate complex of ideas, action, and at times confusion. . . . Anyone interested in the workings of today's international politics will find Palmer's careful analysis of 14th-Century diplomacy fascinating." K. G. Madison

Library J 97:2839 S 15 '72 200w

"[This study] is clever, clear, and gripping. In a series of concise and vigorously contentious chapters . . . [the author] seeks to explain how the two powers, after twenty years of war, came to make peace; and how they used the peace once they had made it. . . . Dr Palmer's method is that of Macaulay. He decides what is the key to a situation or series of events, formulates it, and then describes events in such a way as to show that he is right. His interpretations are short, clear and decisive. He has an eye for patterns which others have missed and an illuminating sense of the realities of power. On the other hand his vigour sometimes becomes brashness and his clarity assertiveness. . . . He is somewhat too convinced of the truth of his own arguments. . . . [But] his book is not only widely informed and well-written, it also reflects the workings of an original and stimulating mind."

TLS p850 Jl 21 '72 1000w

PALOS, STEPHAN. The Chinese art of healing [tr. by Translagency, Ltd]. 235p il $6.95 Herder & Herder

615 Medicine, Chinese. Therapeutics

LC 76-147024

The author is a Hungarian-born Buddhist monk now living in Switzerland. After a historical survey, he discusses traditional medicine, Yin and Yang, acupuncture needles and massage, moxa treatment, pharmacological treatment with herbs, respiration therapy, T'ai-chi Chuan exercises, and future developments. This book was published in Hungarian in 1963, and in German in 1966. Chronology. Bibliography. Indexes of names and subjects.

"An informative and clear account of the major traditional healing systems of China.

The emphasis is on recent scientific investigations in China and Russia. Pálos identifies distinctly those elements that are useless or based on magic, those that have been shown to have some scientific basis, and those that need further research. . . . Since work on several of these methods has been done in France and other Western locations, this subject is of more than academic interest. The book concludes with a helpful chronology . . . and a good index. It is recommended for all college, university, medical school, and large public libraries." W. K. Beatty

Library J 96:2661 S 1 '71 140w

"[This] is a work contracted for in the pre Ping-Pong era, carefully researched. Pálos has provided [modern] anatomical drawings; . . . unlike the neater charts recently brought out of China, they are explicitly masculine. . . . Perhaps the most interesting chapters are devoted to present-day practices. Through the cooperation of the Chinese Medical Society in Peking during the years when Westerners had little contact with Red China, Pálos was able to follow the rapid evolution of an ancient therapy in a Marxist society. Not surprisingly, Taoist terminology is fading fast. . . . Pálos recognizes that the way the Chinese report their cures and research findings is unsatisfactory to Occidental doctors 'although how unsatisfactory he is only partly aware, as shown by occasional naiveté on his part.'" Eileen Simpson

N Y Times Bk R p23 Ja 30 '72 1200w

PANICHAS, GEORGE A., ed. The politics of twentieth-century novelists; foreword by John W. Aldridge. 375p $13.95 Hawthorn bks.

809.3 Fiction—History and criticism

LC 75-115914

These "essays provide access to major novelists' works via their political perspectives. Eight essays are devoted to American and 8 to British novelists, and 5 are on Continental writers. The editor's introduction offers reflections on the writer and society and on the problems faced when steering a course between formalism and radicalism." (Library J)

"[The contributors] have avoided the reductive and the hysterical. There are intelligent things here by Bernard Bergonzi, Philip Thody, and Robert Alter, among others. Even the most sensitive of these essays, however, suffers in the end from a peculiar deadness of response, a quality perhaps attributable to the flattening effect of editorial inhibitions. Every discussion of an author proceeds biographically in the ABC fashion, as though the editor had set himself to compiling a reference book for reasonably bright high-school students. . . . Why too, does Mr. Panichas include essays on Steinbeck, Dos Passos, and Wells, but none on Mauriac, Mann, or Sartre?" David Bromwich

Commentary 53:93 Ap '72 1050w

"The essays make it clear that the novelists' vision of society's threat to the individual is prophetic. Thus Milton Birnbaum's study of Aldous Huxley centers on a 'search for sanity in the seemingly insane world of society.' One fact that ties these essays together is that novelists do, covertly or overtly, reveal a political stance. Some of these essays are novel-by-novel assessments; but without exception they provide good overviews." V. A. Kramer

Library J 96:1370 Ap 15 '71 160w

PANTER-BRICK S. K., ed. Nigerian politics and military rule: prelude to the Civil War; pub. for the Inst. of commonwealth studies. 276p maps $9 Oxford

320.9669 Nigeria—Politics and government
SBN 485-17613-0 LC 76-137673

These essays deal with "the political situation in Nigeria leading up to that country's . . . civil war. Among the questions that are considered are the reasons for the intensity of inter-ethnic hostility, the decision of the Yoruba leaders to support the Gowon regime, and the creation of new states. . . . Information is presented regarding the roles played by the military, the minority ethnic groups in each region, and the . . . significant political factions and personalities. The second part of the book contains reproductions or summaries of relevant documentary material." (Choice)

"The essays as well as the documentary material will be most useful to those already familiar with the history of Nigeria."

Choice 7:1578 Ja '71 130w

"The essays in this book describe the interplay between military rule and the political search for a suitable unifying formula for Nigeria. . . . The authors are all familiar with Nigeria, and these essays will provide a useful introduction to the problems that led directly to the Biafran war." W. E. Rau

Library J 95:3789 N 1 '70 110w

PANTER-DOWNES, MOLLIE. London war notes, 1939-1945; ed. by William Shawn. 378p $10 Farrar, Straus

940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Great Britain.
London—History
SBN 374-1-9022-4 LC 76-164537

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 9:425 My '72 210w

Christian Science Monitor p11 Mr 2 '72 140w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 84:731 N 17 '72 230w
TLS p1065 S 15 '72 800w

PAPANDREOU, ANDREAS G. Paternalistic capitalism. 190p $7.50 Univ. of Minn. press 330.12 Economics—History. Capitalism. Industry and state
ISBN 0-8166-0631-5 LC 79-187169

The author "draws upon radical criticisms of capitalist economic theory in order to explode what he perceives as the myth of the market mechanism in allocating resources and the so-called market economy. Instead, he argues that contemporary capitalism is monopolistic. His term 'paternalistic capitalism' is intended to imply, not a benevolent form, but an autocratic process controlled by the economic establishment in combination with those who serve in the government and government-related elements of the system." (Library J) Index.

"[This] book is extremely valuable and deserves a wide audience. . . . [It] is good enough for most professional economists to read attentively and with profit. It is also sufficiently synoptic, lucid, and reasonable for assignment to freshmen students. Of what other recent book could one say as much?" J. T. McLeod

Canadian Forum 52:24 S '72 2200w

"[The author] quotes extensively from Domhoff, C. Wright Mills, E. J. Mishan, and Harry Magdoff. The concluding pages find virtue in the Chinese experiment and propose a direct attack on economic specialization. Brief discussions of the establishment, public goods, the military-industrial complex, the ecological problem, and the multinational corporation add little to what we already know. . . . A necessary purchase only for those interested in the intellectual development of Papandreu. The man is more interesting than the book."

Choice 9:1327 D '72 180w

"[Papandreu] indicts Uncle Sam's Big Brotherism."

Christian Century 89:584 My 17 '72 10w

"[The author's] thesis ultimately suggests an alternative type of social planning oriented to a revised social order different from the Soviet form of economic paternalism. The work is stimulating, well written, and doubtless likely to engender debate among sophisticated students of economics." Paul Wasserman

Library J 97:1009 Mr 15 '72 160w

PAPANKEK, VICTOR. Design for the real world; human ecology and social change; with an introd. by R. Buckminster Fuller. 339p il $8.95 Pantheon bks.

745.2 Design, Industrial. Human engineering.
ISBN 0-394-47036-2 LC 70-154020

The "dean of the School of Design at California Institute of the Arts and consultant to UNESCO presents [the theme] . . . that the designer-planner is responsible for 'nearly all of our environmental mistakes.' [Topics include a] history of industrial design; the social and moral responsibilities of the designer; creativity versus conformity; some urgent design problems for the Third World; the designs of nature as inspirational models for the designs of man (cities to be grown like crystals, etc.); design and ecology; design education and design for survival." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"The aim of the book is praiseworthy—to tell us how badly our world is designed, and how things can be done better. Unfortunately, the book itself is so poorly designed that it begins going to pieces, intellectually, early on. By the end, nothing is left but a disorderly mess. . . . Papanek's solutions for all our problems . . . suffer from three faults: a gross overestimation of the role of the industrial designer in solving those problems; . . . an odd failure to appreciate the complexity of problems; and a disturbing failure to take human needs into account." Edward Edelson

Book World p13 Ja 23 '72 1150w

"[Papanek's] approach is Naderesque, as he presents all the gory evidence of bad design, mad design, nondesign, and pseudodesign. . . . The tone may be strident, but shrill is better than silent. Certainly the doleful statistics justify Mr. Papanek's impassioned crusade for better design. But must he neonize the facts with Marxist-Leninist rhetoric? . . . [However, his] own personal devotion to teaching, preaching and practising a new design morality, mainly to young and receptive student minds, neutralizes his frequent vitriol." G. H. Favre

Christian Science Monitor p11 F 3 '72 550w

Reviewed by Frank Getlein

Commonweal 97:116 N 3 '72 1100w

"Intriguing, disquieting, confusing, and important, but not perfect, this [is a] provocative book. . . . Papanek supplies numerous examples of products created by designers who are the tools of industry rather than the 'user advocates' he thinks they should be, and also many examples of innovative, unpatented, inexpensive objects that are the result of new ways of seeing problems and a concern for the nonideal user (the old, sick, poor, handicapped—those whose proportions and life styles are rarely considered). His book will be in demand wherever industrial design is taught, but hopefully it will find a larger audience." Jill Becker

Library J 97:1302 Ap 1 '72 180w

PAPANEK, VICTOR—Continued

"While the responsible and widely concerned reader may find his heart often beating in agreement to Papanek's theses, he just as surely finds his head questioning their applicability to the real 'real world.' It gradually devolves, alas, that Papanek's 'real world' may exist only in his own idealized dreams. . . . The strategy of using nature's forms as analogs for human designs is an old chestnut that one had supposed to have been long ago rejected as invalid, mainly because of the vastly greater complexity of natural systems compared with human. . . . The text is riddled with contradictions, errors of fact and mere absurdities. . . well larded with pseudoscientific jargon from science fiction magazines." Clive Entwistle
N Y Times Bk R p4 F 6 '72 3200w

PARISH, PEGGY. Sheet magic; games, toys and gifts from old sheets; il. by Lynn Sweat. 96p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

745.59 Handicraft—Juvenile literature
LC 78-155263

The author gives instructions for using old sheets as basic material for games such as Blind Man's Bluff, Pin the Nose on the Clown, and Target Toss; for making toys like dolls and stuffed animals; for making parachutes and flags. "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"The author of Costumes to Make [BRD 1970] has prepared another book of simple, ingenious projects. . . . She gives clear, orderly, carefully detailed instructions. . . . Illustrated with a profusion of easy-to-follow line drawings and diagrams." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 47:622 D '71 80w

"A collection of 48 varied, though not original, children's projects. . . . By using sheets in all the projects, the author stretches the point. For example. . . some of the games could be made more easily with other materials. . . . Parish further presupposes that children have some sewing experience and have at their disposal sheets, paints, crayons, needles and thread. While many of the projects could be enjoyed by primary grade children and while the black-and-white ink drawings are also designed for this age group, the text could not be read independently by most children before fourth grade. . . . However, as a source of ideas, this title would have some use for parents and teachers." M. M. Bauman

Library J 96:3462 O 15 '71 170w

Reviewed by Edward Blishen

New Statesman 83:762 Je 2 '72 60w

TLS p489 Ap 28 '72 60w

PARK, ED. The world of the otter; with text and phot. by Ed Park. 159p $5.95; lib bdg $5.82 Lippincott 599 Otters
LC 71-134931

In text and pictures, the author records the seasonal daily life of otters. "He discusses their physical characteristics, their environment, and their life cycle, as well as those aspects of their existence at which we can still only guess, including their gestation period and their eating habits." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book follows in the tradition of high quality expected of [The Living World] series. . . . Although the book was written for the interested layman, the author seems to have surveyed the professional literature and summarizes it quite adequately, particularly that related to food habits. He demonstrates firsthand knowledge of the behavior of otter, but too often describes their behavior in human terms, particularly with reference to their play activities."

Choice 8:1472 Ja '72 190w

"Extensive firsthand observations of otters in their natural habitat over a period of years distinguish this book. . . . The author compares his findings about their environment, feeding habits, breeding, family life, swimming ability and playfulness with those of other naturalists who have studied this animal and concludes with a plea for the protection of wildlife. Although sometimes loosely organized and repetitively written, the text is well illustrated with many clear, black-and-white photographs, and a lengthy bibliography containing many entries from specialized periodicals completes the thorough coverage." Margaret Bush

Library J 97:283 Ja 15 '72 120w [YA]

PARKER, BEULAH. A mingled yarn; chronicle of a troubled family. 333p $7.95 Yale Univ. press

616.8 Mental illness. Domestic relations
ISBN 0-300-01568-2 LC 72-75206

Parker "interviews Amy Carpenter (pseudonym) about the history of her family's mental health—a family that traces itself back to Deacon Thomas Carpenter arriving on New England shores in 1635 and ending up its line with the narrator, Amy." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by C. W. McCue

America 127:503 D 9 '72 180w

"[This book] is . . . limited by its restricted Freudian interpretation, the analytical approach that sees childhood and past occurrences as determining present and future behavior. . . . [In] Parker's periodic analysis of the events, the focus becomes the past personality formation as opposed to the 'now' situations. Her assumption is that the childhood events and the adolescent years are relevant and causative to Eliot's suicide at thirty-seven and Virginia's psychosomatic death in her early forties. The personality weaknesses of the parents, related in depth, are, however, contradicted by their happy life in old age and peaceful, well-ordered deaths. Even the narrator admits they were a puzzle. . . . While academically interesting, the story lacks . . . a personal involvement with the characters. . . . [It should] attract those motivated to read a family case history." Jeanne Kinney

Best Sell 32:380 N 15 '72 500w

"Parker follows the life story of [the Carpenter family] . . . demonstrating not why but how schizophrenia was produced in one of the children. The chief aim is to convey the 'emotional overtones' and events which led up to this tragic illness rather than to offer psychoanalytic interpretations of occurrences. A highly revelatory and emotional experience is in store for both lay and professional readers who ponder this story." B. J. Kalisch

Library J 97:3720 N 15 '72 140w

"What a story! This admirable book, a study of the social genesis of madness, manages to combine the facts of a case-history and the atmosphere of a fairy tale, a bad fairy tale of chilling deterioration and disaster. . . . [Amy's] conversations with Dr. Parker, which took place over a period of months, are documented by letters, diaries, memoirs of other relatives, family records, and 'innumerable newspaper clippings' having to do with the lengthy, hydra-headed legal case (one is reminded of 'Bleak House') that engulfed her father, Eliot Sr., just as he reached the threshold of great material success." Elizabeth Janeway

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 8 '72 1250w

"[This account] is filled with the kind of novelistic details that make compelling reading, accented always by the sense of doom hindsight affords. But in the end, inevitably, we are still in the dark. The mother's fantasy-orientation, the father's business drive, the familiar gap in communications—none of these, either individually or cumulatively, really explains why this particular family, and not others, met with such disaster. But the authors have not proposed to deliver answers. They have provided, instead, a highly readable enigma, with many clues and a multitude of questions."

Sat R 55:98 N 18 '72 190w

PARKER, FRANKLIN, ed. American dissertations on foreign education; a bibliography with abstracts; v 1, Canada. 175p $9.50 Whitston pub. co.

016.37 Education—Bibliography. Education—Canada—Bibliography. Dissertations, Academic
ISBN 0-87875-013-4 LC 73-155724

This work, the first in a projected series, contains a "list of 171 Ph.D and Ed.D. dissertations, providing in all cases authors' names, full title, institution and year of 'publication' and in about one-third the verbatim description from Dissertation abstracts." (Choice) Index.

"Though most items are already listed in the standard bibliographies of Canadian education, this [list is] useful. . . . Authors are listed chronologically and there is an excellent subject index with over 100 entries. . . . An appendix providing a brief description of the Canadian educational system and the names (but not the addresses) of the major national educational organizations will be helpful to non-Canadian readers."

Choice 9:628 J1/Ag '72 100w

"To the extent that this slim volume will save time, it may be of some use to specialists."

J E. Kephart

Library J 97:2076 Je 1 '72 130w

PARKER, FRANKLIN. George Peabody; a biography; foreword by Merle Curti. 233p $8.95 Vanderbilt univ. press

B or 92 Peabody, George

SBN 8265-1170-8 LC 79-157741

"Beginning with a brief sketch of Peabody's ancestry and his Danvers, Massachusetts, boyhood, the author . . . discusses Peabody's several business partnerships in Georgetown, Baltimore, and London and then turns to a narrative catalog of the man's several charitable bequests." (Va Q R) Bibliography. Index.

"Probably no 19th-century American philanthropist had [Peabody's] impact and therein lies the value of this study. . . . Recommended for all libraries, especially those with collections in social history."

Choice 9:276 Ap '72 160w

"While Mr Parker has faithfully chronicled the biographic facts he does less than justice to the subject. Those remarkable benefactions (100 years after his death Peabody housing is still going up in London) are thinly set in the context of the age of improvement. The business activities that sustained them and which survive in the house of Morgan, Grenfell are not related to the great growth of Anglo-American capitalism of which they were a significant part. Above all, it is left to the reader to explore by guess and imagination the Dickensian undercurrents and the Jamesian ambiguities of a character as complex as he was considerable."

Economist 242:53 F 19 '72 460w

Reviewed by R. W. Hidy

J Am Hist 59:447 S '72 400w

"[This] is a house biography. Parker serves chiefly as an agent of Peabody's immortality, one of the returns on his philanthropic investments. [He] portrays Peabody as he would wish to be portrayed, not as we would do well to understand him. The account is wholly unanalytical and uncritical." Robert Merideth

New Eng Q 45:302 Je '72 850w

"It was hoped that this new work would prove to be something more than a laudatory narration of Peabody's philanthropies. With the outlines of Peabody's life available elsewhere, it would seem that a new biography provided an opportunity for a systematic exploration of nineteenth-century American and British philanthropy. Such was obviously not the intent of this book. . . . Although flashes of critical commentary occur, and although the work shows evidence of sound scholarship, there seems throughout an effort directed more to enhancing Peabody's reputation (a reputation that is sufficiently established elsewhere) than to scholarly evaluation and inquiry."

Va Q R 48:lviii spring '72 170w

PARKER, GARLAND G. The enrollment explosion; a half-century of attendance in U.S. colleges and universities. 163p $5.95 School & Society bks.

378.1 Colleges and universities—U.S.

LC 70-136018

This is "a decade-by-decade review of enrollment data from 1920 to 1970. Each of these sections is prefaced by a review of the economic, political, and social developments of the decade that brings out relationships between the data and the historical scene. . . . [The study is also] concerned with the history and methodology of the annual reports on collegiate enrollments which have been appearing in School & Society for some 50 years." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The statistics of attendance in American universities and colleges, 1969-70, form a valuable appendix. As such, the volume is a necessary acquisition for all academic libraries, and lends itself to wide use in both graduate and undergraduate instruction."

Choice 8:812 S '71 160w

"The bibliography inconveniently omits items in the footnotes. Parker, who has been responsible for preparation of the reports in School & Society since 1960, has provided a descriptive and analytic overview." F. L. Cinquemani

Library J 96:2309 Jl '71 200w

PARKER, RICHARD. The myth of the middle class; notes on affluence and equality; foreword by G. William Domhoff. 233p $7.95 Live-right

330.973 Middle classes. U.S.—Economic conditions

ISBN 0-87140-539-3 LC 76-167291

"Parker's targets are the historical myth of America as a homogenous middle class nation and the more recent pictures of America as the affluent society and domain of the organization man. He posits that today's middle class is far from universal affluence, and that the lower middle class suffers from economic inequality along with the poor. He shows that both poverty and wealth have remained prominent and permanent features of American life, and that economic tools of growth and redistribution by taxation have been inadequate (and government programs futile) in changing the situation." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 32:380 N 15 '72 330w

"A timely analysis of economic inequality in America. . . . While [Parker] offers no solution he effectively defines the problem and points up the need for a more egalitarian nation. He bases his arguments on economic and sociological material familiar to the general reader and presents economic theories and statistics in a non-technical manner." Elin Christianson

Library J 97:2388 Jl '72 150w

"Parker holds John Kenneth Galbraith responsible in considerable measure for propagating, if not inventing, the myth that material wellbeing is widely distributed in the United States. He contends that the principal consequence of Galbraith's The Affluent Society [BRD 1958], was to divert the nation from what should be its foremost goal—the achievement of economic equality. . . . Parker's book represents a passionate effort to bring the disturbing facts of gross inequality to our attention."

New Repub 167:30 O 28 '72 450w

PARKES, JAMES. Whose land? a history of the peoples of Palestine. 333p maps $10 Taplinger

956.94 Palestine—History

ISBN 0-8008-8260-1 LC 70-148829

This volume brings up to date A history of Palestine from 135 A.D. to modern times, published in 1949. "It narrates the history of Israel's conquerors and populations—Canaanites, Hebrews, Romans, Byzantines, Arabs, Crusaders, Turks, and Zionists, all of whom have left their mark." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Comprehensive and very readable history of Palestine from antiquity to the present. [A] useful revision. . . . it reaffirms Parkes' long-established position as a dispassionate and careful Anglican scholar very sympathetic to the Jewish people and the Zionist cause. . . . Its chief value is for the undergraduate and the general reader."

Choice 9:125 Mr '72 100w

"In this slight revision of [the earlier book] . . . the author has deleted some material on the British and French promises to the Arabs during and after World War I and from the sections on the British mandatory administration; he has added material on post-1948 events, particularly with regard to the post-1967 situation." R. R. Harris

Library J 96:3595 N 1 '71 50w

PARKINSON, ROGER. Peace for our time: Munich to Dunkirk—the inside story. 411p maps $7.95 McKay

940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Diplomatic history. World War, 1939-1945—Great Britain. Great Britain—Foreign relations

LC 71-188018

This "account of the conduct of British defense policy from . . . September, 1938, to May 1940, [is] based on recently declassified top secret minutes of the British Cabinet and other [sources]." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 32:122 Je 1 '72 600w

"A narrative of British foreign policy . . . which falls somewhere between the better journalistic accounts and formal academic history. . . . For those who wish to read the story of these years in clear and well balanced narrative, this book should be rewarding."

PARKINSON, ROGER—Continued

Choice 9:870 S '72 140w

"The book dispels some misleading and often romantic ideas about the events leading to World War II. Essential for students of history and political science, and recommended for academic and public libraries." I. L. Kaldor

Library J 97:3312 O 15 '72 200w

"[The author of this impressive work] loses no opportunity of including colourful detail. But every detail . . . rests on a firm foundation of evidence. Mr Parkinson's researches yield a good deal of incidental material . . . not only from private records . . . but also from the official documents themselves. At some periods the gleanings from the latter are pretty slight. . . . Parkinson would not claim to have written a definitive version but he has made a quick and sure-footed foray into the new material. There are a few signs of hasty composition, but as a whole his work will not suffer by comparison with any of [his] predecessors'. . . . [He] shows himself better qualified than many of them to judge the weakness as well as the strength of Churchill, and the strength as well as the weakness of Chamberlain."

TLS p84 Ja 28 '72 2300w

PARMET, HERBERT S. Eisenhower and the American crusades. 660p il $12.95 Macmillan (N Y)

973.921 Eisenhower, Dwight David, President U.S. U.S. Politics and government—1953-1961

LC 73-189680

This volume offers an "assessment of the administration of the United States government during the . . . 1950s. It follows the career of General Dwight D. Eisenhower from the spring of 1952—when he decided to leave his NATO command to campaign for the presidency—to his retirement at Gettysburg nearly nine years later." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This excellently researched work is the most definitive book on the Eisenhower Presidency to appear so far. One may agree or disagree with some of the author's interpretations but I strongly recommend that it be placed on everyone's reading list." B. D. Williams

Best Sell 32:380 N 15 '72 650w

Christian Century 89:1078 O 25 '72 50w

"This thoroughly researched and well-written book is political history at its best. Parmet has written an integrated, chronological synthesis of Eisenhower's major political decisions, both overt and implicit, as they relate to the issues and personalities of the 1950's. The book is based on Presidential papers, oral history projects, private and public papers on the President's advisers and members of his cabinet, diverse journalistic accounts, and many personal interviews. This is Ike's political story as it evolves out of the milieu of the cold war. . . . Parmet's Eisenhower emerges as an intuitively pragmatic President of the conservative middle road who . . . was ultimately his own man. . . . An important book for any student of post-World War II history." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:2393 J1 '72 160w

"[Ike] was the last person the journalist of his day would blame for his successes. . . . [Nevertheless, the book is full of] hints and glimpses, none leaned on too heavily; the author's file cards simply compile instances. . . . We hear how Ike managed the news, especially that reaching the farmers. The section on his heart attack corrects [R.M.] Nixon's account of his own modesty in 'Six Crises' [BRD 1962]. . . . We know, now, that he did contrive, more than his contemporaries thought; but always without seeming to. . . . [Parmet] has an insecure grasp upon grammar and metaphor; but not upon evidence or fact, which he never forces. His record is overfull and indiscriminating, which grants it a persuasive kind of innocence." Garry Willis

N Y Times Bk R p3 O 22 '72 1650w

PARNALL, PETER. The mountain: written and il. by Peter Parnall. unsp $3.95 Doubleday

333.7 Nature conservation—Juvenile literature. Pollution—Juvenile literature. Natural resources—U.S.—Juvenile literature

LC 72-145751

This book "tells of a mountain in the West on which flowers grow and animals live. It is a beautiful place which some people want to preserve, so the mountain is made into a national park. But then trees are cut down, roads are built, tourists flock, etc. Reifuse grows, but the flowers don't and the animals can't. . . . Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"[This is a] picture book on the ecology theme. . . . The rhythmic flow of the text in the style of a folk song with a repetitive refrain makes this a good book for reading aloud, and the expressive pen-and-ink drawings tell the story in and of themselves. However, slightly older children would do better with Margaret Gabel's more informative Sparrows Don't Drop Candy Wrappers [BRD 1971]." M. A. Brown

Library J 97:1600 Ap 15 '72 100w

"[This book] is a pleasure to look at. Judging from this picture biography of a mountain, it is no surprise that the author has won prizes in graphic arts. Here he makes a single smashing point with a minimum of words. . . . There is no wordy explanation or exhortation and no solution—which shows Parnall's respect for the minds of his readers and is evidence that he is neither a cynic nor a believer in miracles." Paul Shepard

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 2 '72 100w

"The last page shows a heap of rubbish, with one straggling stem poking up, and the caption: 'This is a flower . . . trying to grow on the mountain that stood in the West.' Message delivered." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:48 S 18 '71 110w

PARRA, NICANOR. Emergency poems; tr. by Miller Williams. 154p $8.75 New directions

861

LC 71-181896

Many of these poems "are drawn from the author's Obra Gruesa for which he received the 1969 Premio Nacional de Literatura (National Literary Prize)." (Library J)

"The splendid translation of this bilingual collection can scarcely transform a group of commonplace verse vignettes into anything more arresting than the original which so resembles run-of-the-mill outpourings from the presses in most languages today. Humor is found in some selections such as the W. C. Fields sort of sentiment about children, though its appeal recedes with a subsequent reading. This volume is perhaps needed by those wanting a writer's complete output."

Choice 9:821 S '72 120w

"This Chilean poet belongs to no school, but he is among those artists who make some critics fume that nothing is sacred anymore. . . . If the Cross is a frequent subject herein, it is never treated with religious awe; rather, the poet parries with the reverent and reduces the sacred to the profane à la Boccaccio. Similarly, if death is to be a way of life, Parra cannot contain his mocking outrage. He is not about to take Chilean politics seriously either. For him, being a Catholic or a Communist is only a matter of semantics. Parra is a ribald moralist, and it's good to have more of his poems in English versions that are as vigorous and lusty as the originals." Robert Lima

Library J 97:2404 J1 '72 200w

"Parra can write stark and beautiful poetry. He seems to be performing, on Spanish, somewhat the same operation that was earlier done on the English language by writers like Williams and Hemingway, trimming away the excess accumulations of 'literary tradition,' in order to re-establish the intimate connection of sounds and things. At the same time, Parra is, simply, another possible mode of consciousness in Latin American verse. . . . [He] is not a 'revolutionary' writer, at least in the inspirational sense. His poetry is often weary and sarcastic, filled with gloomy wisdom. In fact, the sarcasm is often too easy." D. H. Rosenthal

Nation 215:91 Ag 7 '72 600w

"There has always been a Villon, a Goliard Poet, a Brecht, a Catullus, a Corbière or a Parra to take poetry back out into the streets and crack our heads with it. The weapons? Irony, burlesque, an astringent barrage of clichés and found phrases, all juxtaposed in a welter of dictions that come out in a wholly original way, laying open everybody's despair. . . . It is an extraordinary experience reading these pieces, and I can't imagine anyone even vaguely interested in new poetry that won't devour 'Emergency Poems.' After reading a few aloud, you'll have the inevitable reaction:

'Is it poetry?' or, even better, 'It isn't poetry.' Just so, it is anti-poetry. . . . But make no mistake: Nicanor Parra is a poet (or an anti-poet or whatever) of total command and total grandeur." Alexander Coleman

N Y Times Bk R p40 My 7 '72 600w

PARRIS, GUICHARD. Blacks in the city; a history of the National Urban League, by Guichard Parris and Lester Brooks. 534p il $12.50 Little

301.45 National Urban League. Negroes—Social conditions
LC 76-161866

"The Urban League was created to improve the condition of the American blacks [in the cities to which they migrated. This chronicle was] written by authors who have spent much of their life in the organization and who have made . . . use of its files." (Choice)

"To read this work is to come away with a deepened respect for the League and a better understanding of contemporary America. . . . In telling this story . . . the authors touch upon many of the major black institutions, including the church and the press. To such subtopics they bring a characteristic perception combined with an absence of polemics. Dedicated to the memory of Whitney J. Young Jr., who died unexpectedly in 1971, after an innovative, ten-year career as head of the League, this book is a tribute worthy of the man." Benjamin Quarles

Ann Am Acad 402:166 J1 '72 400w

"Though this book claims to be neither the definitive study nor the authorized history of the Urban League, it approaches being both. It is a detailed chronicle . . . with a short bibliographical essay and an adequate index. [It] will be a basic reference for this facet of black and urban history. It is a well written book that should be on the shelves of all urban and college libraries and will be a wise purchase for any library in which study of 20th-century America is to be undertaken."

Choice 9:276 Ap '72 130w

"Since the authors have disclaimed making an attempt at a definitive history of the National Urban League but merely intend their work as an interim exposition, it is perhaps unfair to emphasize the lack of unifying and interpretive themes. The book is useful for what it is meant to be, an introduction to the problems of blacks in urban America and what one organization has attempted to do about them. One must also keep in mind the authors' desire to have their work serve as a 'counter [to] the tendency in some quarters to misconstrue the Urban League's efforts and denigrate or ignore its accomplishments.' But one hopes that the work will stimulate scholars to explore further some of the fundamental problems raised by the authors." C. F. Kellogg

J Am Hist 59:750 D '72 950w

"[This] account is long, detailed, and often dull. Many sections consist of dry summaries of memos, position papers, and the flotsam and jetsam of bureaucratic writing. Still, there is a good deal that is worthwhile in [the book] and it is replete with invaluable details concerning the immense task of raising funds to carry on employment and housing campaigns. . . . Parris and Brooks pull no punches in their graphic description of the vicious infighting that plagued the League through many years of its history as strong-minded men sought to direct the League's efforts against equally strong opposition. The recent history of the League is rather hastily sketched." Norman Lederer

Library J 97:681 F 15 '72 200w

PARRIS, JUDITH H. The convention problem; issues in reform of presidential nominating procedures. (Studies in presidential selection) 194p $5.95; pa $2.95 Brookings

324 Political conventions. Presidents—U.S.—Nomination. Presidents—U.S.—Elections
ISBN 0-8157-6928-8; 0-8157-6927-X (pa)
LC 72-143

"The analysis in this book deals with critical issues in the reform of the presidential nominating convention: apportionment, delegate selection, convention management, platform writing, and the role of the media. The issues are examined against a background question that asks to what extent a political convention can be termed 'fair' and 'democratic.' The era of the nationally televised convention . . . is the focus of attention." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

"[This work] reflects the usual thoroughness, objectivity and scholarship expected of any Brookings study. . . . Since [it] was made at the time when the Democratic Party had been introducing some basic reforms for its 1972 convention, the Democrats have gotten more space. In all fairness, however, the Republican procedures have been scrutinized too, and where its arrangements appear superior (e.g., size), credit is duly assigned. The study is thorough when treating specific steps in the nominating process. . . . Curiously, a chapter on 'Writing the Platform' gets more pages than the one on 'Selecting the Delegates.'" P. G. Steinbicker

America 127:16 J1 '72 260w

"[The author's] view and perspective is primarily from a Democratic viewpoint, primarily because 'this book was written during a time when the Democrats were making more fundamental changes in their convention.' As every politically attuned reader knows, these changes are still ongoing; hence, Parris' work will by no means present the final word. . . . Not recommended."

Choice 9:1205 N '72 190w

"The level of analysis eschews both the highly theoretical and the merely popular. One of the work's strong points is its discussion of the implications of reforms already accomplished in the Democratic party; it also presents a program of suggested further reform for both parties which features a restructured convention as opposed to a national primary system. In the book's issue orientation, the unique spirit of the convention process is deemphasized to the point of obliteration. . . . This work will be a valuable and timely addition to most libraries." F. W. Summers

Library J 97:2739 S 1 '72 150w

PARRISH, JOHN A. 12, 20 & 5; a doctor's year in Vietnam. 348p $7.95 Dutton

959.704 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961—Personal narratives
ISBN 0-525-22455 LC 70-189473

The author writes of "his year of service (1966) as a doctor with the Marines in Vietnam. He spent most of the year sorting out the Medevac helicopter loads of recently killed and wounded men from the field. The title refers to the corpsman's litany, '12 litter-borne wounded, 20 ambulatory wounded and 5 dead.'" (Library J)

"The intensity of terrible and filthy action in front-line hospital work seems to be exaggerated beyond the ordinary needs of description by a working doctor and leads the reader to suspect a pacifist intent. On two occasions sexual enterprise and achievement are described in almost clinical—if the word 'pornographic' be not more suitable—detail."

The book is unreservedly not recommended; I don't want it in my house and hesitate to give it away to any library. That the book is autobiographical is no excuse for its objectionable detail." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 32:140 Je 15 '72 260w

"Parrish displays compassion, skilled professionalism, and buoyant humor. . . . [He] writes unblenchingly of blood, gore, filth, missing limbs, and spilled organs. But his book is also an autobiographical M*A*S*H* with uproarious scenes of military highjinks, drinking, comradeship, and sex in Saigon and Bangkok. For an author's first book to be this well written, this full of life in the midst of death and of joy in the midst of war, is phenomenal." Colin Clark

Library J 97:2386 J1 '72 160w

N Y Times Bk R p20 J1 30 '72 80w

PARRY, BENITA. Delusions and discoveries; studies on India in the British imagination, 1880-1930. 368p $12.50 Univ of Calif. press

S23 English fiction—History and criticism. British in India.
ISBN 0-520-02215-7 LC 70-186786

"This study is an attempt to understand something of the interior British experience of India in a period which covers the age of imperial confidence and the setting in of disenchantment. . . . [The approach chosen] is to consider how writers reordered their ideas and perceptions in fiction. The emphasis is on what they saw or discovered in and through

PARRY, BENITA—Continued

India, on how they reacted to the new demands for understanding which India made on their imaginations and intellects." (Intro) There is an outline of the British connexion with India from about 1880-1930, followed by a chapter each on The Romancers: Five Lady Novelists; Flora Annie Steel; Edmund Candler; Edward Thompson; Rudyard Kipling and E. M. Forster. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[Kipling emerges from] Parry's book as one of the few writers on Anglo-India who really portrayed India with compassion, which removes his Indian writing beyond the compass of imperial ideology. The other author who for her is the supreme example of an encounter with Indian civilisation is E. M. Forster. She makes an illuminating analysis of 'A Passage to India' [BRD 1924]. . . . The other authors who receive consideration by contrast saw India as a frieze rather than as a spirit. . . . [This] is a scholarly work . . . but, even so, it should appeal to the general reader."

Economist 243:suppl 13 Ap 8 '72 200w

"In a work of impeccable scholarship, Parry delves deeply into the works of Kipling, Forster, and lesser literary figures to show the vast chasm—characterized by self-righteous moral rectitude, ingrained convictions of cultural superiority, and sheer racism—which separated Englishman and Indian. The result was that popular fiction gave the British reading public a distorted image of India. This work ranks alongside Alan Sandison's The Wheel of Empire [BRD 1968] as a model study of the literary aspects of Britain's imperial endeavor."

J. A. Casada

Library J 97:3160 O 1 '72 120w

PARRY, J. H. Trade and dominion: the European overseas empires in the eighteenth century. 408p il $15 Praeger

325 Colonies—History. Commerce
LC 76-100940

The author "sketches the development of the empires, explains how European society was able to exert such commercial and political influence outside its own territorial boundaries, and then suggests the significance of these contacts." (Choice)

"The general approach is analytical and perhaps will be best appreciated by those with some general knowledge of the period and events."

Choice 9:114 Mr '72 150w

"[Parry] shows himself to be equally at home with the British, the French, the Portuguese, the Dutch and the Spanish. The pattern of the relationship between trade and dominion in the history of these countries emerges somewhat slowly, from a solid mass of detail, to show a progression from the freelance operations of pirates and privateers in the seventeenth century toward the more official intervention overseas by national governments through their navies. . . . The author has a prodigious amount of technical knowledge of eighteenth century ships and the men who sailed in them. . . . There are 64 pages of plates, welcome leaven to most readers of a book as densely packed with facts as this one is. But they are of varying degrees of interest. . . . Those interested in cartography, however, are well served with maps and charts and plans of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries."

Economist 240:61 J1 10 '71 470w

"[The author] disposes his composition skillfully about the presence of the sea: as trade route, as battlefield, but particularly as the open road by which the peoples of Western Europe travelled towards the dominion of the world. The book is deadened by its paragraphing—often only one long, tight paragraph to a page—which scarcely makes for compulsive reading. Otherwise it could hardly be better done. Half story, half textbook, it is graced with moments of personal observation, brought to life by felicitous examples, and magnificently illustrated."

TLS p1144 S 24 '71 420w

PARTLOW, ROBERT B., ed. Dickens the craftsman. See Dickens the craftsman

PARTRIDGE, P. H. Consent and consensus. 165p $5 Praeger

320.1 Political science
LC 75-95685

"It is with the great industrialized societies [of modern times that this book] is chiefly concerned. Throughout, it explores the possible relevant meanings of consent within such societies, as well as the different forms it may take. Within this context, it examines the principle that governments should rest on the consent of the governed. [Partridge] traces relationships between the idea of 'consent' and the more technical and more recent concept of 'consensus.' . . . [He] explores the elements of consensus in modern societies and examines current theories about the relationship among consensus, social stability, and political democracy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Partridge offers a stimulating survey of the continuum from consensus to consent in theoretical and sociological literature. The book also examines the relationship of consent to democracy and totalitarianism. There is an occasional lapse as in the treatment of 'violently disaffected,' 'ethnic and cultural minorities' in the U.S. On the whole the book is well written, systematic, relevant, and quite suitable for undergraduate reading."

Choice 9:281 Ap '72 90w

"Modern usage of the term [consent] is so vague as to enable it to be employed to justify almost any regime. For this reason alone the concept of consent is ripe for closer philosophical scrutiny. If . . . consent is to remain as a useful tool of comparative political analysis, then we have to show that a relationship exists in democratic regimes between the governed and the government that is absent elsewhere. P. H. Partridge accomplishes this with clarity and skill."

TLS p1503 D 3 '71 280w

PASTORE, NICHOLAS JAMES. Selective history of theories of visual perception, 1650-1950. 464p il $10 Oxford

153.7 Perception. Vision
LC 75-129638

Following his examination of the views of Descartes, Malebranche, Locke, Berkeley, Condillac, and Helmholtz, Dr. Pastore presents "shorter accounts of the views of Reid, Hamilton, Müller, Mill, Bain and Lotze. . . . William James, here styled the 'Hamlet' of perceptual theorists (on account of his dilemma regarding the perception of space) is next examined and a general evaluation follows. . . . [There is also an] exposition of the Gestalt theory, including a number of demonstrations . . . of Gestalt factors in visual perception. . . . [The] book ends with brief discussions of two lines of perceptual theory, one . . . ('Connectionism') and the other ('Transactionalism')." (TLS)

"Pastore provides an extremely useful critical introduction to three centuries of observation and thinking about visual perception, especially the question whether our perception of depth, solidity, and distance has to be learned through touching, grasping, reaching—muscular exploration in general—or comes as an immediate visual datum, as immediate as two-dimensional shape." D. W. Harding

N Y Rev of Books 16:39 Ap 22 '71 500w

"The straw man of 'traditional empiricism,' erected by Gestalt theory in order to bring about its downfall, evidently challenged Dr Pastore, who has made it his business to ascertain just what 'traditional empiricism' in psychology really was and how it handled its problems. This book is the result. . . . [It] will be of special value to students of the history and philosophy of science. It should also be read, with the greatest care and attention, by experimental psychologists working in the field of visual perception and others interested in the general relations between philosophy and psychology. Although the author has organized his book a little oddly, reflecting perhaps changing purposes during its conceptions and composition, it is a work of undoubted scholarship which should attract exceptional interest."

TLS p1543 D 10 '71 700w

PATAI, RAPHAEL, ed. Encyclopedia of Zionism and Israel. 2v il maps col maps $39.50
Herzl press; McGraw

956.94 Israel—Encyclopedias. Zionism—Encyclopedias
ISBN 0-07-079635-1 LC 68-55271

"With the exception of one general survey article covering the total history of Israel from prehistoric times to the present, the encyclopedia limits its coverage to modern Israel and does not go back historically beyond the second half of the nineteenth century. . . . Within this general framework three major types of articles are combined in a single alphabetical arrangement throughout the encyclopedia: places in Israel, biographies, and topical subjects. . . . [The two main areas of interest covered by the 3,000 signed articles by 285 contributors are:] (1) Zionism—its history, ideology, institutions, movements, and organizations throughout the world; and (2) Israel—social, cultural, economic, religious, political, and agricultural background, along with descriptive material about daily life in the Jewish state (clothing, ethnic groups, family life, food, customs, manners, and population). . . . Bibliography." (Booklist)

"In general [the contributors] are qualified by background and experience to write on the subjects for which they are responsible. . . . Although the work is scholarly in tone, most of the articles appeal to and are within the comprehension of a variety of readers who are seriously interested in the subject. . . . The encyclopedia's usefulness is regrettably limited by the lack of an index. . . . This shortcoming is, however, considerably offset by extensive cross-references. . . . Most of the illustrations would be extremely difficult to find elsewhere, and they assuredly are not in any other single published source. . . . Given the limitations of its approach, the encyclopedia is recommended as a reference work for medium and large size public and academic libraries, and for smaller libraries, including those in high schools, where there is an active community interest in modern Israel and Zionism."

Booklist 68:913 J1 1 '72 1000w

"Users are cautioned that this is a Zionist-Israeli project, which results in a selective, too often bowdlerized version of history. This is particularly noticeable in the various articles on the Arabs; Britain (the Balfour Declaration, the White Paper, etc.) . . . and relations with the U.S. . . . Too few of the writers eschew making value judgments, using loaded objectives, or making statements and interpretations which the facts do not support. Yet, whatever its faults, some of which are inevitable in any such work, it is essential for larger reference and special collections, if only for the reason that nothing better exists." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 96:3594 N 1 '71 230w

PATAI, RAPHAEL. Myth and modern man. 359p $9.95 Prentice-Hall

301.2 Mythology
ISBN 0-13-609123-7 LC 70-163399

The author defines "'myths' as 'dramatic stories that form a sacred charter.' He traces their development in early civilizations and discusses the ways in which myth is culturally operative, including a brief treatment of the milestones in mythopoetic theory. He then deals with mythic survivals and the myth-making process in 'modern' society . . . including such phenomena as radical movements and the anti-hero Marxist and Nazi ideologies, the 'God is dead' theology, Madison Avenue and the world of television, Mickey Mouse, and the new 'credo' of space and science fiction." (Library J)

"As the work unfolds, the original definition of myth becomes increasingly distorted. It is no longer 'sacred,' it need not be a 'charter,' and one wonders whether myth hasn't come to mean any dramatic event, fiction or not, which captures the imagination, for a variety of reasons, of modern man. However, whether or not one accepts Patai's arguments, the synthesis is interesting." JoAnn Suleiman

Library J 97:1340 Ap 1 '72 150w

"Patai, who has a keen sense for analogies and parallels, . . . draws upon a vast knowledge of mythology, and he has a sensitive eye and ear for the deeper meanings of the subliminal and apparently trivial items of contemporary life. . . . Patai's work raises many interesting questions about the psychological sources of this contemporary myth making. Why have the new myths taken the form that we find—e.g., the rabbit as Playboy? What happens when the myths are lost or when conflicting mythologies arise? Patai is silent or unsatisfactory on these points. . . . [He] should elaborate on why the young have turned to Che Guevara and to the fictitious Marion Delgado (of Weatherman fame) for their heroes. An effort by him to explain the role and function of these contemporary myths would seem more urgent than his merely showing the all-pervasiveness of myth in the commonplace." Emmett Wilson

Sat R 55:68 Je 24 '72 250w

PATAI, RAPHAEL. Tents of Jacob: the Diaspora, yesterday and today. 464p il $11.95 Prentice-Hall

909.09 Jews—History. Jews—Civilization
ISBN 0-13-903476-5 LC 72-139957

This "study of Jewish life outside the land of Israel . . . focuses on the history, customs and culture of the Jews of the Diaspora in the many areas. The first section . . . [considers] the three major divisions of the Diaspora—the Oriental, Sephardic, and Ashkenazic—along with discussions of such . . . topics as the meaning of 'Exile' and 'Diaspora,' the question of whether Jews constitute a race, the demography and urbanization of the Jews, and their languages and customs. The . . . second section is devoted to a . . . consideration of the history, culture, and problems of the many components of the Diaspora." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The author] provides a comprehensive and lucid, if not very profound, account of the phenomenon of the Jewish diaspora. . . . The historical chapters are superficial and full of questionable statements, but the materials on diaspora in modern Jewish thought, race . . . and so on supply good brief statements. . . . The work meets a considerable need, and, within limitations, belongs in undergraduate collections for . . . [ethnic] studies."

Choice 8:1484 Ja '72 110w

"A novel, multidisciplinary approach. . . . Despite an occasional error or infelicity, the book is stunning in the breadth of its comprehension and is a welcome contribution to Jewish studies." M. A. Cohen

Library J 96:2769 S 15 '71 190w

"The Zionist anthropologist Raphael Patai [has written] a new, insightful, and far-ranging volume. . . . As a Zionist, Patai seems hardly overjoyed at the persistence of Diaspora in the development of the modern Jew. . . . [He] is undeservedly harsh with the Reform movement, whose post-1948 embrace of Israel and Zionism he all but ignores. . . . Another weakness of the book is the superficiality of the author's descriptions of Jewish cultures in individual countries. Its great strength is his ability insightfully to extrapolate common trends and themes from these cultures. From his description of Jewish languages, . . . one can make a case for the barely perceptible beginnings of a Judeo-English. . . . Patai thus helps us begin the task of discovering what makes us Diasporans tick." R. N. Levy

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 9 '72 650w

PATER, ALAN, ed. What they said in 1970: the yearbook of spoken opinion; comp. and ed. by Alan F. Pater and Jason R. Pater. 608p $17.50 Monitor bk. co.

081 Quotations
ISBN 0-9600252-3-5 LC 74-11080

This "is the second volume in a projected annual series of yearbooks of contemporary quotations. . . . [The editors' purpose] is to resurrect 'from almost certain oblivion those quintessential elements of the year's spoken opinion which, in their judgment, demanded preservation in book form.' . . . The quotations [are grouped] into 'Part One: National Affairs,' 'Part Two: International Affairs,' and 'Part Three: General.' . . . Within each category the speakers' names are in alphabetical order; two or more entries in one category by one speaker are arranged chronologically. Each speaker is identified by the rank, position, occupation, etc., in effect as the time the statement was made. . . . Fifteen hundred fifty-seven speakers are quoted. . . . Index to Speakers. Index to Subjects." (Booklist) For the first volume see BRD 1971.

"[The work has] a bibliographic source for each quotation. . . . [The editors] claim avoidance of the trite, the boring, and the tedious cliché. . . . No overwhelming bias of omission or inclusion is evident. . . . [The index to subjects] is a reasonably complete index of most key subject words and concepts with a fairly good use of see and see also references, subtopics, and explanatory scope notes for broad terms. . . . [This book] is reasonably inclusive of divergent influential opinion on contemporary issues in national and international politics, society, the sciences, education, and the arts and has a workable index. The addition of the source documentation enables the interested user to pursue more detail and to examine the context in which the statement was made. The work usefully fills a void in current reference works and is recommended."

PATER, ALAN—Continued

Booklist 68:681 Ap 15 '72 800w

"[The index of specific subjects] is of the woeful type which either simply lists every page involved or is inconsistent in its limited use of subdivisions. . . . [There is a] very heavy emphasis on U.S. speakers. . . . The publisher claims that through this book you can quickly locate the major thoughts of those included . . . [but it] seems questionable that the snippets included can do this even for those 'leaders' who are all allowed to have more than one 'major thought' in the volume. The overall verdict remains—a book for occasional consultation or browsing." Norman Horrocks

Library J 97:486 F 1 '72 160w

PATER, JASON R., jt. ed. What they said in 1970. See Pater, A.

PATER, WALTER. Leonardo da Vinci. See Leonardo da Vinci

PATERSON, A. B. Waltzing Matilda; poem; il. by Desmond Digby. 36p $5.95 Holt

821

ISBN 0-03-086748-7; 03-086749-5 (lib bdg)

LC 79-155869

A picture book version of the Australian song, the title of which refers "to the bundle, or swag, which a tramp uses to carry his personal possessions. The interpretation of the song given here tells of a swagman who steals a sheep (jumbuck) and in an attempt to escape the police, drowns in a water hole." (Publishers' Weekly) Glossary. "Ages five to eight." (Sat R)

"[This is one of the] most beautiful picture books of the season. . . . [It is] best suited to slightly older readers. Desmond Digby's paintings for the Australian song elevate the tale of the luckless old poacher to near tragedy." Sidney Long

Book World p6 (children's issue) My 7 '72 30w

Reviewed by D. K. Willis

Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 4 '72 70w

"The Australian song, with its lilting tune and excitingly unfamiliar, rhythmic words, is one of the continent's best-known cultural exports. . . . Wonderfully expressive doublespread paintings in deep, rich tones bring to life the remote outback and the poignant tale of a tramp. A glossary illuminates the obscure terminology. . . . Unfortunately, however, the book is incomplete; the reader looks in vain for the music of the song, and it is difficult to understand why it was not included." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 48:365 Ag '72 100w

"What Digby does best is to convey the setting (the light-filled expanse of the Australian outback; the thick, dusky look of the backwater and surrounding foliage) which, in the song, is of more importance than the particular people. This rendering of the original Australian words doesn't quite fit the tune of the accepted Americanized version which may cause some confusion here. Nevertheless, this winner of the Australian 'Picture Book of the Year' award in 1970 with its striking paintings and joyful song will be received with enthusiasm." D. G. Stavn

Library J 97:1906 My 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:84 Ap 22 '72 70w

TLS p1328 O 22 '71 20w

PATERSON, JAMES HAMILTON. See Hamilton-Paterson, J.

PATERSON, STANLEY, jt. auth. Merchant prince of Boston, Colonel T. H. Perkins, 1764-1854. See Seaburg, C.

PATERSON, THOMAS G., ed. Cold war critics; alternatives to American foreign policy in the Truman years; ed. with an introd. by Thomas G. Paterson. 313p $10; pa $2.95 Quadrangle bks.

327.73 U. S.—Foreign relations. World politics—1945-1965

LC 70-116083

This volume concerns the views of Americans opposed to the foreign policy of the Truman administration. Index.

"Paterson's introduction clearly demonstrates the limits and imperfections of any dissent which lacks an adequate power base. Walter Lippmann was not the Secretary of State. Claude Pepper was not the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Henry Wallace never had a chance of becoming President." R. H. Miller

Commonweal 95:375 Ja 21 '72 600w

"[This book] is, simultaneously, too simplistic and too sophisticated. . . . The authors seem unanimously to agree that the Cold War is a post-World War II phenomenon, footnotes citing Kolko notwithstanding. In addition, some of [them] assume complete familiarity with their own research regarding the origins of the Cold War and make sweeping assumptions based on those arguments. . . . This collection is not . . . for those uninitiated in the ritual of the current historical debate over foreign policy, yet for those who have kept abreast of all the arguments, this study is too much of a chronicle to be satisfying." W. F. Kimball

J Am Hist 59:219 Je '72 900w

"All [the essays] are worth reading. . . . [The authors examine] the efforts of a diverse group of critics. They were united only in their generally shared belief that reconciliation with the Soviet Union was possible without sacrificing the national interest. . . . The collection includes analyses of the work of three Senators—Robert Taft, Claude Pepper, Glen Taylor; two journalists—Walter Lippmann, I. F. Stone; a Presidential candidate—Henry A. Wallace; a Wall Street banker—James P. Warburg. There is an extremely valuable review of 'Black Critics of Colonialism and the Cold War,' including W.E.B. Du Bois, Paul Robeson and Max Yergan. All these critics presented a variety of policy options. All were ignored." H. H. Wilson

Nation 214:438 Ap 1 '72 1000w

PATTANAIK, PRASANTA K. Voting and collective choice; some aspects of the theory of group decision-making. 183p $10 Cambridge

301.15 Decision-making

ISBN 0-521-07961-6

LC 75-152630

"This book examines . . . developments in the theory of social choice and . . . analyzes several ways of solving the problems raised by Professor Arrow's . . . impossibility theorem. This theorem, essentially negative in its impact, demonstrates that certain value judgements which it might seem reasonable to incorporate in a criterion for social choice are logically incompatible. Dr Pattanaik first describes the formal framework of his analysis and clarifies certain basic issues regarding value judgements and their place in the theory of social choice. He then goes on to discuss methods for resolving Arrow's paradox." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The average reader will find the technical language and use of symbolic language to be tedious, if not impenetrable. Close attention to meaning and a certain expenditure of effort to master the first three chapters results in a clear understanding of later chapters which are written as clearly as a formal, deductive argument of this type will allow, but it is unlikely anyone other than a specialist in the theory of social choice will find the effort especially rewarding. . . . [This] is a book that will not be widely read because of its technical nature but should be read by anyone seriously wrestling with any aspect of voting or collective choice." D. S. Lutz

Ann Am Acad 402:181 Jl '72 400w

"Pattanaik's revision of a Ph.D. dissertation focuses only upon one narrow aspect of the problem (Arrow's theorem) and is so highly abstract and formal, relying almost exclusively upon formal logic and set theory, to be valueless to virtually all undergraduates. Because of its narrow scope, specialized treatment, minimal readership, and rather high price, it is not recommended for the undergraduate library."

Choice 9:96 Mr '72 90w

PATTERSON, GERTRUDE. T. S. Eliot: poems in the making. 198p $8 Barnes & Noble

821 Eliot, Thomas Stearns
ISBN 0-389-04086-X LC 76-22144

This study of Eliot's poetry is a "discussion of his poetic method. Beginning with three . . . chapters on imagism, symbolism, and Ezra Pound, Patterson proceeds to examine the poetic strategy behind Eliot's early work. . . . [In her] discussions of his poetry through 'The Waste Land' [BRD 1923], she demonstrates the development of Eliot's mature poetic voice." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Shunning anything so obvious as a biographical approach, [Patterson] . . . uses the given key of Eliot's composition as a matter of whole poems being constructed out of what first appeared to the poet as disparate fragments, and gives us the most stimulating review of the body of poetry to appear for many years. . . . By examining Eliot's work from an established position, Miss Patterson is able to maintain consistency and to demonstrate Eliot's advance." John Espey

Am Lit 44:507 N '72 360w

"[This] rather eclectic study of Eliot's poetry—not radically original in approach or conclusion . . . is, nevertheless, useful. . . . Though her interest is primarily in Eliot's method of composition, Patterson offers a number of acute explicatory remarks along the way. The forthcoming publication of the full Waste Land manuscript [BRD 1972] is sure to generate renewed interest in Eliot's craftsmanship. Though her book is not the last word on the topic, Patterson's is valuable for making it the center of attention. It deserves a place on the rapidly growing shelf of Eliot criticism in large public and academic libraries. Excellent bibliography." Choice 8:1018 O '71 180w

"[This] is an intelligent but scrappy study. . . . [Patterson] is absolutely right to emphasise the element of assemblage or collage in Eliot's method of composition, and the way in which his multiple perspectives recall the contemporary work of the Cubist painters. But her account of Eliot's early career contains the customary amount of slightly inaccurate literary history that seems inevitable in his commentators. . . . There is too much not very relevant material in Miss Patterson's book, notably about Ezra Pound and the Imagist movement, which tends to blur the fact that Eliot wrote some of his finest poems . . . several years before he had heard of Pound or Imagism." Bernard Bergonzi

Encounter 38:82 Ap '72 180w

PATTERSON, LINDSAY, comp. Black theater: a 20th century collection of the work of its best playwrights; comp. with an introd. by Lindsay Patterson. 493p $12.95 Dodd

812.08 American drama—Collections. Negro drama
ISBN 0-396-06254-7 LC 75-135538

Contents: St Louis woman, by Arna Bon-temps and Countee Cullen; Take a giant step, by Louis Peterson; In splendid error, by William Branch; Trouble in mind, by Alice Childress; Simply heavenly, by Langston Hughes; A raisin in the sun, by Lorraine Hansberry; Purlie Victorious, by Ossie Davis; Dutchman, by LeRoi Jones; The amen corner, by James Baldwin; In the wine time, by Ed Bullins; No place to be somebody, by Charles Gordone; Ceremonies in dark old men, by Lonne Elder III.

"No one who knows Patterson's reviews or his earlier book, Anthology of the American Negro in the theatre; a critical approach . . . will be surprised to discover that this anthology is carefully compiled and that his introduction is well informed and beautifully written. Several of the plays have needed publishing for some time. . . . The long-o.p. Take a giant step by Louis Peterson is also a valuable entry. And the inclusion of a 1946 musical play, St Louis woman . . . is important for a number of reasons, not the least of which is its readability. . . . All black theater courses will want to use this anthology."

Choice 8:1597 F '72 170w

"An exciting collection. . . . Several of the plays have been available in published text form, but I do not believe that any have been anthologized—with the exception of Louis Peterson's Take a Giant Step, which appears abridged in the 'Best Plays' series. In his brief introduction, Patterson explains that all of the plays express something about 'that specific moment when a black discovers that he is a "nigger" and his mentality shifts gears and begins that long, uphill climb to bring psychological order out of chaos.' The book will prove an important addition to drama collections." Paul Myers

Library J 96:2099 Je 15 '71 130w

Reviewed by Alfred Kazin
Sat R 54:33 O 2 '71 230w

PATTERSON, WILLIAM L., ed. We charge genocide. See We charge genocide

PATTON, LEWIS, ed. Collected works of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, v 1: Lectures 1795 on politics and religion. See Coleridge, S. T.

PAUL, JOHN R. A history of poliomyelitis. (Yale univ. Yale stud. in the hist. of science and medicine, 6) 486p il $15 Yale univ. press

616.8 Poliomyelitis
ISBN 0-300-01324-8 LC 73-11537

This work presents a "picture of the scientific, political and personal struggles and developments in the growth of our knowledge about polio. . . . [The author also pays] attention to the developments overseas, particularly in Sweden [and includes] descriptions of the epidemics in New York, Los Angeles and elsewhere; of the personalities (Simon Flexner, Basil O'Connor, Salk, Sabin, Enders, et al.); and . . . of the day-to-day scientific investigations, discoveries, and tests." (Library J)

Reviewed by G. H. Brieger
Am Hist R 77:740 Je '72 450w

"[The book] conveys the impression of a fairly direct march down the investigative road to the presently conceived truth of the matter. Science is not really like that, no matter how the turgid prose of journal writing may come across. . . . The author's intimate role in the unfolding story of a vaccine against polio seems to have colored his history; a definitive and comprehensive account remains to be written." Choice 8:579 Je '71 160w

"[This] story of the dread disease and its conquest is thorough, thoughtful, and fascinating, even though Dr. Paul is too much the gentleman to give total exposure to the raw emotional battles that occurred along the way." E. E.

Harper 243:92 JI '71 400w

"Dr. Paul illustrates, occasionally with brutal clarity, the sterile approaches, blind alleys, and dead hand of conservative authority that have marked much of the history of this disease. . . . This account [is] informative and gripping, comprehensive, thoroughly documented (by scientific papers and reports as well as by personal letters and vignettes), and perceptive. [It] should be in all public, college, and medical school libraries." W. K. Beatty

Library J 96:199 Ja 15 '71 230w

Reviewed by H. M. Gelfand

Science 174:578 N 5 '71 1400w

"[This is] a good book, although a little skimpy in scientific overview and a little too full of the administrative difficulties of the past two decades in the U.S. The history itself is a song of praise for devotion and reason among men." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 224:125 Ap '71 1900w

PAULI, HERTHA. Break of time. 239p $5.95 Hawthorn bks.

B or 92 World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives. World War, 1939-1945—Refugees
LC 70-179113

"Once an actress with Max Reinhardt's German Theater and later a literary agent in Austria, [the author] now lives in the U.S. and writes both adult and juvenile books. Here she describes her flight from Vienna to France after the 1938 Anschluss and her

PAULI, HERTHA—Continued

... race to escape from Europe after the fall of France. Her own experiences are interwoven with those of prominent refugees such as Leonhard Frank, George Grosz, Heinrich Mann, Walter Mehring, Franz Werfel." (Library J) Translation of Der Riss der Zeit geht durch mein herz.

"For the reader interested in a quite significant group of Austrian political refugees from Hitler, 'Break of Time' will be an informative introduction; there is about the book, however, something so gentle that it might disturb those who travel the route of 'never again.' That this autobiographical piece might be too narrowly limited in appeal can be suspected from the fact that someone, either author or publisher, felt the need to include a five-page appendix, 'Biographical Data.' ... Though this book is hardly as 'full of suspense as a whodunit,' to quote the dust jacket, it does contribute, as a slight reflection on a disturbed age, some lines on the social and cultural history of the late 1930's." Rev. J. M. Murphy

Best Sell 32:18 Ap 1 '72 300w

"[The émigrés] physical hardships and mental anguish are poignantly recalled." S. M. Batzdorff

Library J 97:66 Ja 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by M. C. Blalock

Library J 97:1938 My 15 '72 120w [YA]

PAULSON, RONALD. Hogarth: his life, art, and times; pub. for the Paul Mellon centre for studies in British art (London) Ltd. 2v 557p 3141l $40 Yale univ. press

B or 92 Hogarth, William

This account of the life and artistic career of Hogarth is viewed against the social and cultural background of the age.

Reviewed by Peter Tomory

Art Bul 54:557 D '72 2650w

"With Mr. Paulson's book we have what must almost certainly be the lengthiest work ever devoted to Hogarth, its two large volumes running to 1100 pages and close to half a million words. ... [He] has gone to lengths—in new factual material, in information and explanation, and in byways of English eighteenth-century art—that no previous biographer of Hogarth has attempted and that no future biographer can hope to materially augment. ... As a huge academic biography, the book bears all the marks of its kind. Even factually it abounds in conjectural statements preceded by may haves, might haves, probablys, presumablys, and doubtlesses; and it very often offers arid documentary minutiae, trivialities, and laundry lists. More damaging, because more important, is a shortage of provocative and trenchant observations and criticisms (whether Mr. Paulson's or other people's) of Hogarth's individual works, and a lack of rounded appraisal of Hogarth's total achievement." Louis Kronenberger

Atlantic 229:92 Ja '72 4200w

Reviewed by Richard Freedman

Book World p6 D 12 '71 1800w

"[These] volumes contain well over [300] illustrations, many from artists other than Hogarth and all finely supportive of Paulson's own text. Projects like this are, inevitably, expensive, but this one is a must for any library with the slightest pretensions, in either art history or 18th-century studies."

Choice 8:1445 Ja '72 120w

"[The author] bases his comprehensive picture of Hogarth ... on a large range of primary sources such as public records, memoirs of contemporaries, and notices in contemporary newspapers and magazines. The result is a lengthy intellectual biography, not easily read. Hogarth appears as the great storyteller and moralizing artist. ... [Paulson] also traces the many difficult, symbolic and emblematic details in Hogarth's works. While the average reader may prefer the less demanding [P.] Quennell biography Hogarth's Progress [BRD 1955], this is an important work for the scholarly library concerned with English intellectual life of the 18th Century and English art history. Well illustrated." J. L. Dewton

Library J 96:4000 D 1 '71 200w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway
Nation 213:664 D 20 '71 150w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb

N Y Rev of Books 17:27 D 16 '71 1950w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards

N Y Times Bk R p171 Ja 2 '72 1450w

Reviewed by Robert Halsband

Sat R 54:31 D 18 '71 1700w

"The true estimate of a great and enigmatic artist and the understanding of highly significant relationships between visual art, literature, and society at large have both awaited more and better biographic information about Hogarth. It can be said at once that Mr Paulson supplies this need as fully and thoroughly as we could hope. He has clearly made an exhaustive search of the sources—a task, as he notes with candour, 'inexplicably never before undertaken'. ... The resulting book is quite unlike the customary archival study that an earlier generation devoted to British artists might if taste had not been so lily-livered, have given to Hogarth. Mr Paulson is not only the first writer on him willing and able to sift the sources. He is also the first who has brought to Hogarth a serious knowledge of Fielding and Sterne."

TLS p1377 N 5 '71 450w

Reviewed by F. W. Hilles

Yale R 61:428 Mr '72 2800w

PAUSEWANG, GUDRUN. Bolivian wedding; tr. from the German by Denver Lindley. 239p $5.95 Knopf

SBN 394-41728-3 LC 72-118717

"The small Bolivian mountain town of Marga-Marga is the setting for this convincing parabolic novel that covers the events of a single day, All Souls' Day, 1934. The day begins with the wedding of a shy, young couple, Pablo, and Gordina. ... A blind veteran of the war with Paraguay ... interrupts the celebration to taunt the families of the recently wedded couple with the story of how he came to be blinded in the meaningless war that the young bridegroom will join in the morning." (Library J) Originally published in Germany in 1968.

"[The author] was born in Czechoslovakia of German parents in 1928. She has traveled extensively in Western Europe and in South America. She resides in Columbia, where she has lived and written for the past several years. The South American scene provides the setting and background for all her fiction."

"[The translation] is accurate in all respects [and] has managed to retain the stylistic qualities of the German original and still render the novel into an easily read, smoothly flowing English which entices the reader to finish the book in one sitting. Any library interested in a solid collection of important international literature should purchase this book."

Choice 8:1456 Ja '72 170w

"This sparse novel is ... peopled by Indians, but the events are mythic and the characters are all of us. ... Because the life of the villagers is so interesting, we do not mind the novel's somewhat obvious architecture: the innocents (the bride and groom) and the semi-innocents (their parents and older relatives) being forced to hear the blind man's tale of horror. ... This small novel [is] a parable of the strange quirk of civilizations which causes them, in the name of self-preservation, to pitch their citizens into war." D. G.

Christian Science Monitor p5 My 20 '71 350w

"With moving simplicity this first U.S. publication of a Bolivian writer touches upon the many traditional themes found in literature; life and death, suffering and happiness, religion and superstition, knowledge and ignorance, love and war. Not a book that will probably appeal to many readers, this work will, nevertheless, interest those who enjoy stark, symbolic novels. For larger collections."

T. L. Vince
Library J 96:206 Ja 15 '71 190w

Reviewed by T. G. Bergin

Sat R 54:34 Ja 16 '71 430w

PAUWELS, LOUIS. Impossible possibilities [by] Louis Pauwels and Jacques Bergier; tr. by Andrew White. 216p $6.95 Stein & Day

133 Occult sciences

ISBN 0-8128-1389-8 LC 75-151231

The authors of The Morning of the Magicians (BRD 1965) delve 'into the outer limits' of scientific research. Working from the premise that the province of science is limited only by the human imagination and technological ingenuity, they [seek to] shatter our conventional notions of what is really 'impossible' from a scientific standpoint." (Publisher's note) Published in 1968 under the title Der Planet der unmöglichen Möglichkeiten.

"[The authors discuss] such a range of topics as the matter-antimatter bomb, thought transfer between humans and lower animals, life on planets in other galaxies, the personality of machines, and the genetic code. In line with their stated purpose, which is to raise new questions and send out seekers with minds open to new answers, [they] examine the most improbable as well as more probable phenomena. The book contains numerous errors of fact and some statements which are demonstrably false but it achieves its main purpose, which is to show that science is far from furnishing a complete description of the universe. It should interest a wide range of readers who should read it for the questions it raises and not for the answers it provides." Choice 8:1600 F '72 130w

"This volume made a dynamic impression when first published in German. . . . It is still dynamic in the English translation. . . . And it does help the reader to play his new demanding role—to be a contemporary of the future. The key to playing this role, as the authors point out, is that we stop being hypnotized by traditional but superficial relationships. They require us instead to recognize new and strange relationships, to face up to the fantastic. . . . The fantastic to which this book introduces us does not extend to the marvels of spiritual law; it confines itself to the marvels of the physical universe and the behavior of that universe. And it succeeds in making its present marvellous and its future still more marvellous." P. J. Henniker-Heaton

Christian Science Monitor p11 D 16 '71
700w

PAVLOWITCH, STEVAN K. Yugoslavia (Nations of the modern world) 416p il maps $11 Praeger

949.7 Yugoslavia—History. Yugoslavia—Politics and government
LC 77-148138

"After a historical introduction on the South Slavs to the beginning of the nineteenth century, their national development in that century, and the formulation of a unified Yugoslav state after World War I, Pavlowitch . . . [deals with] the complications that confronted the new state after 1918, the reasons for its collapse, and the chaos of World War II, out of which the Communists rose to power. He describes the failures of the period between the wars, racked by political infighting, and the tragedies and dismemberment of World War II, the complexities of the Mihailovich affair, postwar revolution, and the break with Stalinist Russia." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This is] tedious political history. It supercedes M. Heppell and F. B. Singleton's Yugoslavia [BRD 1962]. Despite Pavlowitch's avowed intention of dispelling myths and prejudices, he arrives at debatable and decidedly conservative positions. . . . The focus on the activities of the Communists prior to 1945 is negative. They emerge as opportunists, with Tito as a clever politician. For the Communists, nothing of the hardship and suffering of the inner war years, nothing of the personal heroism and dedication to resistance to the Nazis is imparted. . . . Libraries would be better advised to purchase such excellent accounts as the series of incisive articles by recognized experts edited by W. Vucinich, Contemporary Yugoslavia; twenty years of socialist experiment [BRD 1970]."

Choice 9:426 My '72 160w

"Pavlowitch has put together a great deal of useful material from his own selection of some of the many publications about Yugoslavia and given his own commentary on the evolution of events. . . . [This] is a difficult book to evaluate because it is a mixture of sound history interwoven with propaganda. This is particularly true of the part dealing with the Second World War. . . . It is a pity that Mr Pavlowitch has such a strong ideological commitment that it brings his whole book within the category of polemical history, which tends to devalue the very detailed and useful material that is given in some parts of the book."

TLs p210 F 25 '72 380w

PAWLEY, MARTIN. Frank Lloyd Wright, v 1. See Wright, F. L.

PAXTON, ROBERT O. Vichy France; old guard and new order, 1940-1944. 399p il $10 Knopf, for sale by Random house 944.08 France—Politics and government—German occupation, 1940-1945. World War, 1939-1945—Collaborationists.

ISBN 0-394-47360-4 LC 74-171140

"This book is an account of the government, and the governed, of collaborationist France. . . . Paxton maps out the complex nature of the . . . Vichy government, showing that it in fact enjoyed mass participation. . . . [He also discusses] the power struggle between Petain, Laval, and Darlan [and] their relationship with the Germans. . . . Paxton's conclusions are . . . that collaborationist Vichy France . . . obtained for Frenchmen no better treatment than that accorded to the fully occupied nations." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"For the past several years what we might call a revisionist interpretation of the Vichy regime has been gaining favor among historians of that period. The emotional condemnation of the late 1940's is now seen as too biased and contrary to the facts. The author gives a well rounded and fully documented summary of the evidence upon which these later interpretations are based. . . . This is an important and instructive historical work; the author has gathered a vast amount of factual information and his explanations show the student not only what happened in France during the war years but why it happened. At times the style is rather ponderous, often as crowded as that of a textbook. In the final section where he asks the question, 'Was Vichy a lesser evil?' Dr. Paxton's conclusions contradict much of the facts and interpretations he gave in earlier chapters." F. J. Gallagher
Best Sell 32:326 O 15 '72 700w

"[This] is an excellent history written by a man who appreciates the nuances of French life and politics, and does not feel compelled to act as a prosecuting attorney against the unwise or despicable actions of individuals faced with historical crisis. . . . It is the merit of Professor Paxton's book that he does not restrict himself to a consideration of Vichy's relations with the Germans or to its internal intrigues, picturesque as these often were. The program of economic and social reform initiated under the shock of defeat had lasting effects. . . . The impression left by this careful account of Vichy and its works is of something so amorphous that it is difficult to speak of 'policies.' Yet if Vichy was hardly a government, it was undoubtedly a turning-point in French history." Anthony Hartley

Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 10 '73
850w

"This admirable volume does much to dissolve the rhetoric blurring the four bizarre years when some Frenchmen became preoccupied in pursuing a workable relationship with the Nazis. . . . Instead of diverting the reader with the usual goulash based on postwar memoirs, liberation esprit, trial transcripts, and hindsight, Paxton has focused clearly on trends and developments in Vichy foreign and domestic policy within the context of the times. His analysis is perceptive, his style highly readable. The author helps the reader to see that, although the Vichy period in France was not an honorable one, there were no real villains. . . . For all libraries." M. R. Yerburgh

Library J 97:2592 Ag '72 150w

PAYNE, ROBERT. Eyewitness; a personal account of a tumultuous decade, 1937-1946. 397p il $10 Doubleday

B or 92
LC 79-180097

The author 'recounts his personal adventures and encounters of the late 1930's and early 1940's—years which he spent first in Europe and later in the Far East. . . . He writes of the first tense days of Anschluss in Austria; of starving Barcelona during the Spanish Civil War; of Singapore just prior to its surrender to the Japanese; of China during the war years and later at the brink of civil war; of India on the eve of the British pull-out. He includes . . . interviews with Hitler, Feng Yu-hsiang, Mao Tse-tung, Mohammed Ali Jannah, Nehru [and others]." (Library J) Index.

"[Payne's] book is fascinating in narrative, color, and meaning. The best and longest part is [about China]. . . . While not a great autobiography [this account] is a very readable, perfectly fascinating, often revealing picture of one man wandering through tremendously tell-tale places." E. D. Canham

PAYNE, ROBERT—Continued

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 6 '72
500w

"Though not a political analyst, Payne is an astute and perceptive observer; and his accounts record in considerable depth the context of those years of war and great political decisions. Written with a sensitivity to people, settings, and events, this thoroughly engrossing autobiographical account belongs in most libraries." Topsy Smalley

Library J 97:2578 Ag '72 150w

"Reading [Eyewitness] is like talking to a well-met, well-traveled guest at a cocktail party. A bit long-winded at times, but you don't really mind. . . . Payne has produced a tangy trayful of historical canapés." Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 80:82 S 4 '72 650w

PAYNE, ROBERT, ed. The unknown Karl Marx. See Marx, K.

PEACE with China? U.S. decisions for Asia; ed. by Earl C. Ravenal; with contributions by John W. Dower [and others]. 248p $7.50; pa $2.95 Liveright 327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Asia. Asia—Foreign relations—U.S.

ISBN 0-87140-545-8; 0-87140-061-8 (pa)
LC 71-162433

This "work based on a conference held during September, 1970 at the Institute for Policy Studies [in Washington, D.C.] deals with the meaning of the Nixon doctrine, the options or compulsions involved in our decision-making processes for Asia, and the economic stakes in the formulation of a new Asian policy." (Library J) Index.

"The format for each chapter is virtually the same—a panel member presents a short paper, and his ideas are either criticized or elaborated upon by other members of the panel. . . . The contributors are supposed to represent two functional poles: the radical critic and the government official. Unfortunately the radical critics are in the majority." L. H. Madaras

Library J 97:75 Ja 1 '72 260w

"Here's an . . . assemblage of very bright 'in-and-outers' mixed with former government officials and present academic specialists. Their repartee about decision-making, strategy, and defense budgets may bemuse persons interested in the bureaucracy but it offers little that pertains to the genuine question: what are the prospects for war or peace with China and how are they affected by alternative US policies? . . . Obviously eighteen intelligent, thoughtful, and experienced specialists can provide rich fare for the layman and delectable morsels are scattered throughout the volume. It has no interrupting commercials and it has much good sense, but it has little to do with China."

New Repub 166:26 Ja 1 '72 310w

"The value of this penetrating book lies precisely in its clearheaded, many-sided exploration of the contradictory elements inherent in our China policy. . . . The timeliness and high intellectual content of the speeches and discussions that comprise this collection more than compensate for the raggedness inherent in the seminar approach." S. S. Rosenfeld

Sat R 55:68 F 5 '72 900w

PEARCE, JOSEPH CHILTON. The crack in the cosmic egg; challenging constructs of mind and reality. 207p $5.95 Julian press 121 Reality. Mind and body. Thought and thinking

LC 79-133830

"Here are the observations of a college teacher on his 'personal search' for reality and creativity, with particular attention to the ideas of the men who have influenced him most: William Blake, Carl Jung, Jerome Bruner, Michael Polanyi, Teilhard de Chardin, Carlos Castaneda [and others]. . . . The 'cosmic egg' is 'the sum total of our notions of what the world is, notions which define what reality can be for us,' and the crack in that egg is the means by which man can escape his present shell and create a new world view for our time. Offering great potential in this search is autistic thinking, 'a kind of dream-world mode of thinking,' nonglogical (yet not illogical) and a great force toward achieving creativity and reality." (Library J) Bibliography.

"When applied to our present educational system and more crucially to the preschool infant, Pearce's thesis of how cosmic eggs are constructed is very illuminating and disturbing. . . . The 'hallucinations' and 'fantasies' which the infant finds very real are screened out by parental scorn while only those concepts are passed on to the child which society has canonized with reality in its language. The child then constructs his cosmic egg and later as a scientist, theologian, or believer, he continues the same screening process. . . . [This] is far from a comfortable thesis to discuss. But then [this] is not a comfortable book, or one meant for the unquestioning believer. . . . If you are game for some creative, inventive thinking, this book can provide the spark for many up-setting controversies." R. T. Francoeur
Critic 30:87 Mr '72 1700w

"The author's wide-ranging journey among the men whose ideas are astir in the modern world sometimes makes for difficult reading, but most of the time he manages to be stimulating; and he will have this effect not only on the specialist familiar with his materials, but also on the layman who stays with him through the tougher passages. The excellent bibliography is on the whole a valuable guide to the seminal works of some of the most influential modern thinkers." Allan Angoff
Library J 96:2093 Je 15 '71 200w

PEARCE, PHILIPPA. The squirrel wife; design & ill. by Derek Collard. 61p $4.50 Crowell

Fairy tales
ISBN 0-690-76678-5; 0-690-76679-3 (lib bdg)
LC 70-168556

One stormy night Jack the swineherd "goes out and saves a 'green man' whom a tree has crushed nearly to death. In return, the 'green people,' fairy rulers of the forest, give Jack a ring with which he wins the love of a marvelous, mysterious being, part forest creature, part woman: the squirrel wife. Then his elder brother, enraged by Jack's happiness, conspires to have Jack thrown in jail. And there he stays till the squirrel wife, at great cost, sets him free. . . . Ages seven to ten." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Collard has designed a memorable pastiche of medieval and Victorian elements as a setting, most notably full-page illustrations that are beautifully sinister in murky greens and smothering blues. If there is any quibble, it is that the terror they convey may be more than the tale warrants. While Jack's squirrel-wife shares the secrets of the forest with her simple husband or ingeniously contrives to save him from his brother's treachery, the story never flags." Estelle Miller

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 7

'72 170w

Reviewed by June Goodwin
Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 4

'72 60w

Horn Bk 48:265 Je '72 210w

Reviewed by L. R. Silver

Library J 97:2479 Jl '72 100w

"This story keeps faith with age-old fairy-tale traditions, yet is wonderfully fresh, springing surprises all along the way. . . . Mr. Collard's design is most elaborate. He frames each page with a delicate flower-and-leaf border William Morris would have approved. He lets important words leap unexpectedly out in large bold type. (By the way, the type is brown and goes well with the antique paper.) . . . There are 14 color illustrations reminiscent of Rackham and Dulac, and endpapers showing scenes from country life. Amazingly, with so much going on, the effect is quite uncluttered." Doris Orgel

N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 12 '72 240w

"[The pages] are framed in a Pre-Raphaelite motif; sometimes a phrase is isolated with a great initial letter; the Rackhamish pictures, darkly held in by trees and night, but lit by greenish or stained-glass gleams, give a due sense of Celtic fairy tale. All these things, in their curiously deliberate way, reflect the tempo and precision of the tale—and whoever has heard it read aloud will realize how exquisitely and precisely it is composed. . . . The whole thing has . . . the air of a miniature classic."

TLS p1317 O 22 '71 180w

PEARCE, W. E. Transistors and circuits; electronics for young experimenters [by] W. E. Pearce and Aaron E. Klein. 156p il $4.95; lib bdg $5.70 Doubleday

621.381 Electronics—Juvenile literature
LC 70-139052

This book gives directions for making and experimenting with such things as electroscopes, electrical machines, magnetic advertising device, various types of meters, a relay, a D.C. and A.C. motor, an oscilloscope and a simple telephone circuit. Index. First published 1966 in England with title: Electronics for young experimenters. "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"This book contains a very well-organized series of 71 experiments in electricity. As each experiment in the sequence is performed, experimenters will presumably gain the insight and equipment necessary to start the next one. . . . There are a few places in the book where European rather than American standards and terminology are used—e.g., in references to the frequency and voltage of electricity in the home, or specific types of transistors and diodes. Also, the authors employ insufficiently precise terminology in discussing capacitive and inductive reactance. However, these faults are minor, and this book deserves favorable consideration." O. V. Fortier

Library J 96:1815 My 15 '71 190w

"This practical book . . . is intended to provide enjoyment and understanding for boys and girls from fifth grade to junior high. It includes details for such research-like activities as charging an electroscope with a simple dry cell (by varying a capacity), which is a challenge to those, and only those, who have gained some abstract grasp of electrostatics. . . . The book is accommodating: it includes an account of how to make simple electrostatic machines, of light switches using phototransistors, of several transistor radio circuits, and so on. . . . This blend of new and old, of the packaged component and the homemade demonstration, is uncommon and hopeful." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 225:114 D '71 170w

PEARL, ARTHUR. The atrocity of education. 365p $9.95 New critics press; for sale by Dutton 370.11 Education—Aims and objectives.

Education—U.S.
ISBN 0-87853-001-0 LC 73-146987

"University of Oregon education professor Pearl [names] . . . racism as the core problem of education, seeing the American university, for example, as 'a place of the racists, by the racists, and for the racists.' Such programs as Head Start and Upward Bound are viewed as simply reinforcements of racial inequality. Pearl wants all education to be vocation oriented, sees student government as more or less a panacea, and believes that teachers should exert 'control within a democratic context.'" (Library J) Index.

"Pearl cynically lampoons America's educational efforts and institutions. . . . Attacks on political figures occur frequently enough to force an early obsolescence of this book. Unlike other critics who offer alternatives [this one] . . . leaves the reader with only a feeling of despair. Pearl offers little beyond the 'New Careers' program with which he has a close association. It is hard to see how this book can serve the cause of education in any constructive way. Not recommended."

Choice 9:555 Je '72 140w

"Peppered with facile generalizations based on limited observation, this latest in the current flood of intemperate attacks on American education at all levels is distinctive only in damning both John Holt and Max Rafferty, in praising both Edgar Friedenberg and Alfred North Whitehead." E. M. Oboler

Library J 97:678 F 15 '72 100w

PEARL, LEONARD B., jt. auth. Any boy can. See Moore, A.

PEARLIN, LEONARD I. Class context and family relations; a cross-national study. 224p $7.95 Little 301.42 Domestic relations. Family. Social classes

LC 74-134475

A monograph on the author's work in Turin, Italy. Perlin's object was 'to understand how social structure (specifically class and occupation) affects family structure (seen in parental values, aspirations, discipline and affection, consensus, and companionship between husband and wife, and the loyalties and obligations to him). Data came from individual structured interviews with over 800 parents of fifth graders.' (Choice)

"The comparative focus and a concern with the effect of industrial society on family life run through the work. The presentation of the complex data is straightforward and readable. The closeness of the conclusions to the data and the care in its interpretation make this a model of research design and exposition. . . . Will appeal mainly to research specialists, but could be read with interest and profit by advanced students interested in the family, socialization, or social organization."

Choice 8:1098 O '71 210w

"[This] book is welcome as a complement to the available stock of materials on Italian peasant and village family patterns and for its revealing focus upon similarities and differences between the middle class and the working class. In addition, the conceptual framework is inviting. . . . Still another merit . . . is [the] comparison of data from Italy with those from the United States, by the frequent juxtaposition of patterns exhibited in Turin in 1962 with those found in an earlier, similar investigation conducted in Washington, D.C. . . . All in all the research was well-conceived and carried out, the analysis of data is performed with skill—even with gusto—and the writing style is usually quite concise." H. K. Geiger

Science 174:812 N 19 '71 750w

PEARS, DAVID. What is knowledge? 106p $6.50; pa $1.60 Harper

121 Knowledge, Theory of
ISBN 0-06-131586-9; 0-06-131586-2 (pa)
LC 73-152347

The author deals with "the distinctions between factual knowledge, knowing how, and acquaintance; between credentials and reasons, a priori and inductive; between the knowledge of universals, perceptual knowledge, and memory. There are . . . remarks about the reflexivity of knowledge, confidence, scepticism, sense-data, and . . . the picture of knowledge as a structure requiring a sure 'foundation,' with . . . references to Locke, Berkeley, Hume, Kant, Russell, Wittgenstein, Ayer, Ryle, Austin, and Strawson." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This is an] excellent introduction to epistemology. . . . The argument is terse but always lucid and stimulating. Highly recommended for undergraduates as well as graduates."

Choice 9:380 My '72 130w

"This is an unusual little book. It is offered as an introduction to the theory of knowledge. But, instead of a comprehensive ordering of the standard topics, we have a rather rambling essay touching only relatively few of these. On the topics touched, Pears has a fair number of moderately original things to say. Some of his points are argued for; others are offered more in the way of just being intuitively plausible. . . . In keeping with its rambling character, the book has no index or table of contents, nor any chapter or section headings. . . . [But it] is about as good as any available brief introduction to epistemology and better than most. It's good enough to be of use." Peter Unger

J Philos 69:448 Ag 17 '72 3800w

PEARSON, CHARLES H., jt. auth. College football, U.S.A., 1869-1971. See McCallum, J.

PEARSON J. D., A guide to manuscripts and documents in the British Isles relating to Africa. See Matthews, N.

PEARSON, MICHAEL. Those damned rebels; the American Revolution as seen through British eyes. 446p il maps $8.95 Putnam

973.3 U.S.—History—Revolution
LC 71-163414

Dealing with the American Revolution during the period 1775 to 1783 from the British viewpoint this is "a battle-by-battle account. . . . [It portrays the colonists] divided in their loyalties. . . . [and shows that the] British looked upon the revolt as a radical movement not supported by the majority and in frequent danger of collapse from lack of popular support." (Best Sell)

"I cannot remember reading anywhere a more vivid account of the action at Boston, Saratoga, or Long Island; and, with the last roll of the dice, of that incredible timing which brought together the French fleet and the Continentals at Yorktown. What gives spice, humor, and pity to all this are the quotations from Baroness von Riedesel's diary as she cares for her children in a bloody cellar and helps to nurse the dying General Fraser; Benjamin Franklin's witty demeanor both in London and in Paris; and the letters from combatants as perceptive as Lieutenant Mackenzie. It is good to be reminded that long before the final peace, in London the war had become as unpopular as Vietnam." Edward Weeks
Atlantic 229:105 Mr '72 700w

"This is a curious document to read, now that war has lost its enchantment in the eyes of most Americans. . . . [It] does little to diminish the growing suspicion that war even in ages past was a form of temporary insanity. . . . The schoolbook names and places are all here minus the glamor of old glory and the charms of antiquity; rather, the dubious political motives of the British King George, the Parliament, and the American super-patriots make this presentation a book for our time. . . . As the 200th anniversary of the American Revolution approaches in 1975, 'The Damned Rebels' will provide a happy note of realism. This account will please both scholars and amateur history buffs who enjoy hearing someone tell it like it was." Jeanne Kinney
Best Sell 32:18 Ap 1 '72 550w

"As Pearson points out, the Revolutionary War must be assessed against a background of European international politics, starring such unlikely figures as Catherine the Great and the king of Naples as well as the French and the Spaniards. It also was an intensely unpopular war in Great Britain. . . . Pearson sets the strong personalities in strong color. Lord George Germain, Banastre Tarleton, and General Clinton live as human beings, though it is Pearson's virtue throughout to set sober fact above the picturesque. He does justice to the king, and to Howe, and he appreciated the rebel leaders, notably Samuel Adams, as accurately as their adversaries. The whole story, as he tells it, is exemplary." Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p10 Ap 9 '72 550w

Choice 9:574 Je '72 70w

"[This is a] very readable history of the American Revolution. . . . [The author] leaves out the civil phase, or what others would call the real American Revolution. When he strays from military topics, he seems not only to report the ideas of British officials but to believe them as well. Thus he overemphasizes the importance of Sam Adams and seemingly accepts the idea that Americans were often on the brink of throwing in the towel. On battles and strategies, however, Pearson is well informed, bold, and opinionated. The book is not dry and matter-of-fact: the soldiers become real, their problems immediate and acute." Jerome Nadelhaft

Library J 97:681 F 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by M. C. Blalock

Library J 97:1631 Ap 15 '72 180w [YA]

TLS p1031 S 1 '72 420w

PEARSON, SCOTT R. Petroleum and the Nigerian economy. 235p $8.75 Stanford univ. press

338.2 Nigeria—Economic conditions. Petroleum industry and trade

ISBN 0-8047-0749-9 LC 76-130830

"The first two chapters describe petroleum production in the international and operational settings; the next two deal with economic development and foreign investment; the next three dwell upon the contributions of petroleum production to the economy as a whole; the last three are on politics, policies, and planning." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 8:1222 N '71 100w

"Pearson's tone is positive and authoritative, largely due to the fact that he has carefully delimited his topics. . . . The many tables are valuable material, though not for those who are interested in broad perspectives. For special collections on Africa, petroleum, or economic development." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 96:473 F 1 '71 110w

PEEL, J. D. Y. Herbert Spencer, the evolution of a sociologist. 339p $10 Basic bks.

B or 92 Spencer, Herbert

ISBN 465-02922-1 LC 77-156915

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by G. W. Stocking

Am J Soc 77:769 Ja '72 850w

Reviewed by Robert Bierstedt

Ann Am Acad 399:235 Ja '72 340w

Choice 8:1386 D '71 140w

PEEL, ROBERT. Mary Baker Eddy; the years of trial. 391p $8.95 Holt

B or 92 Eddy, Mary Baker

ISBN 0-03-086700-2 LC 73-31119

This volume is a sequel to Mary Baker Eddy; The Years of Discovery (BRD 1966). It deals with the years 1876 to 1891 during which the founder of Christian Science fought for the survival of the religious movement she had started. Chronology. Index.

"It is the outstanding achievement of this book that it chronicles this period with an honesty, a frankness and a scholarship hitherto unmatched in the treatment of this great religious leader. If it strips some of the pious guilt from Mrs. Eddy, it more than compensates for this by showing that an unvarnished appraisal of her work only enhances the magnitude of her spiritual achievements. . . . Any right estimate of a new idea and of its discoverer must be based on a forthright presentation of the facts. It is the particular merit of this book to do just this. Henceforth no serious comment on Christian Science is possible without a recognition of the facts assembled so calmly, so studiously and so unapologetically by Mr. Peel." J. G. Harrison
Christian Science Monitor p15 D '71 600w

"The reader encounters Eddy (then Mrs. Glover) in 1876, when she was the leader of a group of healers in Lynn, Massachusetts, and the world had not yet felt the impact of her religious philosophy or her organizational genius. In her middle years, she overcame the major obstacles confronting her; in particular, she was able to act effectively within a social context of male supremacy. . . . Peel has included new material, and throughout the work gives evidence of meticulous scholarship and literary craftsmanship." T. F. Smith
Library J 96:3623 N 1 '71 130w

PEIRCE, NEAL R. The megastates of America; people, politics, and power in the ten great states. 745p maps $12.95 Norton

917.3 State governments. U.S.—Economic conditions. U.S. Social conditions
ISBN 0-393-05458-6 LC 70-163375

"This is a book about the ten most populated states of the United States of America. . . . Peirce observes the essential character of the state and its people, of its biggest cities, and whether it is a good place to live or no; then he probes into the power structure in each state and whether it has served the people or private interest and finally delves into the present and potential leadership in each state. The states are New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Florida, Texas, and California." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is an excellent source for the flavor of life in each of the ten states that have the lion's share of political and economic power. Filled with interesting vignettes. Not detailed enough for a factual source-book, fine for regional atmosphere." M. J. Sheeran
America 126:542 My 20 '72 50w

"These ten states, and especially the large metropolitan areas within them, dominate every facet of life in the United States. The book sets out to show why they can be set apart from the rest of America. . . . There are occasional errors of fact such as the site of Philadelphia's bicentennial, but this is the result of a desire to be up-to-date. The book is generally balanced but the polish of the WASP loses its lustre when Catholics, especially Catholic bishops, are the subject of discussion." J. J. Colin

Best Sell 32:33 Ap 15 '72 650w

"This is a book about . . . changing America. It is a good one. Penetrating the surface recording the bad and the good. Yet it is free from the stupid, stifling pessimism which marks so much writing today. . . . Only one such book has ever been written before—John Gunther's 'Inside U.S.A.', [BRD 1947 and 1952]. . . . This is a book to read and to loan—and to insist on getting back. If your home is in one of the megastates . . . you don't really know where you are living until you have read Mr. Peirce's book. If you ever intend to visit one of the megastates, you won't really know where you are going until you read it." Roscoe Drummond

Christian Science Monitor p19 Mr 23 '72

550w

Economist 248:63 Je 3 '72 160w

"This [is] the first of a projected series by Peirce. . . . The author has traveled widely and consulted extensively with political and other observers in each of the states analyzed. Although this is not an exhaustive treatment, the reader clearly gains an understanding of political life within the states and is able to go on from there and formulate on his own some comparative judgments regarding the differences among the states. . . . The work is readable and lightened by the author's humor." D. L. Norrgard

Library J 97:1416 Ap 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by W. C. McWilliams

Nation 215:216 S 18 '72 1500w

N Y Times Bk R p14 Jl 16 '72 160w

PELCZYNSKI, Z. A., ed. Hegel's political philosophy, problems and perspectives; a collection of new essays. v2 246p $14.50 Cambridge

320.5 Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich. Political science

ISBN 0-521-08123-8 LC 71-160096

Among the topics discussed in this collection of essays are "the Hegelian conception of the state with its moral overtones; history as the slow but sure realization of freedom; Hegel's philosophy of right with its problem of the relationship between nature and freedom; his . . . philosophy of history; and his views on war and punishment." (Choice)

"This valuable collection of new essays . . . should add considerably to the present resurgent interest in Hegelian thought. . . . By challenging the widespread misunderstanding of Hegel's philosophy of the state as entirely descriptive, culminating in his alleged worship of the Prussian state of his day, these essays underscore what many careful Hegelian students have long known, namely, Hegel's sustained emphasis on the Begriff of the state with its predominantly normative nature as an ethical community. Representing a wide spectrum of perspectives, these essays constitute a sympathetic yet critical approach to Hegel's political philosophy." Choice 9:659 Jl/Ag '72 200w

"The editing is unusually well done, and there is a high level of scholarship and clarity throughout. . . . This is a book which illuminates obscurity and will stimulate further study. It is indispensable for students of Hegel's account of Objective Mind. It goes against the subjectivism and arbitrariness of our time." TLS p1503 D 3 '71 750w

TLS p1503 D 3 '71 750w

PELFREY, WILLIAM. The big V. 158p $3.95 Liveright

ISBN 0-87140-548-2 LC 78-167289

This first novel is a "diary-like account of a young draftee's experiences in Vietnam. . . . Henry Winsted, the draftee, continually acknowledges his experiences by referring them to the movies and TV. . . . 'John Wayne' is a moral category for a certain kind of officer. 'Dinks' die like gangsters and Indians. . . . The movies and TV help him to suppress or disguise his emotions because, as a sane person, he doesn't know what feelings are adequate for madness." (Book World)

Reviewed by B. P. J. Przekop

Best Sell 32:57 My 1 '72 360w

"[This book] succeeds as well as it does because it doesn't reach very far, doesn't attempt any big statements. . . . Not much happens in an ordinary novelistic sense—violence, waiting, fatigue, the randomness of imposed routines—but this book is far from offhand. The details are sharp and firm and the characters drawn with scrupulous economy. The Big V must be one of the emotionally bleakest war novels ever written, but the despairing willingness and the necessity to deny horror and grief never seem posed. . . . The Big V is courageous and acutely depressing. There are no heroes and no heroics. There is no light at the end of this tunnel. It's all tunnel." Alan Hislop

Book World p8 Ap 2 '72 340w

"Harry Winsted and his buddies gripe, philosophize, and discuss the pros and cons of oral sex. There are several meticulously described fire fights; but there is no sense of person, place, or thing. The writing is woodenly monotonous, the characters are barely differentiated, the situations are clichés. The great novel of Americans in Vietnam is yet to come; wait for it." R. S. Bravard

Library J 97:2118 Je 1 '72 80w

New Repub 166:30 Je 1 '72 390w

"One of the oldest military axioms states that there are three ways of doing things: the right way, the wrong way—and the Army way. Mr. Pelfrey's excellent novel is devoted to spelling out the third way, as it applies to a tour in Vietnam. . . . The heart of Winsted's existence is a fragile camaraderie that can be destroyed by a bullet or a booby trap, as it eventually is. Mr. Pelfrey, who spent a post-graduate year as an infantryman in Vietnam, recreates the texture of that experience with an intimacy that marks the difference between reportage and participation." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p32 My 7 '72 200w

PELIKAN, JIRI, ed. The Czechoslovak political trials, 1950-1954. See The Czechoslovak political trials, 1950-1954

PELL, CLAIBORNE. Power and policy: America's role in world affairs. 171p $6.95 Norton

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations

ISBN 0-393-05223-0 LC 75-39581

The author's "objective to write a 'little primer on foreign affairs' and 'make the complicated a little simpler.' A brief review of significant historic foreign policies provides the setting for his arguments that we have gone astray and need to redefine our national interests in terms of the realities of our times. He discusses major changes in the U.S. and the world in relation to the mechanics of making policy and the need to identify long-term objectives." (Library J)

"Pell (Senator from Rhode Island and a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee) might have but did not write a useful book on American foreign policy. This thin volume is a rambling hodge-podge of historical anecdotes from all over, personal anecdotes, and a bountiful assortment of platitudes and other generalizations which are either questionable or obvious to the point of banality. . . . No notes, no bibliography, no index. . . . Smoothly written and readable enough, but difficult to tell for what audience the book has been written and difficult to recommend to any particular audience."

Choice 9:883 S '72 250w

"Most of the concepts Pell treats have been discussed before, but rarely so well and so simply. Pell believes the world is moving from an age of concern for political and ideological confrontations to an age of concern for population and environmental problems. The appendix reflects the Senator's labors as it contains his 'Senate Resolution No. 92. Relative to Ocean Space Treaty' and his 'Draft United Nations Convention on the International Seabed Area.' This 'little primer' deserves attention at this time of obvious international realignment." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:1444 Ap 15 '72 280w

PELL, EVE, ed. Maximum security. See Maximum security

PEMBER, DON R. Privacy and the press; the law, the mass media, and the first amendment. 298p $8.95 Univ. of Wash. press

346.3 Privacy, Right of LC 79-152335
ISBN 0-295-95152-4

Pember attempts to explain "the limitations and restrictions placed upon mass media by the law of privacy in the United States. His book is addressed] . . . to the informed layman who knows a little about both the law and the press." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:687 JI/Ag '72 190w

"In this comprehensive survey of the subject Don R. Pember, journalist and communications professor, tilts toward the free-press side. He is uncommonly concerned, however, with the need for protecting the rights of those about whom the free press writes."

Christian Century 98:228 F 23 '72 50w

"Pember has produced a detailed history of how the right to privacy developed in this country. Using nontechnical language and writing in an easy, readable style, he nevertheless, furnishes an authentic account, with meticulous identification of all sources. However, the book is not to be used as a manual for either lawyer or newsman; the chronological approach enhances reading pleasure, but is not well adapted for pragmatic research. Appendixes furnish lists of important cases and a table of the status of privacy rights in each state, along with citations to the cases and statutes establishing them." Marian Boner
Library J 97:1734 My 1 '72 150w

PEMBLE, JOHN. The invasion of Nepal; John Company at war. 389p il pl maps $14.50 Oxford
954.9 Nepalese War, 1814-1816
ISBN 0-19-821549-5 LC 73-565018

This is "a case-study of the Anglo-Nepal war of 1814-16 with some discussion on the China factor in British calculations in its Nepal campaign as well as in relation to trans-Himalayan trade." (Pacific Affairs)

"The many humiliating battle reverses suffered by the British during the Nepal War, in spite of its army's numerical superiority over the Gurkhas, lead Pemble to investigate and come up with the findings of 'glaring inadequacies' in British India's military organization. If the war was won it was not a foregone conclusion. Pemble ascribes the success to a combination of factors plus good luck. While the conclusion is objective, his exclusive reliance on British and Indian sources introduces errors of fact and of analysis into the work on several occasions. . . . Nevertheless, there are interesting sidelights on British designs in the Himalayas interspersed throughout the book; and as a concise and lucidly written work it is well worth reading for those interested in Sino-Indian affairs." Kunjar Sharma

Pacific Affairs 45:134 spring '72 180w

"The story of this war, its origins, the succession of blunders by the British Bengal Army—that same army which was to mutiny in 1857—and the final successes of a few able British leaders like Ochterlony and Captain Barré Latter is related in graphic detail . . . in a book which will surely become the standard account of this particular episode in British military history. To devotees of this genre it will be completely satisfying."

TLS p804 JI 9 '71 650w

